was united in marriage with Miss Asenath M. Nevin, who was born November 18, 1847, in Beaver county, Penn., on her father's farm near Sheffield, a daughter of George and Eliza A. (Harper) Nevin, the former of whom was a son of John and Margaret (Murray) Nevin, and both descendants of Scotch-Presbyterian ancestry. George Nevin was a native of Washington county, Penn., where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, at which he worked a short time, and then opened a store at Sheffield, Beaver county. His wife was born at Frankfort Springs, Beaver Co., Penn., a daughter of Archibald and Mary (Hay) Harper, the former of whom was a miller at Frankfort Springs (where he owned a mill), the latter a native of Cecil township, Washington county, and born on her father's farm. She was a daughter of John and Ann (Burns) Hay, who were born and married in Scotland, where some of their children were also born. They came to Washington county at an early day, settled on Miller's run, in Cecil township, and sleep their last sleep in Oak Grove cemetery in Chartiers township. Mrs. Ann (Burns) Hay was a full cousin to Robert Burns, the poet; her husband, John Hay, was descended from the Hay family of Scotland, whose coat of arms, etc., appear in "Burke's Peerage." To Thomas B. and Asenath M. (Nevin) McCorkle have been born three children, two now living; Mary L. and John T. R. Politically our subject is a Democrat, and has filled various local offices of trust. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church, at Canonsburg, and he is the owner of two farms in Cross Creek township, comprising 270 acres and 144 acres, respectively; he also owns a mill in the same township, known as the Buckeye Flouring Mill. Mr. McCorkle is recognized as one of the leading upright and moral citizens of Washington county, and ranks high among its representative and progressive agriculturists.

JOHAN MILLER DAY was born in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., October 24, 1821, a great-grandson of Samuel Day, who, in or about the year 1755, came from New Jersey to Pennsylvania and took up land in Morris township, this county, where he farmed successfully. He was the father of four sons: Daniel, Samuel, Joseph and Benjamin, and one daughter, Joanna.

Daniel Day, the grandfather of subject, remained on the same tract of land which his father had taken up until his death, which occurred in 1811. He left six sons: Calvin, William, John, Samuel, Stephen and Cephas, and three daughters, Abigail, Ellenor and Electy. John followed his father on the farm, and retained the old right to the early settlement. He was married September 2, 1813,

J. Miller-Lay

by Rev. C. Dodd, to Sarah Miller, of Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and to their union were born eleven children: Eliza, Mary, Sarah, J. Miller, Daniel, Harvey, Annie, Abigail, Cyrus, and Jessie and Meribah (twins). Of these, Eliza (deceased wife of George Wolf) resided in Nineveh, Greene Co., Penn.; Mary (deceased wife of John Brownlee) resided in Franklin township, this county; Sally (deceased wife of Robert Baldwin) resided in Morris township, this county; Daniel has been married twice, and resides in Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn. (his first wife was Mary Bates, of Steubenville, Ohio; his present wife was Etta Johns, of Washington, Washington county); Harvy, living in Lincoln, Neb., was first married to Caroline McCollum, and afterward to Mrs. Mary Harris, of Wheeling, W. Va.; Annie (deceased) was first married to Elias Conger, and then became the wife of Dr. Stross, of Amity, Amwell township, this county; Abigail (Mrs. H. C. Swart) resides near Washington borough; Cyrus, died at the age of eight years; Meribah and Jessie (twins) died in infancy.

John Miller Day, our subject, resides on the old homestead, first owned by his great grandfather. He received his primary education at the old time subscription schools, which were held chiefly in abandoned log dwellings, one of these being very near the Day residence. (It is safe to say that the then youth must have been full of the mirth and good cheer which now characterize his riper years).

In the course of time these early colleges gave way to modern innovations, regulated and governed by school laws. Mr. Day was married January 19, 1843, to Miss Elizabeth Hanna, eldest daughter of John V. Hanna, of Morris township. This union was followed by seven children: Martha Maria, born July 7, 1844, married to John N. Weir, of Franklin township; Sarah Ann, born November 7, 1845, died January 24, 1848; John Milton, born August 26, 1847, married, October 12, 1871, to Margaret Weir, of Franklin township; Elsie Jane, born September 6, 1849, united in marriage, January 18, 1882, with William Ashbrook, of East Finley township; George Hamilton, born April 25, 1852, died October 10, 1854; Hugh Allison, born April 24, 1854, married, April 9, 1891, to Annie Andrews, of Morris township; Mary Elizabeth, born June 10, 1856, married September 12, 1878, to Allen J. Mowl, and now living in West Bethlehem township, this county. Mrs. Day, mother of these children, died August 4, 1872, and was buried at Prosperity, this county. On May 20, 1874, Mr. Day married Mrs. Mary (Wise) McKanna, of West Bethlehem township, this county, a daughter of Joseph Wise and widow of George R. McKanna. Mrs. Day was the mother of two children by her first marriage:

Emma J., wife of James D. Ulery, of Chicago, Ill., and Frank B., residing in Pittsburgh, Penn.

When the Day family first came to Washington county, an old fort stood in the southeastern part of Franklin township; and our subject remembers having his grandmother tell of how she and others would frequently have to take shelter in the fort from the Indians, when they were making unfriendly visits to the homes of the settlers; but the old fort has long since disappeared, and the Indians no longer disturb the sweet repose of the now happy citizens. The Days have, from the very first, been successful farmers and business men, and our subject is no exception, for he is now the owner of 350 acres of land, very rich and fertile, in a high state of cultivation, and improved with the very best buildings, all of which Mr. Day has had the pleasure of putting up under his own inspection, except one old barn, which remains as a relic of the past. (The old mansion built by Grandfather Day still stands on the old foundation, has been repaired, and is now occupied by Hugh Day, son of our subject). In addition to general agriculture, Mr. Day is extensively interested in wool growing.

Our subject has been a lifelong member and a liberal supporter of Upper Ten Mile Presbyterian Church, in which he has received the marked confidence of his fellow-members in being elected deacon, an office he has held for many years. Politically he is a Democrat, and has several times been elected to the office of justice of the peace, but has always declined serving. He was elected a director of the Poor Farm, serving from 1866 to 1869.

We can not close this short history of our subject without expressing gratitude that our friend has been spared to a good old age. And now, while living in borrowed time, his genial face is still lighted up with sunny cheerfulness, which makes his company sought after, and his presence in the home gatherings a delight. [Written by a friend of the family.]

WILLIAM CALDWELL, son of Samuel Caldwell, was born July 29, 1830, in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. Samuel Caldwell was born in 1782, in Dauphin county, eastern Pennsylvania, and came with his parents to Allegheny county when but a child. He served an apprenticeship as a tailor, but after completing the trade was obliged to abandon it on account of poor health. He then began farming, and in 1818 bought a farm in Peters township, Washington county, to which he moved, eventually becoming a prosperous agriculturist. In politics he was originally a Whig, then a Republican, and served for years as a member of the school board. In religion he was first identified with the Union Church, afterward uniting with the U. P.

Society, then known as the Bridge Church, now called the Canonsburg U. P. Church, to which he was a liberal contributor. In early life he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of James Gilland, of Allegheny county, Penn., and the following children were born to this union: James (deceased), Ann (wife of John Charlton), Jane, Eliza (Mrs. Thomas D. Weaver), Margaret (married to Henry Bennett), Harriet and William. The father died in 1856, having been preceded by his wife in 1841, and both are buried in the Speer Spring cemetery.

William Caldwell was reared and educated in Peters township, and on March 12, 1857, was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of John and granddaughter of Henry Miller. The grandparents were natives of Germany, and immigrated to America in the latter part of the last century, locating on the home farm in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn. Henry Miller built one of the first mills for grinding grain, which was run by horses. He was a Whig and Republican, and in religion was for many years a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run. He died February 11, 1845, followed by his wife April 10, of the same year. Their children were John, Christia Ann (wife of William Bennett) and Nancy (Mrs. Johnson).

John Miller was born April 21, 1798, on the home place in Chartiers township, this county. On January 18, 1821, he was married to Margaret Jordan, who bore him children as follows: Stewart, Henry, Mary (wife of Thomas Chapman), Ann, John, Hugh and Margaret (Mrs. William Caldwell). Of these children, Stewart, Mary, Ann and John are deceased. The father was a Whig and Republican. He was for many years a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run, and died on the old place November 17, 1874, Mrs. Miller having preceded him November 3, 1873. Both parents are buried in the cemetery at Miller's Run. After marriage William and Margaret (Miller) Caldwell resided on the home place in Peters township until 1868, when they removed to the Miller homestead, and in 1886 came to their present home in Canonsburg. Three children have been born to this marriage, namely: John M., Annie E., widow of Thomas I. Charlton, and Ella Paretta. Mrs. Charlton is the only one now living. Mr. Caldwell is an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and in religion a member of the Chartiers U. P. Church.

LM. MORGAN was born September 18, 1853, on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township which is yet his home, the youngest child of R. M. and Mary (Martin) Morgau. The mother was born on the farm where Peter Martin is now living, and both parents were natives of Chartiers township. After their marriage they settled near Sugar Grove, this county, and in 1845 located in Mt. Pleasant township on the farm now known as the Rev. Slater farm, and in 1851 bought the present homestead, a partially improved farm of 210 acres, which they cleared and cultivated, and on which they erected a good brick house and fine barn. The farm was originally a portion of the George Washington survey. In 1880 the family moved to Canonsburg. R. M. Morgan was an ardent Democrat in politics, serving as supervisor of the township, as member of the school board, and in various other positions. He and his wife were members of the Miller's Run Presbyterian Church, in which he was ruling elder for many years. He died in January, 1891, having been preceded by his wife in March, 1889. Their children were Nancy Jane (living in Canonsburg), Emeline (deceased in 1846), Ellen (deceased in 1872), Anna Mary (wife of J. L. Cockins, of Canonsburg), twin sons who died in infancy in 1851, Sarah Bell (married to R. D. Hamilton, of Chartiers township) and L. M. (a twin of Sarah Bell).

L. M. Morgan passed his boyhood on the home farm, and received his education in the district schools of Mt. Pleasant township. On November 18, 1880, he was united in marriage with Minerva Shelley, a native of Jefferson county, Ohio, a daughter of David and Jane (White) Shelley, the father a native of Jefferson county, Ohio, and the mother born in Chartiers township. The parents located in Jefferson county, Ohio, many years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan settled on the old homestead, containing 210 acres of good land. He is an active Democrat, and a member of the school board. He and his wife are united with the Mt. Pleasant U. P. Church, of which he is a trustee. They have had five children, namely: Maud Alice, Leroy Shelley, Nina Blanche, Mary E., and one deceased in infancy.

JOHAN MORGAN, a well-known farmer and stock raiser of Chartiers township, is a native of the same, born April 20, 1821. He is a grandson of Jacob Morgan, who was born in Maryland, and in an early day came with his wife to Washington county, Penn., locating in Chartiers township, where he died. He was a soldier in the war of 1812.

John Morgan (son of Jacob) was born in Maryland, and when a small boy was brought with his parents to Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn. He was married in this county to Nancy Montgomery, a native of Chartiers township, and they began life on a neighboring farm. He was deputy sheriff and justice of the peace for many years, and was an active worker in the Democratic party. He died in 1842, and several years later was followed by his wife, who had borne him children as follows: Martha Jane (deceased wife of Godfrey Cook), Jacob (deceased, married to a daughter of Major McCloskey), Robert M. (died in 1891, was married to Mary Martin), Emma Jane (deceased in 1888 in Tennessee, wife of William Cundel), John (whose sketch follows), Nancy Jane (Mrs. James Harvey, living in this county), Samuel P. (residing in Washington borough, Penn.), Anna (deceased wife of A. C. Morrow), Rebecca (Mrs. J. R. McClosky, of Lawrence, Kans.) and Hugh (also living in Kansas).

John Morgan was born and reared on the farm adjoining his present home, receiving his education in the schools of Chartiers township, and assisting in improving the farm. In 1856 he was united in marriage with Sarah Jane, daughter of Samuel and Jane (White) Martin. The parents located in Chartiers township, this county, where the father died September 29, 1864, the mother having preceded him over the river March 1, 1835. John and Sarah Jane (Martin) Morgan located on their present farm in 1860. It contains 129 acres of well-cultivated land, upon which two good residences have been built; he owns considerable stock, and carries on general farming. He is interested in the success of the Democratic party, with which he is identified, and he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church in Chartiers township. Their children are Anna Mary (wife of Joseph Barry), Belle (married to George Patch, Houstonville, Penn.), Samuel M. (married to a daughter of Andrew Miller, and living in Chartiers township), John H. (residing with his parents), Ella Jane, Hattie and Hugh F.

B C. LINDLEY was born April 28, 1847, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Cephas Lindley, who was also a native of Morris township, born March 28, 1816, and received his education in the schools of that period. In early manhood Cephas Lindley was married on March 16, 1840, to Miss Anna Hanna, a resident of Morris township, and they had six children: Mary (Mrs. Smith Day), Louisa J. (Mrs. Jacob Baldwin), B. C. (subject of the present sketch), Lawson L., Laura J. (Mrs. Richard Sargeant) and Sarah A. (Mrs. H. R. Post). The mother of this family died January 31, 1859, and Mr. Lindley married on November 24, 1864, for his second wife, Mary Hackney, who has no children. Mr. Lindley settled in Franklin township, Washington county, and was for many years engaged in buying and selling stock, becoming quite a wealthy man at one time, but reverses followed his early success, and swept away the greater part of his property. He might have legally retained a portion of the wreck, but his fine sense of honor would not permit him to reserve any part of that which should meet his obligations. Mr. Lindley has been a most industrious man, and is highly respected by his neighbors. He and his family are active members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. In political opinion he was a Whig, and since the organization of the party has been a Republican.

B. C. Lindley passed his youth on the farm, and the meager advantages of the country school gave him a taste for literature, which he indulges during his leisure moments. On February 23, 1871, he was united in marriage with Miranda Van Kirk Patterson, daughter of J. W. Patterson, and their family consists of the following children: Demas, born April 28, 1872; Clyde P., born December 18, 1877; Anna C., born December 1, 1880; Mary L., born July 20, 1888, and Parmelia E., born December 29, 1890. After his marriage Mr. Lindley remained on the home farm some time, and then moved to Chartiers township, this county, thence to Amwell township. He afterward came to West Bethlehem township, and finally settled on his present place, which consists of 194 acres of land, known as the Baldwin farm. Mr. Lindley is a popular and progressive man. In political opinion he is a Republican, and has filled the position of school director seven years. He and his family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM SMITH, an old and esteemed farmer of Independence township, is a son of John Smith, who was born in 1786, in County Fermanagh, Ireland. He passed his youth in assisting his father on the home farm, and in early manhood was married to Jane Graham, who was born in 1786, daughter of William Graham. In 1818 John Smith, with his wife and infant son, William, sailed from Cork, Ireland, to find a home across the ocean. They landed in New York, and immediately proceeded to Independence township, Washington Co., Penn., where a brother of Mr. Smith had previously located near Buffalo creek. For some time after his arrival in Independence township, Mr. Smith worked as a farm tenant, but this did not suit his energetic and ambitious disposition. In a few years he purchased the farm that he had rented on arriving in Pennsylvania, and remained upon it until his death, which occurred in 1831. His widow continued to reside on the place, which was managed by her sons, until her death in 1835. The children born in America were as follows: John (a farmer in Independence township), Jane (living on the old homestead with her brother John), Edward (who died at the old homestead in his twenty-first year) and Mary A. (widow of Paul Ralston, of Independence township).

William Smith (the eldest child of John Smith) was born December 22, 1817, in County Fermanagh, Ireland, being an infant when brought to America with his parents. He received a limited education at the rate schools, and losing his father when but a boy of fourteen years, a heavy burden of care necessarily fell upon him as the eldest son. The mother died but a few years later, yet still the brave boy struggled on, with no one to guide him and no assistance but that of the younger children; but they managed the farm successfully. On October 15, 1840, William Smith was married to Margaret Haggarty, who was born April 3, 1818, daughter of James Haggarty, an early resident of Independence township, and a native of Ireland. After his marriage Mr. Smith entered mercantile business at Dunsfort, Penn., but soon returned to the farm, concluding that after all agriculture was the more desirable vocation, and continued to follow it until recent years. He is now living a semi-retired life in the pleasant home. On October 15, 1890, Mr. and Mrs. Smith celebrated their golden wedding, and were the recipients of many gifts. In politics he was formerly a Whig; he cast his first vote for William H. Harrison, and has also voted for his grandson, Benjamin. Mr. Smith passes much of his time in reading various kinds of literature, with which his library is well filled. In religious connection he is second to the oldest member of the U. P. Church at Mt. Hope, in which he has been an elder over thirty years. He has always been an earnest worker and liberal contributor to the cause.

WILLIAM M. SMITH was born December 8, 1846, in Canonsburg, this county, grandson of John Smith. The last mentioned ancestor was born in June, 1771, in York county, Penn. In 1796 he was married to Nancy McClure, and came to Allegheny county in 1804, thence to Washington county in 1807, and in 1816 finally located in Beaver county, Penn. He died July 17, 1851, followed by his wife February 22, 1859.

John M. Smith was born November 23, 1799, in Gettysburg, Penn., and in 1804 was brought to the "Pinkerton Place," in Allegheny county, thence to Cecil township, this county, in 1807. They moved to Allegheny county in 1812, and in the fall of 1815 his father bought a farm in Beaver county, upon which he moved the following year. In 1817 John M. Smith went to Pittsburgh, Penn., and learned the cabinet maker's trade; then worked at carpentry, boarding on the farm which his son now occupies. On April 16, 1833, he was united in marriage with Mary Moore, a daughter of James, and granddaughter of John Moore. The latter was a native of Ligonier Valley, Penn., and in 1777 came to Cecil township. He died on the "Forks of the Yough," on the road while moving, leaving his widow to rear the children and pay for the land. The constable, accompanied by Esquire John Donal, came to make a levy of $12, while the widow was in the act of family worship. After the prayers were finished the constable said he would sell no one out who would make a prayer like that, and Esquire John Donal loaned her the $12 to meet the debt. The widow died in Cecil township, and none of the family are now living.

James Moore, a son of John Moore was born in Ligonier Valley, Penn., in 1773, and in early life was married to Elizabeth Moore, a native of Butler county, Penn. He moved to the home farm in this county in 1777, and died on the old place July 22, 1859, being followed in 1868 by the wife and mother.

After their marriage, in 1833, John M. and Mary (Moore) Smith first located on the old Dr. Ramsey farm, near Canonsburg. In the spring of 1846 they removed into Canonsburg, where he worked at his trade in connection with agricultural pursuits. In 1861 he bought, and in 1864 moved upon, the home farm of James Moore, in Cecil township. In July, 1866, he was taken with gangrene, and a limb was amputated. He died February 11, 1886, his widow following him July 7, 1889. They were members of the Seceder Church, and the parents of the following children: James Ramsey, born in April, 1834 (married in 1861 to Mary Jane Reyburn, and settled in Canton township); Jane Moore, born in 1836; Mary Cummings, born in 1838; Eliza Glasgow and a twin, born in 1840; Nancy born in 1842; John Park, born in 1844; W. L. M., (whose name opens this sketch); John Murray (married in 1878 to Rebecca McAnley, of Clarion county; he was born in 1848, and died in 1877, leaving a widow and two children); Mary King, born in January, 1851, (married in 1878 to Mr. A. Malone, of Elizabeth, Allegheny county, has two children); Jane Glasgow, born in 1853 (married in 1875 to William Henry H. Craig, of Clarion county, Penn., has six children), and Samuel Harper, born in 1855 (married in 1881 to Mary Nancy Westbay, of Elizabeth; has three children; he is a physician and surgeon of McKeesport, Penn.). Of these children; Jane, Mary, Eliza, Nancy and John all died in 1817, between February 25 and March 15, of scarlet fever.

W. L. M. Smith was educated in the public schools of Canonsburg. In 1862 he came to the farm where he is now living. On November 12, 1868, he was united in marriage with Grisela Roney, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Gibson) Roney, natives of North Strabane township, this county, where the father died; the mother passed away in 1889. Two children were born to W. L. M. and Grisela Smith, viz.: Elizabeth Jane (wife of D. J. Stirling, Bulger), and Mary Minerva, living with her mother. She left him in 1872, and June 20, 1878, Mr. Smith, after securing a divorce in 1877, married Margaret S., daughter of John and Nancy (Greer) Hunter. Her parents were born in eastern Pennsylvania, coming to Cecil township in an early day, where the father died in 1865, followed by the mother in 1876. They reared a family of ten children, of whom four sons served in the war, and William died in the service. Five are yet living, namely: John, a carpenter, of McDonald, Penn.; Joseph, a stonemason, of McDonald; Maggie; James R., a farmer of Allegheny county; and Nancy residing with her sister Maggie. Mr. and Mrs. Smith began married life on the home farm where they are now living, which contains 133 acres of good land. In politics he is a Prohibitionist. In religion he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Venice.

WILLIAM S. CRAFT, one of the leading residents of South Strabane township, was born April 3, 1841, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn. His grandfather, John Craft, was married to Abigail Conklin, a resident of Morris township, and she bore him children as follows: Lila (Mrs. Thomas Dickerson), David, Permima (Mrs. Samuel Farrabee), Urins, Stewart, Stephen, Conklin, Catherine, and William. After his marriage Mr. Craft remained in Morris township several years, then went to East Finley township, where he died. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion an active worker and class-leader in the M. E. Church at Mt. Zion.

David Craft, son of John and Abigail (Conklin) Craft, was born November 17, 1812, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., and there received his early education. On March 29, 1838, he was married to Mary, daughter of Stephen Mills, a resident of New Jersey. Mr. Mills was married to Experience Lory, and she bore him the following children: Johanna, Deborah, Jonas, William, James, John, Mary, Phoebe, Eliza, Henry and Samuel. Mr. Mills went to Ohio, where he remained some time, and then returned to Washington county, Penn., settling near Taylorstown. He was a carpenter and builder, and in politics belonged to the Democratic party. In religious belief he was united with the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, this county.

Mr. and Mrs. Craft spent the first years of their married life in East Finley township, Washington county, and then removed to Morris township, in 1841, settling on the home farm. They have had the following family of children: John M. (living in Kansas City), William S. (subject of this sketch), Thomas (deceased), Stewart C. (residing in Idaho), Phoebe C. (deceased), Stephen L. (deceased), Jonas L. (living in Oregon), Catherine (deceased), Melissa, Dolla J. (Mrs. Oscar Lindley, living in Kansas) and Mary A. (Mrs. J. M. Patterson, of Washington, Penn.). Mr. Craft first built a log house, and afterward erected a frame dwelling, which was burned, and which he rebuilt. He was an active member of the Democratic party, and in church connection was an adherent of the M. E. Church for fifty years, serving as trustee during much of that time. Mr. Craft died February 19, 1890, and was buried at Mt. Zion.

William S. Craft passed his boyhood days on the home farm in Morris township, Washington county, and in August, 1862, enlisted in Company K, Sixteenth P. V. C. and was sent to the army of the Potomac. He took part in the principal battles, and at the close of the war came out un wounded with the exception of a slight bruise made by a ball. On October 13, 1869, he was united in marriage with Martha, daughter of John Montgomery, and they have had six children: Leroy J. (deceased), George W., Inez F., Herschel B. (deceased), John M. and Jane Adeline. On his return from the war he operated a portable sawmill four years, then commenced farming. He first settled on a farm in Morris township, near Prosperity, this county, remaining there two years when he moved to East Finley township, living there one year; thence removed to West Finley township, and eleven years afterward bought and took possession of his present home in South Strabane township. Mr. Craft has been engaged in the dairy business the past four years, and has a herd of twenty cows, which supply a large city custom. Politically he votes the Democratic ticket, and is interested in all public enterprises. When a youth he united with the M. E. Church at Mt. Zion, Morris township, but since removing to his present home he has attended the Presbyterian Church at Washington.

HENRY ROBINSON is a representative of one of the early families of this county, and is a grandson of Henry Robinson, who was born in York county, Penn., and came to Mt. Pleasant township, this county, over a century ago. He first purchased and located on the present site of Hickory village, but losing this land by priority of title, never bought elsewhere, continuing however, to reside in this county. Henry Robinson was a Revolutionary soldier, and in politics was an ardent Democrat. He died in 1826, having been preceded by his wife several years.

Joseph Robinson, son of Henry, was born in Mt.

Pleasant township, and attended the home schools during his boyhood. In early life he was married to Jane Morrow, who was born on Ten Mile creek in Washington county, and they settled on the farm now occupied by Henry Robinson, where children were born as follows: William (married to Margaret Anderson, living in Delaware county, Ohio), Robert (married to Nancy McNeil, died in 1882, in East Liberty, Allegheny county), Henry (of whom further mention is made), Thomas (married to Elizabeth McCauley, living in Mt. Pleasant township), Hannah Jane (residing in Burgettstown), Joseph (also in Burgettstown), Mary (wife of Alexander Richardson, living in New Castle, Penn.), John (deceased at the age of twelve or thirteen years) and Julia Ann (who died in her eighth year of scarlet fever). The parents were members of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church. Mr. Robinson was an active member of the Democratic party, and always followed agricultural pursuits. He died several years ago, the wife and mother having crossed the river some time before.

Henry Robinson was born July 18, 1818, on the old place in Mt. Pleasant township where he is yet living. He was educated in the log-cabin subscription school of the vicinity, with its usual primitive furnishings, consisting of a puncheon floor and slab seats. In 1847 he was united in marriage with Jane Barnett, who was born in Mt. Pleasant township, daughter of John and Mary (Thompson) Barnett, both of whom are natives of Washington county, and early settlers of Mt. Pleasant township. The mother died in 1882, having been several years preceded by her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson began their wedded life on the farm which they now occupy, and the following children have been born to them: Mary (died September 20, 1856), James Negley (at home), Joseph (married to a Miss Wright, is a druggist at Chadron, Neb.), John (engaged in stock business in Nebraska), Jane Ann (wife of David McGuyin, a farmer of Custer county, Neb.), Martha (Mrs. Perry Lyle, living at Anaheim, Orange Co., Cal.), Attissa (deceased January 16, 1863) and Charlie (married to Belle Caldwell, and living on a place adjoining the old Rankin farm). The home place contains fifty acres of good land, which is in a fine state of cultivation. Mr. Robinson votes with the Democratic party, and he and his wife are members of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM W. DINSMORE. Among the leading citizens of Washington county, the sons of Erin have ever held a prominent position. The original Dinsmore family were natives of Ireland, of Scotch-Irish descend, and from that fair land James Dinsmore immigrated to America, first locating on Miller's run, Allegheny county, Penn., afterward, about 1798, moving to Canton township, Washington county. He had two sons—John and James—also several daughters. John was married to Jane Carr, and settled in Canton township, this county, where five children were born to them, namely: William, James, John, Robert and Mary.

James Dinsmore (son of James and father of William W.) was born March 4, 1782, in Canton township, this county, and in 1802 was united in marriage with Hester Hamilton, who was born March 6, 1784, a daughter of James and Mary (Renick) Hamilton. Both families were early and prominent settlers of Canton township. To this union children were born as follows: Robert, February 13, 1806; Rebecca, January 30, 1808; Mary, January 6, 1810; Elizabeth, September 22, 1812; James, November 8, 1815; John, July 25, 1818; Alexander W., April 26, 1820; William W., December 3, 1822; and Sarah A., September 8, 1824. Mr. Dinsmore removed to Mt. Pleasant township, where he followed farming very successfully. He was prominent and influential both in the Presbyterian Church and Sunday school (being a member and regular attendant of both), and served for many years as superintendent of the latter. They brought up their children in strict conformity to the tenets of the church. The father died November 15, 1831, from the effects of being thrown from a young horse. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Dinsmore, although in delicate health, cared for and educated her children, sending her sons James and Alexander to college to prepare for the ministry. She died April 13, 1859, in her seventy-fifth year.

James Dinsmore was an uncompromising and enthusiastic champion of temperance. About the year 1830 Rev. Anderson, D. D., commenced advocating the cause of temperance, and Mr. Dinsmore was among the first to practice it. About that time, being in want of a barn (in those days they were all built of logs), he told some of his neighbors that he was going to have a "barn raising," and that no whisky was to be used in the work. In reply to this it was intimated to him that the men would not raise the barn without whisky. "I will try it anyhow," was Mr. Dinsmore's laconic reply, and he did so; he not only tried it, but succeeded; and it is a historical fact that this was the first barn in the country raised without the use of alcoholic liquors. To this record his son, William W., adds the following: "And I, James Dinsmore's son, am three-score and ten years old, and have yet to take my first dram. I have not chewed an ounce of tobacco, or smoked the bulk of one cigar yet, and I do not feel like breaking my record now."

William W. Dinsmore was born on the home place in Mt. Pleasant township, and attended school until about seventeen years of age; he then took charge of the old homestead.

On October 7, 1847, Mr. Dinsmore was married to Miss Mary Jane Maxwell, who was born January 11, 1829, daughter of James and Margaret (Greer) Maxwell. The young couple first settled on the old homestead, two or three years later purchasing the farm in Hopewell township, which is the present home of our subject. It contains 172 acres, and is known as the best farm on the Washington and Wellsburgh roads. In 1875 he purchased 163 acres in another part of Hopewell township, and both farms have been improved and cultivated to the utmost extent. Mr. Dinsmore is a great admirer of fine horses, devoting much attention to raising them. For many years he was a teacher in the Sabbath-school, but has recently given up his class, and he also served many years as a church trustee, contributing liberally, as well, to the support of the cause. He is an intelligent man, a great reader and a close student of current events, and has always been energetic and thrifty.

Mr. and Mrs. Dinsmore both united with the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church in early youth, taking an active part in both church and Sabbath-school work. She died August 7, 1889, leaving several children, of whom the following is a brief record: Margaret Jane, born November 10, 1848, is the wife of W. M. Dinsmore, of Canton township (they have four children, William M., Mary Daisy, Sarah Adeline and Helen R.); Hetty Amanda, born December 7, 1850, was married to Luther Lawton, of Cross Creek township (they have the following children: John Orr, Mary Luella, Sarah Bessie and Paul Hubert); James Maxwell, born September 1, 1853, married Flora Donaldson (their children are Grace Walker, Mary Josephine, Robert Edwin and William Lloyd); William Benjamin Franklin, born July 26, 1857, is living at home, unmarried; Mary Lou, born October 16, 1859, was united in marriage with J. O. Ely, May 10, 1888 (she died May 10, 1890); Robert Addison, born March 17, 1861, studied dentistry and located in Cumberland county, Ohio, but moved to Cleveland, where on November 5, 1891, he was married to Miss Virgie Green (he is now practicing in Cleveland, Ohio); Emma Rebecca, born September 1, 1866, married J. O. Ely, September 1, 1891, and they reside in Chicago, Ill., where he is practicing dentistry. Mrs. Dinsmore was much loved and esteemed as a good, kind-hearted Christian woman, possessing an unbounded influence for good. Her death was deeply mourned by her family and many friends.

THOMAS WILSON, son of Thomas and Mary (Ellis) Wilson (both of whom are deceased), was born near Belfast, County Antrim, Ireland.

At the age of nineteen years, in company with his brother, Joseph, Thomas Wilson came to America, and the two young men located at Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn., where Thomas was engaged in the butchering business for a short time. He then worked in a brickyard for a period of five years, after which he moved to the "Robert Russell" farm, where he remained for twenty-five years. In the fall of 1879 he purchased the John Cummins farm, containing 110 acres, in Chartiers township, shortly afterward selling it to Robert H. Russell (now deceased). In the spring of 1882 he purchased an unimproved farm, in Chartiers township, the one on which he now resides, immediately proceeding to erect a handsome dwelling and new barn. In early manhood Mr. Wilson married Martha H., daughter of George Wilson, and to this union the following children have been born: George S., Mary E., Robert A., Mathew C., John R., Anna S., Lizzie J., Jennetta B., Louis T. (deceased), and one that died in infancy. The entire family are members of the United Presbyterian Church, at Canonsburg.

SHELDON B. HAYES, one of the enterprising young business men of the county, was born February 3, 1855, in Washington borough, Washington Co., Penn. He is a grandson of Sheldon B. Hayes, who was the earliest carriage manufacturer west of the Alleghanies, having commenced business in Washington in 1842.

Marshall H. Hayes, father of our subject, was born in June, 1827, in Connecticut, where he attended the common schools and passed his boyhood until the age of fifteen, when he came to Washington county. In 1861 he went to Hartford, Conn., where he remained until 1869, when he returned to this county, and here ended his days. In early manhood he was married to Sarah Morrison, a lady of Scotch ancestry, and who had come to Washington county from Scotland at the age of fourteen years. The children born to this union were: Miranda M., who married John A. Storey, of Iowa, and died in 1880; Sheldon B.; Virgil C., who died in 1881; John B., who died in 1859; Mary, who died in 1862, and George. Marshall H. Hayes was a carriage manufacturer by trade, having succeeded his father in the business, and was eminently successful. He was a progressive, enterprising man, and all movements tending to the advancement of his section received his heartiest support. He was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics was a lifelong Democrat. He died March 26, 1891; his widow is yet living.

Sheldon B. Hayes received his primary education at the schools of Hartford (Conn.) and Washington, and afterward attended Washington and Jefferson College, where he graduated in 1875. On June 21, 1889, he was married to Annie C., daughter of Adam H. Ecker, and two children, Antoinette and Marguerite, have been born to them. Mr. Hayes was engaged from 1875 in the business of carriage manufacturing and that of sash, doors, blinds, etc., established by his grandfather, but in 1890 he wound it up, and is now engaged in settling up its affairs, and attending to other business. He is a member of the State militia, being adjutant of the Tenth Regiment, and in politics is an active Democrat. Socially Mr. Hayes is an advanced Freemason, having attained the thirty-second degree.

ALLEXANDER C. MCCOY, a prominent agriculturist of Chartiers township, was born August 4, 1829, in North Strabane township, this county. His grandfather, John McCoy, was a native of York county, Penn., where he was married to Mary McNary. In 1803 he purchased and moved upon an uncultivated farm in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., which is yet owned by his grandson, Alexander C. John and Mary (McNary) McCoy were the parents of the following children: Esther, Jane, Margaret, Elizabeth, James and William. The father followed farming and stock raising. In religious faith he was a member of the Seceder Church, and in politics a Whig.

William McCoy was born in 1801, on the home place in York county, Penn., and was educated in the schools of Washington county, where his parents had settled soon after his birth. He was married to Martha, daughter of John Chambers, of South Strabane township, this county. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy first settled on the home place, and in 1867 moved to Canonsburg, where he died in 1879, leaving the following children: Alexander C., Mary (married to James Templeton), Sarah J. (wife of Rev. L. Y. Graham, D. D., pastor of a Presbyterian Church at Philadelphia), Abbie C. (wife of Rev. J. D. Shanks, D. D., pastor of a Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia), and Isabelle (married to Rev. D. B. Rogers, also a minister in a Philadelphia Presbyterian Church). The father was a man of strong religious convictions and a liberal supporter of the Chartiers U. P. Church, of which he was a trustee for many years. In politics he was a Whig and Republican; he served his township as school director, and often assisted in the settlement of estates.

Alexander C. McCoy passed his youth on the home place in Chartiers township, and received his education at the public schools of Canonsburg. On February 28, 1867, he married Sarah J., daughter of James Linn, of Washington, Penn. The first years of their married life were passed on the home place, and in 1891 they settled in Canonsburg. No children having been born to them, Mr. and Mrs. McCoy adopted Maggie Chambers, giving her a good education. In 1891 she became the wife of Albert Sauer, of Canonsburg. Alexander McCoy is a very prominent stockman, and for many years has raised registered sheep and Shorthorn cattle. He is a member of the Western Pennsylvania Agricultural Association. Politically he votes the Republican ticket, and has served as school director. He is an earnest member of the United Presbyterian Church, of which he has been a trustee for nine years.

ELMER R. DEEMS. This gentleman comes of German ancestry, the first of whom to come to Washington county being Mark Deems, his great grandfather, who, while a resident of Maryland served in the Revolutionary war, participating in the battles of Long Island, Brandywine and Trenton. In October, 1786, he came to Pike run township, this county, and took up a tract of 341 acres of wild land at the head waters of Pike run, naming it "Deems' Dependence," on a portion of which Wilbur A. Deems (a brother of Elmer) now lives. John Deems came hither with Mark, but did not remain long, removing to Virginia, where he made a settlement on the Kanawha river, where his descendants still reside. Mark Deems died on this land April 14, 1814, his wife about the same time, judging from the following copy of receipt for wages, filed in the office of the county register at Washington, which receipt reads as follows: "April 27, 1814. Barbary House was employed by Mark Deems and his wife, in their last sickness, three weeks, $3.75. Received payment, Barbary House." They were the parents of children as follows: George, John, Adam, Mark, Jacob, Catherine (married to Nathaniel Jones, of Washington county), and Mary (married to Samuel Crow, also of this county), all of which are now dead. At the time of his death Mark Deems was owner of over 800 acres in West Pike Run township, which land on his demise was divided among his children. His personal property amounted to $1,985.32, a large amount for those early days.

George Deems, grandfather of Elmer R., received as his share of his father's estate the farm now occupied by the heirs of Samuel Yerty. He married Miss Elizabeth Fisher, a lady of English birth, and the result of this union was the following named children: Mark F. (deceased), George (living in West Pike Run township), John (who died in Illinois), Jacob (living in West Pike Run township), Mary (deceased wife of David Jenkins, and the mother of Capt. George Jenkins, now of West Pike Run township), Catherine (who was married in Illinois to Jehu Graves, and died without issue), and Elizabeth (married to Samuel Heaton). The father of this family died in 1851, the mother a few years earlier.

George Deems, father of Elmer R., was born in 1819, in West Pike Run township, this county, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, which have been his life vocation. He has been most successful in all his undertakings, and can justly claim a prominent place on the noble roll of self-made men of the county, as from the bottom rung of the ladder he has, unaided, worked his way up to the top. The first labor he was employed in was breaking stone on the National pike, and by industry and thrift he is now owner of four of the finest farms of his township. In 1846 he married Eliza Ann, daughter of John Sharp, who at one time owned a fulling mill on Little Pike run, near what is known as the White Hall school-house. When his daughter, Eliza Ann, was a small girl, Mr. Sharp moved to Holmes county, Ohio, where his wife died, and Eliza then came to Pennsylvania to live with her uncle, Lewis Baker, in West Pike Run township. To Mr. and Mrs. George Deems were born five children: Elmer R.; Mary, who died young; John J., in West Pike Run township; Harvey F., in Canton township, and Wilbur A., on the old home farm in West Pike Run. Mr. and Mrs. Deems built a new house on their farm, and here she died April 11, 1890, at the age of sixty-five years. Mr. Deems, now a man of seventy-three years, is yet living on the farm. Politically he was formerly a Whig and "Freesoiler," now a solid Republican; in religious connection he is a member of the M. E. Church, as was also his wife.

Elmer R. Deems was born in West Pike Run township, Washington county, January 16, 1849. He received a common school education; attended Southwestern State Normal School at California, 1865, 1866, and Mount Union College, Ohio, in 1868; was a successful teacher in the public schools for several years, and since his marriage, in 1872, has followed the occupation of a farmer. He was too young to participate in the late war, but when there was a call for State troops, after the burning of Chambersburg, in 1864, he enlisted in Capt. Castner's company, being then fifteen years of age, but saw no service. In 1872 he married Emma, daughter of James S. Crawford, Esq., of East Bethlehem township, and of this union were born two children: Sarah C., in 1877, and Ernest, in 1887. Mr. and Mrs. Deems moved to the Shenandoah Valley in 1875 (where Sarah was born), where they remained only two years, owing to the prejudice of the natives to Northern people. When they returned they located in West Pike Run township, and later moved to East Bethlehem township, where, in 1880, they built a comfortable home.

Mr. Deems has always been an active Republican, and during the Presidential campaign of 1884 he organized the first Blaine and Logan club in the county. The East Bethlehem Cavalry, consisting of thirty-three members, being uniformed and equipped by August 1, it was during the campaign and as captain of this company, at Fredericktown, on the evening of September 23, he was brutally attacked by a desperate Democrat tough, and although coming out victorious he received an almost fatal wound, which has rendered him incapable of performing manual labor. Thus compelled to abandon his occupation as a farmer, he entered the political arena, and in June, 1887, received the nomination for prothonotary, only lacking two votes of being nominated on first ballot, and in November was elected over W. A. Cracraft, the Democrat nominee, by a majority of 1,401. He has been an efficient and accommodating officer; as a high compliment for the satisfactory manner in which this most difficult of offices has been filled by him, he was, on the meeting of the Republican convention, in June, 1890, unanimously re-nominated without opposition. He has been an efficient and accommodating officer, and was re-elected by an appreciative public. Since his election to the office of prothonotary, he has lived in the borough of Washington, on East Maiden street. Mr. Deems is a member of I. O. O. F., O. U. A. M., the F. & A. M. and Jacques De Molay Commandery, Knights Templar, and is a member of the M. E. Church.

JOHN S. CLARK, an enterprising agriculturist of Buffalo township, is a son of Uriah Clark, who was born and reared in Claysville, Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., where he received a good common-school education. In early life he learned the trades of a machinist and cabinet maker. He was considered one of the best mechanics of the day, and could make almost any article of wood. He was married in early life to Rosanna, daughter of Jacob Ely, of Buffalo township, this county, and at that time possessed scarcely a dollar, but he continued to follow his trades, and finally, by dint of economy and industry, accumulated a good property. He reared the following children: Christina, Thomas P., Catherine and Rosanna (twins), John S., Hannah Jane, Sarah M., Ann E. and Harriet L., all of whom are living, and residing in Washington county, Penn. After his marriage Mr. Clark continued to work at his trade, until, after fifty years of toil, he bought 152 acres of land, lying in the northeastern part of Buffalo township, and passed the remaining years of his life in retirement. He was a man of strong will, and a citizen who merited the esteem in which he was held by the community. He was laid to rest in 1887.

John S. Clark was born October 1, 1840, in Claysville, Washington Co., Penn., and received his elementary education at home, where he remained until the opening of the Civil war. He enlisted August 15, 1862, under the Union flag, and was a member of Company C, Twenty-second P. V. C., Capt. G. T. Work, commanding. He was in the service three years, and took part in the engagements of Winchester, Cedar Creek, Antietam, and many others of less importance. He was mustered out on June 15, 1865. During the conflict Mr. Clark was injured so that he could never afterward engage in manual labor. Soon after his return to Washington county he was married to Sarah Bell, daughter of John and Isabel Mounts, of South Strabane township, this county, and they have had five children, namely: Anna Belle (wife of Joseph Pense, of Washington county), Clara, Margaret, Maria, and one son that died in infancy. Politically, Mr. Clark is a Democrat. In addition to managing his farm he devotes much attention to stock raising.

JAMES N. BEMIS, M. D. The Bemis Family, who are among the leading and cultured citizens of Hopewell township, were originally natives of the Green Mountain State. David Bemis was born and reared in Dummerstown, Vt., where he was married to Rhoda Sargeant, who bore him children as follows: Erastus, Daniel (deceased), Samuel (a physician living near the home place in this county), and Horace (deceased). The father followed agricultural pursuits, and in politics was a worker in the Democratic party.

Erastus Bemis was born October 3, 1817, near the city of Brattleboro, Vt., and his early life was passed in his native State, where he received an elementary training in literary knowledge. Not content, however, with the educational opportunities of the vicinity of his birthplace, he began to educate himself, and entered the profession of a teacher at an early age, following a course of study during his vacations. He afterward came to Washington county, locating on Pigeon creek, and later he entered the office of Dr. Emery, remaining there some time; then attended Dartmouth College one year, after which he entered the University of New York, graduating in 1842. On February 11, 1841, he was married to Ruth McCullough, daughter of Isaac McCullough, who was born in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Patrick McCullough, a native of County Antrim, Ireland, and who at the age of eighteen years came to America, locating in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., where he purchased 600 acres of land and made a permanent home. He (Patrick McCullough) was married to Hannah Smith, and they reared the following children: James, Elizabeth, John, Ebenezer, Mary and Isaac. The father was actively interested in religious work, and was the first elder of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek. He was an enterprising man, and in politics voted with the Whig party.

Isaac McCullough was born on the home farm in Somerset township, this county, receiving a rudimentary education in the public schools. While yet a young man, he was wedded to Margaret, daughter of William McMillen, by which union there were four children, viz.: William, Mary (Mrs. John Hattery), Ruth (wife of Erastus Bemis, M. D.), and James (a citizen of Chicago). Mr. McCullough was a Whig and a Republican in politics, and in religious faith was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek.

After his marriage to Miss McCullough, Dr. Bemis settled in the village of Buffalo, Hopewell township, Washington county, where he practiced his profession five years, at the end of which time he removed to West Middletown, same county, where the remainder of his life was passed. He became one of the most successful and well-known physicians of the county, and in educational matters was the peer of any citizen in his vicinity. Politically he was a Whig, and a leader in the Abolition party, taking also an active part in the "Underground Railway," of which West Middletown was then a "station." In religious faith he was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church for many years, and he was an earnest temperance advocate. He died July 14, 1866, leaving three children: James N., Mary and David H.

James N. Bemis was born June 20, 1845, in Hopewell township, this county, where he was reared. He received his elementary training in the common schools, which was supplemented with a course at Washington and Jefferson College. He then entered Ann Arbor Medical College, remaining one year, after which he took a course at Bellevue Hospital Medical College, graduating in 1870. Dr. Bemis began to follow his profession in West Middletown, this county, where he and his brother David have secured a lucrative practice. On September 7, 1876, he married Dora, daughter of A. C. Chapman; she died in July, 1877, and for his second wife Dr. Bemis was united in marriage, in September, 1884, with Jennie B., daughter of John Brownlee. Three children have blessed their union: Newton (deceased), Ruth and Janet. In his political preferences Dr. James N. Bemis is a staunch Republican.

David H. Bemis, M. D. (a brother by the double tie of blood and profession), was born June 17, 1852, in Hopewell township, this county, and attended the common schools, also Washington and Jefferson College, retiring in his junior year on account of poor health. Afterward he took a course at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, from which he graduated in 1879. He is a skilled physician, and an intelligent and energetic citizen. In politics he votes the straight Republican ticket.

JR. KELSO, a well-known citizen and enterprising agriculturist of Mt. Pleasant township, is a son of George M. Kelso, whose father was Mark Kelso.

The Kelso family are of Irish descent, and Mark Kelso, after his marriage to Elizabeth Ewing, came to a farm in Allegheny county, Penn., where he remained for some time, and in 1818 bought an improved farm, which became his permanent home. His wife died many years before him, leaving the following children: Mary (Mrs. John Cowden), living in Mt. Pleasant township; Jane, married to George Robb; Esther, deceased in 1888; Elizabeth, deceased in 1884; George M., the father of our subject; John, married in Ohio, had one child, Americans, who died some years ago; James, Martha and Letta Ann (mentioned below). Of these children, James Kelso was first married to a Miss Elder, who bore him children as follows: William E., Mark, John, Elizabeth and Lucinda; the mother died, and for his second wife James was married to Jane Miller, and they had three children: Margaret, Alice and Miller; this wife also died, and Mr. Kelso then made a third choice in the person of Mrs. Catherine McMillan, who bore him two children, viz., James and Samuel George. The father of this family died in Allegheny county, two years after the decease of his last wife. Martha Kelso became the wife of Phineas Kelso, of Lawrence county, Ohio, and four children were born to them, as follows: Mark (who entered the service in Lawrence county, and was killed in battle). Elizabeth, Andrew and John. Letta Ann was married to John Gregg, of North Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., the following children being born to their union: Elizabeth, Mark, Edward, Mary, Levi and Esther (twins), Clara, Emma and Ellsworth.

George M. Kelso, son of Mark and Elizabeth (Ewing) Kelso, was born April 6, 1806, in Allegheny county, Penn., in 1818 coming to Washington county with his parents. The family settled on a farm now owned by J. R. Kelso, where George M. grew to manhood. On March 28, 1838, the latter was married to Maria Raukin, who was born December 22, 1813, in Mt. Pleasant township. The young people settled on the home farm, where their lives were passed. George M. Kelso and his wife were formerly members of the Robinson's Run Union Church, afterward uniting with the United Presbyterian Church at Venice. He died March 27, 1879, his wife being laid to rest July 30, 1878. They were the parents of nine children: an unnamed infant (deceased); Mary Jane; Lizzie E. (wife of David R. P. Springer); Mark; Abigail Lavina (deceased); Abigail Lavina (living on the home farm); J. R., subject of this sketch; William James, and Maggie A. Of these children, Lizzie E. was married February 19, 1878, to David R. P. Springer, a native and resident of Robinson township, and to this union were born two children, one of whom, Charley Ross, is living (Mr. Springer died August 29, 1887); Mark Kelso was married, October 19, 1871, to Elizabeth Cornelius Allison, a native of Allegheny county (they have had seven children, three of whom are living: George and Alexander (twins) and Mark; the father is a farmer of North Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn.); William James was married May 11, 1882, to Miss Ella Finley, of Pittsburgh, Penn. (they reside in Cecil township, this county, and have one daughter, Mary Elsie).

J. R. Kelso, son of George and Maria (Rankin) Kelso, was born on the farm where he is now residing, receiving his literary education in the schools of Mt. Pleasant township. Mr. Kelso has always followed agricultural pursuits on the home farm of 189 acres, his sister keeping house for him. He devotes considerable attention to stock raising, and has been successful in all his business undertakings. He is a member of the U. P. Church at Venice, this county, and in politics votes the Republican ticket.

DAVID McCLAY (deceased) was born December 28, 1854, a son of David and Margaret (McElroy) McClay, and was for many years one of the prominent men of his township. His boyhood was passed upon the home farm, and during the winter months he attended the district school, completing his education (as far as text-books were concerned) at the age of fourteen. But in those few years he had acquired that which is of far greater value than technical facts, an intense thirst for general knowledge, which increased in proportion to the information he had obtained. On January 23, 1873, he married Martha J. Paxton, daughter of Samuel and Martha Paxton, of Chartiers township, this county. Mr. McClay at once brought his bride to the old home farm, where they remained till 1877, when their present pleasant home was erected, to which they removed. The children born to this union were: Maggie E., James B., Albert J., Ralph S., Frank, and Earl (who died young). Mr. McClay was a staunch Republican, and took a deep interest in the political questions which occupied the attention of his party. He served as school director many years, and was one of the warmest friends of education to be found in the community. At an early age he united with the Disciple Church, and was ever one of the most active, devoted and conscientious members of that body. He was a man of fine physical development, and had always been an utter stranger to any form of ill health, until, stricken down by a fatal fever, he passed away, after a few weeks of suffering, October 27, 1889. A useful life was his, cut down in its very prime; a true friend and kind father was called away, and he was laid to rest in Washington cemetery, deeply mourned by his family and many friends.

SAMUEL C. McCLAIN, the oldest living representative of his family, was born February 26, 1850, in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., near the habitation of the first settler of the township, and is of Scotch-Irish descent.

John McClain was born in Ireland, which had been the home of his ancestors for many years, and in 1779 came to America, settling in Washington county, Penn., the following year. Soon after his arrival in this country Mr. McClain was married to Rachel Tucker. The young people began their pioneer life in the usual log cabin, where they lived for many years, and reared the following children: Sarah, Elizabeth, James, Simeon, John and William. Mr. McClain was one of the organizers of the Whig party in his vicinity, and in religious faith he and his family were members of the Presbyterian Church. He was laid to rest near the new home, by the side of his wife who had preceded him.

James McClain, son of John and Rachel (Tucker) McClain, was born on the home farm in Franklin township, and attended the schools of those days. In early manhood he was married to Nancy Miller, a daughter of Benjamin Miller, of Greene county, Penn., and the young people immediately began housekeeping on the farm, which Mr. McClain continued to own until his death. To Mr. and Mrs. James McClain were born children as follows: Sarah J. (Mrs. Morris Weir), Samuel (subject of this sketch), Martha (deceased), B. F., Flora (Mrs. Clark), and Addie (deceased). He was a liberal contributor to public enterprises, and a quiet but most efficient worker in all progressive movements. He was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and in politics was formerly a Whig, but after the organization of the party became an active Republican, although he never held political office. On April 23, 1888, he passed away, and his remains were laid by the side of his wife, who died February 28, 1881.

Samuel C. McClain passed his youth on the old home place, and in early life took an active interest in the management of the farm. In 1880 he was united in marriage with Clara, daughter of J. C. Chambers, of Amwell township, Washington county, and they have one son and four daughters: Ella, Morris, Mary, Nettie and Grace. Mr. McClain has always been a Republican. He is yet engaged in farming, owning the old Jolly farm near Jolly school-house.

B. F. McClain, youngest son of James, and brother of Samuel C. McClain, also resides on and owns the home farm, and is a staunch Republican. He is unmarried.

WILLIAM DAVIS, a leading representative and highly esteemed citizen of South Strabane township, is a native of the county, having been born October 6, 1810, in West Bethlehem township.

William Davis, grandfather of our subject, emigrated from his native Scotland to America at an early day, and made a settlement in Washington county, Penn., where he passed the remainder of his life in farming pursuits. His children were Elizabeth (Mrs. Edward West), Thomas, Sarah (Mrs. William Moore), William, Samuel, Joshua and Rezin. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics a Whig of the old school.

Joshua Davis, son of this revered pioneer, was born October 6, 1787, in West Bethlehem township, this county, and received but a limited education at the subscription schools of the neighborhood. He married Mary McNeelance, who was born November 22, 1785, and the following are the names and dates of births of their children: William, October 6, 1810; Lucinda, February 2, 1812 (married to James Smith); George, July 23, 1815; Eliza, May 25, 1822 (married to William Pease); Margaret A., July 28, 1825. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Davis made their home in West Bethlehem township for a time, and then moved to Buffalo township, where they remained until in their declining years they had to abandon farm labor, and make their final home with their son William. Here the father died October 10, 1864, the mother on June 6, 1871, and both are interred in Washington cemetery. They were members of the Presbyterian Church; in politics Mr. Davis was originally a Whig and afterward, on the formation of the party, a staunch Republican.

William Davis, of whom these lines more particularly refer, attended in his boyhood the rate schools of the neighborhood of his birthplace, and early in life commenced working on his father's farm in North Strabane township, where he remained until 1847. In that year, by careful husbandry he was enabled to buy a farm for his own account in South Strabane township, and since that time he has devoted himself to agriculture and the growing of Saxony wool, in both of which industries he has met with well-merited success, his flock of sheep numbering often 1,000 head. He owns now about 500 acres of the best land in the county. Mr. Davis has been three times married: first, on January 28, 1836, to Juliet Palmer, who bore him three children: George, John K. and Mary Elizabeth. This wife died October 11, 1841, and August 15, 1844, Mr. Davis married Phebe E. Moore, who died July 8, 1852. On September 23, 1853, Mr. Davis took for his third spouse, Mary, daughter of David Kerr, which union has been blessed with one son, William H., now a progressive farmer. Mr. Davis, Sr., has held a number of important township offices, and was for nine years a member of the poor board of the county, the duties of which he discharged in a manner highly creditable to himself and most satisfactory to his constituents. For several years he was director of the First National Bank of Washington, in which he still is a large stockholder. He has long been a member of the Presbyterian Church of Pigeon Creek, in which for many years he was an elder. He is now an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Washington, Penn.

David Kerr, father of Mrs. William Davis, was born near Finleyville, Penn., a son of James Kerr, a native of Chester county, and descended from stalwart Scotch-Irish ancestry. In Chester county James Kerr married Lizzie Porter, and their children were Martha (Mrs. Alexander Bell), Margaret (Mrs. James Taylor), James, Joseph, Hannah (Mrs. Thomas McVey) and David. The father carried on farming in Union township, this county, where he died in 1825, his wife following him to the grave in 1828. They were members of the Mingo Presbyterian Church, and in politics he was a Whig.

Their son David attended in his boyhood days the subscription schools of the vicinity of his home, proving an apt scholar and a good penman. On January 10, 1810, he married Sarah Varner, of Baldwin township, Allegheny Co., Penn., and the children by that marriage were John, James, Joel (in Pittsburgh), Cyrus (deceased), Howard, Mary (Mrs. William Davis), Willison, David and S. J. The father was called from his earthly labors and life work on the farm, October 9, 1865, the mother dying March 8, 1850, and both are buried in Mingo Creek cemetery. They were members of the Union Church, in which he was an elder, and in politics he was a Democrat. He was a liberal contributor to all educational enterprises as well as matters pertaining to religion. Mr. and Mrs. David Kerr's home after marriage was in Union township until 1816, when they removed to Pigeon Creek, Somerset township, where they passed the remainder of their honorable lives.

DAVID V. DONLEY, a successful business man of Amwell township, is a grandson of John Donley, a farmer, who, in 1807, came from Hagerstown, Md., and located in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. He was married to Sarah Horner, and they had four children: John (deceased), James, Homer (deceased) and Sarah (Mrs. Weir). The father of this family died in West Bethlehem township in 1837.

Homer Donley, son of John, was born in Maryland in 1807, and same year was brought by his parents to West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a common-school education, and when yet a mere boy the duty of caring for his parents devolved upon him. He engaged in the milling business, and at the end of seven years purchased a farm of 110 acres, where he followed agricultural pursuits during the rest of his life. In 1827 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Wilson, daughter of James and Sarah Wilson, of Somerset township, Washington county, and their children were: Mrs. Mary Jane Young, David V., Wilson, Mrs. Margaret Young, and Hannah. At the time of his death Mr. Donley was worth $30,000. He was a prominent citizen of Somerset township, and a member of the Republican party.

David V. Donley was born February 8, 1842, in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and remained on the old home ten years, when the family removed to Somerset township, Washington county. In 1868 he was united in marriage with Emma Whitely, daughter of Peter and Mary Whitely, of Somerset township, and three children have been born to them, viz.: Lizzie, Walter and Everett. Mr. Donley remained at home two years after his marriage, and then rented a farm in North Strabane township, same county, where he resided two years. In 1872 he moved to Amwell township, this county, and purchased the farm of 117 acres which he has since lived upon; he also owns a fine farm of 110 acres, situated near Smithville, also in this county, and has been very successful in business. He was in the Civil war three years, having enlisted in 1862, in Company F, Eighteenth P. V. C., and took part in the battles of Gettysburg and the Wilderness, besides many minor engagements. Mr. and Mrs. Donley and their daughter Lizzie are members of the United Presbyterian Church.

DANIEL DAY. The Day family is numbered with the old and influential citizens of Washington county, and of the many who deserve an honored mention in the annals of history, this gentleman is a prominent figure. His father, John Day, was born May 2, 1788, in Morris township, this county, and followed agricultural pursuits from early youth. He was a volunteer in the war of 1812-15 under Gen. Harrison. When a young man he was united in marriage with Sarah Miller, a native of Amwell township, Washington county, who bore him eleven children, namely: Eliza (deceased wife of George Wolfe), a resident of Nineveh, Greene Co., Penn.; Mary (deceased wife of John Brownlee), lived in Prosperity, Morris township, this county; Sally, widow of Robert Baldwin, of Morris township; J. Miller; Daniel, of whom a sketch follows; Harvey, of Lincoln, Neb. (was first married to Caroline McCallam, then to Mrs. Mary Harris, of Wheeling, W. Va.); Annie (deceased), was the wife of Elias Conger (deceased), then became the wife of Dr. Strouse, of Amity, Amwell township, this county; Abigail, wife of H. C. Swart, living in Washington borough; Cyrus, deceased at the age of eight years; Jessie and Mary, both deceased in infancy.

Daniel Day, son of John and Sarah (Miller) Day, was born January 12, 1824, in Morris township, this county, and first attended school in a log cabin twelve feet square, which was erected on the home place. At the age of eighteen years he entered the employ of A. B. Wolf, a cabinet maker of Washington, Penn., with whom he remained two years, then passed several months in Pittsburgh, Penn. In 1846 he was married to Mary Bates, and in 1847 went to Waynesburg, Penn., where he opened a cabinet, furniture and undertaking establishment. In 1854 he sold out and entered a hotel in Waynesburg, which he conducted about eighteen months, then managed the "Old Mansion House" in Washington, Penn., in partnership with his brother Harvey, continuing in that business three years. In 1861 he enlisted, under Capt. Wishart, in Company K, Eighth Pennsylvania Reserves. He joined the regiment at Washington, D. C., then went to Tenallytown, Md., where his regiment was encamped with others of the same division, remaining there about two months. During this time they were engaged in no active service, but were employed on picket duty and incidental work, although alarms were often heard along the Potomac line. In October they moved to winter quarters at Pierrepont (or Langley), Va., and in the spring entered active service. Mr. Day took part in the Seven Days' Fight before Richmond, Va., second battle of Bull Run, and entered Maryland with his regiment. His health failing, Daniel Day was then sent to the hospital, and afterward received an honorable discharge. After his return from the war in 1863, Mr. Day, in 1865, entered the furniture and undertaking business at Canonsburg, Penn., in which he has since continued.

Mrs. Day died a few years after her marriage, leaving three children: Frank, Ann E. (wife of Addison Ruton), and Oello (Mrs. Collins). Of this family Frank is married to Myra V. Mills, of Allegheny City, Penn., and has two children: Euma M. and Daniel Day, Jr. On May 10, 1860, Mr. Day was married to Hester A. Johns, a native of Washington, Penn. Daniel Day is an active member of the Democratic party, and has served two terms as burgess of Canonsburg, and has been notary public for the past ten years. He and his family are members of the Episcopal Church.

DR. JOHN NELSON SPROWLS. The history of the Sprowls family in this country dates back to the close of the Revolutionary war, when John Sprowls, with his wife and nine children, left County Tyrone (or County Fermanagh), Ireland, for the United States, and made his home in Pennsylvania, near where Shippensburg now stands, and in what was known as the "Horseshoe Bend." He afterward moved to Finley township, this county, and settled on what is now known as the William Sprowls farm, near Good Intent, where he and his wife lived till their death. From this parent stock sprung the Sprowlses of now East and West Finley townships.

John Sprowls, grandfather of Dr. J. N., was born in Ireland, and emigrated to this country with his parents. He was the third member in the family of nine children. Just prior to the removal of his parents and family from near Shippensburg to Washington county he was married to Margaret Graden. The Gradens came west with the Sprowlses, crossed the Ohio river and located near the present site of Stenbenville, Jefferson Co., Ohio. John Sprowls and his wife settled on the farm where his son Alexander was born, and which he (Alexander) afterward bought and lived on until his death. After residing here for nearly eight years, John Sprowls and his family moved to the farm now owned by a grandson, Nelson Ealy, in East Finley township. Here the parents resided till their death. Their children were William, who lived and died a resident of East Finley township; Ellen, who married John Ealy, and lived and died on the old home place; Nancy who married John Rockyfellow; Alexander; James; Henry; Arthur; John; Nelson and Mary. The six younger sons bought land in West Finley township, near Burnsville, adjoining each other, where they resided until their death, excepting Arthur and Nelson, who remain as landmarks in the flight of time. This large family of ten children lived to own their own homes, and were enterprising, industrious and influential citizens, always foremost in educational and religious work.

John Sprowls, father of Dr. John N., was born in 1818 on the old place (now the Ealy farm) in East Finley township, the eighth in a family of ten children. His parents died while he was young, and as a consequence he was at an early age thrown on his own resources. He worked for some years for his elder brothers, eventually saving enough to buy a farm. By perseverance and industrious habits he soon held a front rank with the young men of the neighborhood. He became a charter member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Windy Gap, and was a ruling elder for many years. Till his death, which occurred August 3, 1870, he was looked upon by the people as one of the staunch men of this part of the county. On April 5, 1850, he was united in marriage to Mary Ann McNay, who was born March 18, 1825; she is a woman of inestimable traits of character, who did much toward the success which crowned her husband's efforts. She survives him, and divides her time between the old farm, dear to her from the hallowed memories of the past, and visiting her children, of whom there were eight, as follows: James M., born April 14, 1851; John Nelson, born September 14, 1852; Isaac N., born February 20, 1854 (he graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and died February 20, 1882); Leroy M., born December 22, 1856 (also graduated from Jefferson Medical College); Anna M., born February 26, 1858; Clara R., born September 24, 1859; Alexander H., born April 29, 1861 (he studied pharmacy, and is at present engaged in the retail drug business at Elgin, Ill.), and Lucy E., born June 23, 1863, died September 6, 1881. All those living are married and have homes of their own. James M. (the eldest in the family) graduated from Waynesburgh College, read law and was admitted to the bar of Washington county, and now resides in Washington, D. C.

Dr. John Nelson Sprowls was educated in the common schools and at Oberlin College (Ohio). He read medicine with Dr. Silas C. McCracken, of Claysville, this county, entered Jefferson Medical College in 1875, and graduated from that institution in 1877. After graduating he practiced with his preceptor for one year, since when he has been following his chosen profession in Claysville. He takes a deep interest in his professional work, and keeps himself posted on all improvements and discoveries in medical science. When quite young he united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and afterward with the Claysville Presbyterian Church, of which he is now a member. On March 7, 1878, Dr. Sprowls was united in marriage with Maggie M. McLain, daughter of Hon. Joseph R. McLain, and they have had three children: Joseph William, born May 6, 1882, who died November 27, 1884; John Wilson Irwin, born April 20, 1886, who died July 19, 1887, and George Milton, born October 3, 1888, who is the pride of his parents.

BENJAMIN CHUBBIC is descended from an early family of North Strabane township. His grandfather, also named Benjamin Chubbic, was a sailor, and in early life was married to Bathsheba Harvey. In 1811 he retired from sea-faring life and settled with his family in Washington county, Pennsylvania.

Harvey Chubbic was about six years of age when his parents moved to Washington county, Penn., where his early life was passed. In 1833 he was united in marriage with Mary Ann Runey, who bore him children as follows: Elizabeth (wife of William Watson), Robert (deceased), Benjamin (of whom further mention is made), and Margaret (married to James Auld, of Ohio). Mrs. Chubbic died soon after the birth of her youngest child, and for his second wife the father was married to Rebecca Grable. To this union there was born one son, Philip. The father was a successful business man, and won his way to fortune by tireless industry. In politics he was a Republican. He died August 4, 1890, the wife and mother having passed away two years before.

Benjamin Chubbic now owns and resides upon the old homestead. Like his father, he advocates the principles embodied in the Republican party. The family are all members of the Chartiers Presbyterian Church. He is unmarried.

EG. EMERY, one of the successful farmers of Mt. Pleasant township, is a son of Dr. Boyd Emery, and a grandson of Walter and Jane (Blakney) Emery. Walter Emery was born in Ireland, and coming to America in early manhood was married to Jane Blakney. They settled in Canonsburg, this county, where he followed the trade of a shoemaker. During a heavy storm the public bridge in the town was endangered, and while assisting in the attempt to save it Mr. Emery was drowned. His widow was afterward married to Squire Duncan, of Smith township, and died about 1865 in Florence, this county.

Boyd Emery was born in 1805, in Canonsburg, this county, and reared and educated in his native town. He graduated from Jefferson College, standing second in his class, and afterward studied medicine at Canonsburg under Dr. Leatherman. He then entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and after receiving his degree, settled near Dunningville, this county, where he passed his life, practicing medicine. He was married to Anna Graham, of Cross Creek township, and the following children were born to their union: E. G. (subject of this sketch), Martha G. (Mrs. W. G. Kammerer, of Chicago), James A. (living in Somerset township, this county), Boyd (a physician and surgeon of Somerset township), William H. (living on a part of the homestead in Somerset township) and Anna M. (Mrs. James H. McNary, of Nottingham township). Dr. Emery practiced continuously for fifty-five years, and was a popular and skillful physician. He was an active member of the Republican party, and in religious connection he and his wife were members of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church. He died in 1886, having been preceded by his wife in 1874.

E. G. Emery was born September 7, 1842, in Somerset township, near Dunningville, this county, and received his education at Hoge Summit Academy. He enlisted at Canonsburg August 13, 1862, in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., for three years, or during the war, and was mustered into the service at Pittsburgh, Penn. He was assigned to the army of the Potomac, under Gen. Hancock, and took part in the battles of Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Petersburg, Mine Run and the other principal engagements participated in by the army of the Potomac. E. G. Emery was in thirteen different battles, and took part in the Grand Review at Washington, D. C. He received an honorable discharge in 1865, at Pittsburgh, Penn., and then returned to Somerset township, this county. On December 13, 1865, he was married to Miss Martha Ann Hamilton, who was born November 4, 1844, in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn. She was educated at Washington Female Seminary. She is a daughter of the late Alexander Hamilton, who was a prosperous farmer and ruling elder in Pigeon Creek congregation for a number of years, holding the position up to the time of his death.

After his marriage E. G. Emery settled in Somerset township, and in 1868 purchased 188 acres in Mt. Pleasant township, to which he moved the same year, and has since been engaged in farming and stock raising. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Emery, namely: Cora G. (Mrs. William L. McIlvain, of Somerset township), Lillie A. (wife of John M. White, of Cross Creek township), William H., Teresa, Boyd A., Myrta and Walter V. Mr. Emery is an active politician in the Republican party, and is interested in all matters of local importance. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church of Mount Prospect, in which he is a deacon.

JOHN SMITH ACHESON is a prosperous citizen of Mt. Pleasant township, and a worthy representative of an early pioneer family. His grandfather, Matthew Reed Acheson, was an early settler of Mt. Pleasant township; he settled on the farm yet owned by his descendants, and passed his life on the old place. His son, Matthew Reed Acheson, was born in Mt. Pleasant township, and in early manhood was married to a young lady whose name is not known. She died, and Matthew was afterward united in marriage with Nancy Smith, a native of Smith township. In 1846 they settled on the old farm, where children were born as follows: Elizabeth Martin (wife of John H. Buchanan, deceased in 1875), Sarah Lavina (wife of Samuel F. Hart, of Hickory, this county), John S. (residing in Mt. Pleasant township), Margaret Jane (deceased in 1872, wife of William Ray) and Matthew (engaged in farming and stock raising on the home place). The father was a member of the U. P. Church at Hickory, and died many years ago, his wife surviving him for some time.

JOHN CALVIN FRENCH is the youngest son of George M. and Mary (Porter) French, and was born in Washington county, Penn., October 10, 1836. His mother died when he was less than three years old, and his early childhood was spent with relations in Fayette county, same State. At the age of twelve years he returned to his father's home, where he remained about four years, and then became an inmate of the family of William Lindley, Esq. He was a boy of all work during the summers, attending the district school in the winter; thus circumstances denied him the advantage of a thorough education, which he so much desired.

At the age of nineteen he accepted a position in the mercantile house of Robert Porter, at Ritchie C. H., W. Va., and at the end of one year's service he associated himself with three others in a co-partnership, and embarked in the hoop and stave trade at points on the B. & O. R. R., east of Parkersburg, Va. This company erected and operated the first establishment for the manufacture of oil barrels in that region after the development of the Kanawha oil field. The sudden breaking out of the war of the Rebellion destroyed the business of the company, and caused heavy financial losses. In closing up the affairs of the company, Mr. French found himself possessed of little else save good health, and a settled conviction that duty demanded that he should contribute himself to his country's service. Seeking an interview with some of his associates who had not been induced by political intriguers to cast their lots with the cause of secession, an arrangement was secretly entered into by which he and six others like-minded met at an agreed point on the night of June 14, 1861, and made their way to St. Mary's, the nearest point on the Ohio river, a distance of sixteen miles, in time for the morning boat going to Wheeling, where they arrived on the morning of June 16, 1861. Proceeding at once to "Camp Carlisle" on the island, they enlisted in a company which afterward became Company E.

J. C. Funch.

Second Virginia Infantry. Thus it appears that the subject of this sketch was one of seven who first represented Ritchie county, Va., in the Union army.

After serving as private soldier, duty sergeant, and orderly sergeant through all the vicissitudes of the first fifteen months of the war, and having been left in command of the company at the second battle of Bull Run (one of the two commissioned officers present being killed and the other severely wounded), an unusual compliment was shown him, as no commissioned officer was assigned to the company until September 9, 1862, when he was commissioned second lieutenant and assigned to Company H. On December 3, same year, he was commissioned first lieutenant, and assigned back to Company E. For some time he was assigned to the command of Company B, while that company was detached from the regiment at an outpost. While in command of a portion of the forces which made a dash upon the enemy at the Rocky Gap affair on August 26, 1863, he received a severe wound near the left knee, the thigh bone being fractured and the joint distorted, which has measurably disabled him ever since. Having been rescued from falling into the hands of the enemy by his comrades, and having been conveyed by ambulance a distance of more than a hundred miles to Beverly, Va., he was kindly sheltered and nursed by Mrs. Jonathan Arnold, a sister of the famous Confederate chieftain, "Stonewall" Jackson, until he was sufficiently recovered to visit his old home in Pennsylvania. After his return to his regiment he was commissioned adjutant, and served in that capacity until his command was mustered out. The following is copied from the regimental history compiled by Frank S. Reder, Esq., editor of the Beaver Valley News, who was a comrade of Mr. French: "There was no braver officer in the regiment, and Lieut. French deserves special mention for his gallant conduct at the second battle of Bull Run, and for his splendid leadership in the extreme advance, in the dash where he was wounded at Rocky Gap."

After three years' service in the army, he returned to Washington county, Penn., and on September 7, 1864, was married to Miss Sevilla Vaile, in fulfilment of an engagement made in early life. For some years he followed merchandising. In 1873 he was elected treasurer of his native county. After the expiration of his term of office he returned to his home in Prosperity, Morris township, engaging as far as able in farming. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church of Upper Ten Mile, in the prosperity and work of which he and his family have for years taken a deep interest. For some time he has served as superintendent of the Sabbath-school connected with the congregation; for the last six consecutive years he has been chosen to preside as moderator at the business meetings of the congregation, and on February 12, 1893, he was chosen a ruling elder. He has long been a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and was one of the charter members of Luther Day Post, No. 395, Department of Pennsylvania, and for some time had the honor of being its commander.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. French, viz.: Dr. Edward E., of Bentleyville; Leah Mary, wife of Dr. A. N. Booth, also of Bentleyville; Charles Clinton, who died in infancy, and John Calvin, Jr., who is now acquiring an education.

JOHN A. NESBITT, a leading farmer of Canton township, this county, is a native of the same, having been born April 3, 1829, on the farm which is now his home. He is a grandson of John Nesbitt, who was a native of Cecil county, Md., and was married to Martha Donaldson, a native of Allegheny county, Penn. In about 1790, John Nesbitt, in company with three brothers, moved to Washington county, Penn. The brothers bought their lands in common, afterward making a division, John's portion being a farm of 119 acres in Canton township, this county. Of the other brothers, one moved away, but John, Joseph and Jonathan passed their lives in the county, and their descendants are living in Canton and Chartiers townships. In the winter of 1837, the family of John Nesbitt was attacked with a fever, and on December 22, 1837, the father died. Three of his children were also taken, namely: John (deceased October 29, 1837), Margaret (deceased November 29, 1837) and Jane (deceased December 19, 1837). Robert and his mother were left to mourn the loss of their dear ones, and on April 26, 1842, the latter was laid to rest beside them. Mrs. Donaldson, the mother of Mrs. Nesbitt, was a native of Allegheny county, Penn., and made her home with her daughter for some time prior to her death, which occurred March 23, 1828, at the age of one hundred years, four months and twenty-three days. She was buried in the cemetery at Cross Roads, in Chartiers township.

Robert Nesbitt, a son of John and Martha (Donaldson) Nesbitt, was born in 1800, on his father's farm in Canton township, this county. On June 12, 1828, he was united in marriage with Mary Ann Anderson, a native of Chartiers township, Washington county, after which event he continued to reside on the home farm. Three children were born to this union, namely: John A.; Sarah (married to Edward Dougherty, of Canton township), born August 24, 1831; and Martha, born September 6, 1835 (deceased wife of William Stewart, of Canton township, whose children are Frank and Martha, twins). Mrs. Mary Ann (Anderson) Nesbitt died September 27, 1837, and Mr. Nesbitt was afterward married to Margaret Shaw, a resident of Canton township, who bore him one son, Robert D., of Chartiers township. Mr. Nesbitt was a shoemaker and farmer. He was much interested in educational matters, and in politics was a Whig and Republican. He was formerly an elder of the Associate Reformed Church, and then joined the United Presbyterian Congregation at Cross Roads. Robert Nesbitt died August 13, 1861, on the home farm.

John A. Nesbitt, son of Robert and Mary Ann Nesbitt, passed his early life on the old homestead in Canton township, attending the common schools of both Canton and Chartiers townships. On February 9, 1865, he was married to Mary Reed, daughter of Joseph and Anna (McClain) Reed, natives of Pennsylvania, who came to Washington county in an early day, and died in Cecil township. Mrs. Nesbitt died August 20, 1881, and her husband is yet living on the farm, where he follows agricultural pursuits, and occasionally works at the carpenter's trade. His farm consists of seventy-one acres of well-cultivated, fertile land. Mr. Nesbitt is not an active politician, but votes with the Republican party. He is a member of the Associate Presbyterian Church, and a well-known citizen.

JOHAN H. HUGHES, an extensive farmer and dairyman of Amwell township, comes of Irish descent. His grandfather, Samuel Hughes, removed at an early day from New Jersey to Washington county, Penn., locating in Amwell township, and for several years he kept hotel on the National pike where John Little now resides. Samuel Hughes was married to Nancy Sample, and a large family was born to them. He accumulated a good property, and when far advanced in life moved to Iowa, locating near Fort Madison, where he died about 1860.

Workman Hughes was born February 5, 1822, in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., was educated in the common schools, and when twenty-two years of age began business for himself. He first owned a farm on the National pike, and afterward purchased one of 300 acres in the southern part of Amwell township, now called the "McGillin farm." He was united in marriage with Rachel Taylor, of South Strabane township, who bore him seven children, viz.: Samuel Taylor, born March 13, 1849; James W., born November 5, 1850; John H., born September 11, 1852; Mary E. (Mrs. Closser), born in October, 1854; Nancy J., born October 21, 1856; William, born in October, 1858, and Mrs. Rachel Myers, born May 12, 1861. On May 18, 1862, Mrs. Rachel Hughes died, and Mr. Hughes was afterward married to Margaret Vauce, and she dying in 1879, he was married to Margaret Scott. Mr. Hughes has been a prosperous business man, and has achieved his success unaided. In politics he has always been a Democrat, and has held several offices, serving in Washington county as director of the poor in 1872-74.

John H. Hughes, son of Workman and Rachel (Taylor) Hughes, passed his boyhood at home, on the old farm in Amwell township, Washington county; he attended the common schools until he was seventeen years of age, and has since been a great reader. On February 19, 1874, he was married to Lydia Meek, of Amwell township, and they have had the following children: Mary E., born March 20, 1875; Sarah M., born October 3, 1877; Lydia B., born February 11, 1879; Charles E., born October 28, 1881; Rachel H., born October 1, 1883; Alice G., born February 10, 1886; John Franklin, born May 1, 1888, and Hazel Edna, born May 20, 1890. Mr. Hughes has one of the finest creameries in Washington county, and is engaged in cheese and butter making, having made about 10,000 pounds of butter and 15,000 pounds of cheese. He owns a half interest in a farm of 170 acres which formerly belonged to David Evans. A Democrat in politics, he has filled several township offices. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Hughes is a Baptist.

WILLIAM GILFILLAN, M. D., who, in his lifetime was one of the most highly esteemed citizens of West Alexander, was born in 1818, in West Liberty, Ohio Co., Va., a son of Dr. Edward Gilfillan, who was born in Philadelphia, Penn., where he was reared and educated.

Dr. Edward Gilfillan received a thorough course of training in the grammar schools of his native place, which was supplemented by medical study at a college in Philadelphia. In early manhood he came west, and settled in West Liberty, Va., where he was married to Mary McKinley, who bore him the following named children: Harriet (Mrs. John Baird), Oberlin (living in Van Buren county, Iowa), George (a physician of Van Buren county, Iowa), and William, the subject of this sketch. After his marriage Dr. Gilfillan remained at West Liberty, and then settled in West Alexander, this county, where he enjoyed a good practice, and bore the reputation of a skillful physician. Politically he was formerly a Whig and then a Republican. He was among the earliest members of the Presbyterian Church at West Alexander.

William Gilfillan passed his youth in West Alexander, and was educated at Dr. McClosky's Academy and Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Penn. He studied medicine with his father until twenty years of age, when he commenced active practice in West Alexander, where he remained during the whole of his professional life, dying March 4, 1884. In 1843 the Doctor was married to Margaret, daughter of John Brotherton, of this county, and their children were Helen, Serena, Edward, John and Campbell. In politics Dr. Gilfillan was first a Whig and then a Republican. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

JAMES F. THOMPSON, a prominent and prosperous young farmer of Independence township, was born July 8, 1855, near West Middletown, Cross Creek township, Washington county. He was trained from childhood to work on the farm, and received a good education at the common schools. In 1882 he entered the retail grocery business in Washington borough, Penn., and in 1884 returned to the home farm. On November 11, 1884, he was united in marriage with Lucy L. Denny, who was born October 25, 1861, daughter of James H. Denny, of West Middletown, Penn. This union has been blessed with the following children: James D., born March 29, 1886; William H., born December 18, 1887, and Mary, born October 29, 1890. After his marriage Mr. Thompson located in Independence township, on a farm situated about one and a half miles east of the village of Independence, which has been in the possession of his father over thirty years; but James is the first member of the family who has lived upon it. He has erected a handsome new residence on the place, and made many improvements. Mr. Thompson is a scientific farmer, and makes a practical application of any new ideas which he can obtain relative to his chosen profession. Politically he is a member of the Republican party, but takes little part in the warfare of active politicians. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at West Middletown.

JOSEPH H. PHILIPS is a son of Isaac Philips, whose father, David, was the leading pioneer preacher of Peters township.

Rev. David Philips was born in 1742, in Wales, and emigrating thence many years ago, first settled in Chester county, Penn., where he was married to Miss Mary Thomas. The young couple then came to Washington county, Penn., and took up 400 acres of land on the boundary line of Washington and Allegheny counties, for which a patent was secured March 4, 1786. Prior to locating in Peters township, David Philips had been a captain in the Revolutionary war, and in religious connection was a member of the Great Valley Baptist Church. After settling in Washington county, he served forty years as pastor of the Peters Creek Baptist Church, the land upon which the church is now standing having formerly been a portion of his property. The following children were born to this couple: Isaac, Josiah, David, Thomas, Benjamin, Joseph, Joseph (2), John, Mary, David (2), Martha and Rachel (twins) and Sarah. During the Civil war a full company of the descendants of Rev. David Philips took an active part in the contest, and nearly 1,000 of his descendants are yet living.

Isaac Philips, son of David and Mary, was born in 1787, on the home farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. When a young man he was married to Nancy Leddie, a resident of Canonsburg, Penn. She was reared to womanhood by Col. Morgan, a soldier of the Revolution, and founder of the Morganza Reform School. Mr. and Mrs. Philips began wedded life on the home farm, where he erected the dwelling which is now the home of his son. Here their children were born as follows: Sarah, Isabella, David, Mary, Jane, Joseph H., Dr. James L., Joshua (a minister, of Cleveland, Ohio) and Lucinda.

Joseph H. Philips, whose name opens this sketch, was born August 31, 1822, on the old homestead in Peters township. In 1846 he was united in marriage with Mary K. Foster, who bore him two children, Joseph and Mary (twins), who died in infancy. The mother died in 1848, and on February 14, 1850, he made a second choice in the person of Mary J., daughter of James McKnight, of Allegheny county, Penn. Ten children have blessed their union, namely: Samantha J., Warren J., Flora, Nannie B., Louisa, Elizabeth M., Miranda, Elmer M., Mary E. and an infant. The home farm contains 116 acres of land. In political opinion Mr. Philips is a Republican, and has served in various local offices; in religion he is a member of the Baptist Church, and has led the choir for fifty years.

JOHN KNOX, a leading business man of Claysville, was born July 26, 1829, in Buffalo township, this county, and passed his youth on the home place, attending the common schools and following farming. In 1848 he was married to Mary J., daughter of Samuel Flack, of Buffalo township, this county, and she bore him two children: Ialam F. and Mary E. (Mrs. William Roney). On February 26, 1856, John Knox was united in marriage with Amanda Kane, a resident of Ohio, and the children born to this union were as follows: Anna J. (deceased), Horace, William M. and Luella. Mrs. Amanda Knox died March 13, 1874, and on October 15, 1876, he was married to Mrs. Agnes Jane (Campsey) Griffith, widow of Hoscic Griffith, and she bore him two children, John Campsey and Daisy Dell. Mr.

Knox has been a successful farmer and stock raiser for many years, and in 1891 he purchased a one-half interest in a livery barn at Claysville, this county, which he is now conducting. In politics he has been a lifelong Democrat, and in religion is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Claysville.

ISAAC W. RICHARDS, a prosperous agriculturist of East Pike Run township, this county, is a native of the same, born October 2, 1842. He is a son of John Richards, who was born in 1799, in Maryland, and when a young man came to Greene county, Penn. After his arrival in Pennsylvania John Richards was married to Phebe Woodward, who was born in 1803, in Greene county, Penn. In 1841 Mr. and Mrs. Richards purchased and moved upon the home farm in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and their place was for many years known throughout the country as the "Black Horse Tavern." Mr. Richards was a successful farmer, and, politically, voted with the Whig and Republican parties. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church at Coal Centre. He died in 1864, followed by Mrs. Richards in 1881. They were the parents of nine children, namely: Lucinda (widow of Owen Hines), living in Coal Centre, Penn.; Thomas C., residing in East Pike Run township; Isaac W., whose name opens this sketch; John F.; Mary Ann; Eliza Jane; Sarah Ann and Amy Ann (twins), and Harriet M., of whom the six last mentioned are now deceased.

Isaac W. Richards remained on the home farm during his youth, there receiving a common-school education. In 1866 he was united in marriage with Mary M. Duvall, who was born December 23, 1843, in East Pike Run township, a daughter of Alexander, and granddaughter of Jacob and Jane (Patterson) Duvall. The latter couple were natives of Maryland, and were descended from Irish ancestry. They came to Washington county, Penn., many years ago, where the following children were born and reared: Mary, widow of Moses Billingsley, of California, Penn.; Harriet, widow of Robert Duvall, of Illinois; Samantha, wife of Lewis J. Weaver, a farmer of East Pike Run township; Jefferson, a resident of East Pike Run township; and eight others who are now deceased. The parents died in East Pike Run township.

Alexander Duvall was born in 1810, on the home farm in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth under the paternal roof. In early life he was married to Jemima Hannon, who was born in 1809, and they were the parents of seven children, namely: Henry, a farmer of Fayette county, Penn.; Jacob, an agriculturist of Allen township, Washington county; James M.;

Jefferson, a farmer of East Pike Run township; Isabella, wife of Jacob Crow, now of Madison county, Iowa; Mary, wife of Isaac Richards, and Julia, married to William H. Jackman, a farmer of East Pike Run township. The father of this family died in 1884, and in 1887 the mother passed away. They were members of the M. E. Church.

To the union of Isaac W. and Mary M. (Duvall) Richards six children have been born, namely: Harriet E., Mina, Nellie B., Elsie B., and Loretta and Viletta (both deceased). Mr. Richards owns ninety acres of the old homestead, and gives his principal attention to farming. He has taken an active interest in the Republican party, and has served for twenty-five years as school director. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Coal Centre.

JESSE M. DILLE, an esteemed and prosperous farmer of Morris township, is a grandson of Lewis Dille, who was born in New Jersey, and was there united in marriage with Sarah Sanders. After their marriage the young people moved to Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., and located on a farm about three miles east of Prosperity, which is now the property of their grandson, Jesse, and there reared the following family of children: Usual Keziah, Abbie, Sarah, Ephraim, Lewis and Jane. Mr. Dille passed from earth in 1820.

Lewis Dille, son of Lewis and Sarah (Sanders) Dille, was born upon the farm of his father August 17, 1799, and in early life learned shoemaking. In 1822 he married Miss Lucy McCollum, and their children were: Ira (deceased), Jesse M., Cephas (a resident of Morris township, Greene county), Daniel (who lives in Prosperity, Morris township), Ephraim (residing in Greene county), John (a citizen of Prosperity), David (a resident of Claysville, Donegal township, this county), and Keziah (who lives in Morris township). Mr. Dille died April 28, 1885, and was followed within the year by his faithful wife. He was a Democrat in politics, and in religion was a member of the Upper Ten-Mile Presbyterian Church, at Prosperity, in which he was an elder, holding that position until his death.

Jesse M. Dille was born March 16, 1825, on the home farm in Morris township, this county, where he has always lived. On December 11, 1851, he was united in marriage with Rachel Minton, also a resident of Morris township, and their children are: W. H., Addison, Samuel, Eva, Lizzie and Homer. W. H. and Samuel are photographers at Prospect, Ohio; Addison is a dentist in Newton, Jasper Co., Iowa; Eva is the wife of Oliver Booth, of Morris township; Lizzie and Homer reside with their parents. Mr. Dille was formerly engaged in the dry-goods, grocery and hotel business at Washington, Penn., and has made a success in all. Politically he is a Democrat with Prohibition tendencies, and in religion is a member of the Upper Ten-Mile Church at Prosperity.

JAMES S. HAYS. Among the well-to-do and influential farmers of this county, James S. Hays is prominently known. He is a representative of an old pioneer family, of whom the earliest ancestor there is record of was one David Hays. David Hays bought land in New Jersey, September 13, 1787, and his children were born and reared in that State, as follows: Seven sons—John, Thomas, David, Joseph, William, James and Moses—and five daughters whose names are unknown.

Moses Hays, son of David, was born in New Jersey, and after partially learning the blacksmith's trade, was drafted, at the age of sixteen, into the Continental army, and with five of his brothers served during that contest. He was employed as regimental blacksmith till the close of his term of service. During the contest, his brother John, who was a lieutenant, received a wound which soon afterward caused his death. In 1783 Moses Hays was married to Jemima Peterson, a native of New Jersey. Soon after the close of the Revolutionary war, Moses, with his wife and brothers, went west, settling on 1,000 acres of land about three miles southeast of Burgettstown, this county, on Raccoon creek. The brothers divided this land among themselves, and Moses made a permanent home upon his share which is still owned by Alexander Hays, a grandson of Moses, where the following children were born and reared: Thomas, born on October 5, 1784 (moved to Jackson county, Ohio, where he died); Edith, born February 27, 1786 (wife of David Hays, of Ohio); John, born February 3, 1789 (deceased near Moorefield, Harrison Co., Ohio); William, born April 7, 1791 (killed by accident); James, born June 11, 1793 (deceased in Allegheny county, Penn.); Alexander, born November 11, 1795; Mary, born December 25, 1797 (died in youth); Eleanor, born November 15, 1799 (deceased wife of James Todd, of Allegheny county); Joseph, born February 15, 1801 (deceased on the home farm); David, born May 7, 1803 (deceased farmer of Smith township, married to Martha Fulton), and Ann, born June 23, 1805 (deceased in youth). Moses Hays possessed a remarkably retentive memory, easily recalling incidents of the Revolutionary war fifty years after the conflict. Anything once seen or heard he never forgot, and was easily brought to his mind whenever the subject arose. He was a prominent and successful farmer, and in religion was a member of the Raccoon Church during the ministry of Rev. Moses Allen, who was a personal friend of Moses Hays. The latter passed away in 1836, being followed in a few days by his wife.

Alexander Hays was born November 11, 1795, on the farm of his father in Smith township. His literary attainments were acquired in the primitive log cabin school-house of the day, the instruction being as limited as the furniture, but Alexander Hays soon gave evidence of unusual mechanical ability, readily learning both the carpenter's and blacksmith's trades. In 1824 he was married to Ann Stevenson, who was born in 1802, daughter of James Stevenson, an extensive landowner of Smith township. The children born to this union were as follows, one deceased in infancy, James S. (whose name opens these lines), Jemima (deceased in infancy), John (a farmer of Smith township) and Joseph (a lawyer in Pittsburgh, Penn.). Alexander and Ann (Stevenson) Hays began married life on a part of the old Stevenson tract, lying about one and a quarter miles west of Burgettstown, Penn., where they passed all their wedded life. He was an industrious, kind hearted and prosperous man, and possessed many friends. In politics he was a staunch supporter of Democratic principles, and filled several township offices to the entire satisfaction of his party. He died in 1846; in 1881 his widow was laid to rest beside him.

James S. Hays was born July 26, 1826, on the home farm in Smith township, being trained from early youth to the vocation of a husbandman, which he has continued to follow through life. He obtained his early knowledge of literature from the common schools, remaining with his parents until attaining maturity. On March 16, 1855, he was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of Samuel Riddle, of Smith township, and the following children have been born to them: Samuel (who died at the age of twenty-seven years), Annie M. (residing at home), David V. (at home), James G. (a carpenter now farming in Tuscarawas county, Ohio), Mary (living at home), Edgar (who died in youth) and Robert R. (living with his parents). After their marriage James and Sarah (Riddle) Hays located on a part of the "old Stevenson tract" adjoining the birthplace of Mr. Stevenson, where he has always resided with the exception of four years passed in Robinson township, this county.

He is surrounded by a host of admiring and affectionate friends, all of whom are ever welcome to enjoy the comforts and luxuries of his pleasant home. In addition to general farming he ships a large quantity of milk to Pittsburgh. Having accumulated a considerable property he is now enjoying the reward of many years of toil.

JOSEPH H. CLOKEY, an affluent farmer of North Strabane township, is a native of the same, having been born July 24, 1845, on the farm he now owns. James Clokey, his grandfather, was born December 30, 1757, in County Down, Ireland, where he was educated and reared. In an early day he immigrated to this country, making his first home in the land of his adoption in Dauphin county, Penn., whence in 1812 he came to this county, and in the following year purchased a tract of land containing 300 acres, lying on both sides of Chartiers creek, which farm is now the property of our subject. He had three children, viz.: Sarah (who married James Herron), Samuel and Mary (latter being now deceased). James Clokey was a member of the Seceder Church at Peters Creek, about eleven miles from his home, and he went to make the journey on horseback. As one of the organizers of the Seceder Church near Pigeon Creek, he was a liberal supporter of it, and for years was one of the trustees; in his political associations he was a lifelong, Old-line Whig. In addition to his farming interests, he operated distilleries in both Dauphin and Washington counties. He died October 6, 1839; his wife, Jane Clokey, died in her eighty-second year.

Samuel Clokey, the only son of James and Jane Clokey, was born April 25, 1787, in Dauphin county, Penn., and was educated at the subscription schools of the locality. At the age of eighteen he came to Washington county, and until the day of his death remained on the home place settled by his father. On January 1, 1824, he was married to Rebecca, daughter of Alexander McClure, of South Strabane township, and the children born to them were Mary J., wife of P. F. Martin (deceased); James (deceased); Elizabeth B., wife of James Martin; Alexander (deceased); Sarah H., wife of Hon. J. G. Clark; Samuel M. (deceased); Abigail F. (deceased); Joseph H.; Rebecca M., wife of Dr. George A. Dougherty, and Caroline L. The father died December 31, 1871, the mother July 11, 1878, and their remains repose in the cemetery at Pigeon Creek. Mr. Clokey in church connection was first a Seceder, but afterward united with the U. P. Church at Pigeon Creek, of which he was a trustee. Politically he was a Whig and afterward, on the organization of the party, a Republican. About 1845 he applied for a postoffice at the village on his farm, when there was no office nearer than Washington, five miles distant, which request was granted, and he partially supported the same until the Civil war, from which time to the present the office named Clokey has done a thriving business. Mr. Clokey was postmaster of the same until his death.

Joseph H. Clokey was educated at the common schools of the district in North Strabane township, and had a thorough practical training in agriculture on his father's farm. On December 12, 1878, he was married to Jennie, daughter of Rev. Joseph White, of Knoxville, Iowa; she died September 4, 1885, leaving three children: Samuel J., Ethel R. and Elizabeth Anna. In February, 1889, Mr. Clokey married Lucy E. Toynbee, daughter of Edward and Caroline S. Toynbee. Mr. Clokey owns a fine farm of 300 acres, well adapted for cereal and root crops, besides stock raising. He is a member of the U. P. Church at Pigeon Creek, and in politics is a staunch Republican. He is a leader in his township, taking a lively and substantial interest in all public matters tending to the advancement and prosperity of the community at large. Since his father's decease he has held the position of postmaster at the village of Clokeyville, on his farm.

HARVEY H. KINDER, a well-known farmer of Washington county, is a native of West Bethlehem township, and a resident of East Pike Run township. His father, Valentine Kinder, was a son of George and Ruth Kinder, who were of German-Welsh descent, and passed their later years on a farm in Washington county, Pennsylvania.

Valentine Kinder was born in 1804, in Washington county, Penn., and when a young man was united in marriage with Julia A. Booze, who was born in 1806. Their children were born as follows: George, Harvey H., Louis, Isaac, John, Christian, Elizabeth, Valentine and Samuel, of whom are yet living Harvey H. and Samuel. The father was an active worker in the Whig party, and followed the occupation of farming. He died in June, 1890, having been preceded by the mother in 1884. Both were members of the M. E. Church.

Harvey H. Kinder was born September 28, 1833, on the home farm in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., where he received a common-school education. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in Company B, Twenty-second Cavalry, under Capt. A. J. Greenfield, and served in the principal battles of the war, and a number of skirmishes in which his company were engaged. In 1864 he received an honorable discharge, and returning home was married October 16, 1864, to Maria Bailey, who was born 1843, in Washington county, Penn. She is a daughter of Isaac and Agnes Bailey, and granddaughter of George and Rebecca (Zollars) Garret. The last mentioned couple were of German ancestry, and settled in this county many years ago, where they both died.

Isaac Bailey was of Welsh descent, and was born in 1812, in Washington county, Penn. When a young man he was married to Agnes Garret. She was born May 8, 1817. Three children were born to this union, as follows: Maria (Mrs. Kinder), Henry and William G. He was an active worker in the Republican party, and in religion a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He died in 1882; his widow still survives.

Harvey H. and Maria (Bailey) Kinder are the parents of five children, namely: Isaac V., Dora A., Anna, Emma and William. Mr. Kinder is a prominent citizen, is actively identified with the Republican party, and has held various township offices. His farm contains ninety-three acres of valuable land, upon which a comfortable two-story brick residence has been erected, also a large frame barn. He and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM ROSS. Among the prominent and successful citizens of Chartiers township William Ross stands with the first.

He is the eldest of two children born to Thomas Ross, whose parents were Joseph and Martha (Christy) Ross. The latter were natives of Ireland, and in 1791 came with their first born child to Mifflin county, Penn., where they settled and carried on a farm. To Joseph and Martha (Christy) Ross, children were born at follows: James, John, Michael, Joseph (all four of whom were deceased in Mifflin county), Mary, Martha, Jane (Mrs. William M. McLaughlin) and Thomas. Joseph Ross passed the remainder of his life on the pioneer farm, where he and his wife died.

Thomas Ross was born in 1787, in County Londonderry, Ireland, and came with his parents to Mifflin county, Penn. In 1807 he came to Washington county, and in 1810 was married to Margaret McKnight, also a native of Ireland, a daughter of William and Margaret (Lutton) McKnight, who emigrated from Ireland in an early day, and passed their lives in Washington county, Penn. After his marriage to Margaret McKnight, Thomas Ross settled on a farm in North Strabane township, this county, where two children were born: William and Jane (widow of James Farley, of Washington, Penn.). The father died in 1867, being preceded by his wife in 1832.

William Ross was born September 2, 1811, in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., and was educated in the log cabin subscription schools of the times. In 1845 he was married to Rachel Watson, who was born June 30, 1818, daughter of David and Mary (Craighead) Watson. They were born in Ireland and came to America before the Revolution, and Gen. Washington made his New Jersey headquarters during the Revolution, at the home of grandfather Craighead. After their marriage David and Mary (Craighead) Watson settled on the farm where William Ross is now living, and the following named children were reared by them: Martha, born in January, 1816, (deceased May 17, 1884); Rachel (Mrs. William Ross); Nancy, born March 11, 1820; Milly, born December 8, 1822; Mary Ann, born January 1, 1825 (deceased September 29, 1825); Isabel, born January 11, 1827 (deceased in October, 1891, at Canonsburg), and George C., born January 27, 1829 (deceased in childhood). After his marriage William Ross settled in a log cabin (one of the oldest in Washington county) on the farm which is yet his home. Children have been born to him as follows: Mary Jane (wife of William Gardner, of Iowa), Amelia (married to John Edwards, of Chartiers township), Anna Maria, Isabelle, William, and David (married to Elizabeth Potter, who has borne him four children). Mr. Ross is one of the oldest living settlers of Chartiers township, and has known all the hardships peculiar to pioneer life, and has always been a farmer, now owning a well cultivated farm of ninety-six acres, being also engaged in mining coal from a vein on the place. In politics he has always been a Democrat, and cast his first vote for Gen. Jackson. One grandchild is living with him, George Foster. Mrs. Ross died some years ago.

JOSEPH BUFFINGTON stands prominent in the array of native-born agriculturists of Washington county, as a weather-worn giant tree towers in a forest of majestic oaks. He is the grandson of John Buffington, of an old-time Quaker family, who came into the wilds of what is now the State of Pennsylvania with their great leader, William Penn.

This John Buffington was the first postmaster of Philadelphia, when the now great city was a place of a few straggling cabins, built at the intersection of two country roads. He held this office until the Revolutionary war, when he came to Washington county, making a settlement in Pike Run township, where he patented a large tract of land. He married Sarah Young, of Chester county, who bore him the following named children: Joseph, Sethecia and Aca. A tailor by trade, Mr. Buffington followed it to a certain extent in connection with farming, but the latter was his chief employment through life. In politics a Whig, he took an active interest in the affairs of the nation in his day struggling through a period of comparative infancy. Mr. Buffington died at about the age of seventy years.

Sethecia Buffington, father of Joseph, was born and reared in Pike Run township, and when a young man learned the hatter's trade, at which he was employed a few years in early life, the latter portion being devoted to farming pursuits. Like his father, he had to undergo the many trials and hardships incident to pioneer life, and his name in the vicinity of his labors is "as familiar as household words." For a long term of years he held the office of justice of the peace, in fact, until the revision of the constitution of the United States. In 1846 he pushed farther westward, making a settlement in Iowa, where he passed the remainder of his active life, dying in 1851 at the age of about three-score years. Children as follows were born to him: Orpha, John, Polly, James, Joseph, Seth, Jessie, Robert, Sarah, Abbie and William B., of whom are now living: Joseph (in Washington county, Penn.), Abbie (Mrs. Deems, in Missouri), and William B. (in Henry county, Iowa).

Joseph Buffington was born March 2, 1806, in East Pike Run township, three miles west of Brownsville, where he was educated and reared to farm life. His education was received at the old-fashioned log school-house of those primitive days, presided over by some worthy antiquated dominie, who, perhaps, knew but little more than did his pupils. In his youth our subject learned the tanner's trade with David and John McKenna, and for nine years was engaged in the business, during five of which he conducted a tannery at Beallsville, this county, and then returned to the farm. In February, 1845, he removed from Pike Run to East Bethlehem township, where he has since resided. Mr. Buffington was united in marriage with Miss Mary, daughter of John Thompson, an early resident of East Bethlehem township, and to them were born children as follows: John, Andrew Jackson, Ruth, Mary, Sarah and Emma. Of these John is deceased. Andrew Jackson married Elizabeth Taylor, of West Pike Run township, and now resides in Henry county, Iowa; Ruth married James Irwin, and resides at Front Royal, Va.; Sarah married Jacob Dague, and has her home in Somerset township, this county; Mary is the widow of Frank Jordan, and lives with her father; Emma is the wife of Miles G. Ruble, and resides in Kentucky (our subject reared two of their children, one of whom is now attending college at California, Penn.). Mr. and Mrs. Buffington celebrated the sixty-third anniversary of their marriage. Mrs. Buffington died October 28, 1892. Mr. Buffington is hale and hearty for a man of his years, and is as straight as an arrow, wonderfully agile, and gifted with a remarkable memory. He is a Democrat, although from principle he voted for Gen. Harrison and Abraham Lincoln. His farm consists of seventy-three acres of prime land, whereon are cultivated under his immediate supervision various small crops.

Andrew J. Buffington, son of Joseph, is a Republican in politics, has twice served in the Pennsylvania Legislature, and is at present county commissioner of Henry county, Iowa.

JOSEPH KAMMERER. This prominent merchant, agriculturist, distiller and stock dealer was born May 20, 1835, on the place adjoining where he now resides, and of which in 1859 he became owner.

His father, John Kammerer, was born in Germany in 1793, and was educated in the schools of his land. In 1820 he was married to Margaret Dunker, who was born in 1800, and five children were the result of this union, namely: Mary Ann, Barbary, Catharine, John and Martin, all now deceased. The mother died in her native land in February, 1830, and the father was, on July 21, 1830, united by matrimony with Elizabeth Bender. Then bidding good-bye to the Fatherland, wife and children, he sailed for America. After finding a suitable location for a home, he sent for his wife and children, the next year, and settled in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., following the business of millwright and milling. He then worked two years as a carpenter, after which he embarked in general merchandising and the hotel business, on a tract of land of eighty acres leased from Thomas Officer, the patentee of same (near the present site of the village of Kammerer), which he purchased in 1839. Thereon he erected a store-room and hotel, and the place came to be known as "Dutch John's." To the union of John and Elizabeth (Bender) Kammerer were children as follows: Jonathan, born July 31, 1831; Joseph (whose sketch follows); Elizabeth, born February 28, 1837; Jacob, born November 22, 1838; William S., born February 23, 1843; Franklin G., born February 24, 1845. Of these, Jacob died July 27, 1839; Jonathan died October 20, 1887; Franklin G. and William S. are at present engaged in the commission and brokerage business in Chicago. The father died July 24, 1856, the mother on May 18, 1859.

Joseph Kammerer, after his father's death, took charge of the business, and under his management it has been conducted to the present time. In 1860 he was united in marriage with Lucinda Howden, and to their union five children have been born, namely: Elizabeth Etta Bell, born March 3, 1861; Margaret Jane, born September 5, 1863; Joseph Elmer, born November 2, 1864; James Alvin, born February 9, 1868, and Anna Barbara, born February 8, 1872.

In 1881 a partnership company was formed, under the name of "The Kammerer Manufacturing Company (Limited)," between Joseph Kammerer, Christian Hootman and John Leyda, for the manufacture of liquors, the two partners last mentioned retiring from the company before the machinery was put into operation. The capacity of the distillery is thirty bushels per day. In connection with the distillery, Mr. Kammerer conducts a roller flouring mill, having a capacity of seventy-five barrels of flour per day, and fitted with all the latest improved machinery, making a market for several townships for grain for which the highest cash prices are paid. He owns 200 acres of land on which mills are located, and is very valuable for its coal and gas, and for grazing and farm purposes. On this he is raising a fine herd of cattle. Mr. Kammerer is also in the merchandise business, carrying a stock of goods of about $75,000, consisting of a complete line of goods kept in a general store. In 1873 he was appointed postmaster at Kammerer, which office he still holds.

JOSEPH KEYS, a very successful agriculturist, and prominent representative of an old family of Smith township, is a grandson of James Keys, who was born and reared in Cumberland county, Penn., and was there married to a native of the same county, who bore him one son, James.

Soon after the birth of this son the father died (about 1777), and his widow was then married to Robert Watson. Her son James lived with them, and in 1794 accompanied the family to Washington county, locating on Chartiers creek, Chartiers township. In 1800 James Keys was united in marriage with Jane McClelland, who was born in 1779, a daughter of James McClelland, of Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, who was a native of Ireland, and in an early day settled in the locality of Miller's run, Washington county. To the union of James and Jane Keys children were born as follows: Martha (married to William McBride, of Robinson township, this county), Jane (married to John McBurney), John (deceased), James (a retired farmer of Steubenville, Ohio), William (deceased farmer of Kansas), Joseph (residing in Smith township) and Ezra (a grocer of Leavenworth, Kans.). After his marriage to Jane McClelland, James Keys moved to Trumbull county, Ohio (then a vast wilderness), remaining there but a short time, and then came to Smith township, this county, locating on a farm in Cherry Valley. In 1822 he represented Washington county in the Legislature, serving five years, and then returned to his farm. He was a brilliant and intellectual man, a leader in every undertaking for the public good. He was a Whig in politics, and in religious connection he and his wife were members of the Seceder Church in which he was an elder. His wife died in 1838, and after a useful and successful life, he was laid by her side in 1854.

Joseph Keys was born December 24, 1819, on his father's farm, in Cherry Valley, Smith township, this county, and during his boyhood assisted in the usual duties of agricultural life, and attended the subscription school of his neighborhood. On January 15, 1843, he was united in marriage with Eleanor Smith, who was born in 1821, a daughter of John Smith, a resident of Smith township. The following children have been born to this union: Martha J. (deceased wife of William Rea), Angeline (widow of A. L. Rea), Lizzie (living at home with her father), William J. (a farmer of Barton county, Kans.), and John W. and Joseph F. (both residing with their parents).

Mr. and Mrs. Keys located on a farm in Smith township after their marriage, and in 1849 moved to the valuable farm where Mr. Keys is now residing. It is one of the finest in the township, and comprises 264 acres of prime land. The place was entered by Lou Washington, a cousin of George Washington, and here for twenty years Mr. Keys has carried on a general farming, stock-raising and dairying business. In 1886 his residence was laid in ashes by a destructive fire, but it was immediately rebuilt on a more substantial and modern plan. Joseph Keys is one of the most solid and prosperous farmers in Smith township. In politics he has been a Whig and Republican. In 1886 he was called to mourn the loss of his wife, who passed from earth after a married life of forty-three years. She was a member of the U. P. Church, with which he is connected. His home is now being cared for by his daughter, Miss Lizzie.

WH. GREGG. Among the early settlers of Washington county, whose deeds are an undying monument to their memory, were the ancestors of the well-known family of which this gentleman is a representative.

In 1791 three brothers—Henry, William and John Gregg—left Ireland, the country of their birth, and crossed the ocean to America. After a voyage of sixteen weeks they all came to Washington county, Penn., and settled in East Pike Run township, where Henry secured a tract of 349 acres called the "Burning Mine," now owned by a Mr. Duvall. Henry Gregg served as justice of the peace in 1796. He was married to Jane Dowler, and of their children, whose names are given, are John, Henry, Thomas, Edward, Seth and William. The parents died in 1834, in West Pike Run township.

John Gregg, son of Henry, was born and reared on the home place in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a thorough education, and then learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed several years. When a young man he made choice of a helpmeet in the person of Edith, daughter of Caleb Woodward, who was a native of Scotland, and who, soon after his marriage, came to America, first locating in Chester county, Penn., afterward moving to Brownsville, Fayette Co., where he conducted a mill for many years. He was a strong advocate of the principles embodied in the Whig platform, and in religion was a member of the Society of Friends. His children were as follows: Milton, Alfred, Caleb, Edith (Mrs. Gregg), Charlotte and Sidney. Mr. and Mrs. John Gregg settled in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., where he carried on a farm—also conducting a blacksmith shop for several years—and in 1859 moved to California, Penn. In political opinion he was a staunch supporter of the Whig and Abolition parties, and in religion was an active member of the Taylor M. E. Church. His children were Thomas, Caleb and W. H.

W. H. Gregg was born April 6, 1847, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and remained with his parents until twenty years of age. He then worked about four years in the lumber business for Powell & Co., of California, Penn., afterward entering the employ of Morgan & Dixon, with whom he remained five years. In 1881 he opened his present business in Coal Centre, and has by good management and honorable dealing secured a large and constantly increasing custom. On October 20, 1869, he was united in marriage with Jennie M., daughter of Robert and Augusta Forsythe, of Fayette county, Penn., and one son has been born to this union, Edgar F., a graduate of a business college, and now a book-keeper in Pittsburgh. Mr. Gregg is deeply interested in the success of the Republican party, and has filled various borough offices, serving repeatedly as a member of the school board. He is a member of the board of trustees of the Southwestern State Normal School, and has been a director of the First National Bank of California, Penn., since its organization. He is a supporter of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

JOHAN ELLIOTT STEWART, a prosperous young farmer of Jefferson township, is a son of Robert Stewart. He traces his lineage back through the generations to one Lord Stewart, a peer of Scotland, who left his native land, and settled in "Foggy Hill," County Tyrone, Ireland.

James Stewart (the great-grandfather of John Elliott) embarked with his family for America on the ship "Doras," which was boarded, while on the voyage, by a British man-of-war. All able-bodied men on the "Doras" were impressed into the English service, and Robert Stewart (a son of James), who was then eighteen years of age, was one of them. He served on a British man-of-war for several months, when he was released by strategy, his father having prevailed upon a young lady to claim him as her husband. The youth then joined his parents in Washington county, Penn., settling in Smith township, and soon after Robert Stewart was united in marriage with Ann McGough, also a native of Ireland. Six children were born to their union, namely: John, Elizabeth (Mrs. Kidd), Sarah, Robert, James and Andrew.

Robert Stewart was born May 21, 1824, in Washington county, Penn. He attended the common schools of the neighborhood and assisted in the farm duties during his boyhood. In 1852 he was married to Miss Sarah Jane Elliott, who bore him three children, namely: John Elliott, born March 13, 1853; James, born November 25, 1855, and Robert, born February 26, 1858. The mother of this family died in 1858, and for his second wife Robert Stewart was married to Eliza Orr, of Irish descent, who lived but a short time afterward. He was then married to Rebecca H., daughter of William Provines, a native of Ireland, who settled in Jefferson township. Mrs. Stewart is a member of the United Presbyterian Church, of which her husband is an earnest supporter. In politics he has always been a counselor and adviser in the Democratic party, and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

John Elliott Stewart was born on the farm where his father is now living, and was reared to agricultural pursuits, attending the common schools of the neighborhood during the winter months of his boyhood. He was united in marriage October 17, 1877, with Belle McKnight, of Hickory, Washington county, daughter of William McKnight, a native of Ireland. One child came to this union, Leman E., born September 30, 1878, whose mother died November 7, 1879. After her death John Elliott Stewart made his home for a time with his father, and also traveled through the Western States. On his return home he married on September 8, 1885, Miss Flora Agnes, daughter of H. C. Anderson, a prominent farmer of Cross Creek township, and they have had one daughter, Roberta Vere, born August 16, 1888. Mr. Stewart is a great reader, and is specially interested in literature tending to impart information to the agricultural and laboring classes. He owns 140 acres of fine farming and grazing land, and is now deputy-master of Washington county for the State Grange of Pennsylvania. Although the son of an active member of the Democratic party, and himself favoring their platform, Mr. Stewart believes in voting for the man rather than the politician, regardless of party tenets. He has held several township offices, and is very prominent in all matters of common interest to the community.

ROBERT EMERY, one of the most respected retired agriculturists of Amwell township, was born April 5, 1807, in Canonsburg, Washington Co., Pennsylvania.

The first of his ancestors to land in America was the grandfather, Thomas Emery, a native of the Emerald Isle, who, with his family, immigrated to eastern Pennsylvania about 1771. He remained there several years, and finally removing to Washington county, made his permanent home near Canonsburg. The children born to this pioneer were as follows: Joshua, Walter, Phinney, Jeremiah, Mrs. Nancy Clark and Mrs. Martha Jamison.

Joshua Emery, father of Robert, in early youth learned the shoemaker's trade, and locating in Canonsburg, Washington county, followed the business for several years, at the same time acting as riding constable for Washington county. About 1800 he opened a well known tavern in Canonsburg. He was married to a daughter of John McGowen, and she bore him the following children: Boyd, Robert, Matthew, Mrs. Nancy Anthony, Mrs. Ann Hurst (afterward Mrs. Dr. Herriott), Mary (wife of Mr. Brown, of Valparaiso, Ind.), Phinney, Thomas, Gibbs and Mrs. Martha Pierce, of whom Robert, Ann, Mary and Martha are yet living.

Robert Emery lived in Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn., until 1835, when he removed to Strabane township, and in 1844 located on the present home of the family in Amwell township. In 1836 he was united in marriage with Lucinda Workman, who was born May 15, 1814, a daughter of Robert and Rebecca Workman. Mr. and Mrs. Emery have been blessed with the following children: Boyd, born July 17, 1837; Mary Jane, born August 3, 1839; Georgie Ann, born October 21, 1841 (now deceased); James K., born August 21, 1844, and William, born April 4, 1856 (now deceased).

Boyd Emery, the eldest son of Robert and Lucinda (Workman) Emery, was married November 26, 1863, to Martha H. Thomas, and their children are William S., born August 19, 1864, died November 14, 1879; Harriet L., born November 30, 1867, wife of John C. McCoy, and James W., born February 2, 1870. Boyd Emery has been auditor of Amwell township fifteen consecutive years, and his services have been eminently satisfactory to all. He and his father own a nice farm situated two and a half miles from the borough of Washington, where they are very successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. The family are all members of the Disciple (or Christian) Church, and are honest, upright people, serving their Creator in their daily lives, as well as by their profession of faith.

WILLIAM H. PRY, a successful young agriculturist of Cross Creek township, is a son of Abraham Pry, whose father was a native of Virginia, and was married in that State to a Miss Barnes. The children born to their union were John, Abraham, William L., Eliza (Mrs. John Powelson) and Elizabeth (Mrs. Samuel Pascal, of Cross Creek township). The father was a Democrat in politics.

Abraham Pry was born November 10, 1813, in Hampshire county, W. Va. The father died when Abraham was but four years of age, and the child was left to struggle through the perplexities of boyhood unaided, but he secured an education by dint of perseverance and energy, and when about twenty-two years of age came to Washington county, settling in Cross Creek township. He was there married to Rachel, daughter of David McClurg, of Cross Creek township, and they settled on the farm where they are yet living. The following children have been born to their union: David M., Catherine J. (deceased), John W., William H. and Joseph M. (twins, the latter of whom is deceased), Abraham, Cynthia J. (deceased), Anna M. (deceased), Ambrose (living in Iowa) and Francis H. The father of this family was originally a Democrat, then a Whig, finally uniting with the Republican party, whose principles he now supports. He attends the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, contributing liberally to its maintenance.

William H. Pry was born September 11, 1847, on the old homestead of the Pry family, situated half a mile south of Cross Creek village. His boyhood was passed in attending the common schools and assisting on the farm. On October 7, 1869, he was united in marriage with Miss E. J. McFarland, who was born in 1851, daughter of Andrew McFarland, of Cross Creek township, this county, a tailor by trade. Mr. and Mrs. Pry began their wedded life in Cross Creek village, and remained there twelve years, Mr. Pry meanwhile assisting his father on the farm. He then moved to the farm where he is now living, having erected a fine home and out-buildings upon the place. They have three children: an infant, born in October, 1870; Luella Belle, born February 8, 1874; and Mary R., born March 15, 1879. Of these children, Luella Belle is married to Elza M. Dowler, a promising young farmer of Cross Creek township, and an estimable young man. In politics Mr. Pry has followed in the footsteps of his forefathers, and votes the Republican ticket.

JOHAN MORGAN SHARP is one of the leading and influential agriculturists of Cross Creek township, and owns an extensive and valuable tract of land, which yields him a large annual profit. He is a son of John F. Sharp, whose father's name was also John.

John Sharp (the grandfather of subject) was born January 1, 1774, in New Jersey, where his boyhood was passed, afterward moving to Fayette county, Penn. On January 26, 1797, he was wedded in Pennsylvania to Miss Hannah Freeman, who was born March 26, 1778, and after marriage they made their first home on a farm in Fayette county, where four children were born to them, namely: Mary (wife of James Gardener, of West Virginia), born November 17, 1797; John F., born February 20, 1801; Levi, born July 1, 1804, and Ruth (wife of Samuel Gardener, near Eldersville), born August 18, 1806. Afterward the family moved to Washington county, Penn., settling on a farm near Eldersville, where the rest of their children were born, as follows: Edmund (living in Sharptown, Ind.), born November 18, 1808; Sarah (married to Alexander Walker, of Jefferson township, this county), born May 2, 1811; Jane (wife of John Steene, residing near Eldersville, this county), born July 14, 1813; Hannah (married to John Wheeler, a tailor of Jefferson township, this county), born March 9, 1817, and Elizabeth (Mrs. John Stephenson, also of Jefferson township), born March 23, 1819. John Sharp died September 11, 1860, having been preceded by his wife, Hannah, July 26, 1838, and both are buried in Cross Creek graveyard.

John F. Sharp was seven years of age when he came to Washington county with his parents. About 1826 he was united in marriage in West Virginia, near Steubenville, Ohio, with Miss Narcissa Atkinson, daughter of Thomas Atkinson, and settled on a farm which he purchased from his father, and upon which they lived over sixty years. The children born to this marriage were Eliza J. (Mrs. Nathaniel Halley, of Owen county, Ind.), born December 18, 1827; Thomas A., born May 14, 1829 (married to Olivia Walker, daughter of James Walker, of Jefferson township), Absalom, born March 3, 1831 (married to Lucinda Stephens, and living in Indiana), Hannah A., born March 18, 1834 (wife of J. G. Walker, son of James Walker, of Jefferson township), John M. (whose name opens this sketch), Harriet N., born April 3, 1843, died July 13, 1844, and Sarah M., born June 28, 1846, died February 11, 1850, both of whom were buried in Cross Creek graveyard. The mother of these children passed from earth January 10, 1847, and was laid to rest in Cross Creek graveyard. Mr. Sharp was afterward married to Maria Price, of Perry county, Ohio, to which union three children were born: Mary E. (wife of W. D. McKay), born May 30, 1850; Clara R. (wife of Thomas Lindsey, of Steubenville, Ohio), and Ella S. (married to John M. Russell, of Smith township, this county). John F. Sharp died December 19, 1887, and was buried in Cross Creek graveyard.

John Morgan Sharp was born March 7, 1838, on the home farm in Cross Creek township, where his youth was passed. On December 22, 1859, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah M.

Virtue, of Cross Creek township, who was born January 23, 1842, daughter of James and Mary Virtue. William Virtue, father of James, came from Ireland in pioneer days. To the union of John Morgan and Sarah M. Sharp the following children have been born: John Freeman, born March 18, 1861; Mary B., born July 12, 1863 (wife of Charles W. Scott, residing near Bethel Church, Jefferson township); Flora A., born August 5, 1865; Hattie May, born December 6, 1868; Jessie Leola, born March 14, 1876, and Jennie E., born October 20, 1880. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Sharp resided for twenty years on a farm in the vicinity, belonging to his father, when, upon the death of his father, Mr. Sharp moved to the old home farm near his former residence, and has since remained on the homestead, which he purchased under authority of his father's will at $66 per acre, at which it was appraised. He carried on an extensive agricultural business, making a specialty of sheep raising, and now owns 223 acres of land, also an interest in 550 acres of his father's estate. In politics he follows the example of his forefathers, voting the straight Democratic ticket, and he has held various offices of trust in his township. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church in Cross Creek village. He is one of the original stockholders, incorporators and directors in "The Cross Creek Cemetery Company."

JOHAN W. REED, a prominent and influential agriculturist of East Pike Run township, is a grandson of Samuel and Maria J. Reed, who lived in Allegheny county, Penn., the grandfather dying in December, 1869, in his eighty-seventh year, the grandmother at the age of about seventy-five years.

Thomas R. Reed, the eldest son of Samuel and Maria J. Reed, was born October 31, 1816, and in early life learned the trade of blacksmith, at which he is still working. On September 6, 1838, he was married to Mary Ann Pyle, who was eighteen years old at the time, and to this union were born children as follows: Joseph F., born October 11, 1839, by trade a blacksmith; Samuel H., born March 25, 1841, following carpentry; John W., born February 6, 1843; William E., born December 5, 1844; Boyd E., born April 30, 1846, a blacksmith by trade; James W., born July 6, 1848, by occupation a plasterer and contractor; Thomas Roland, born June 3, 1850, died March 21, 1866; Maria E., born May 21, 1852; Mary J., born September 17, 1854, died March 10, 1855; Albenah A., born March 20, 1856; Cyrus S., born February 20, 1858, now a blacksmith; Ida M., born February 18, 1860; and Alfred F., born July 19, 1862, also a blacksmith. The mother of this family died October 30, 1878. The father now lives in Irwin, Westmoreland Co., Penn. He votes with the Democratic party, and for twenty years was a justice of the peace at Allenport, Washington Co., Penn.; in religious faith he is a member of the Baptist Church.

John W. Reed was reared to manhood in the town of Allenport (now Independence), where his early education was received. He then learned blacksmithing and boiler making, which trades he followed until purchasing the farm. In November, 1865, he was married to Sarah A. Wilson, adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Stroud, both deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were the parents of five children, viz.: Charles, residing in Belle Vernon, Fayette county; Emily, wife of Joseph Eller, of Belle Vernon, Fayette county; Mary J., married to Nathan Werrell, of Fayette county; Jemima, wife of Abraham Tinley, of Bentleyville, Washington county, and Sarah A. (Mrs. Reed). Mr. and Mrs. Reed reside on the home farm of 116 acres, located two miles southeast of Coal Centre, Penn. During 1862-63 he worked in the navy yard at Pittsburgh. He and his wife are members of the Ebenezer M. E. Church. In politics Mr. Reed affiliates with the Democratic party, is interested in the progress and welfare of his community, and has served as school director. He is one of the directors of the California National Bank. His house and surroundings are a credit to the owner, and place him among the thrifty and progressive men of the county. Mr. Reed has resided upon his present home since 1890.

JB. KAHL, son of J. D. Kahl, a native of Adams county, Penn., was born September 26, 1855, the eldest of his father's family. He was educated in the schools of California, this county, and taught for seven years. On December 29, 1881, he was married to Jeanette L., daughter of David, and granddaughter of Robert Clark. The latter was born in 1784, in Pennsylvania, and married Jeanette Paxton, who also was born in 1784. They settled in Nottingham township, where children were born as follows: Margaret, born in 1806, died in 1853 (married in 1836 to John Preston); Jane, born in 1808, died in 1853 (married in 1843 to Adam Morrow); Andrew, born in 1810, died in 1874; Robert, born in 1812, died in 1892 (married in 1844 to Margaret McIlvaine); Paxton, born in 1814, died in 1838; John B., born in 1816, died in 1833; Harriet, born in 1818, died in 1841 (married in 1841 to Samuel Morrison); Eliza, born in 1820 (married in 1843 to John Morrison), living in Virginia; Sarah, born in 1822, died in 1882 (married in 1846 to F. C. Morrison); Casendana, born in 1823 (married in 1846 to David Aiken), living in Washington, D. C., and David, of whom further mention is made. The mother of this family died in 1866, having been preceded by the father in 1850.

David Clark, youngest son of Robert and Jeanette (Paxton) Clark, was born in 1824. In 1854 he was united in marriage with Julia A. Lyda, who was born in 1832 in this county. He was a farmer, and in 1862 enlisted in Company D. P. V., Ringgold Battalion. He returned home in June, 1863, and died in July of the same year, leaving two children: Frank and Jeanette L. (Mrs. Kahl).

To the marriage of J. B. and Jeanette L. (Clark) Kahl one son has been born: Maunice C.

JOHN WELCH was born January 12, 1800, near McConnell's Mill, this county. Little else is known of his parents' history except that they were Scotch emigrants, and became pioneer settlers of Washington county. After the death of his father, which occurred when he was a small boy, John Welch went to live with a brother, Robert. In 1821 he was married to Elizabeth Woodburn, who was born in 1802, daughter of Thomas W. Woodburn, and to their union children were born as follows: Mary (Mrs. Walter Denny, of Independence township); James M.; Margaret (widow of Capt. John F. Beatty, of Carrollton, Ohio); Jane (Mrs. Thomas Harsha); John D. (a farmer of Harrison county, Ohio); Elizabeth (wife of W. G. Fee, of Cherokee, Iowa); Robert C. (deceased, a U. P. minister); Sarah Ann (Mrs. William Cockins, of Los Angeles, Cal.), and Thomas (deceased). During his married life Mr. Welch resided in Chartiers township, engaged in farming and stock raising. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and then a Republican, taking an active part in the abolition of slavery. He died in 1870, and was joined by his wife in 1873.

James M. Welch, one of the successful farmers of Independence township, who has retired from active life, was born October 2, 1823, in Chartiers township, on the home farm. He attended the common schools, and assisted with the farm work until twenty-one years of age, when, becoming discontented at home, he purchased and located on a piece of land, his sister acting as his housekeeper. He afterward sold this property at a profit, and returned to the home farm. On April 14, 1853, he was married to Jane Lee, who was born March 23, 1828, daughter of John and Mary (Park) Lee, and they have had the following children: Willard Lee, John S. (who died in infancy), Melissa J. (deceased), Joseph A. (mentioned below), Annie (Mrs. Finley Liggett, of Walurba, Penn.), Laura May (living at home), Mary W. (deceased in youth) and Lizzie M. (who died in youth). After his marriage, Mr. Welch resided eleven years near the home farm in Chartiers township, and in 1864 purchased the "Old Garrett" farm, lying in the eastern central portion of Independence township, upon which he resided until 1890, when he purchased an adjoining tract on the western side, where he is now living a retired life. By dint of energy and perseverance, Mr. Welch now owns over 325 acres of land in Independence township, and has been greatly assisted by his faithful wife, who has been for several years a sufferer from rheumatism. Mr. Welch has also failed in health. Politically he was first a Whig, and now votes the Republican ticket. Both he and his wife are members of the Mt. Hope U. P. Church.

WILLARD LEE WELCH, eldest son of James M. and Jane (Lee) Welch, was born January 11, 1854, on the home farm in Chartiers township. He received a common-school education, and afterward attended Canonsburg Academy, and the Curry Institute, of Pittsburgh, Penn. On September 27, 1884, he was united in marriage with Hattie Gourley, who was born July 4, 1859, a native of Brooke county, W. Va., daughter of James M. and Catherine (Walker) Gourley. After his marriage Mr. Welch located on the "Andrew Ralston" farm, in the eastern part of Independence township, and has since worked upon that place, which adjoins the home of his father and brother. His farm is one of the best in the township, and he has erected a fine dwelling and other buildings upon it. In politics he was formerly a Republican, but is now a staunch member of the Prohibition party. He and his wife are members of the Mt. Hope Church, in which he is an elder.

Joseph A. Welch, a brother of Willard Lee, was born January 11, 1859, in Chartiers township, where he lived five years, and then came with his parents to Independence township, locating on the place he now owns. He received a common-school education, and worked on the farm. On September 25, 1890, he was married to Mary B. McNary, who was born November 29, 1865, daughter of ex-county commissioner McNary, of Cross Creek township. He then located on the home farm, his parents moving to one adjoining it, and now deals extensively in stock. Politically he is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Mt. Hope U. P. Church.

J K. BEDALL, son of Jacob, and grandson of James Bedall, is a native of Washington county, Penn. James Bedall was born and reared in eastern Pennsylvania, where he was married to Elizabeth Moller. They came to Washington county many years ago, and locating in Fallowfield township, died on the old homestead.

Jacob Bedall, son of James and Elizabeth, was born in 1809, on the old place in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He always resided on the home farm, to which he brought his bride, Miss Eleanor Morton, a native of the same place. She died in 1862, leaving five children, of whom J. K. (the third son) is the only one yet living. After the death of his first wife Jacob Bedall was married to Miss Morton, and for his third choice selected Eliza Jane, daughter of John and Phœbe Richards, early settlers of Washington county. In politics Mr. Bedall was a Whig and Republican, and in religious faith a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died in November, 1887.

J. K. Bedall was born July 1, 1854, on his present farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the district schools of the vicinity. On April 14, 1892, he was united in marriage with Anna Eller, daughter of Joseph and Emily (Wilson) Eller, all of whom were residents of Belle Vernon, Fayette Co., Penn. Mrs. Bedall is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; in political opinion Mr. Bedall is an advocate of the principles embodied in the Republican party.

J OHN HORN, a worthy representative of one of the oldest families of West Bethlehem township, is a son of Adam Horn, who was a son of John Horn, Sr., who was a son of Christopher Horn, who was the first of the name to locate in West Bethlehem township.

On February 28, 1785, Christopher Horn patented 340 acres of land on Ten-Mile creek, which he named "Ballimore." [The original patent for this land is now in the possession of John Horn, the subject of this sketch.] Here he located, cleared and improved the land, and the old home he erected, built of logs and slabs, is still standing, considered to be the oldest house in the township. By trade he was a blacksmith, and he made all the nails, hinges, etc., used in the construction of the building. He had two children, John and Jacob, between whom his property was divided at his death. Of these John was born and grew to manhood on his father's tract, his education being such as the period afforded. In his youth he married a Miss Barbara Young, by whom he had nine children, viz.: Jacob, John, Christopher, Jr., David, Adam, Samuel, Mary, Elizabeth and Catherine, all now deceased except Samuel, who is a farmer of Greene county, Penn. The mother of this family dying, the father subsequently married Mary Shape, and the children by this union were: Susanna, Lydia, Leah, Joel and Joshua, all yet living except Susanna.

Adam Horn, father of John Horn, the subject of this sketch, was born on this original tract of land, and his boyhood was passed in assisting his father in tilling the soil, and in obtaining such an education as the subscription schools of that day afforded. In his youth he learned the trade of a cooper, at which he was employed for a time, but abandoning this occupation he turned his attention to farming and stock raising, at which he was successful and prosperous. He purchased the farm now owned by his son J. M. Horn, and erected thereon a large and elegant frame residence, and upon this farm he lived respected and honored by all until death closed his earthly labors. He was a consistent and liberal member of the Lutheran denomination, and Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church was erected on land donated by him to that Society. He married Hester Bonnell, daughter of John Bonnell, then a citizen of West Bethlehem township, but later a resident of Ohio. To this union were born the following children: Morgan, John, Cephas, James Madison, Simeon B., Adam, Ann, Elizabeth and Maria; of whom are living John, James Madison (a merchant near Zollarsville), Ann (wife of H. White, also residing near Zollarsville), and Elizabeth.

John Horn was born September 28, 1833, on the farm adjoining the property on which he now resides, and grew to manhood in West Bethlehem township. Being the chief assistant of his father in his various vocations, his education was somewhat limited, but he succeeded in securing not a little practicable learning. At the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion, he enlisted in Company D, Eighty-fifth Regiment, P. V. L., under Capt. Horn, a cousin, Col. Howell commanding. His company was encamped at Uniontown, Penn. He was in the following engagements, led by Gen. MacClellan: Yorktown, Williamsburg, Fair Oaks and that known as the Seven Days' Fight before Richmond. On account of impaired health, Mr. Horn was sent to the general hospital at David's Island, N. Y., from which he was discharged after a year's service, and returning home to West Bethlehem township, he was for nearly a year unable to work. After a time, regaining his strength, he resumed his regular vocation, that of a farmer, and he has also been engaged extensively in dealing in wool for the past twenty-five years. On May 16, 1872, Mr. Horn was married to Eliza J. Gayman, daughter of Joseph and Susanna Gayman, of West Bethlehem township. Her grandparents were Daniel and Olivia Gayman, who were pioneers in this neighborhood and settled in Ten Mile Valley, not far from the present location of the village of Zollarsville, at an early date. Mrs. Horn has four brothers, viz.: Jacob, Thaddens D., James and Daniel, and one sister named Emma. They all reside in Washington county, Penn. Mr. Horn and his wife have the following named children: Henry D., Joseph G., Alice M., Iris B. and Eugene, all unmarried and living at home with their parents. Politically Mr. Horn is a Republican, but he has never sought office. He is now filling with credit and ability the office of school director of the township in which he resides. His wife, who is a lady well known for her many virtues, her hospitality and benevolence, is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JACOB ANDREWS, a representative of one of the oldest and most highly esteemed pioneer families of Smith township, is descended from Irish ancestry. Jeremiah Andrews, his grandfather, was born, reared and married in Ireland, coming to America long before 1800. They located on a wild piece of forest land, lying about three miles north of Burgettstown, Washington Co., Penn., no improvements having then been made. Here a rude cabin was hastily erected, and the couple settled permanently in their pioneer home, where children were born as follows: Matthew, Jeremiah, Joseph, Robert, John, Elizabeth (wife of Nathan Scott), Catherine (Mrs. Scott) and Nancy (married to Andrew Carlile).

Jeremiah Andrews, son of Jeremiah, was born about 1790, on the home farm in Smith township, where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, receiving a meager education at the common schools of the period. He was first married to a Miss Carlisle, of this county, whose children were Jeremiah (deceased, a farmer of Beaver county, Penn., who afterward moved to Columbiana county, Ohio), John C. (also a farmer of Beaver county, who lived in Columbiana county, Ohio, for a time, afterward returning to Beaver county, Penn., where he died), and Isabella (deceased wife of William Nichols, a stone mason, who lived in Beaver county, Penn., for some time, and then moved to Kentucky). The mother of these children died, and for his second wife Jeremiah Andrews was united in marriage with Catherine Neiswonger, of Hancock county, W. Va., and the following children were born to their union: Rachel (Mrs. Francis McBride, of Ashland county, Ohio), Jacob (subject of this sketch), Elizabeth (wife of James McMillen, of Columbiana county, Ohio), Joseph (a farmer of Beaver county, Penn.), George H. (a farmer in California), Susanna (wife of Capt. J. H. Melvin, of Fairview, W. Va.) and Catherine (married to W. W. Morrow, of Wellsville, Ohio). After his marriage Jeremiah Andrews followed agricultural pursuits on a farm near Fairview, Hancock Co., W. Va. He was very successful in his business, possessing energy, enterprise and good management, and at the time of his death was one of the wealthiest citizens of his neighborhood. Politically he was a lifelong Democrat, but voiced his opinion by his vote alone, leaving the rising generation to choose for themselves their political preference. He was a member and pillar of the U. P. Church, with which his wife was also connected. He died in 1856, being followed by his wife in 1875, and the remains of both were laid to rest in Tomlinson's Run cemetery, Beaver county, Penn.

Jacob Andrews was born September 6, 1828, in Hancock county, W. Va., where he received a common-school education. In 1849 he and his half brother, John C., went to Columbiana county, Ohio, and followed farming, their sister Rachel acting as housekeeper for her brothers until her marriage, when Elizabeth (another sister) supplied her place. In 1856 Jacob sold his interest in the farm, returning to Hancock county, W. Va., where he followed agriculture a short time. On May 3, 1857, he was united in marriage with Hannah Carlile, of Columbiana county, Ohio. She was born March 22, 1838, being the tenth in a family of fourteen children born to John and Margaret (Hephner) Carlile. John Carlile was a native of New Jersey, and when but a boy came to Columbiana county, Ohio, with his parents, Daniel Carlile and his wife, early settlers of that county. In early life John was married to Margaret Hephner, daughter of Henry and Mary (Shoemaker) Hephner, the former a native of Germany who settled in Columbiana county, Ohio, in an early day.

The following children have been born to Jacob and Hannah (Carlile) Andrews: Josephine (deceased in youth); William D. (a conductor on the P. C. C. & St. Louis R. R.); George W. (a clerk in the shipping department of the Edgar Thomson Steel Works, Braddock, Penn.); Luella (deceased in infancy); Lizzie (wife of Barclay S. Feunimore, of Jewett, Ohio); John H. (a conductor on the N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R.); Manda B. (wife of D. C. Fulton, a farmer of Hanover township, Washington county), and Harvey (deceased at the age of seventeen years). Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Andrews began their married life on a farm in Beaver county, Penn., and in 1864 came to Washington county, locating on the farm adjoining Burgettstown, Smith township, where they are yet living. He has been a very successful farmer, but of recent years has taken no active part in the work of the place. In politics Jacob Andrews has always been a staunch Democrat. He and his wife are both highly esteemed citizens of the community in which they reside.

JAMES M. ROSS is a prominent representative of one of the oldest pioneer families in Washington county. In 1728 one John Ross left the shores of Erin to seek a home in the New World. On arriving in America he settled permanently on a farm near Germantown, Penn., where the following children were born and reared: Thomas, William, John, James, George, Stephen, Sarah, Jane, Margaret and Mary.

Thomas Ross was born in Chester county, Penn., and in 1784 came to a farm near Pittsburgh. In early life he was married to Jane Miller, a native of Ireland, who bore him eight children, viz.: Joshua, Jane, Thomas, John, James, Sarah, Margaret and Nancy, all deceased. The father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

Joshua Ross was born about the year 1781, in Chester county, Penn., and came with his parents to the place near Pittsburgh, where his youth was passed. In 1810 he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of Samuel Emmet, and their children were Rebecca, Thomas, William B., James M., Samuel B. (now living in the Twenty-first Ward of Pittsburgh, Penn.), and John and Johnston (twins). Mr. Ross was a farmer, and lived on a place which is now the Twenty-first Ward of Pittsburgh. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

James M. Ross was born in 1819, in what is now the Twenty-first Ward of Pittsburgh. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and worked by the month for four or five years. When a young man he was married to Sarah, daughter of John Mouek, of Washington county, Penn., and their children have been born as follows: John, Joseph (deceased), William E., Lewis, George B., Mary and Adelaide. In 1848 Mr. Ross came to his present farm in Peters township, which he purchased in 1855. He is actively interested in the welfare of the Republican party, and in religious faith is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Peters Creek.

POLLOCK FAMILY, Historical Sketch of. The Pollock family were originally natives of Scotland, whence one Samuel Pollock, one of those hardy Scotch-Irish Presbyterian pioneers, emigrated many years ago, landing in America, there making a new home in the New World. He was born, reared and married in Scotland, whence, prior to the Revolutionary war, he and his wife and a brother came to this country. They landed in New York, where the brothers separated, thus losing forever all trace of each other. The one turned his face southward, while Samuel and his wife, Jane, proceeded westward to Washington county, Penn., being among the earliest settlers in the locality. Here he patented a tract of land called "Plenty" (now known as the James Pollock farm), situated near Clokeyville, in North Strabane township, and containing 148 acres, where he passed the rest of his active pioneer life. The land was wild and uncultivated when he came to it, and he set to work at once, to make improvements on it. Indians and wild animals were numerous, and caused frequent annoyances; but the hardy settlers were patient as well as brave, and time brought them a rich harvest, as a reward for their early years of toil and danger.

They were members of the Covenant Church. Samuel Pollock was a man of more than ordinary intelligence, force and executive ability. At his death he left three sons—John, Samuel and William—and four daughters—Margaret, Jane, Nancy and Grizella. Of the daughters the following is a brief sketch: Margaret married Alexander McNary, and located near Cadiz, Ohio; Jane married John Crowe, and resided in Butler county, Penn.; Nancy became the wife of James Pursley, and lived near West Alexander, this county; Grizella was married to Robert Johnston, their residence being some five miles west of Washington on the Middletown road. Of the sons: John never left the paternal home, dying there unmarried; Samuel married Ellen Young, and there were born to them four sons—John, James, Robert and Samuel—and five daughters—Jane, Betsey, Sarah, Margaret and Martha. Jane married James Linn, and resided near Washington, the county seat, the place now known as Linntown; Betsey married John Pollock, a brother of James Pollock, who at one time owned a large flouring-mill on Brush run, near Thompsonville, this county, and who at the time of his death was treasurer of Washington county, and father of A. W. Pollock, who succeeded him as county treasurer, and who is at present a lumber merchant at Washington, Penn.; Sarah married Hon. Mathew Linn, and they passed their wedded lives on what is known as the "Linn Homestead," North Strabane township; Margaret (unmarried) died about six years ago; Martha married James Harbison, and lived in Bakerstown, Butler Co., Penn. She is still living, making her home with her son, Samuel, in Bellevue, Allegheny Co., Penn. Of the sons: John married Nancy Hayes, and located near Uniontown, Belmont Co., Ohio; James and Robert both went west and settled near Sparta, Ill. (were both married); Samuel married Nancy Breckenridge, and their home was in New Castle, Pennsylvania.

William Pollock, third son of Samuel and Jane Pollock, was born in 1781. He married Nancy, daughter of John McNary, and they had children as follows: Jane, John, Samuel, James and Malcolm Boyd, the latter born February 9, 1817, and died July 15, 1825. (A record of the others follows this paragraph). William Pollock was born and spent all his days on the original homestead near Clokeyville, which he willed to his youngest son, James, who now lives thereon, and which property has been in possession of, and represented by, the Pollock family for five continuous generations. To his son Samuel he willed the Alexander Scott farm, containing 208 acres, situated on the State road in North Strabane township. To John and Jane he bequeathed their amount in money, obligating Samuel and James to pay them a specified amount, besides giving them furniture, which they did. William Pollock was a member of the Associate (Seceder) Church. When the Pigeon Creek Congregation was organized he was elected one of the ruling elders, which office he filled till the close of his life. Politically he was an active worker in the Whig party. He had an ox-mill built on his farm, which is still standing, and which is now used by his grandson as a sheep house. This mill was the first of the kind in the county, and was erected by a man named John Calhoun, then living on Peters creek. It was a tramp mill of peculiar construction, very unlike the tramp mill of the present day. The platform on which the oxen tramped was circular, about thirty feet in diameter, into part of which was placed a shaft at an angle of fifty-five degrees. The stone burrs were from three to three and one-half feet in diameter. Dog tramp mills were made in much the same manner. This old ox-mill ground the grain for many years, and as it was furnished with great power, people came to it from considerable distance with their grists packed on horse-back. Nancy (McNary), wife of William Pollock, departed this life August 17, 1834; William (her husband) died August 3, 1856, in the seventy-third year of his age. His remains were laid beside those of his wife in what was then called the Associate graveyard, now known as Oak Spring Cemetery, near Canonsburg.

Jane Pollock, only daughter and eldest child of William and Nancy Pollock, was born January 24, 1810. Her education was limited to common-school instruction, which was the best afforded ladies of her day. She married Rev. James Wallace, and went with him to Logan county, Ohio. Mr. Wallace was born November 10, 1801, in York, Penn. He was graduated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, in 1827; studied theology under Rev. Alexander Bullions, D. D., at Cambridge, N. Y.; he was licensed July 9, 1830, by the Philadelphia Presbytery; was ordained October 25, 1832, by the Miami Valley Presbytery, and at the ordination was installed pastor of the Dorby and Cherokee (now Huntsville) Congregations in Logan county, Ohio. In 1839 he was released from Dorby, and gave three-fourths of his time to Huntsville, and one-fourth to Bellefontaine. On April 10, 1861, he resigned his Huntsville charge, on account of infirmities, but preached occasionally as his health permitted, making his home at Huntsville, then Bellefontaine, and finally Belle Centre, all in Ohio. He was a most excellent man, much blessed in his ministry and greatly devoted to his work. The last year of his life he spent in reading the Old Testament entirely through in the original Hebrew. He died after a few hours' illness, November 30, 1878, at the residence of his son-in-law, W. W. Templeton, Huntsville, where he had gone on a visit; his wife had died several years previous, in 1863; their remains lie side by side in the cemetery at Huntsville, Ohio. They had five children: two daughters—Mary and Nancy—and three sons—William Pollock, David and A. Collins. Mary married W. W. Templeton, an elder in the United Presbyterian Church, and resides near Huntsville, Ohio; Nancy married T. L. Baird, and lives in Allerton, Iowa (He is a farmer and a member of Session in the Allerton U. P. Congregation); William Pollock was a member of Company D, Forty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was wounded in the battle of Knoxville, Tenn., November 18, 1863, and died from the effects November 29, 1863; David married Jennie Reed, and lives on part of the Wallace homestead farm near Huntsville, Ohio; A. Collins, married to Arabella Peoples, is a druggist located in Bellefontaine, Ohio.

John Pollock, oldest son of William and Nancy Pollock, was born in January, 1811. In boyhood he attended the subscription schools of his time, which was the extent of his educational advantages, but being possessed with considerable natural ability he was enabled to meet the demands of life with a marked degree of success. When a young man he went to Logan county, Ohio, where he took up land, and in the spring of 1835 he married Jane Elder, a native of said county. To them were born eight children—three sons and five daughters—namely: Rebecca, Nancy, Margaret, Mary and Narcissa, and James Wallace, William E. and John A. Rebecca married Robert Smart, May, 1869, and died August, 1870; Nancy married David C. Carson, December 29, 1867 (he died November 7, 1874); Mrs. Carson and her three children reside in Cleveland Ohio. Margaret and Mary (unmarried) live in Huntsville, Ohio; Narcissa married James Peoples, a prosperous farmer near Huntsville, Ohio, and a ruling elder in the United Presbyterian Congregation of said place; James Wallace was a member of the Forty-fifth Ohio Regiment during the Civil war (spent fourteen months in Rebel prison, being captured at Philadelphia Fort, Tenn.; spent six months in Andersonville, the remainder of the time at Belle Isle, Charleston, Florence (S. C.), etc.; after his return from the army he married Nettie Anderson, and they reside on the "Anderson Hill" farm near Cedarville, Ohio; he is at present one of the county commissioners of Greene county, and an elder in the U. P. Church, Cedarville); William Elder is a coal merchant in Chicago, Ill.; Rev. John A. married Jessie Small, and resides in Indianapolis, Ind. Mr. Pollock was elected a member of Session in the Huntsville Congregation during the pastorate of his brother-in-law, Rev. James Wallace. He died August 27, 1868, and his remains lie in the cemetery at Huntsville, Ohio, beside those of his wife, who died in December, 1872.

Samuel Pollock, second son of William and Nancy (McNary) Pollock, was born January 16, 1813, on the original homestead in North Strabane township, the same farm where his father first saw the light of day, and which his grandfather had bought from the Indians, in the early times. On September 1, 1810, he married Esther McNary, eldest daughter of John and Jane Hill McNary (whose record appears elsewhere in this history), and they passed the first years of their wedded life on the Alexander Scott farm already alluded to, being part of the original Judge McDowell tract of 440 acres, all of which they afterward succeeded in purchasing. In the spring of 1858, having a desire to secure better educational advantages for their children, they purchased the fine residence of the Rev. A. B. Anderson, D. D., and moved to Canonsburg, where they spent the remaining days of their life. They were the parents of seven children, namely: James Wallace, Jennie Hill, John McNary, William B., Samuel Murray (who died in boyhood), Oliver Collins and Alexander Clark. In his youth Samuel Pollock was one of the leaders in the sports of the community, being a prominent participant at the husking bees, flax scutchings, wood chop-pings, log rollings and similar amusements of that day. He served seven years in the militia, and was a member of what was known as the "Ginger Hill Troops." In middle life he was hard to excel in the grain field—in reaping and cradling grain. On one occasion, when his wheat had got very ripe, he was known to cut (with the cradle) 102 dozen sheaves in less than six hours. He was a robust man, weighing 170 pounds, and stood five feet ten inches in height; he was quick in his movements, and possessed wonderful endurance. Financially, he was remarkably prosperous. Notwithstanding his father's will entitled him to the Alexander Scott farm, yet this tract had been but recently purchased, and but partially paid for, and it was only by the "sweat of his brow," together with his strict honesty and his unswerving integrity of purpose, that he was not only enabled to possess a clear title to said farm, but was enabled to add tract to tract until at the time of his death he ranked as one of the wealthiest landowners in the community. He was a most public-spirited man, but never an aspirant for any public office or notoriety of any kind, yet at the solicitation of friends he served most of his life in filling various township offices. Mr. Pollock was one of the founders of the Republican party in Washington county, and in the winter of 1856 went to Pittsburgh in order to secure a lecturer on the subject; helping to pay for the same out of his own pocket. He was one of the committee who were instrumental in getting Dr. Le Moyne, of Washington, to make the first abolition speech in Canonsburg, which was delivered from the steps of David Templeton's residence, afterward known as "Olome Institute," which he finally purchased, and carried on for several years, at his own expense, as a Female Seminary. (It was situated on the site now occupied by the First Presbyterian church of Canonsburg). During the Fremont campaign of 1856, when a great political wagon was built and decorated in the yard surrounding his barn, and when on the night before the parade the neighboring Democrats undertook to destroy it, he, with a few other staunch Republicans, defended the wagon with an iron poker, amid the breaking of ribs, shoulders, noses etc., he coming out of the melee unharmed and victorious. The following day the wagon was driven to Canonsburg by his brother, James Pollock, drawn by ten gray horses, and conveying thirty-three patriotic young ladies, dressed to represent the thirty-three States in the Union. He was very loyal to his country, and in the time of the great struggle of the Rebellion, too old himself to enlist, he permitted his oldest son, James W., a youth under age, to buckle on the armor, and help save the great Republic. In his youth he joined the Seceder Church at Pigeon Creek, under the pastorate of Rev. Alexander Wilson. After his marriage he connected with the Chartiers Seceder (now known as the Chartiers United Presbyterian) Congregation at Canonsburg, in which he was elected a ruling elder February 15, 1854, which office he held during the remainder of his life. He was one of the prime factors in erecting the present edifice known as Chartiers U. P. Church, at Canonsburg, in 1869-70; paying the largest subscription, besides working gratis and prevailing on others to do likewise. His home at Canonsburg was (in the words of Rev. Samuel Taggart, D. D.): "A minister's free hotel; even the minister's horse knew the place to turn into as he traveled the road." He was the original mover in the organization of the Oak Spring Cemetery Company. Being chosen first president of said association, he served in that capacity until his death. He died July 4, 1883, in the seventy-first year of his age, and November 9, 1890, his wife, Esther (McNary) Pollock, died in the seventy-sixth year of her age, and was laid by his side in the Oak Spring Cemetery, which he had been so instrumental in establishing and ornamenting.

JAMES WALLACE POLLOCK, county commissioner, one of the prominent citizens of the borough of Washington, and oldest son of Samuel and Esther (McNary) Pollock, is a native of North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., born October 10, 1841, in the historic old log house erected, owned and occupied by Judge McDowell, and where Dr. McMillan (according to the record in his journal) preached his first sermon west of the Alleghany mountains, on the fourth Sabbath of August, 1775. The place is designated as "Mount Pleasant" in the original patent, which states that the amount paid was "the sum of six pounds twelve shillings for a tract containing 440 acres, with allowance of six per cent. for roads, etc., which was surveyed in pursuance of a warrant granted to John McDowell, Sr., dated October 29, 1784, clear of all restrictions and reservations except the one-fifth part of all gold and silver ore for the use of the Commonwealth to be delivered at the pit's mouth clear of all charges."

Mr. Pollock received his education at the common schools of the district, and at Jefferson College. In April, 1858, his parents moved to Canonsburg, where he attended college until August, 1862, when he, with many other fellow students, under the leadership of Col. Frazier (then professor of mathematics in said college), laid aside their books, girded on the armor, and marched forth at their country's call to save it from rebel wrongs. Mr. Pollock served with distinction both in the ranks and at Gen. Hancock's headquarters, and was one of the very few who was seldom sick, and he never missed a day's duty from the time he joined the army in 1862 until the surrender of Lee at Appomattox in 1865. At the latter he was present with three cousins—William T. Pollock, Rev. George R. Murray and Thomas M. McNary—all of whom, remarkable as it may seem, are still living. Although there was not a battle their regiment, the One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., participated in from the time it joined the army of the Potomac in the fall of 1862, and prior to the battle of Chancellorsville, until the final struggle at Appomattox Courthouse, in April, 1865, but what some of the consins, and generally all, were present, yet none of them was the least hurt except Rev. Murray, who received a slight wound on the historic wheat field at Gettysburg.

On Mr. Pollock's return home after the close of the war, at his father's urgent request he took charge of the homestead (Alexander Scott farm), which he now owns, and engaged in agricultural pursuits, including the raising of fine stock, eventually succeeding in becoming one of the most energetic and successful farmers in the county. Being alive to every interest, he was often called on to fill positions of trust. Mr. Pollock resided on his farm in North Strabane township until the spring of 1892, at which time he leased it and moved into the city, in order to school his children, and that he might more conveniently perform the duties required of him as county commissioner. He has been a Republican ever since the organization of the party, and was many times chairman of the township committee and member of the county committee. In 1890, at the suggestion of his many friends, he consented to become a candidate for the office of county commissioner, and succeeded in being nominated and elected that same year. When quite a young man he became a member of Chartiers Seceder (now U. P.) Church, and many times since has been chosen trustee of that congregation. During the erection of their present commodious edifice in Canonsburg, he was secretary of the board of trustees. He was one of the advocates and leaders in starting and establishing what is now a very flourishing and prosperous U. P. Congregation at Houstonville, in which he is a ruling elder.

James W. Pollock and Miss Mary T. McNary (daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Templeton) McNary, born January 24, 1848) were united in marriage December 5, 1867, and ten children—six sons and four daughters—have been born to them, viz: Fannie Luella, Ulysses Samuel, Maggie Esther, D. M. B. McLean, Ernest James, Harry Edgar, Annie McNary, William Wallace, Denroll Smiley, and Mary Osee, all yet living with their father in Washington. Mrs. Pollock (a most amiable and lovely woman) died February 7, 1890, from a stroke of paralysis, superinduced by an attack of "la grippe."

Jennie Hill Pollock, only daughter of Samuel and Esther (McNary) Pollock, was born October 8, 1843, in the old log house of "Historic renown," on the State road, North Strabane township, known as the "Old Judge McDowell house," and at present owned by her youngest brother, Alexander Clark. So fond was she of her books and her school, that even in childhood days no greater punishment could be inflicted upon her than to require her to absent herself from school for a day. Her education was limited to common-school instruction until the fall of 1857, when she entered Washington Female Seminary—Mrs. Sarah R. Hanna, principal. At the age of seventeen she received her diploma from this institution with honor, her grade in scholarship entitling her to be the valedictorian of a class numbering twenty one members. This honor she declined, thus conferring it upon another. She united with the Chartiers (Seceder) Church under the pastorate of Rev. J. B. Clark, D. D., when fifteen years of age. At present she is a member of the Greenside Avenue (United Presbyterian) Congregation, Canonsburg, Penn., Rev. D. R. McDonald, pastor. She has filled various public offices, being treasurer of the Ladies' Presbyterian Missionary Society, and sent (in the spring of 1890) by this association as their representative to the Women's General Missionary Convention of the United Presbyterian Church, which met in Washington, Iowa. She has held continuously different offices in the State and county work in the Women's Christian Temperance Union, ever since its organization. She is a ready writer, and a few sketches from her pen have found their way into print. Miss Pollock is noted as a most faithful and efficient church worker. When about fifteen years of age she began teaching in the Sabbath school, and since that time has continuously taught. For some years she instructed two classes each Sabbath: one in the colored school, the other in her own church school: besides being a regular attendant at other divine services, and an untiring worker in mission bands, Young People's Societies, and other departments of church enterprises. She, with her brother, Alexander Clark, spent the winter of 1884-85 traveling in the South, visiting New Orleans Exposition, and other points of interest. Her home has always been with her parents, nursing and caring for them in their old age until "God took them to Himself." At present she owns and resides in the home mansion, No. 504 West Pike street, Canonsburg, Penn., originally known as the "Dr. Anderson homestead."

JOHN McNARY POLLOCK, second son of Samuel and Esther (McNary) Pollock, was born January 2, 1846, in North Strabane township, this county, on the farm now owned by his brother A. C., being part of the tract patented by Judge McDowell, called "Mt. Pleasant." Although a farmer's son, John Pollock has enjoyed unusual educational advantages, his parents being progressive citizens, who believed a thorough literary training to be essential to the highest success in any business. When John was a lad of twelve years his parents moved to Canonsburg, where he attended college for three years, then returned to the farm for a short time. He afterward took a course in book-keeping at Duff's Business College, Pittsburgh, Penn., graduating therefrom with honors. In the spring of 1869 he settled permanently on the farm in North Strabane township, the greater part of which he inherited from his father, and has since devoted his time to rural pursuits. On November 14, 1872, he was united in marriage with Mary Jane Templeton, who was born October 20, 1846, daughter of John and Rachel (Rankin) Templeton, and he located on the farm on which he still resides. Excepting the few years spent in obtaining an education he, by hard manual labor, and at the sacrifice of his nerves, was his father's main support in all his labors and business transactions. Although he at present enjoys comparatively good health, his physical condition gives evidence of the sacrifice made. To the union of John McNary Pollock and Mary Jane (Templeton) the following children have been born: Edith Jane McNary, Mary Esther, John Templeton, Nettie Elmira (deceased), Lawrie Samuel, Junietta Luella, and Clara Matilda (deceased). Mr. Pollock follows in the footsteps of his forefathers, and casts his ballot for the Republican party. He and his family worship with the Chartiers United Presbyterian Congregation, Canonsburg, Penn., of which he, his wife and two oldest children are members. He is a member of the board of trustees in said congregation, serving in this office a number of years, having been first elected in 1878. He was chosen a member of the first choir in Chartiers Congregation, but resigned when married, after serving four years. He has always been a consistent worker and energetic supporter of the Church. The wife and mother of this family was "called to her reward" since the above sketch was written. A very amiable and highly esteemed woman, she died February 15, 1893. Her remains are laid by the side of her two children in Oak Spring Cemetery.

WILLIAM B. POLLOCK, third son of Samuel and Esther (McNary) Pollock, was born May 26, 1843, in the old log house built by Judge McDowell, the house in which the first sermon, preached west of the Alleghany mountains, was delivered by Rev. John McMillan in August, 1775, in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. He received his education in the graded schools of Canonsburg and Duff's Commercial College, Pittsburgh, from which latter he graduated with honors in 1869. On February 11, 1875, at 6:30 a. m., he was united in marriage by Rev. W. L. Wallace, D. D., with Miss Hettie Alveta Murray, daughter of Capt. James and Mary C. (Johnston) Murray, a sketch of whose family follows. Six children were born to this union—three living and three buried in Oak Spring Cemetery, namely: Mary Johnston, born November 19, 1875, died April 16, 1876; Samuel Murray, born May 20, 1877, attending school at Canonsburg, and a member of the U. P. Church; Cleonie Estella, born October 3, 1881; Ariadne, born February 19, 1884, died August 26, 1887; Rose, born September 20, 1886, died May 15, 1890; and Clara Jennie, born February 15, 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Pollock are members of the Canonsburg United Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Pollock was elected a ruling elder December 22, 1892. He has held various local offices of trust in the township, but aspires to no political position, preferring a life of domestic felicity. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank at Canonsburg, also in the Western Pennsylvania Agricultural Association at Washington. He is a member and treasurer of the National Delaine Merino Sheep Association of Washington county; elected treasurer 1891. In that year he was appointed as a committee to represent the association at Chicago, Ill., at the Columbian Exposition Commission, to arrange for the World's Fair of 1893. He was sent to meet with the United States Association in 1890, at Steubenville, Ohio, also to meet the same association at the same place in 1892. He lived three years in the old Olome Institute building, in Canonsburg, which was a gift to him from his father. On the Murray Hill farm, on which he now resides with his family, Mr. Pollock built a fine residence, and in addition to this farm of 270 acres, he owns one of 100 acres on Plum run, in Chartiers township, known as the "Old Hayes farm." In connection with general agriculture, he is engaged in the raising of fine-bred sheep and cattle, making a specialty of American Red-Polled cattle, and National Delaine Merino sheep. Mr. Pollock ranks among the leading business men of the country, and is respected and honored by all.

OLIVER COLLINS POLLOCK, the fifth son of Samuel and Esther (McNary) Pollock, whose ancestral history precedes this sketch, was born on the Alexander Scott farm in North Strabane township (at present owned by James W. Pollock), on October 15, 1852. He attended Christy's school when but four years of age. When his parents moved to Canonsburg in 1858, he attended high school; studied under Colfelt and Stevenson; attended Dickson and Dunbar's Academy during 1869-70; Washington and Jefferson College, at Washington, Penn., 1871-72; Westminster College, at New Wilmington, Penn., 1873-74, where he graduated with honor on June 16, 1874, in a class containing thirty-three students. While attending the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Allegheny, being struck with gold fever, from reports of the Black Hills, and wishing free transportation, on November 20, 1875, he enlisted in the United States Cavalry Service; the next day he was sent to Jefferson barracks, St. Louis, Mo., transferred to Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.; assigned to Company M, Third U. S. Cavalry, under Capt. Anson Mills, on January 9, 1876; took part in the winter campaign against the Sioux Indians, leaving Fort D. A. Russell on February 20, and Fort Fetterman March 1, and returning the 26th with the thermometer averaging twenty-six degrees below zero, the greatest cold being on the night of the 16 and 17th of March (St. Patrick's day), when the thermometer registered forty-five degrees below zero. They were on a forced march of twenty-four hours' duration to attack Crazy Horse's village, at the mouth of Otter creek in Dakota, said village containing 110 tepees or 600 warriors, which was destroyed March 17, 1876. The expedition took part in the summer campaign under Brig.-Gen. George Croke (noted Indian fighter of the plains) against Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse's combined forces. [It was during the time of this campaign that Gen. Custer and men of the Seventh U. S. Cavalry were massacred.] being encamped within fifty or sixty miles of the death-trap, at the headwaters of Powder river, at the foot of Big Horn mountains, awaiting communications with Brig.-Gen. Terry. They were engaged June 17, 1876, in a whole day's running fight with Sitting Bull's and Crazy Horse's entire band of 3,300 warriors on Rose Bend river, at the mouth of Dead Man's Cañon, Montana, within three miles of the death-trap, and they escaped it only through the sagacity of their noted guide—Frank Gniard. From their supply camp they started on the 5th of August, with fifteen days' rations, on Indian trails to avenge Gen. Custer's death, and following the trail into the Bad Lands of Dakota, the trail becoming dim, they lost the trail and themselves in those alkali lands, where no wood thicker than rose bush stalks appears, and the water is like the lyes from wood ashes. Running out of rations, and no wild game accessible, they were compelled to live on rose buds and horseflesh to appease their hunger and quench their thirst. Having escaped from the Bad Lands, they came upon and destroyed American Horse's village of 104 tepees at Shin Battle, S. Dak., on September 9, 1876; which being rich in dried meat and ponies, they lived passably well until they arrived at Belle Touche river, near where Fort Meade now stands, about September 20, where they procured supplies from the citizens of Crooke's City in the Black Hills. Here they were issued raw beef, flour and green coffee to make a meal, each man having in his possession cooking utensils, consisting of a tin plate, a quart tin cup and a knife and fork. They remained in Crooke, Deadwood Hill and Custer cities until their supply train arrived on the 5th of October, just two months after leaving this place at the foot of Big Horn mountains. By this time Mr. Pollock had learned that "all is not gold that glitters," and that gold could not be picked up by the handful in the Black Hills; yet being young, and liking the roving and exciting life of a cavalryman in the West, he preferred to stay with Uncle Sam, and served five years. He came to Camp Sheridan, near Spotted Tail Agency, in the last of October, and soon thereafter, Crazy Horse having surrendered, came to Red Cloud Agency, and stayed over winter, when, becoming tired of Gov. Chuck, and desiring the free and roving life of the prairie, he and a few followers started north, but were overtaken and captured near Spotted Tail Agency by Indian soldiers about 8 o'clock in the evening. Mr. Pollock, known to be a reckless rider, was detailed (no one else being willing to volunteer) to carry the news to Fort Robinson at Red Cloud Agency. At night and alone, in order to insure secrecy, and being given direction not to spare horseflesh, he made the distance of forty-five miles, arriving at Fort Robinson about midnight. He was present next day when Crazy Horse, having refused to be placed in the white man's guard-house by Capt. Kennington, received his death wound. That night (the pickets being doubled) about midnight, the Indians at the agency took up the death-song (he having expired). A shot was fired somewhere on the picket lines, and thinking the Fort was attacked, officers' and soldiers' wives came running into the soldiers' quarters in their nightclothes, exclaiming "for God's sake save us." It took Mr. Pollock four days to return to Camp Sheridan with the horse (which never recovered). He was present in 1877 when the Third Cavalry so gallantly headed off, captured and subdued the Cheyenne Indians, whose leaders were Wild Hog and Yellow Hand. He was with the soldiers in removing Spotted Tail and Red Cloud bands of Sioux Indians to the Old Ponceo Reservation on the Missouri river, in the fall of 1877, and to what is now known as Pine Ridge Agency in the spring of 1878. Afterward he was stationed at Fort Sidney, Neb., on the Union Pacific Railroad; at Fort McKinney, Wyo.; at Camp Rawlins, on the Union Pacific Railroad, after Maj. Thornburg's (paymaster) massacre by the Pinte Indians, November, 1879; at Fort Laramie and at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., where he was honorably discharged November 19, 1880, at the expiration of five years' service (Capt. Deane Monahan, commander of Company M, Third Cavalry). Mr. Pollock came back to Pennsylvania, and engaged in rural pursuits. On December 3, 1880, he was married to Anna Bell Weaver, who was born November 13, 1854, a daughter of Thomas Dell and Eliza (Caldwell) Weaver. In the spring of 1881 they set up house-keeping in the old Judge McDowell historic mansion, now owned by A. C. Pollock. In 1884, having inherited from his father a portion of the Judge McDowell tract, known as "Mount Pleasant," he erected thereon a domicile, moving to the same December 18, 1884, and here he still resides. Mr. Pollock has held different offices of trust, serving as auditor, tax collector, etc.; at present he is filling the office of committee of a lunatic, and guardian of minor children; of that of notary public, having been appointed to said office by the governor of Pennsylvania. He is an ardent and staunch upholder of the principles of the Republican party. To the union of Oliver Collins Pollock and Anna Bell Weaver the following children—five girls and four boys—were born: Bessie Jeanette, Viola Pearl, Osear Dell, Eliza Weaver, Lucy Esther, Edna Loretta (died at the age of four months), Adez Clark, Earl Collins and Samuel Blaine MacDonald. Mr. Pollock worships with the Canonsburg United Presbyterian Congregation, whose church edifice is situated on Greengside avenue, Canonsburg, Penn., himself, wife and oldest daughter being members of said congregation.

ALEXANDER CLARK POLLOCK, youngest child of Samuel and Esther (McNary) Pollock, was born on the farm now owned by his brother, James Wallace Pollock, situated in North Strabane township, this county. He is unmarried and makes his home with his sister Jennie H. Pollock, Canonsburg, Penn. He owns the homestead farm, on which is the famous log house erected by Judge McDowell in bygone days, and in which his parents lived the first eleven years of their married life. This house is built of hewn logs, perfectly joined together; is 40x60 feet square, two stories in height; contains seven rooms, all the inside work—ceilings, partitions, cup-boards, floors, door, etc.—made of finished walnut lumber. The whole structure, being completed in the best mechanical manner, was considered in those times a very fine edifice. Said farm (belonging to A. Clark Pollock) is part of the tract patented as "Mount Pleasant" in the year 1784. It is situated in North Strabane township, three and one-half miles south of Canonsburg, this county, on the State road known in times prior to railroad transportation, as the Drove road, from east to west, and was headquarters for travelers in those days. The old log house still remains, and is used as the dwelling house on the farm. Having recently been repaired, it is in a good state of preservation, and is a comfortable residence. A. Clark Pollock is a progressive business man, and has held a number of positions of trust—such as chief burgess, bookkeeper, treasurer of various associations, guardian for a number of children, etc. He is a member of Greenside Avenue United Presbyterian Church, Canonsburg, Penn., which congregation he is now serving as treasurer. He has always been actively interested in the success of the Republican party. Has served two consecutive terms as chief burgess of Canonsburg, Penn., being the youngest man ever elected to the office. He is a stockholder in the Oak Spring Cemetery Company, made so by the will of his mother, to whom it was left by her husband (Samuel Pollock), who was one of the organizers of the company. After the death of his father, he was given power of attorney by his mother over her stock, and elected by said company one of the business directors, in which capacity he has served ever since, being re-elected some ten consecutive years. He has been a member of the National Guard of Pennsylvania for a number of years; is at present quartermaster-sergeant of Company H, Tenth Regiment, and experienced a little of soldier life in the recent riots in his State. He is a hearty, robust man, seemingly in the prime of life.

JAMES POLLOCK, a well-known farmer in North Strabane township, a representative of one of the oldest pioneer families of the county and a native of the same, is the third and youngest son of William and Nancy (McNary) Pollock, and is the only member of the family now living. He was born September 19, 1815, on the ancestral farm (which he now owns) situated near Clokey, this county. He received his education at the subscription schools of the neighborhood of his birthplace, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He was an attentive and apt scholar, and succeeded in becoming proficient in the fundamental branches of study. On December 19, 1837, he was united in marriage with Abigail, daughter of James Thome, and they had two children: William and Abigail (twins), born September 28, 1840; William married Sarah Barr, December 4, 1867; Abigail married John C. McNary, May 20, 1868. The mother of these two children died March 3, 1843, aged thirty-three years, and was buried in the Pigeon Creek Church graveyard. On August 19, 1846, Mr. Pollock married Ellen Y., daughter of James Linn, of South Strabane township, two daughters being the result of this union, viz.: Jane L., born May 4, 1847, married November 8, 1882, to James S. McNary, Jr., of Peters township, this county, and Nannie McN., born September 6, 1848, married October 18, 1870, to Milton O. Brownlee, of this county. The mother of these two girls died April 23, 1885, and was buried in the cemetery at Pigeon Creek. Mr. Pollock, like his forefathers, is a strict churchman, and believes it to be his duty and privilege to support religious enterprises. He and his family have been members of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek for many years, and he has long been a ruling elder in same. He is the only person now living in the congregation that was a member of it when he connected with it in his youth. In politics he was formerly a Whig, and since the formation of the party a Republican; though rendering valuable aid to his party, he has never accepted any party office. Mr. Pollock still owns and lives on the original ancestral Pollock tract, patented "Plenty," and situated near Clokey, Washington Co., Penn., which is now superintended by his only son, William. He (William) is a Republican, and during the war of the Rebellion he served in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, P. V. I. After he returned from the army he married Sarah Barr, to which union have been born five children, thus representing the third, fourth and fifth generations of the Pollock family now living on the farm patented "Plenty."

GEORGE MURRAY, of Washington county, was born at Marsh Creek, near Gettysburg, Adams Co., Penn. His grandfather was Rev. George Murray, of Lockerbie, Scotland, and the following is the epitaph on his gravestone in the kirkyard of Shundergarth: "Here lies deposited the earthly part of the Rev. George Murray, late minister of the Gospel of the Associate Congregation of Annandale, at Lockerbie, who died April 1, 1757, in the 42d year of his age, and fourteenth of his ministry. Meekness and zeal mutually qualifying each other in their steadfast adherence to the faith of the Gospel and to the Testimony for Scotland's Reformation amidst the general opposition to both—were his distinguishing characteristics."

Rev. John Murray, father of George Murray, above spoken of, was born in 1748 at Lockerbie, in the valley of the Annan, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, where his father Rev. George Murray, was pastor of the Associate (Antiburgher) Congregation; he was graduated at Glasgow University, and studied theology in the Associate Hall at Alloa; was licensed in the summer of 1773 by the Presbytery of Sanquhar. On the 2d of the following September he was appointed to go to America, and before the month was out sailed from Glasgow. He was ordained April 17, 1776, by the Associate Presbytery of Pennsylvania; was pastor of Marsh Creek Congregation, near Gettysburg, Adams Co., Penn., from November 2, 1777, until his death which occurred in the summer of 1785. He left two children, Mary and George. His wife was Eliza Johnston, youngest child of Thomas Johnston, of Pequea, Salisbury township, Lancaster Co., Penn.

The parents of George Murray (whose name opens the sketch) dying when he was quite young, he and his sister Mary (afterward Mrs. James Clark, of Mercersburg, Penn.) were reared in the home of their maternal uncle, Thomas Johnston, of Lancaster county, afterward of near Mercersburg, Penn. There he grew to manhood and acquired the trade of cabinet maker. Seeking his fortune in western Pennsylvania, he settled at Darlington. After he had been there a short time he came to Washington county, to attend the marriage of Rev. David Imbrie and Miss Jane Reed. Shortly afterward he returned for the bridesmaid, Miss Mary Reed (first cousin of the former Miss Reed), and took her back as his bride November 28, 1805. In 1811 he disposed of his town property in Darlington, came to Washington county and purchased a farm called "Lovely Banks," two miles northeast of Canonsburg (a part of which is now Van Eman Station). He improved this place by building a large brick house and frame barn on it (the same now owned by Mr. Greer). Afterward he bought several adjoining tracts of land, one of which is now included in the northern part of the Pennsylvania Reform School farm. He was a man of thrift and honesty, pious and upright in his deportment, an humble and devout Christian; a substantial pillar of the Associate Presbyterian (Chartiers) Church of Canonsburg, and for many years one of its influential elders and liberal supporters. He died June 17, 1832, in the fiftieth year of his age. He and his wife and children (except John and Maria) are interred in Oak Spring cemetery (formerly Chartiers graveyard), Canonsburg, Penn. His wife, Mary Reed, daughter of David and Margaret (May) Reed, of near Venice, Washington county, was known by all for her kindness and hospitality. The "proverbial" praise of the virtuous woman could aptly be ascribed to her, for, "She looked well to the ways of her household, and ate not the bread of idleness." She died November 13, 1846, in the sixty-second year of her age. Their children were as follows: Margaret, born January 1, 1807, Eliza, born January 21, 1809, John, born July 31, 1810 (all three born at Darlington, Penn.); David, born March 18, 1813, Maria, born January 9, 1815, James and George (twins), born October 20, 1816, Dr. Thomas Johnston, born January 7, 1819, and Martha, born December 2, 1821 (all six born at Canonsburg, Penn.). Of these Margaret married William H. McNary, and died at her residence in Canonsburg, June 6, 1882; Eliza married David Templeton, and lived in Canonsburg until after the death of her husband, March 6, 1869. After 1872 she made her home with her daughter, Mrs. M. R. Johnston, at Mercersburg, Penn. Early in life she connected herself with the Associate Presbyterian Church, and later with the Chartiers United Presbyterian Church, and gave liberally of her means for the spreading of the Gospel. She and Mrs. Esther Pollock were for many years prominent members of the first Bible Society of Canonsburg. At the time of her death she was a member of the Central United Presbyterian Church at Omaha, Neb. Modest and retiring in her disposition, her kindness of heart, her gentle manner and sincere piety caused her to be loved and respected by all. She died March 20, 1891, at the residence of her son-in-law, Thomas C. Johnston, Council Bluffs, Iowa, in the eighty-third year of her age. She left three children, Margaretta Reed Templeton, Caroline and George Murray Templeton. Margaretta Reed Templeton graduated at Washington Seminary. She married Thomas C. Johnston, and spent the greater part of her married life at Mercersburg, Penn., but in 1889 she finally moved to Iowa. At an early age she became connected with the Associate Presbyterian Church. She died April 24, 1891, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in the fifty-sixth year of her age. She leaves one son—A. M. Johnston—and one daughter—Ella E. Johnston. Caroline Templeton graduated at Washington Seminary, was a member of the Associate Presbyterian Church, and spent most of her life in Canonsburg. She was possessed of an exceptionally bright and amiable character, and none knew her but to love her. She died April 9, 1874, aged thirty-six years. Capt. George Murray Templeton was born at Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn., May 3, 1841, and died May 4, 1870. Abandoning his studies at Jefferson College he enlisted, at the age of twenty, in Company D, One Hundred and Forty-ninth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers; was mustered into service August 23, 1862; appointed captain in the Thirty-second Regiment U. S. Colored Troops February 17, 1864; was wounded at the battle of Honey Creek, S. C., November 30, 1864; mustered out at close of Civil war, August 22, 1865; entered the regular army, February 23, 1866, as second lieutenant in the Eighteenth Regular U. S. Infantry; October 19, 1867, was appointed a captain in the Twenty-seventh Regular U. S. Infantry. He was a man of sterling integrity, and an officer of distinguished bravery and superior acquirements.

John Murray married Elizabeth Wilson, who died December 9, 1842, in her twenty-second year, and he was afterward married to Ellen Peritte. He lived for many years on his farm, now part of the Morganza, Penn., Reform School land. He moved to Illinois, thence to Leavenworth, Kans., where he resided until his death. He left a widow and seven children. He was a volunteer in a militia company (known as the "Republican Rangers") from 1840 to 1847. His children are Jennie, Annie, John, Minnie, Mattie, Georgiana and Stella, all living in Kansas. Jennie married Russel McCune; Annie married Samuel Trower; John married Emma Trower; Minnie became Mrs. Will. O. McCune, and Mattie married a Mr. Roup.

David Reed Murray died August 24, 1819. Maria Murray married John Henderson, and they afterward moved to Kansas, where they died, leaving seven children settled there: John, Clark, Julia, Amanda, George, Mary and James (John was Mrs. Henderson's step-son by his father's first marriage to Miss Anderson). George Murray (twin) died January 18, 1839, on the Murray Hill farm, near Murray Hill Station.

James Murray (twin brother of George) married Miss Mary Clark Johnston, August 28, 1848, at the house of her father, Alexander Moncreiff Johnston, near Mercersburg, Franklin Co., Penn. He brought his bride across the mountains in a buggy, in the days before railroads. They resided on the Murray farm, in the house built by his father, George Murray, till the spring of 1852, when they moved to the adjoining farm, which he had bought of the executors of the Murdock estate, where he died August 20, 1853, in the house built and formerly owned by Gen. Morgan, and where the Aaron Burr conspiracy was made known in Colonial times. He was energetic, industrious in his worldly affairs, always willing to assist in any public enterprises; pious and exemplary in his Christian deportment. He was very fond of military matters, and it was only his filial obedience that prevented him from taking his company to the Mexican war; for twenty-one years he was a member of the Washington Guards, and for fourteen years captain of his company. The following is an extract from the Washington Reporter: "We have the melancholy duty to perform of announcing the death of Capt. James Murray, which took place at his residence, Morganza, in North Strabane township in this county, on Saturday, August 20, 1853. Capt. Murray was one among our most useful, public-spirited and highly esteemed citizens, universally beloved for those traits of character which command the respect and endear their possessor to the intelligent and good in every community. His sickness was of but few days' continuance, and we believe assumed the character of typhoid fever. He was in the prime of life, being in the thirty-seventh year of his age. Society has had in Capt. Murray one of its most active and useful citizens, and his family are immensely endeared to him by his devoted affection, amiable character, upright and exemplary walks and deportment. We, ourselves, feel a bereavement in the death of this amiable gentleman whom we ranked amongst our most attached friends."

Mary Clark (Johnston), wife of James Murray, was born two miles west of Mercersburg, Penn., January 30, 1828. Her mother was Esther, youngest daughter of Jeremiah and Mary (Clark) Rankin. Her father, Alexander Moncreiff Johnston, was the youngest son of Thomas Johnston, who came to Mercersburg from Pequea, Lancaster county, in 1794, and was a lineal descendant of Archibald Johnston (Lord Warriston), of Scotland. [The Johnston coat-of-arms was a winged spur, the motto was "Nunquam non paritus" (Never unprepared).] When quite young she (Mary C. Johnston) joined the Associate Church at Mercersburg, under the Rev. Findley McNaughton. She spent her married life of five years at Murray Hill, Washington Co., Penn., and after her husband's death she made her home at Mercersburg until her death, which occurred February 28, 1876. She was a person of strong faith and great zeal for her church, giving the half of her income for the support of the Gospel. She was a strong Abolitionist in her political sentiments before and during the war of the Rebellion, and while her home was surrounded by the Rebel army she gave shelter to home-less refugee colored people; and when her roof was no longer a protection, because the houses were to be searched, she gave them clothing and helped them away by night to the mountains. She rests from her labors, her remains being interred in Fairview cemetery, Mercersburg, Penn., beside her two children and her parents. The children of James and Mary Clark Murray were Mary Emma, who died, aged twelve months, at Mercersburg, Penn.; Hettie Alverta, now Mrs. William B. Pollock, born September 22, 1851 (a brief sketch of whom follows), and Lidie Martha Murray, who died September 4, 1861, aged seven and one-half years.

Mrs. William B. Pollock was born in the house built by her grandfather, George Murray, on a farm called "Lovely Banks," in Washington county, Penn., a part of which is at present known as Van-Eman Station, and here she spent the first two years of her life. At the death of her father, August 20, 1853, she removed with her mother to Mercersburg, Franklin Co., Penn. Here she attended Mercersburg College, afterward completing her education at Wilson's Female College, Chambersburg, Penn. She united with the Mercersburg United Presbyterian congregation, under the pastorate of Rev. Gracey Ferguson, D. D., when fifteen years of age. On February 11, 1875, she was married, and in June of that year she and her husband took a picturesque drive over the Alleghany Mountains in their own buggy to their new home, and began housekeeping in Canonsburg, Penn. Here she lived three years, and then moved to her present dwelling at Murray Hill. Mrs. Pollock possesses a talent given to but few—that of an artist. She received some instruction in drawing in her youth, but sketches readily from nature. The walls of the different apartments of her home testify to her skill and handiwork, and many friends have decorative mementoes of her brush and easel. An oil painting, well executed, of her own residence, at present decorates her dining-room. She decorates china with ease and fine finish, and her cupboard contains a large supply, the work of her own brush and kiln. By disposition she is amiable and hospitable. Her friends are welcome guests at her house.

Dr. Thomas Johnston Murray, brother of James, was born January 7, 1819, and died January 21, 1851. He graduated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, studied medicine in Philadelphia, and afterward located in Canonsburg where until his death he was a very successful practicing physician. His wife, Elizabeth Calohan Murray, was born October 12, 1821, died April 28, 1856. Rev. George Reed Murray and Anna Kelly (Hodgens), now Mrs. James M. Thomas, are the children of Thomas and Elizabeth Murray, both now residing at Thomas, Washington Co., Penn.

Rev. George Reed Murray volunteered in the U. S. army August 13, 1862, at the age of seventeen years, served in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, until after the close of the war. Entered Westminster College in the fall of 1866; graduated from the classical department in the spring of 1871; in the fall of the same year entered the United Presbyterian Seminary in Newburgh, N. Y., and spent two years there; in the fall of 1873 entered Theological Seminary of Princeton, N. J., and was licensed to preach in spring of 1874 by the First U. P. Presbytery of New Jersey.

On October 7, 1875, Rev. George R. Murray was married to Miss Mary Henrietta McClees, of Taylorstown, Penn., by whom were born six children, three of whom are now (February 19, 1893) living, viz.: Harry Alexander Murray, aged sixteen years; Thomas Johnston Arthur Murray, aged eleven years; James McClees Murray, aged nine years. Mr. Murray was pastor of the U. P. Church in Centreville, Iowa, some four years; settled again in Murray, Cass Co., Neb., in 1880, serving as pastor for ten years, then was released to accept a call to Mount Prospect U. P. Church, Thomas, Penn., July 1, 1891. On March 14, 1889, Mrs. Mary H. Murray died, and Mr. Murray was married December 30, 1890, to Mrs. Agnes C. Blair, of Monmouth, Illinois.

Martha Murray died unmarried September 2, 1854, in her thirty-third year. Lovely and winning in her ways, kind and affectionate in her disposition, she was revered by all friends and acquaintances. Mrs. William B. Pollock's maternal grandfather, Alexander Moncreiff Johnston, was a son of Thomas and Anne (Houston) Johnston, Anne Houston being one of the Houston family of Lancaster county, a daughter of John Houston, who came from Scotland or the North of Ireland.

JOHAN L. RIGGS represents a family of the earliest pioneers, who were originally natives of Wales, the home of mythical legends and weird, yet fascinating ballads. But more fascinating to the childish ear than even ancient tale or thrilling music were the new stories of a life where truth was stranger than fiction, of a wonderful land across the mighty ocean. At length a hardy band of pioneers joined an expedition to the New World, and among their number were the early ancestors of the Riggs family. After landing in America they settled in Maryland, where their children grew to maturity and were married.

William Riggs, a son of this family, was born in 1750, and in early life married Mary Dodson. The young couple decided to plunge yet deeper into the forest wilds, and in 1773 came to Washington county, Penn., where he took out a patent of land near Monongahela river, a portion of which is yet in the family name. He served as vestryman in an Episcopal church prior to 1794, and in 1799 was licensed to preach by the authorities of the Methodist Episcopal Society. He died in 1833; his wife died in December, 1819, aged sixty-four; both are buried on the home farm. They were the parents of thirteen children, their names and dates of birth being as follows: Jeremiah, December 17, 1771; Eleanor, October 3, 1776; James, December 14, 1778; Abrillar, February 11, 1781; Thomas, February 19, 1783; William, April 29, 1785; Zachariah, May 25, 1787; Mary, June 11, 1789; Lucy, July 16, 1791; Noah, August 6, 1793; Elizabeth, 1795; Mahlon, December 25, 1797, and Anne, 1799. Quite a number of these lived to very old ages; several went to Marshall county, W. Va., others to different parts of Ohio.

Mahlon Riggs, a son of William and Mary (Dodson) Riggs, was born in Washington county, Penn., and passed his entire life in Allen township. On August 10, 1820, he was married, by Rev. Watson, to Lydia Williams, who was born in 1800 in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of John and Margaret Williams, the former of whom came from Maryland with his mother, who is buried at California, Penn. Grandfather Williams was born February 15, 1776, and died March 10, 1861, aged eighty-five years. He was a Methodist, and was buried at Mount Tabor church. On March 23, 1799, he had married Margaret Howe, who was born in Washington county, Penn., in 1779, and died May 25, 1867. She was a member of the Methodist Church, and was buried at Mount Tabor church. They had children as follows: Lydia, Mary, Elizabeth, Isabel, Hannah, Thomas, John, William N., Simeon, Sarah and Salathiel, all now deceased, except the first and the last two named. John and William N. were traveling preachers in the Methodist Church. The children born to Mahlon and Lydia Williams were as follows: Mary E., born June 14, 1821, died January 15, 1835, and buried in Howes cemetery; John L., subject of sketch; Thomas Thornton Fleming, born April 29, 1826, and married Susan Redd May 31, 1853 (both died several years ago in Moundsville, and were buried there); Caroline A., born October 4, 1828, and married to G. W. Hazelbaker June 15, 1851; Lucinda A., born September 25, 1830, and was twice married, first, on June 12, 1853, to J. D. Latta, and after his death she married Johnston Noble, who is now deceased (she is now living at California, Penn.); William N., born March 5, 1832, died April 20, 1892, and buried at Mount Tabor Methodist Episcopal church; Margaret E., born February 8, 1834, married to H. J. Furnier December 14, 1854, died September 27, 1859, and buried at Mount Tabor; James L., born March 15, 1834, married May 21, 1861, to Emily Rulong, of Moundsville, W. Va., both now deceased, he having died February 25, 1866, and buried at Mount Tabor church; Elizabeth A., born August 15, 1834, married to H. J. Furnier July 29, 1860, died February 5, 1862, and was buried at Mount Tabor. (H. T. Furnier is also deceased, and is buried at Mount Tabor church). The parents were members of the Mount Tabor Methodist Episcopal Church. The father died in 1836; his widow is living with her daughter, Lucinda, at California, Penn.

John L. Riggs was born March 30, 1824, in Allen township, Washington county, and received a subscription-school education. On January 25, 1852, he was united in marriage with Dorothy J., daughter of Alexander P. Biles, a native of Allen township, where her mother died some years ago; her father died in Moundsville, W. Va. Mr. and Mrs. Riggs resided on the old homestead until 1859, when they came to their present home. He bought fifty-five acres, which, added to the original tract, comprises 175 acres of well-cultivated land, furnished with a good brick residence. Mr. Riggs has given his attention to farming and stock raising; in politics he was a strong Abolitionist, now voting with the Republican party, which he has served as township collector and a member of the school board. Mr. and Mrs. Riggs have had children as follows: Marcellus, born December 9, 1852, unmarried and residing with his parents; J. A., born January 21, 1854, unmarried and residing with his parents (he is a contracting carpenter); Cyrenus, born November 29, 1855, married June 15, 1886, to Nancy Rogers, of Iowa (they are now living in Galva, Ida Co., Iowa, where he is a contracting carpenter); John W., born May 10, 1857, married March 10, 1880, to Anna M. Alden, who was born February 11, 1862, at Toulon, Stark Co., Ill. (they now live in Allen township, Washington county, Penn.); Oliver S., born September 21, 1860, married to Katie Bell McKenna, and they are now living on the home farm.

SAMUEL PATTERSON, one of the most successful agriculturists of West Bethlehem township, is a grandson of Thomas Patterson, who was born in Ireland, and came to this country with his family in about the year 1800. He went to New Orleans, where he was seized with the yellow fever, and coming back to Washington county, Penn., died.

John Patterson, son of the pioneer, Thomas, settled upon the farm of one Noble, in Washington county, Penn., and soon afterward he purchased the farm which is now the home of his son Samuel. He married Jane, daughter of John Simpson, who resided in Greene county, Penn., and was also of Irish parentage, her father emigrating early in the history of Greene county, Penn. To them were born the following children: Catharine, wife of James Wherry, residing in Hillsboro; Rebecca, wife of John Bungarner; Elizabeth, wife of Levi Hopkins; Jane, wife of G. P. Baker; Sarah, wife of Levi Dawson; Andrew (deceased); John (deceased); Samuel, the subject of this biography; Mary Siberts, and Thomas, a minister of the Gospel at Waynesburg. At the time of his death, which occurred April 10, 1849, John Patterson owned 250 acres of land in Washington county, Penn., portions of which he purchased at $3. per acre. He erected the log dwelling in which his son Samuel now lives, and which is one of the oldest in Washington county. The nails used in its construction were purchased from a blacksmith at 12½ cents per pound. He attended the subscription schools in the county, and at one time his master was the grandfather of the late J. G. Blaine, by name Gillespie.

Samuel Patterson was born December 15, 1824, on the old homestead farm where he has continued to reside. He is now a hale and hearty old gentleman, well deserving the golden opinion he wins from all who delight in his acquaintance. His farm consists of nearly four hundred acres of excellent land. Politically Mr. Patterson is a thorough Democrat, and has always given the candidates of his party a cordial support, but could never be persuaded to himself accept the nomination for any office.

SAMUEL CLUTTER, a highly esteemed and worthy citizen of Hanover township, is a son of Daniel D., whose father (William) was born in New Jersey, and came to Washington county, Penn., about 1800. William Clutter located in Morris township, this county, on Snaggon run, but very little is known concerning him, excepting that he was twice married, his first choice being a Miss Davis, and that children were born to both marriages. William Clutter was a farmer, and continued to reside in Morris township until his death. Among the children of his first wife was Daniel D. (father of Samuel).

Daniel D. Clutter was born about 1812, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., and received an education in the subscription school. He learned the trade of a shoemaker with one Jacob Sanders, and then began business for himself. He set up a shop in Somerset township, this county, on the farm of one William Crouch, and there wooed and won his life companion, Mary Underwood. She was born in 1815, in Somerset township, a daughter of Jacob Underwood, but was reared by John Leyda, of Somerset township. To this union the following children were born: John L., went to New Orleans, and while working in a lumber camp enlisted in the Fourth Virginia Infantry, was taken prisoner and died from starvation in Danville prison; Samuel is the subject of this sketch; Noadiah, of Edlingham, Ill., is connected with the Eagle Refining Company; Letitia died in early womanhood; William is a resident of Graysville, Greene Co., Penn.; Elizabeth is the widow of William Vance, of Pittsburgh, Penn.; Nancy J. is deceased. In 1855 the mother of this family died, and for his second choice Daniel D. Clutter married Agnes McAdams, a native of Scotland, who resided near McDonald, Penn., and she now lives in Washington, this county. She bore him three children, viz.: a son, deceased in infancy; Anna Mary, and Nettie (Mrs. Isaac Supler, of Cameron, W. Va.). Mr. and Mrs. Clutter first located near the Pigeon Creek church, in Washington county, and resided there for some time, he following his trade. He then went to Greene county, same State, and, purchasing 100 acres near Graysville, successfully followed farming the remainder of his days. He died July 1, 1881, and was buried in Unity cemetery. In politics he was a Whig, later on a Republican, and while no politician, he took an interest in the success of his party; he was a well-read man and had a good memory, also a very fair practical education.

Samuel Clutter was born January 25, 1840, on Pigeon creek. He was reared a farm boy, and his education was received at the common schools of the period. His parents moved to Greene county when he was a lad of but twelve or thirteen years of age, and here received his agricultural training on the farm of his father. When the Civil war broke out he enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and participated in every engagement that this well-known regiment was in, with one exception, the fight at Gettysburg, at which time he was in the hospital at Fairfax, recovering from the effects of a sunstroke. He remained there until September 1, 1863, when he joined his regiment and served till the close of the war, receiving an honorable discharge May 30, 1865. He then returned to Graysville, Greene Co., Penn., and followed agriculture on his father's farm, though the first year after his return from the army he was able to do but little work, as he suffered greatly from fever and ague, which he had contracted in the service. On November 11, 1868, he was married to Margaret Vance, who was born in 1842, a daughter of Robert Vance (deceased), late of Robinson township, Washington county. The following children have been born to the union of Samuel and Margaret (Vance) Clutter: Robert V., in the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; James M. P.; Daniel N.; a son, deceased in infancy; and Charles F. After his marriage Mr. Clutter moved to Pittsburgh, where he remained nine years in the employ of Clark & Co., transfer agents. In 1878 he moved to Washington county, locating in Hanover township, about two miles north of Florence, on the old "Huffman farm," where he has since resided, carrying on general farming and stock raising. Mr. Clutter is a very progressive citizen, and is especially interested in school matters. His children have all received a good education. He is an adherent of the Republican party, but does not devote much time to politics. Both he and wife are members of the Frankfort U. P. Church.

RANKIN FAMILY. The first ancestor of the Rankin family who settled in Washington county was William Rankin, great-grandfather of our subjects, and a native of Winchester, Va., who, about 1774, made the hazardous journey across the mountains to Washington county with his wife and family, landing October 31, 1774. He located in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, securing 1,800 acres of choice land, then a vast wilderness, which is now transformed into some of the finest farms of Washington county. Here he built a log cabin, and made such improvements as were possible, being in constant danger from the treacherous savages. But bravely and patiently he struggled on, establishing the pioneer home. After his sons had grown to manhood, one of them, James, joined a party who went to establish a colony in Kentucky. They arrived safely, but during the return trip were attacked by Indians, and James was killed, his fate being but one addition to that of the many pioneers who were practically martyrs to colonization. Mr. and Mrs. William Rankin passed the remainder of their lives in the frontier home, both dying the same year.

Samuel Rankin, the youngest son of John, was born July 18, 1769, in Winchester, Va., and came to this county in 1774. On January 7, 1796, he was married to Jane McConahay, who was born February 18, 1775, a daughter of a pioneer settler. The following children were born to their union: William, John, David, Matthew, Samuel, Stephen, James, Matilda, Abigail and Jane, of whom Jane, the only one yet living, is a resident of Burgettstown, now aged seventy years, unmarried; the others lived to adult age, and were citizens of Washington county. Samuel Rankin became a wealthy farmer, and always lived on the old home farm, which is situated about two miles northwest of Hickory. In politics he was a Democrat, and he was one of the famous "Minute-men." In religion he and his wife were members of the Union Church. He died in October, 1829, being followed by his wife July 20, 1869, in her ninety-fourth year; their remains lie in the U. P. cemetery at Hickory. Their children were as follows: William, born November 24, 1796, died January 13, 1884; John, born April 4, 1798, died in April, 1866; David, born February 15, 1800, died July 27, 1858; Matthew, born February 15, 1802, died in June, 1880; Matilda, born March 22, 1804, died in February, 1875; Samuel, born June 3, 1806, died May 27, 1834; Abigail, born in October, 1808, lived on the old homestead until November 17, 1892, when she died; James, born March 24, 1811, died July 27, 1887; Stephen, born August 20, 1813, died in February, 1877, and Jane, born February 6, 1817, living in Burgettstown.

William Rankin, eldest son of Samuel and Jane (McConahay) Rankin, was born in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and remained on his father's farm during his boyhood, in the meantime receiving a subscription-school education. On December 16, 1819, he married Miss Nancy Lyle, who was born January 22, 1801, daughter of John Lyle, of Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and their children were Elizabeth, born January 21, 1821, died February 14, 1880; Samuel, born July 19, 1823, died in September, 1845; John L., born October 16, 1826, married in 1849, Elizabeth Campbell; David, born May 30, 1829, died in September, 1845; William (a farmer of Mt. Pleasant township), born April 4, 1832; Jane, born March 24, 1834, is unmarried, living in Burgettstown; and James, born September 2, 1836, married, in 1864, Elizabeth F. Barnes, who died in 1870, and in 1880 he married Maggie E. Forsythe, of Burgettstown. Mr. Rankin, by energy and perseverance, accumulated, in his agricultural pursuits, a good property. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat, and filled several township offices. He and his wife were consistent members of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church, afterward uniting with the church at Mt. Prospect. He died January 13, 1884, having been preceded by his life companion in 1870, and both are buried in Mt. Prospect cemetery.

JOHN L. RANKIN was born in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, on the farm where the earliest pioneer of the family had settled many years before. He grew to manhood on the ancestral acres, assisting in agricultural duties, and receiving a necessarily limited country-school education. On September 6, 1849, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Campbell, who was born September 11, 1829, near Monongahela City, Penn., a daughter of William and Nancy (Randolph) Campbell, who both died when Elizabeth was yet a child; she then lived with an uncle, John Campbell, until her marriage. Children have been born to the union of John L. and Elizabeth (Campbell) Rankin as follows: William D., a practicing physician in Allegheny, Penn.; John J., in Burgettstown; Nancy C., wife of A. C. McClure, of Burgettstown; Ella Jane, died April 8, 1886; Mary Elizabeth, died October 11, 1861; Ida May and Mary L., residing with their parents; Elgie A. C., in Allegheny; Alice B., Lizzie A., James T., Maggie L., residing with their parents. After his marriage John L. Rankin located on a farm about three miles northwest of Hickory, this county, where he resided sixteen years, extensively engaged in sheep raising. In 1866 he came to Smith township, purchasing a farm one mile south of Burgettstown, where he has since remained. Since his residence in that township, his home was completely destroyed by fire, but, with characteristic pluck and energy, he at once erected a building far superior to the one which had been burned. In politics Mr. Rankin has always been a Democrat, and has served his party in various capacities in both townships. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church of Burgettstown, in which he is an elder.

WILLIAM RANKIN was born April 4, 1832, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and received his education in the district schools. On November 23, 1858, he was married, in Wells county, Ind., to Martha Riddile, a native of Trumbull county, Ohio. She was a granddaughter of Samuel and Martha (Johnston) Riddile, the former of whom died in 1825, in Trumbull county, Ohio, the latter in 1831. Andrew Riddile, father of Mrs. Rankin, was born in 1799, in this county, and in 1805 moved with his parents to Trumbull county, Ohio. In 1824 he married Matilda Taylor, who was born in November, 1798, in this county, a daughter of George Taylor, a native of Ireland, who died in 1833, in Mahoning county, Ohio. In 1840 Mr. and Mrs. Riddile settled on a farm in Wells county, Ind., where he died August 12, 1854, his wife having died February 8, 1850. Their children were: Elizabeth (deceased in 1855, wife of John Hammell, of Jay county, Ind.); Samuel L. (living in Wells county, Ind.); George T. (residing in Fort Dodge, Webster Co., Iowa); Martha (Mrs. William Rankin), and H. D. (living on the old battle-ground of Tippecanoe county, Ind.). Our subject and wife have always resided on the farm they now occupy, consisting of 160 acres of good land. He is an active Democrat, and has served his township as a member of the school board, and also as supervisor. Mr. and Mrs. Rankin attend the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church. They have two sons: W. E. (attending Duff's Commercial College at Pittsburgh, Penn.) and R. S.

JAMES RANKIN was born on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and was the youngest son of his parents. He received his education in the "Rankin school district," and has since been engaged in working on the old farm. On January 8, 1864, he married Elizabeth F. Barnes, a native of Mt. Pleasant township. She was a daughter of Francis and Mary Jane (Forester) Barnes, the former born in Virginia, the latter in Maryland, both settling in this county at an early day. Mrs. Rankin died in 1870, leaving three children, namely: William F. (married, and lived in Creede, Colo., but is now in Washington county), Clement L. (residing in Alliance, Neb.) and Mary Jane (at home). On October 5, 1880, Mr. Rankin was united in marriage with Maggie E. Forsythe, a native of Smith township, this county, daughter of William and Sarah Ann (Gilbert) Forsythe, natives of New Jersey, who settled in Smith township, this county, over seventy years ago. The Forsythe family are now limited to four sisters and one brother, of whom three sisters are living in Washington county. To the union of James and Maggie E. (Forsythe) Rankin four children have been born: Eldon Lee, Leslie, Ernest and Alvin Forsythe. Mr. Rankin votes the Democratic ticket, and has been a member of the school board. The home farm consists of 163 acres of well-cultivated land, and he keeps a fine grade of stock. The Rankin family trace their first settlement to Halloween, 1774. James Rankin and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect.

HENRY W. JONES, a prominent citizen of Union township, is a son of Robert, whose father, William, was a farmer of Shropshire, England. He was the father of four children, namely: William, Thomas, John and Robert.

Robert Jones was born near Shrewsbury, in Shropshire, England, and was apprenticed to a machinist when yet a boy. After serving his time he followed this trade, principally in Birmingham, England. He was married to Miss Vienna Harris, a resident of that place, and she bore him seven children, as follows: John, Robert, Henry W., George, Susan, Mary and Ann, of whom Henry W. and George are yet living.

Henry W. Jones was born July 26, 1826, in Shrewsbury, England, where he was reared to manhood, and learned the machinist's trade. He came to Allegheny county, Penn., in 1850, and was employed as a millwright and steam-engine builder till 1865, when he moved to Wood county, W. Va., locating near Parkersburgh. Here he followed lumbering and farming, also conducting a saw and planing mill on the place. In 1888 he came to Union township, Washington Co., Penn., and, erecting a large planing mill, engaged in contracting and building. He succeeded in securing an excellent trade, and in the spring of 1892 gave the business to his sons. He was married November 16, 1852, to Miss Catherine Croco, who was born June 15, 1831, a daughter of Henry Croco, of Allegheny county, Penn., and to this union have been born eight children: Vienna (deceased), Keffer, Frank C., Charles, Mary (deceased), Wesley, Elmer and Sydney. The six sons are all employed in the planing-mill, or contracting. The mother died April 10, 1888, since which time Mr. Jones has made his home with his son Frank C. In politics the father is a staunch Prohibitionist, and has held numerous township offices in West Virginia. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. In 1892, accompanied by his son Charles, he visited his old home in England, but found his relatives all scattered. The old country no longer seemed home to him, for truly has the poet said: "Home is where the heart is;" and the affections and interests of Mr. Jones are now on this side of the Atlantic, although he will ever cherish a fond memory of dear old England.

ROBERT SAMPLE is a well-known resident of the borough of Washington. He is of Irish descent, his grandparents having lived and died in "Old Erin."

David Sample, his father, was born in 1801, in County Donegal, Ireland, and when about twenty years of age immigrated to America. He first located in Ohio county, W. Va., where he was united in marriage with Mary Sample, also a native of County Donegal. In 1835 they came to West Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., and in 1859 purchased and moved upon a farm in Donegal township, same county. Their children were Robert, John (deceased), and Joseph (a resident of Donegal township). The mother died January 22, 1867, at the age of seventy-three years, and August 11, 1879, the father was laid by her side. They were members of the West Alexander Presbyterian Church.

Robert Sample, whose name introduces this memoir, was born October 14, 1827, in Ohio county, W. Va., and when eight years old came with his parents to West Finley township, this county. On January 1, 1857, he was united in marriage with Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Burns, but she died July 19, 1859, leaving one daughter, Mary Catherine (now the wife of N. R. Tannehill, of Cecil township, Washington county). For his second wife Mr. Sample married on May 6, 1868, Miss Nancy Tannehill, who bore him two children, Nancy and David R. In 1872 our subject came to Washington, and in 1871 built his present residence on Highland avenue, having rented his farm in Donegal township. He has assisted in the erection of many of the dwellings in the town, and in 1876 was awarded the contract for building the crematory there. Mr. Sample began life a poor boy, and by industry, energy and perseverance has achieved an enviable success. In politics he is a member of the Democratic party, in religion a Presbyterian.

JAMES RONEY, son of James and Jane (McWhirter) Roney, was born near Canonsburg, August 17, 1813, on the farm now owned by his daughter, Mrs. G. M. Smith. The old farm has been the home and visiting place of seven generations. His parents first settled in South Carolina, where, tradition says, they prospered. Their principles being so antagonistic to the institution of human slavery, they left their home in the South and migrated to western Pennsylvania. Here they built a house (still standing) from logs cut in the forest and hewn into shape by the immediate ancestors of James Roney. His parents were most exemplary members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church—better known as the Old Side Covenanters.

He had four brothers and four sisters, namely: Moses, William, John, and one who died in infancy; Jane, Margaret, Rebecca and Sarah. Moses, in 1818, entered Canonsburg Academy, and graduated with first honors from Jefferson College in 1823. He studied theology in Coldenham, N. Y., under the direction of Rev. Dr. J. R. Wilson, and was licensed by the Pittsburgh Presbytery, June 8, 1829. He was ordained and installed pastor of the Newburg, N. Y., congregation, afterward accepted the presidency of Westminster College, where he continued to labor until his death. He was one of the most influential and eloquent ministers of the Covenanters Church. On one occasion he was to preach at the old house, and, as the custom was at that time, he preached out of doors. It has been said that every word was distinctly heard half a mile distant. He was married to Miss Elizabeth F. Beattie, of Coldenham, N. Y., whose mother was descended from the Belknap family of that region. William was married to Lydia Thomas, of North Strabane township. He resided on his farm near Haneytown, Marshall county, W. Va. John married Margaret George, of near Hickory, Washington county; he owns and lives on a farm near Claysville. Margaret married John George, of Venice, Washington Co., Penn.; Jane married Isaac E. McKenry, of Allegheny, Penn., where they lived for a number of years, then moved to near Crawfordsville, Iowa; Rebecca and Sarah died in early girlhood at the home of their parents. At this date (1893) only two of the family survive, namely: John Roney and Jane McKenry.

James Roney married, March 4, 1844, Elizabeth, daughter of James Gibson. She bore him two daughters and one son, namely: Grizella Margaret, born May 27, 1845; Moses Gibson, born June 28, 1854 (deceased when ten months old); Jane Elizabeth, born September 23, 1860, died August 12, 1877. Grizella Margaret Roney, in early girlhood, was married to William M. Smith; two daughters were born to this marriage: Elizabeth Jane, wife of David John Sterling (has two children—Hugh Samuel and Margaret Roney), and Maggie Grizella, living at home with her mother. Mrs. Smith owns valuable property in Canonsburg, where she now resides. D. J. Sterling superintends the farm of Mrs. Smith, and operates in oil. The place is well improved and contains three gas wells, and yields a good income. Mrs. Smith and daughter, Maggie, are members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Miller's Run, near Venice. Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Sterling are members of the United Presbyterian Church of Ingram.

The Roney family have always been noted for their hospitality and kindly disposition. James Roney died of apoplexy November 4, 1884, and was interred in the Hill Church burying ground. His widow, who had suffered from the effects of a paralytic stroke for five years, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. G. M. Smith, July 24, 1888, and was laid by the side of her husband.

[For further information of the ancestors of the said James Roney, see page 982 of "The History of Washington County, Penn.," edited by Boyd Crumrine, 1882.

D J. McADAM, professor of mathematics in Washington and Jefferson College, is a native of the Buckeye State, born August 2, 1843, in Moorefield township, Harrison county, a son of John and Susan (Dunlap) McAdam, worthy farming people of that township; the latter a daughter of John and Nancy Dunlap, of Harrison county. They were the parents of children as follows: Nancy, Eliza and Mary (Mrs. John Compher), deceased; Sarah, Mrs. John Lewis; Rebecca, Mrs. Samuel Willoughby; George; D. J. and Margaret (Mrs. James Glasgow). The mother of this family departed this life in 1849, and for his second wife Mr. McAdam married, in 1851, Harriet Linn, of Harrison county, Ohio, by whom there was no issue. Mr. McAdam died in 1852; he had been a consistent member of the Union Church from his youth up, and for some years was an elder in the same; politically he was a straight Democrat, socially a man of public spirit and enterprise, popular and generally respected.

D. J. McAdam was reared to farm work, his education being had at the common schools of his native township, where he proved an apt and diligent scholar and from early life he evinced a strong penchant for study and literature. After leaving school, he spent one year in Franklin College, and then entered Washington and Jefferson College, from which he graduated with honor in 1868. His education being now completed, he assumed the role of educator, his first school being at Harlem Springs, Carroll Co., Ohio, whence, after a year he came to Canonsburg, this county, in which town he remained one year, in the capacity of tutor. He then moved to Cadiz, Ohio, and entered the office of Lawyer Estep, with whom he remained one year, at the end of which time he was appointed principal of the schools of Carrollton, Ohio, his incumbency covering three years; the public schools at that place had just been opened, and the work of grading, by virtue of his position, fell on him. In 1873 our subject accepted the chair of Latin in Washington and Jefferson College, but at the end of one year was transferred to the chair of mathematics, in the same college, which he now fills.

On July 8, 1875, Prof. McAdam was married to Kate, daughter of Capt. Alexander Wishart, of Washington, Penn., and four children were the result of this union, as follows: Alexander (deceased), Dunlap, John and Kate. His wife died May 8, 1882. Our subject married in May, 1888, Rebecca, daughter of John D. Braden, and two children have come to further bless their home—Braden and George. Prof. McAdam, in his political associations, is an ardent Democrat, and in religion is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington.

WILHELM H. GUNDLACH was born in Germany September 23, 1861, a son of Henry and Caroline Gundlach, also natives of the Fatherland, the father born in 1806, and died in 1867 at the age of sixty-one years. They were the parents of four sons—Wilhelm H., Henry, Frederick and Charley—and three daughters—Hannah, Minnie and another whose name is not recorded—all yet living in Germany, except Wilhelm H. and Charley, the latter of whom is now a resident of this county, near Hickory.

Wilhelm H. Gundlach received his education in the public schools of his native land, learning to read from text books common in use at that time in Germany—the Bible and the catechism. In 1881 he immigrated to America, finally locating in Hopewell township, Washington Co., Penn., where he resided six years, at the end of which time he moved to the farm in West Bethlehem township, containing 118 acres of prime land, where he passed the remainder of his life. On April 19, 1888, he was married to Caroline, daughter of Henry A. and Sophia Gundlach, who were the parents of three sons—Solomon H., Charley A., and Earnest L.—and three daughters—Caroline (married to Wilhelm H. Gundlach), Louisa A. (married July 23, 1891, to Emmor Ames; they have one child Elsie Pearl, born February 20, 1892), and Minnie S. Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Gundlach are members of the Lutheran Church in West Bethlehem township; for twenty-seven years they have been residents of Washington county. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilhelm H. Gundlach were born three children, as follows: Sophia Winnett, born January 10, 1889; Louisa A., born October 5, 1890, died April 5, 1891, and Henry Wilhelm Alfred, born June 5, 1892. The father of these little ones died January 29, 1893, aged thirty-two years. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, as is his grief-stricken widow.

MRS. MARGARET McCREADY, one of the oldest settlers, and most highly esteemed in the community where she resides, is a granddaughter of John Boyd, who was born in Ireland about the middle of the eighteenth century, and coming to America in early manhood settled near West Middletown, Hopewell township, this county. Soon after his arrival in Pennsylvania, he was united in marriage with Miss Martha Mathon, who bore him four sons—John, James, Thomas and Robert—and five daughters—Margaret, Nancy, Mary, Rachel and Sarah. He was a Democrat, and a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Robert Boyd, father of Mrs. McCready, was born

William M. Cready

January 21, 1788, on the home farm near West Middletown, Hopewell township. The Indians were so hostile at that time that the family betook themselves to a more thickly populated district in Beaver county, Penn., where they remained some time. After the Indians had left the country, the family returned to this county, locating in Hanover township, where Robert grew to manhood, and was married to Miss Catherine McCausland, also a resident of that township. Nine children were born to their union, of whom four are yet living: George, Presley, Martha and Margaret. In his politics he was a staunch Democrat.

Margaret Boyd was born August 18, 1822, on the farm in Hanover township. Her childhood and early womanhood were passed in the pioneer home, then surrounded by various wild animals, as many as eight deer being often seen in one group. On February 26, 1857, she became the wife of William McCready, a son of Robert McCready, and now resides in Jefferson township.

Robert McCready, father of William, was born in Scotland, March 28, 1752, and in 1772 immigrated to America, first locating in the State of New Jersey. He then went to York county, Penn., teaching school there until the Revolution, when he entered a York county battalion, serving several months in the "Flying Camp" Division under Washington. In 1776 he left the service, and came to Washington county, Penn., locating on a tract of 332 acres in Jefferson township. Soon afterward he was united in marriage with Miss Anna Levins, a lady of Irish descent, who bore him nine children, as follows: David, Robert, William, John, Joseph, Mary, Nancy, and two deceased. He died August 10, 1846.

William McCready was born August 1, 1797, on the home farm in Jefferson township, and was reared to agricultural pursuits, purchasing the old place after the death of his father. He was married, as already stated, to Margaret Boyd, who bore him one son, Robert, April 7, 1858, who was married May 6, 1880, to Nancy E. Cassidy, daughter of William Cassidy; he lives on the home place, and, like his father and grandfather before him, votes the Democratic ticket. William McCready died November 6, 1860, leaving over 300 acres of fine land to his heirs. He was a typical self-made man, liberal in thought and action, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him.

Joseph McCready, a nephew of William McCready, was born and reared in Columbiana county, Ohio, and was there married to Martha Campbell, a native of the same county. She bore him children as follows: James, Joseph, Robert, Cynthia and Margaret. For his second wife he was married to Catherine Boyd, a sister of Mrs. Margaret McCready, and the names of the children of this union are Lizzie C., Rilla and George. Mr. McCready was a Republican and a Presbyterian. He and his wife are both now deceased.

JAMES A. McILVAINE, one of the enterprising and prominent citizens of Mt. Pleasant township, is a native of the same, born December 22, 1840, on the home farm. His grandfather, Greer McIlvaine, was of Irish descent, and a native of Lancaster county, Penn., where he was married to Elizabeth Morrow, who was born in the same county. The young couple came to Washington county in an early day, accompanied by a brother, George McIlvaine. On May 20, 1788, Greer secured 407 acres of land in Somerset township, which was surveyed to him February 11, 1789, and afterward divided with his brother. Greer and Elizabeth McIlvaine were members of the Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek. Their children were Greer, John, Guyan, George, William, Andrew, Margaret, Mary, Ruth, Catherine, Elizabeth, Esther, Ann and Eleanor.

Guyan McIlvaine was born in 1792, in Somerset township, on the home farm, where his early years were passed. He was united in marriage with Jane Ferguson, a native of Somerset township, who bore him four children: Lydia (widow of John Phillips), living in Greene county, Penn.; William Greer (deceased in 1882, at Memphis, Tenn.), was married in Vicksburg; Robert F., residing in Rochester, Beaver Co., Penn.; and John M., living in Mt. Pleasant township. Mrs. McIlvaine died in 1823, and in 1830 Guyan McIlvaine was married to Jane Bratton, a native of Lancaster county, Penn., and they settled in Mt. Pleasant township, on the home farm. The following children were born to their union: Harvey (residing in Kansas), Anna Eliza (married to William M. Campbell, of Cross Creek township), Joseph Lawrence (an editor, of New Philadelphia, Ohio), Boyd (a resident of Illinois), Belle Jane (of Mt. Pleasant township), James A., Mary Esther and Martha Ellen (Mrs. Harper Simanton, of Mt. Pleasant township). This family is a remarkable one. The twelve children all grew to maturity; all married and have families of their own, except two, and all are yet living but the oldest son, who died in 1882. Mr. McIlvaine was first a Whig, then a Know-nothing, and afterward a Republican. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect. He died in 1868, having been preceded by his wife in 1860.

James A. McIlvaine, a son of Guyan and Jane (Bratton) McIlvaine, was born on his father's farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and attended the schools of the neighborhood. On November 19, 1868, he was united in marriage with Martha A. McBurney, daughter of John and Jane (Keys) McBurney, natives and lifelong residents of Washington county. After his marriage James A. McIlvaine settled on the farm of 146 acres, where he was born and has always lived, and has since followed agricultural pursuits. Six children have been born to this couple, viz.: Enlalie (teaching in Hickory, this county), J. C., Mamie (teaching in Hopewell township, Washington county), Nettie, Willie A. and Bessie. Mr. and Mrs. McIlvaine are members of Mt. Pleasant United Presbyterian Church, at Hickory. He is actively interested in education, being a member of the school board of Mt. Pleasant township. He takes quite an interest in politics, voting with the Republican party.

EBENEZER BROWNLEE (deceased), in his lifetime one of the prosperous farmers and successful business men of the county, was a grandson of William Brownlee, Sr., who in an early day came to Washington county from his native land, Scotland, and made a settlement in Franklin township about four miles south of the borough of Washington. He here married Margaret Lehman, by whom there were several children, and of them, William, Jr., born October 13, 1782, in Franklin township, this county, became the father of the subject of this sketch.

William Brownlee, Jr., in his early life was a regular pioneer farmer boy, and his school training, a somewhat primitive one, was most limited. On November 17, 1814, he was married to Jean Carson, who was born March 22, 1791, and the results of this union were eight children, of whom Ebenezer, the subject of this sketch, was born April 2, 1825, in West Finley township, Washington Co., Penn. The father died March 24, 1846, the mother, January 23, 1844.

Early in life Ebenezer Brownlee learned the trade of tanner at Good Intent, West Finley township, which he followed, however, only a short time, as he returned to the home farm and remained with his parents during the rest of their lifetime. On November 25, 1847, he was united in marriage with Eliza Davidson, who was born March 12, 1824, in West Finley township, a daughter of James Davidson, a native of the county, of Irish descent, born in 1782 near West Brownsville. To the union of Ebenezer and Eliza (Davidson) Brownlee there came the following named children: Robert D., born November 13, 1849, now in Otoe county, Neb., where he carries on stock dealing; George, born August 16, 1851, also in Otoe county, a farmer; James C., born February 4, 1854, a physician in Kansas City, Mo.; John, born February 28, 1856, died May 21, 1890; Samuel, born October 27, 1858; and Jennie, born March 23, 1863, an intelligent and cultured young lady. After his marriage Mr. Brownlee lived five years in East Finley township, on Robinson's fork of Wheeling creek; then during the subsequent five years had his residence in West Finley township, on the Martin Armstrong place; thence moved to Donegal township, on the William McMurray farm which he had purchased, and which is situated about half a mile south of West Alexander. Here he continued to reside until his death, which occurred December 14, 1888. He was very successful in all his undertakings, and accumulated considerable valuable property. He was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, and in politics he was a staunch Republican, one of the influential advisers of the party. He was a strong Abolitionist, a great friend to the negro. His widow departed this life July 14, 1892.

JF. McCLAY, one of the progressive and industrious young farmers of Canton township, is a native of the same, born May 24, 1859. He is a grandson of Samuel McClay who emigrated from Ireland to America at an early date, finally locating in Washington county, where his children were born.

David McClay, father of subject, was born June 11, 1811, near the home farm in Canton township, this county, and there passed his youth, where long hours of toil, brightened with but little recreation, was the rule of life. His early education was much neglected, the only problem which he had leisure or opportunity to solve being how to maintain an existence. Thus, amid the wilds of the forest, educated in the rough but thorough school of nature, and surrounded by all the privations of pioneer life, was formed the character of the man who was destined to be a leader among his associates. From the stern teacher, experience, he learned hard lessons, which in after life developed into priceless habits of economy and industry that made his future a success. Notwithstanding the lack of school training Mr. McClay became an earnest reader, and with the aid of keen observation soon overcame the deficiencies of his early youth. On January 31, 1840, he was united in marriage with Margaret McElroy, whose family were among the earlier settlers of the county. After their marriage the young couple settled on the farm which is the present home of their son, J. F. It was then in a rude state of cultivation, but has since been improved until it is now one of the finest places in the township. Mr. and Mrs. McClay had children as follows: James (deceased in infancy); James M. (who enlisted in Company B, First West Virginia Cavalry, and died February 25, 1862, from disease contracted in the service); William A.; Nannie (deceased); Samuel; David (deceased).

and J. F. Mr. McClay was a Republican and an active worker in the party, and was elected to the same office for three terms, and was serving in that capacity at the time of his death. In 1855 he united with the Christian Church at West Middletown, which was under the ministry of Isaac Everett, but eventually he became a member of the Christian Church at Washington. He owned 400 acres of land at the time of his death, which occurred April 5, 1887.

J. F. McClay spent his early youth upon the farm, securing his education at the common schools. On November 6, 1879, he married Sarah E. Fergus, daughter of John Fergus, of Washington county, and they reared the following family: Charles G., Nannie B., John F. and Thomas M. Since his marriage Mr. McClay has continued to remain on the home farm, which he now owns. He is a promising young man, and is always interested in any enterprise tending to the advancement of the community. He is a valued member of the Republican party. Both he and his wife are members of the Christian Church at Washington.

JAMES KELLY (deceased) was a son of William Kelly, who was born in Ireland and received a good common-school education. William Kelly was married to Martha McCourtney, who bore him the following children: Mary (Mrs. Richard Mounts), Jane (wife of John Mounts), Sarah (Mrs. Robert Marshall), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Montgomery), John and James (all of whom are now deceased). After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Kelly immigrated to America, locating in Shippensburg, Penn., where he died November 1, 1779, and was followed to the grave by his wife January 2, 1827. The sons, John and James, then moved to Washington county, Penn., where they invested extensively in farm land.

James Kelly was born March 1, 1779, in Shippensburg, Penn., and passed his boyhood on his father's farm. He received a good education, and after removing to Washington county was elected to several offices of trust, the duties of which he filled to the satisfaction of all. He was an enthusiastic and prominent member of the Democratic party. He married Catherine, daughter of Andrew and Mary (Duncan) Rogers, and their children were Martha, Mary, Catherine, Elizabeth, Sarah A., Ellen, William, Jackson and James. Of the above family the living members are Jackson (living in Pittsburgh, Penn.), Catherine and Sarah A. (wife of John W. Exline, living on the old home farm on the National pike in Buffalo township), Ellen (wife of James C. Stewart, of Buffalo township) and Martha (who died May 18, 1891, at the age of seventy years).

HENRY H. LAMB is a prominent and successful merchant of West Alexander. His ancestors were natives of Virginia, his grandfather, John Lamb, having passed his entire life in that State, where he was married. John Lamb had one son, John (the father of our subject). He was a leading Democrat in politics, and in religious faith a prominent member of the Dunkard Church.

John Lamb, only child of John Lamb, was born in Virginia, and was married in his native State to Mary (daughter of John Sponoggle) who bore him children as follows: William (killed at the battle of Gettysburg), Nathaniel, David, Ambrose (deceased), John D., Margaret (Mrs. Noel Whitecotton) and Henry H. Mr. Lamb enlisted in the First Regiment of the Southern army, and served under the gallant General Lee throughout the entire war. Politically he has always been a Democrat, and has taken an active interest in politics.

Henry H. Lamb was born on August 12, 1864, in Virginia, and passed his youth in Virginia and West Virginia. On October 11, 1882, he was united in marriage with Mary B., an adopted daughter of Benjamin Leonard Craven, whose father (John Craven) was born in Washington county, Penn., of German parents. He was married to Sarah Leonard, a resident of the same county, and to them were born the following children: Joshua, Regin, Jacob, Benjamin, John, William, Phoebe, Sarah, Mary and Nancy.

Benjamin Leonard Craven was born in December, 1811, near Beallsville, Penn., and received his early education in the schools of that neighborhood. At the age of eighteen years he commenced life for himself by driving stage from Cumberland to Wheeling, and followed this occupation for years, when he opened a general store in Taylors-town, this county, and some years later moved to Claysville. In 1840 he came to West Alexander, where he continued in business thirty years, retiring in 1870. He was first married to Jemima Mitchell, who bore him one son, David, who died in youth. For his second wife he was married to Jane McConahey, of Buffalo township. He was a successful business man, and dealt largely in wool and general produce, obtaining a competence by his own exertions. In politics he was an active Democrat, and served as postmaster several years. He was a member and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church, in which he filled the office of trustee many years. On September 25, 1883, he passed away, and was buried in the cemetery at West Alexander. He was a warm friend of education, taking an active part in the progress of the schools.

To the union of Henry H. and Mary B. (Craven) Lamb have been born three children: Benjamin Leonard, Henry Roy and Lawrence C. Mr. Lamb has been engaged in farming and stock raising. In April, 1891, he entered mercantile business, and is now conducting a general store. Politically he is a Republican.

ROBERT W. MUNNELL was born May 10, 1828, in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. He is of Irish descent, his grandfather, John Munnell, having been born and reared in Ireland, where he was married to a Miss Wallace, who bore him the following named children: Hugh, John, Thomas, Elizabeth (Mrs. Scott), Mrs. Hand and Samuel. Mr. Munnell came to Washington county among the earliest settlers, and located in South Strabane township. In political life he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Samuel Munnell was born in 1795 in South Strabane township, Washington county, and passed his early life on the home farm. He was married to Nancy McQuiston, of Butler county, Penn., and they immediately settled on the farm place, where their lives were passed. Their children were Isabella, John (deceased), Robert W., Sarah J., Samuel, Thomas (deceased), Catherine E. (Mrs. John Herron), William (deceased), James, Mary E. (Mrs. Adam Hall) and Charles (deceased). Mr. Munnell always followed the vocations of agriculture and stock raising. In politics he was a Democrat, taking an active interest in public matters. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. Samuel Munnell passed away December 3, 1881, and was followed to the grave by his widow March 26, 1891.

Robert W. Munnell passed his early life on the farm in South Strabane township, and gained his first educational knowledge in an abandoned "still-house," which was on the home place, and had been converted into a "hall of learning" for the benefit of the ambitious urchins. On November 9, 1860, he was married to Margaret A., daughter of Joseph Herron, and the young people first settled on a farm in South Strabane township, where they remained until 1873, when Mr. Munnell moved to his present home. Three children have been born to them: Samuel W., Thomas H. and John H. Of these, Samuel W. was, on May 28, 1891, married to Adda, daughter of John J. Gilbert, of New Stark, Hancock Co., Ohio, who died June 19, 1892. Mr. Munnell is an energetic citizen, and in politics is a Democrat. He is a member of the Chartiers Presbyterian Church, and is now serving as an elder.

John Munnell (deceased brother of Robert W.) passed his boyhood on the home farm, and on March 26, 1851, was married to Susan J. Blackly, of Gettysburg, Penn., who bore him children as follows: Nancy J., Mary E. (wife of Samuel Hunnell), Anna B., James W., Charles E. (deceased), Robert and John W. On December 3, 1869, Mr. Munnell married for his second wife Mary S., daughter of Robert McFerren, of Beaver county, Penn. Mr. Munnell was a merchant in Waynesburgh, Greene county. In politics he was a Democrat until the Civil war, and then became an ardent advocate of the Republican principles. He died January 12, 1889, a member of the Presbyterian Church at Waynesburgh, Greene county.

HENRY McDONOUGH, a prominent agriculturist of Somerset township, this county, is a native of the same. His grandfather, Henry McDonough, was a native of Ireland, and came to Pennsylvania in an early day. He followed the blacksmith's trade in connection with farming and distilling, carrying on an extensive distillery, although a strict member of the Baptist Church, of which he was an elder for several years. Politically he was a Republican. He died in 1869, in Washington county, Penn. The maternal grandfather of our subject, Robert Mahan, came across the mountains in the seventeenth century, and settled in Washington county, Penn., where he helped to erect a log church where the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian church is now standing. The family afterward moved to Ohio. He was an active worker in the Democratic party, serving as a representative of Washington county in the State Legislature. He and his wife died in Medina county, Ohio, the former having passed away in his ninetyeth year.

Henry McDonough was born in 1797, and reared on a farm near Vanceville, Washington Co., Penn., receiving a common school education. He was united in marriage with Margaret Mahan, who bore him children as follows: Henry (whose name opens this sketch), Robert and David (in Marshall county, Ill.), Joseph (farming in Monroe county, Ill.), Elizabeth (wife of Samuel Hill, a farmer of Benton county, Iowa), Mary, John and James, the latter three of whom are deceased. Mr. McDonough voted the Republican ticket, and served Somerset township as justice of the peace for several years. He died in 1871, having been preceded to the grave in 1867 by his wife. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church.

Henry McDonough was born January 5, 1831, and grew to manhood on the home farm, attending the district schools during his boyhood. On November 6, 1851, he was united in marriage with Mary Smith, who was born in 1829, in Washington county, Penn., daughter of John and Jane (Morton) Smith. To the union of Henry and Mary (Smith) McDonough four children were born, viz.:

John S., born October 30, 1852 (deceased October 2, 1885); Jane (married on December 13, 1889, to Theodore Burgan, a farmer of Somerset township, this county), born in December, 1858; and two that died in infancy. The mother was a member of the Disciple Church. She died August 4, 1864, and on November 8, 1866, Mr. McDonough made choice of a second wife in the person of Elmira Morton, who was born June 27, 1839, in Washington county, Penn., daughter of James and Elmira (Springer) Morton. To this union three children have been born as follows: Elizabeth (married to James Sprows, a farmer of Fallowfield township, this county), born November 28, 1867; James H. (deceased), born June 2, 1874; and Ida (living at home), born August 7, 1876. Mr. McDonough is a Republican, and has served his township as auditor, assessor and school director. He owns a good and well-cultivated farm, consisting of 160 acres. He and his wife are members of the Disciple Church.

ISAAC VAN VOORHIS, one of the most prominent agriculturists and stockmen of Washington county, is a son of Daniel Van Voorhis, whose father was also named Daniel. The grandfather was born and reared in Holland, choosing from early boyhood "a life on the ocean wave." He was a sailor for twenty-four years, being captain of an Atlantic vessel during the latter part of that time. Finally tiring of the sea, he located in Long Island, N. Y., purposing to there make a permanent home; but his roving disposition led him farther west, and he finally located in Washington county, Penn., on the tract of land in Carroll township where Monongahela now stands, and here passed the best of his life.

Daniel Van Voorhis, father of subject, was born and reared on the farm in Carroll township, this county. Here he erected a gristmill, still-house and sawmill, and employed a large number of hands. After the death of his father he took charge of the business, which had rapidly increased, virtually being the foundation of Monongahela City. In early life Daniel Van Voorhis was married to Mary, daughter of Henry Fry, who had married Miss Spears, a sister of the well-known divine, Henry Spears. To Daniel and Mary (Fry) Van Voorhis the following children were born: Newton (deceased); L. G., a resident of Morgantown, Penn.; Abraham (deceased); John (living in Kansas); Isaac (of whom further mention is made); Daniel (deceased); Jerome (living in Iowa); Harvey (residing in Spearville, Kans.); Sarah (Mrs. Cooper, living in Nottingham township, this county); Christina (Mrs. Fry, living in Finleyville, Penn.), and Mary (married to Frank Bentley, of Monongahela, Penn.). The mother died at the patriarchal age of ninety-five years, and when the father passed away he left 1,000 acres of land, which in his active years he had cleared, cultivated and planted to corn.

Isaac Van Voorhis was born March 27, 1823, in Carroll township, this county, near the headwaters of Pigeon creek. He attended the common school until about sixteen years of age, when he was given entire charge of the stock on his father's immense farm. Before assuming the duties of this position, he started on a trip to Kentucky, intending to purchase cattle, but finding nothing to suit him in the "Blue-Grass region" he journeyed northwest to Ohio, and there purchased 150 head of stock. On his return home, when about half way, the boy was met by his father and brother Jerome, who took charge of the herd, giving our young "cow boy" instructions to "face about" and purchase another lot. Accordingly he made a second successful trip, to the satisfaction and delight of the family, who had been half doubtful of the result of the experiment. The youthful drover afterward made frequent western trips, soon accumulating a snug sum of money. He was the first to drive cattle to the East, seventy-five miles below St. Louis. He would start on horseback from the "Big Muddy," swimming the rivers, and on one occasion, on crossing the Muskingum, which was full of floating ice, his cattle sank in a quick sand, and he himself had a narrow escape from drowning. In 1846 he left the paternal roof, and began business for himself by investing in land in Somerset township, this county. About this time he received $3,000 as his portion of his father's estate, and then began a career almost unparalleled for unflinching business successes. His life has been devoted to rearing, fattening and dealing in stock. In boyhood he earned the first horse he ever owned by splitting rails for 50 cents a hundred. It is needless to add that since the proud day when he received the deserved reward for blistered hands and aching limbs, Isaac Van Voorhis has never been without a good horse. He has reared and broken many of high breed and speed, that have since made good record, one of the most valuable being "Gray Hawk," which he sold for $3,000 to his brother Harvey, a resident of Kansas. His real estate now consists of 800 acres of very valuable land, upon which is erected one of the finest houses in Washington county. It is a matter of special interest that this home is situated on the highest point between the Alleghany Mountains and the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Van Voorhis also owns a large farm near Chicago, Ill., which he stocks with western cattle. The path to success is never easy, although it may seem so to the admiring or envious on-looker; and, in the case of Mr. Van Voorhis, many hardships were endured which space forbids us to here enumerate, and many obstacles overcome, ere he reached the pinnacle which he now occupies. He has visited nearly every State in the Union, and in his travels has swam every river between the Alleghanies and the Mississippi river.

On August 26, 1846, our subject was married to Elmira, daughter of Thomas Hopkins, whose ancestors were an old and prominent family of Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Van Voorhis have been blessed with the following children: Samuel (deceased); Thomas and Frank (twins), Frank (deceased); Thomas (living); Van Emer (living at home); Selina (wife of Henry Huffman, a resident of West Bethlehem township); Lizzie (Mrs. Grootman, living in Pittsburgh, Penn., where her husband is engaged in the oil and soap business); and Charlie (yet living at home).

In addition to what has been previously stated in regard to the reputation of Mr. Van Voorhis as a stockman, he also enjoys the enviable distinction of having taken a greater number of prizes for stock at the county fair than any other farmer of Washington county. He breeds Hambletonian horses, Short-horn cattle and Poland China pigs. Politically he votes the Republican ticket, but is averse to holding office, although he was induced to serve as school director for twelve years. His wife is a member of the Baptist Church. Among the celebrated men who have visited at his home were Gen. Grant and James G. Blaine.

JOHAN C. McKEAN is a son of Robert McKean, whose father, William McKean, was born and reared in Kirkeudbrightshire, Scotland. William McKean received his early education in the country schools of his native land, and was there married to Mary, daughter of William Brown, whose family had been natives of Kirkeudbrightshire for over two hundred years. Mr. and Mrs. McKean passed their lives on the home farm in Scotland, where the following children were born to them and reared: John, a sea captain, was lost in a wreck in 1837; Mary, wife of Alexander Magill; William, a farmer of Mansfield, Penn.; James, a merchant tailor, of Canada Corners, Mich.; Joseph, living on the old home place in Scotland; Elizabeth, deceased in youth; Andrew, living in Scotland; Robert and Samuel, residing in Fayette county, Penn. The father was a member of the Established Church of Scotland.

Robert McKean was born March 7, 1827, on the home place in Kirkeudbrightshire, Scotland, and in boyhood attended the schools of his native parish, also assisted in the duties of the farm. On January 1, 1849, he married Janet Caird, who was born at New Abbey, Scotland, a daughter of James Caird, a merchant and native of the same place, and a member of the Established Church. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Caird were as follows: Janet, wife of Robert McKean; John; Barbara, wife of Andrew Irving; Agnes, married to a Mr. Thompson; James; William; Mary, and two whose names are unknown. Mr. and Mrs. McKean resided on a farm near New Abbey for about one year after their marriage, and then sailed for America. After a voyage of thirty days they landed, in July, 1850, in New York; thence proceeded to Newburgh, where they spent a few months, from there going to Philadelphia, and then by rail to Johnstown, thence by canal to Pittsburgh, finally arriving in Allegheny City. In 1851 they moved to a place about six miles out, on the Steubenville pike, on Chartiers creek, where he followed gardening about six years, also working part of the time for 25 cents a day. He then passed one year in Mansfield, Penn., and was afterward engaged for six years in farming and gardening on a place near that town. In 1865 he purchased and moved upon 220 acres at Lock No. 4 (now Charleroi) Washington Co., Penn., having paid for this land with the proceeds of years of arduous labor. Politically he is actively identified with the interests of the Republican party, and in religion he and his family are members of the U. P. Church. He gives liberally of his means to all worthy enterprises. His children have been as follows: James, postmaster at Pittsburgh; William, deceased in youth; John C.; William; Andrew; Agnes; Robert, and Mary E., wife of Charles Thompson.

John C. McKean was born October 18, 1854, and reared near Mansfield, Penn., and worked on the home place during boyhood. He then followed farming and gardening for some years, afterward purchasing a half interest in a packet running from Lock No. 4 to Brownsville. He conducted that business about nine months, then resumed the occupation of a gardener and fruit raiser, shipping his products to Pittsburgh, and successfully continued in the work about nine years. On March 4, 1877, he was united in marriage with Lusettie B., daughter of W. P. Spakeman, a resident of Pittsburgh, Penn., and she has borne him the following children: Lillie B., Alice K., Nettie G., Charles S., Mary E. (deceased), and James S. Mr. McKean superintended the excavating and cementing of the Glass Works plant, his work proving eminently satisfactory. In politics he is a loyal Republican, and in 1891 he was appointed postmaster at Charleroi, receiving his commission in 1892. In religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He owns about twenty acres of the original plat of Charleroi. Mr. McKean is a very popular and useful citizen, actively interested in all public improvements.

JOHN REED is one of the oldest citizens of West Alexander, and was born August 24, 1815, in East Finley township, this county, a son of James Reed, whose father, William Reed, was reared in Pennsylvania. When a young man William Reed was married to Margaret Linn, who lived near Gettysburg, and their children were John, William, David, Andrew, Samuel, Ann, Margaret, Jane, Sarah, Elizabeth, Mary and James. Mr. Reed came to Washington county in the latter part of the eighteenth century, locating near the village of Buffalo, on a farm which he and his sons improved and cultivated. He was a member of the Whig party, and in religion was connected with the Presbyterian Church.

James Reed was born September 28, 1784, near Gettysburg, Penn., and was reared in Buffalo township, Washington county, whither his parents moved when he was a child. In 1812 he was married to Sarah, daughter of John McWilliams, an early resident of the county, and soon after his marriage Mr. Reed purchased a farm in East Finley township, this county, where he made a permanent home, and had the following children: William, born September 24, 1813; John, subject of this sketch; Jane, born July 24, 1817; Margaret, born July 24, 1820; and Hannah, born March 3, 1823. Mr. Reed was a successful man, and well deserved his prosperity. In politics he was originally a Whig, and afterward became a member of the Democratic party. He was a member of the Upper Ten Mile Church at Prosperity, of which he was an elder. He died February 25, 1845, having been preceded by his wife March 11, 1839, and both are buried at Prosperity.

John Reed received his education at the subscription schools of East Finley township. On February 20, 1844, he was married to Jane, daughter of John Burns, a native of West Finley township, born June 13, 1799. John Burns was a son of Alexander Burns, who was born in 1739, in Ireland, and when a young man immigrated to America, settling in Washington county, Penn. He was united in marriage with Jane Carroll, of East Finley township, who bore him children as follows: James, born July 21, 1786; Alexander, born January 13, 1789; Robert, born March 28, 1791; Mary, born October 17, 1793; Nancy, born August 28, 1796; John, born June 13, 1799; and William, born October 3, 1803. Mr. Burns was a soldier in the Indian war, also in the war of 1812, and was captured by the Indians. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religious views a member of the society known as Dissenters. His son, John Burns, was married to Martha Carroll, and their children were Jane (Mrs. John Reed); Robert C., who married Margaretta, a daughter of Rev. Mr. Anderson, and by her had two children: one that died in infancy, and Mary L., wife of Cyrus Craig, of Cambridge, Ohio (Robert C. died at the age of twenty-eight years); and Mary (Mrs. Alexander Gunn). John Burns was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of and elder in the United Presbyterian Church.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. John Reed remained on the home place ten years, and then moved to Burnsville, West Finley township, where they remained fifteen years, thence removing to Dallas, W. Va., where they lived two years. Mr. and Mrs. Reed have had the following children: James Linn, John B. (deceased), Sarah Martha (Mrs. William Barry), Robert J. and Mary L. (the latter died at the age of three years). Mr. Reed has ever been much interested in educational matters, and general public topics. In politics he was always a Democrat, prior to the year 1885, when he became a strong advocate of Prohibition. In religious connection he is an elder in, and has for forty-five years been a member of the Presbyterian Church.

James Linn Reed, a son of John Reed, served in the war of the Rebellion from March 4, 1865, to August 11, same year. He was educated at Washington and Jefferson College, and then entered Princeton College, graduating there in the class of 1870, and afterward from the Western Theological Seminary. He was called to a church in Independence, where he remained eight years; then passed one year in Pueblo, Colo. On his return home he went to Barnesville, Ohio, and remained there six years, being finally called to Leetsdale, Penn., where he is now living. Politically he is a Republican.

John B. Reed (deceased), the second son of John Reed, received his preparatory training at Waynesburgh, and his college education at Washington and Jefferson. He then attended the Cleveland Medical College, and after graduating practiced one year in Dallas, W. Va.; then went to Cameron, then to West Alexander, and finally settled in Wheeling, W. Va., where he died October 17, 1887, aged forty-one years. He left a widow (formerly Miss Mary L. Stone) and the following children: Mary L., Frank S., John B., Jane B. and Sarah. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Sixteenth P. V. C., and was sent to the army of the Potomac. In his political views he was a Republican.

Robert J. Reed, third son of John Reed, was also educated at Washington and Jefferson College, from which he graduated in 1881, and then entered Bellevue Medical College, N. Y., graduating in 1884. He afterward entered the Western Pennsylvania Hospital, whence he proceeded to Wheeling, W. Va., where he is now practicing his profession. On November 30, 1887, he was married to Louise Butler, of Wheeling, W. Va. In his political views he is a Republican. In 1874 Mr. and Mrs. Reed located in West Alexander, where they have a pleasant home. They united with the Presbyterian Church there, in which they are honored members.

MRS. MARTHA BAIRD, one of the oldest residents of Peters township, is the widow of Thomas Baird, a son of Samuel Baird. Samuel Baird was a native of County Antrim, Ireland, and came to America in an early day. Soon after his arrival in this country he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of James Anderson. The Andersons and Bairds had emigrated from Ireland in the same vessel, and settled near each other in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. Mrs. Anderson passed away in 1809, and as was then customary, was buried on the farm in the old orchard, where fifteen years later the husband and father was laid to rest. Their graves are marked only by a rough stone and a few evergreen trees. After their marriage Samuel and Elizabeth Baird located on the farm in Peters township, which is now owned by their son Thomas, and the following children were born to them: Jane, William, James, Samuel, Jonathan and Thomas, of whom all are deceased save William, who is living in retirement at Sleeth, Carroll Co., Ind.

Thomas Baird was born May 22, 1822, on the old place in Peters township, this county, and remained with his parents during his minority. On arriving at man's estate he began life as a pilot, and worked as such for many years on the Ohio river; he afterward clerked in the coal yards for several years, finally returning to Washington county, where he spent the last thirty-five years of his life on a farm in Peters township. On October 7, 1851, he was married to Martha Wilson, who was born January 26, 1833, a daughter of the late Thomas Wilson, a prominent farmer of Peters township, this county. The young couple settled on the home farm in Peters township, which was then owned by a maiden aunt of Mr. Baird. He leased the farm for fifteen years, and when she died paid off the other heirs. The following children were born to Thomas and Martha Baird: Elizabeth, Mary, Jennie (deceased), Wilson T., Emma, Caroline, Sarah, John, Frank, William, Charles and George. The family occupy a prominent position in the community. Mr. Baird enjoyed the highest respect and esteem of all who knew him, and was recognized in all his dealings as a thoroughly honest and upright citizen. In politics he was a Democrat, and served in many local offices. He was a member and treasurer of the Presbyterian Church for many years. He died February 4, 1888, of pneumonia. His widow is yet living on the old homestead, which contains 140 acres of well cultivated land.

THOMAS STEVENSON, who in his day was one of the prominent and progressive agriculturists of Washington county, was born June 30, 1798, in Northampton county, Penn., on the old home farm near Easton.

James Stevenson, his father, was a native of the North of Ireland, where he married Ann Miller, and soon thereafter they immigrated to America, and about the year 1786 settled near Easton, Northampton Co., Penn., where they resided till 1800. They then crossed the mountains, all their worldly possessions, comprising household goods, their little ones and themselves, being carried in one wagon. Coming to Washington county, they located near Hickory, Mt. Pleasant township, and there resided till 1808, when they moved to the southeastern part of Smith township. In 1809 James Stevenson made a permanent home on a farm situated one mile north of Bulger, in Smith township. He was an honest, energetic citizen, was a successful farmer, and carried on a very extensive distillery. In politics he was an active member of the Whig party. He and his wife passed away at a good old age, and were the parents of the following: John (born about the year 1786, died about 1860, having lived up to the time of his death on the farm where John C. Stevenson now resides; he was a soldier in the war of 1812), Thomas, Margaret (who married Finley Scott), Jane and Mrs. Smith, all now deceased.

Thomas Stevenson, the subject proper of this memoir, came with his parents to Washington county when a boy, and here received his education in the schools of the period, where the "Single Rule of Three" was the test of mathematical knowledge. He hauled loads of produce to Pittsburgh, returning with merchandise for country merchants. On February 28, 1827, he was married to Eliza Kerr, who was born November 16, 1806, daughter of William and Eleanor Kerr. This wife died March 4, 1849, and on September 28, 1852, Mr. Stevenson married Margaret A. Whan, who was born February 15, 1824, daughter of John and Mary (Stevenson) Whan, and their children were: Mary Margaret (wife of David McCoy, of Baca county, Colo.), born October 17, 1853; Ann Eliza (living in Burgettstown, Penn., with her widowed mother), born March 22, 1855; Celicia J. (living at home), born January 28, 1857; John C., James M., and William E. (of whom special mention is made further on); and David S. K., born December 29, 1865. Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson passed all of their married life on a part of the "Old Ravenscraft Tract," in Cherry Valley, Smith township. He was a careful manager and excellent financier, year by year adding to his possessions until he owned 750 acres of choice land. He was a kind-hearted, generous man, ever ready to assist those who proved worthy of aid; in business he was a careful manager. At one time he owned a flour-mill in Midway, Penn., but passed most of his time in agriculture. In politics he was first a Whig, then a Republican, and was much interested in the selection of suitable candidates. He was a charter member of the Mt. Vernon Seceder Church, and was one of the leading organizers of the Centre U. P. Church, serving as an elder and contributing liberally to its support. He died February 28, 1881, mourned by the entire community as one who could not well be replaced. His widow continued to reside in the elegant home left to her until 1892, when she moved to Burgettstown, this county, and is now living a retired life. She is one of the most highly respected ladies of the vicinity, and is a consistent member of the U. P. Church.

JOHN C. STEVENSON was born August 4, 1858, in Cherry Valley, Smith township, this county. He received a limited education in the district schools, and being the eldest son, the greater portion of the farm work fell to his share. On February 12, 1880, he was united in marriage with Eliza J. Stewart, who was born September 27, 1855, daughter of John Stewart. Three daughters have been born to this marriage: Maggie T., Elvia May and Cora Viola. After their marriage John C. and Eliza J. (Stewart) Stevenson settled on the home farm one mile north of Bulger, which has been in the possession of the family since 1809. He has followed farming and stock raising, also devoted some attention to the dairy business. In politics he is a Democrat, and has held various township offices; in religion he and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Midway, this county.

JAMES M. and WILLIAM E. STEVENSON were born on the home farm in Smith township, September 28, 1860, and August 13, 1863, respectively. Their literary education was received at the common schools of the neighborhood, during which time they were also learning valuable lessons in the principles of successful agriculture and general business. After the death of their father the two brothers took charge of the home place, and in September, 1883, John C. sold his interest in cattle to James M. and William E., who then began an extensive business in the breeding of Holstein-Friesian cattle. Their first stock was purchased from J. L. Henderson, of Washington county, and Powell Bros., of Springboro, Penn. Their stock soon increased in quantity and value, and was exhibited at various agricultural shows throughout the country—Detroit, Chicago, Toledo, Columbus, Youngstown (Ohio), Wheeling (W. Va.) and several other places, and they received a large number of premiums as testimonials of their superior grade of cattle. Many gold and silver medals were awarded them at the various exhibitions, from which they always took some premium. These two young men won a national reputation as stock raisers, and command the very highest prices. In 1892 they disposed of their farming implements and stock, making one of the largest sales ever held in Smith township. Politically the Messrs. Stevenson are earnest, active members of the Republican party and, it is needless to add, are most intelligent, practical and successful business men. Neither are married.

ANDREW CRAWFORD is prominently identified with the oldest and most influential citizens of Peters township. His grandfather, Andrew Crawford, is supposed to have emigrated from Ireland. However that may be, it is certain that this ancestor came to Washington county, Penn., prior to 1783, and located on the farm in North Strabane township yet owned by his descendants. In the same year he received a patent for 115 $\frac{3}{4}$  acres of land, giving in payment £4, 9s. 2d. of Pennsylvania currency. In early life he was united in marriage with Sarah Speer, a native of Moon township, Allegheny Co., Penn. Their lives were passed on the farm in North Strabane township, where he died in 1795 from the effects of the bite of a copperhead snake. The children of this family were born as follows: Elizabeth, Mary, Margaret, James, Alexander and Ann, all of whom are now deceased.

James Crawford was born in 1791, on the old homestead in North Strabane township, and was but four years old when his father died. His mother married again, and the child was thrown on his own resources at a tender age, as the step-father had no property. However, he possessed plenty of perseverance, and worked for some time as a farm hand, meantime availing himself of every opportunity to secure an education. He then began teaching school, and in 1812 went to stay with his sister in Columbiana county, Ohio, while her husband fought in the war of 1812. While making his home here, young Crawford met Miss Nancy Crawford, who afterward shared his life (she was no relation). They were married in 1814, after which the young couple moved to the old place in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., where they always resided. Their farm contained over 200 acres of the original tract. In political opinion James Crawford was a Democrat, and served in many township offices. For thirty years he was identified with the United Presbyterian Church at Peters Creek, in which he was an elder, and afterward became a member of Mount Prospect Church. The following children were born to this couple: Sarah, Andrew, William (deceased in infancy), Tamar, Mary A., Agnes, Margaret (wife of A. M. Borland), Lizzie and Priscilla. Of these, Tamar, Mary A., Agnes, Sarah and Priscilla are deceased.

Andrew Crawford, son of James and Nancy Crawford, was born December 4, 1816, in the old house on the farm of his forefathers in North Strabane township, Washington county. He remained on the place during his boyhood, and on April 5, 1838, was married to Martha, daughter of James Matthews. She was born in October, 1814, on a farm in Peters township adjoining the home of her future husband. After their marriage the young couple inherited seventy five acres of the old place, where they have since resided. Children have blessed their union as follows: Martha J., Mary J., Alexander J., Nancy E., Tamar T., W. B. L., Sarah, Henrietta and Anna G., of whom Martha J., Nancy E. and Tamar T. are deceased. The father votes with the Democratic party, and has held various local offices. He was an elder in the United Presbyterian Church of Peters Creek until his membership was transferred to Mt. Prospect; he also led the choir for many years.

James Alexander Crawford, eldest son of Andrew and Martha (Matthews) Crawford, was born May 6, 1842, and on December 21, 1865, was married by Rev. William Hanna, of the Presbyterian Church of Fairview, to Rhoda J., daughter of James Atkinson. Mr. and Mrs. Crawford have had the following children: Nettie B., William C., Mattie, James P., Edmund A., Caroline, Wallace, May, Harry, Lulu and Laura. Of this family Caroline, Wallace and Laura are now deceased. Mr. Crawford is at present living in McCook, Neb., where he has bought a farm of 160 acres, and expects to make his future home.

JAMES MORRISON, who is a grandson of Henry Morrison, was born May 14, 1833, in Nottingham township, this county. The grandfather was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary war, and in 1773 came to this county, and bought 438 acres of land on Mingo creek, where he died at the age of eighty two years, leaving three sons, John, James and Henry.

Henry Morrison, son of Henry Morrison, Sr., was born October 2, 1799, in Nottingham township, this county, and was married to Anna Stewart, who was born October 14, 1794, in this county. Five children were born to their marriage, namely: William, born December 18, 1820, died February 26, 1813; Patience (Mrs. Hamilton), born April 30, 1823; Henry, born August 13, 1827; John, born May 23, 1830, died January 6, 1836; and James, of whom a sketch follows. The father owned 152 acres of land, and passed his life in agricultural pursuits, serving the township in various capacities. He died October 7, 1884, having been preceded by the mother December 25, 1877.

James Morrison was born on the old place in this county, and there passed his school days. On May 7, 1861, he was united in marriage with Sarah J., daughter of John Gaston, a native of Allegheny county, Penn. They have had three children, namely: H. P., A. L. and H. M. The family moved to Washington, Penn., in 1872, remaining there until 1877, when they returned to the farm in Nottingham township. Mr. Morrison has served as inspector of elections on several occasions, and in religion the family are all members of the Presbyterian Church.

HENRY HARRISON HARFORD WEAVER. The Weaver family, with which this gentleman is connected, is of German ancestry, and the earliest pioneer of the name to settle in America was one Adam Weaver.

He and his son John located in Washington county, Penn., where the latter purchased 400 acres of land one mile north of Fredericktown, on Fish Pot run, in East Bethlehem township. John Weaver received a limited education, but gained a large fund of general information, becoming a very intelligent citizen. In 1788 he was married to Catharine, daughter of Martin Spooone, and the following children were born to them: Adam, who died in 1860; Sarah, wife of Jonathan Michener, of Seneca county, Ohio (she is now over ninety years of age); Jacob; Martin, a farmer of Seneca county, Ohio; Daniel; Mrs. Elizabeth Ault, who resided at Orville, Wayne Co., Ohio; Mrs. Catherine Huffman; Mrs. Mary Smith; John; Joseph, deceased in 1890, and Margaret. Of this family are yet living Sarah, Martin and Margaret. The parents died on the home farm in East Bethlehem township.

John Weaver, son of John and Catharine Weaver, was born August 17, 1799, in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the rude log cabin schools, and assisted his father in the farm work, using the old-fashioned wooden plow. Their bread was then made entirely from corn, and though whisky was freely used in those days, drunken men were comparatively few. John Weaver learned the tanner's trade at Scenery Hill, Washington county, with a man named Notestine. On March 21, 1822, he was united in marriage with Ann Schoolly, and they had children who were born as follows: William, born December 8, 1822, a merchant of San Francisco; Eli, born April 10, 1824, supposed to have been drowned in North River, Cal.; Mrs. Elizabeth Messmore, born April 22, 1826, died November 28, 1878, in Illinois; Thomas, born October 17, 1828, died September 10, 1888, in San Francisco, Cal.; John, deceased in infancy; E. P., a miner in Montana, born April 7, 1833, and Isaac, born September 9, 1835, who enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, and died in the army. The mother of this family was laid to rest December 23, 1835, and the father then married Mrs. Jane (Woods) Boon (widow of James Boon), who was born June 24, 1809, in Washington county, Penn., near the Virginia line. To this marriage came the following children: Finley, born February 16, 1838, living in Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn.; Henry Harrison Harford, born September 3, 1840; Margaret Jane, born January 12, 1843, wife of John Carpenter, of Seneca county, Ohio; Joseph and Mary N. (twins), born August 9, 1845, the former of whom died October 1, 1854, while the latter is living with her brother Henry; Eleanor S., born June 20, 1848, widow of Alonzo B. Crumrine, living in Waynesburgh, Greene Co., Penn., and Florence C., born April 3, 1851, who died September 30, 1854, at the age of three years, one day before the death of her brother Joseph. The father was a very industrious man, having won success by years of patient toil, and in 1842 erected the house now occupied by his son. He was called from earth June 24, 1876, and was followed by his wife December 29, 1888. He was a member and elder of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and in politics formerly voted with the Whig party, afterward uniting with the Republicans.

Henry Harrison Harford Weaver is now residing on the farm where he was born and reared, in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. He learned the tannery business of his father, which he followed several years, and then conducted a store in Fredericktown fifteen years. After leaving the latter business he returned to the homestead, and is now a prosperous agriculturist. He is one of the most zealous adherents of the Republican party, and has voted for every nominee of his party since casting his first ballot for Lincoln. In religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

HARVEY ANDREW, a representative of an old pioneer family, and a flourishing farmer of Morris township, is a son of Jesse Andrew, and grandson of Samuel Andrew, who was born in New Jersey, January 25, 1772, and located on Ruff's creek, Greene Co., Penn., at an early day, where he entered land. He married Susan Cooper, of Washington county, born July 22, 1777, and reared a family of eight children, as follows: Jacob, Zebulon, Samuel, Jesse, Robert, Kersier, Elizabeth and Emeline, of whom Elizabeth, a resident of Iowa, is the only survivor. Samuel Andrew removed to Crawford county, Ohio, all the family except Jesse accompanying him, and there died August 28, 1849, his wife having passed away August 27, 1843.

Jesse Andrew was born March 15, 1804, and October 20, 1825, married Lecta Day, who was born August 5, 1803, a daughter of Calvin Day. They resided in Greene county until their death, Jesse passing away August 17, 1880, and his wife June 29, 1878. They reared a family of six children: Cyrus, born July 20, 1826 (deceased); Harvey, born April 13, 1828; Milton, born January 26, 1830 (now a resident of Iowa); Samuel, born September 23, 1835 (deceased); Adeline, born November 22, 1839 (deceased); John N., born January 31, 1842 (living in Van Buren, Franklin township).

Harvey Andrew remained with his father upon the farm until thirty years of age, when he married Adaline Craig, who was born June 4, 1832, a daughter of M. B. Craig, of Franklin township, Washington county. After his marriage he resided on his father's farm in Greene county, until the winter of 1862-63, when he removed to his present farm in Morris township, four miles west of Prosperity, known as the "Old Post farm," which is an excellent one, and consists of about 200 acres. To Mr. and Mrs. Andrew have been born five children: Charles Hollace, born November 5, 1858, in Greene county (he married Matilda Bell, of East Finley township, who died May 22, 1888, aged thirty-three years, and he afterward married Mary, daughter of Harvey Day, of Greene county; he now resides on the old home place in Greene county); Lecta Jane, born March 27, 1864, married to James Sharp, of Prosperity, where they now reside; the other three children, Jesse B., born December 2, 1860, in Greene county, William Harvey, born September 17, 1868, and Sarah A., born May 29, 1871, make their home with their parents. Mr. Andrew is a Democrat, and a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which he was an elder.

JAMES T. HEMPHILL. Among the prosperous and energetic citizens of West Middletown, Penn., this gentleman occupies a position of deserved prominence. His ancestors were natives of Old Erin, but left their island home in an early day to seek a home in the "land of the free and the home of the brave." The earliest pioneer of this well-known family was one John Hemphill, who was born in County Down, Ireland, and married Mary Brooks, a native of the same county. The following children were born to this union: Thomas, Nancy (Mrs. Jesse Merrill), Mary (wife of William McGuffie), John, Margaret, Elizabeth, David and Jane. In 1791 the family immigrated to America, first settling in Winchester, Va., and some years later moved to West Finley township, Washington county, Penn. A short time afterward they settled permanently near West Alexander, Donegal township, this county, with the exception of a few years passed in West Virginia. In politics Mr. Hemphill was a Democrat, and in religious faith a member of the Associate Reformed Church.

Thomas Hemphill was born in 1789, in County Down, Ireland, his parents bringing him to America when but two years of age. His youth was passed in Winchester, Va., and Washington county, Penn., where his education was received. In early manhood he was married to Delilah, daughter of James Tearney, of Fayette county, Penn., and the young people first settled in Fayette county, Penn., thence moving to Stenbenville, Ohio, where they remained several years, and finally returning to Washington county, Penn. Mr. Hemphill followed the cooper's trade, which he learned in youth. His children were as follows: Mary (wife of John Johnson), Sarah (Mrs. John Sharp), David (deceased), John, J. T. Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Patterson), Nancy (wife of Robert C. Stewart) and Elizabeth (married to Holiday Sharp). The father never became a naturalized citizen, but took an active interest in the Democratic party, and in religion was a member of the Disciple Church. He died in 1851, being followed in 1875 by his wife. Both are buried in the Grove cemetery, of West Middletown, Penn.

James T. Hemphill was born February 11, 1819, in Donegal township, this county, and passed his youth on the home farm, receiving a subscription-school education. On November 12, 1850, he was united in marriage with Saria, daughter of James Murdock, and she has borne him the following children: Anna (wife of Samuel C. Maxwell), Martha V., Joseph T., Milton M., Jennie (wife of Rev. John B. Jamison), Lucy, J. E. B. and Nellie (deceased). Mr. and Mrs. Hemphill resided in Hopewell township for four years after their marriage; he then conducted a milling business in Independence township, this county, for six years, and afterward moved to the home farm of the Murdock family. He then resided six years in Donegal township, and returning to Independence township purchased the old Johnstown farm. From there he removed to Washington borough, finally settling at his present home in West Middletown, Hopewell township. Politically Mr. Hemphill has been an active member of the Whig party, and is now a Republican. In 1885 he was elected county sheriff, giving satisfaction to all his constituents. He and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Mount Hope, this county.

JOHAN S. CARLILE is a grandson of Robert and Mollie Carlile, natives of New Jersey. Mrs. Mollie Carlile was the famous Mollie Stark, of Revolutionary fame, and a daughter of the gallant Gen. John Stark. She died in 1858, in her ninety-sixth year, loved and honored by every true American, leaving four children to perpetuate her memory. Mr. Carlile owned iron furnaces and about 600 acres of land in New Jersey, and was a prosperous business man.

John Carlile, father of subject, was born in 1787, in New Jersey, and moving to Pennsylvania in 1820, located near Lone Pine, Amwell township, Washington county. He was engaged in tanning several years, then began to farm, in which he continued the remainder of his life. On May 2, 1822, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Curry, who bore him six children, viz.: Mary (Mrs. Camp), Margaret (Mrs. Onstott), Sarah Jane (Mrs. Prall), William, Eliza (Mrs. Keeney) and John S. Mr. Carlile was first a Whig, and afterward united with the Republican party on its formation. He died in 1861, in his seventy-fifth year, followed by Mrs. Carlile in 1864.

John S. Carlile was born November 3, 1838, on the old Hatfield farm in Amwell township, and remained at home until 1864, in which year his mother died. He was educated at the common schools, and at Pleasant Valley Academy. When yet a boy he learned the carpenter's trade, serving a regular apprenticeship of three years with a Mr. Keeney, and has ever since followed that business, being constantly engaged in contracting and building. On March 8, 1866, our subject was married to Rebecca Ann Potts, of Beaver county, Penn., and the children born to them were: G. Lawrence, Elfonsine, William, O. Curtis, Harry (deceased) and Alvin (deceased). Mr. Carlile has always been one of the most earnest and influential Republicans in his township. He was enumerator of the First Precinct of Amwell township for the eleventh census, and, with the exception of three years, has been a member of the election board for twenty years.

MATTHEW McCONAUGHY, a well-known citizen of McDonald, Washington county, is a grandson of David McConaughy, who was born and reared in County Antrim, Ireland, and there married to a Miss Glissen. They came to America in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and made their first settlement in Chester county, Penn. In 1804 they moved by wagons across the mountains to Washington county, settling on a wild farm of 180 acres, part of the George Washington tract. Mr. McConaughy was a mason by trade, and in 1812 built a stone house on the place, afterward following his vocation in this county. He and his wife reared the following children: John, David, Elizabeth and Alexander. In politics the father was a Whig, and in religion a member of the first Seceder Church organized in Hickory, this county.

Alexander McConaughy, father of subject, was born in 1799 in Chester county, Penn., and passed his early life in Chester and Washington counties, receiving a liberal subscription-school education. On April 19, 1832, he married Martha, daughter of Matthew Murdock, who was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and was there married to Mary McElravy; they resided in Mercer county, Penn., for several years after their marriage, and then came to Washington county, where children were born to them as follows: Sarah, Robert, Ann, Elizabeth, David, Martha, Rebecca, Jane, Nancy and Mary. Politically Mr. McElravy was a Whig, in religion a member of the Associate Reformed Church.

Alexander and Martha McConaughy made a permanent settlement on the home place in Washington county. Their children were David, Matthew, Mary A., Elizabeth, John, Alexander and Sarah J., three of whom are yet living—Matthew, Elizabeth (Mrs. Robert T. McKibben) and Sarah J. Mr. McConaughy was a farmer and stock raiser, and in politics was formerly a Whig, then a Republican. He was first a member of the Seceder Church and then of the United Presbyterian Church. He died in 1870.

Matthew McConaughy (the subject proper of this sketch) was born May 21, 1834. He is a representative citizen and an earnest supporter of church work. Politically he is a Republican, and in church connection is a member and trustee of the United Presbyterian Church of McDonald.

years, and here he and his wife died and were buried. They were members of the Baptist Church, of which he was one of the organizers in his section, and in which he held various offices. A Democrat "to the back-bone," he was a recognized leader in the party. During the Revolutionary war he served several years under Washington, and experienced many hardships.

William Lyon, father of subject, was born in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., his education, which was somewhat meager, being received at the subscription schools of the locality of his birth. He was married to Elizabeth Hathaway, and the children born to them were as follows: Morgan, Thomas H., Harrison, Jackson and Louisa (wife of David Horner), Perren, William S. After some years' residence in Greene county, William Lyon moved to Washington county, where he owned Lindley's Mill and 160 acres of land. He was the chief instrument in having Lindley's Mills postoffice established. He moved to Indiana, where he remained two years, and then, on account of sickness, returned to Pennsylvania, where he and his wife passed their last days, dying at the residence of our subject, who with true filial devotion cared for them, and comforted them in their declining years. Mr. Lyon died in 1844, aged forty-nine years, his wife at the age of sixty-two years. They were members of the Baptist Church, and Mr. Lyon was an old-school Democrat.

Thomas H. Lyon was reared and educated in Greene county, Penn., until twelve years old, when he learned the trade of a carpenter, which he commenced to work at regularly at the age of eighteen years, following the same until middle life, when he laid away the chisel and the plane for the plow and the harrow. He was a most industrious man, many times working half the night and all day, even occasionally, when things were pressing, spending an entire night at his bench. He is well known in his section as a man of the strictest integrity, and unquestionable veracity. He has always been a firm Democrat, and has rendered efficient service to his party without being an office-seeker, but was township election judge and township clerk twenty years. In 1862 he was appointed postmaster at Beck's Mills, which office he held over thirty years, and which he resigned in 1891. He is an attendant of the Presbyterian Church, and has been a trustee of the same several years. He is a strict Prohibitionist, believing intemperance the greatest of curses. On March 7, 1844, Mr. Lyon was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of John McMillan, of North Strabane township, and their children were as follows: William, an extensive lumber dealer at Burlington, Iowa, and John, who died in childhood. Mrs. Lyon died September 24, 1850, and on February 26, 1852, Mr. Lyon married Lydia, daughter of John Cheeseman, one of the farmers of

THOMAS H. LYON, a well-known citizen of North Strabane township, and one of her many prosperous agriculturists, was born September 4, 1819, in Greene county, Penn., a son of William and Elizabeth (Hathaway) Lyon, the latter of whom was a resident of Greene county. Benjamin Lyon, our subject's paternal grandfather, was a native of New Jersey, in which State the family had resided many years. He married Miss Wilcox, a lady of English descent, and seven children came to bless their union, viz.: Noah, Elizabeth, Peter, Joanna, Sarah, William and Matthias. Benjamin Lyon and his wife came to Washington county, and were among the earliest settlers, making their first home in Nottingham township, owing to the hostile incursions of the Indians. Here, surrounded by such dangers, and experiencing the many hardships incident to pioneer life, did the family clear up their primitive home, the father, in addition to clearing the land and farming, following his trade of carpenter and builder. Many of the dwellings and barns in his vicinity were of his building, and some of them are still standing. After his family had grown up Mr. Lyon moved to Greene county, where he erected a fulling-mill, which he conducted for some Peters township, and the children born to them were: George, Frank, Mary B., Lizzie and Warren. After the death of his second wife, April 5, 1868, our subject married, on February 28, 1871, Martha, daughter of Joseph Horner, of North Strabane township. She died November 25, 1872, and Mr. Lyon on May 24, 1877, married Margaret, daughter of Colbert Manes. Of the last two marriages no children were born. Mr. Lyon ranks among the leading citizens of his county.

ALLEXANDER G. PATTERSON, than whom there is no more prominent, better-known or more highly-respected citizen in West Finley township, is a native of this county, born in Donegal township in 1819. His father, William Patterson, a native of Ireland, came to America when twenty-one years of age, and settled on the farm whereon our subject now resides. He married Miss Nancy Gordon, a native of Washington county, daughter of Alexander Gordon, whose birthplace was in the land of Scott and Burns. To this union eight children were born, as follows: Grace, wife of James Moss; Eleanor, who died unmarried at the age of sixty; Alexander G.; Jane, wife of Braddock Dinsmore, at present residing in Missouri; Samuel, unmarried (since the death of his sister Nancy he travels the greater part of his time); Catherine, deceased in her girlhood; Nancy, deceased at the age of fifty-six, unmarried, and William, died when twelve years old.

Alexander G. Patterson received his education at the subscription schools of the locality of his birth, and received on his father's farm a thorough practical training in the art of agriculture. When Alexander was twelve years of age his father died, leaving a large family of children to be cared for by their widowed mother, and much of the work fell upon our subject, whose willing hands did not a little toward the support of his mother and little brothers and sisters. The habits of economy and industry thus early acquired soon became a second nature to him, and were regarded as characteristic of him by his many friends of later life, by whom he was held in high esteem.

Mr. Patterson was married in 1854 to Nancy J. Nickson, who was born in Washington, Penn., in 1828, a daughter of William and Mary (Lingafelter) Nickson, of Washington county, Penn., and two children have been born to their union, viz.: William, born in 1859, married Stella Armstrong, and they have one child named Wray Grayson; and Catherine, who married Milton Armstrong, and had five children: Maude Ethel, born in 1881; Grace Gordon, born in 1883; Frank Patterson, born in 1886 (who died at the age of five years); Mary Irene, born in 1888; and Blanche Lenore, born in 1891.

Mr. Patterson has lived upon the same place for seventy-four years, and has had a most successful career, having, from almost nothing at the start, accumulated, by industry and judicious economy, a considerable amount of valuable property, which is still left him, after giving both his children a handsome "send off" in life. In his political preferences Mr. Patterson is a Republican, but is not an active party man. In religious faith the Pattersons are Presbyterians.

THOMAS WARRELL BROCKMAN, an enterprising young business man of Morris township, was born January 19, 1863, a son of N. B. Brockman. N. B. Brockman was born of Scotch parents in Claysville, Washington county, and married Elizabeth Warrell, a daughter of Thomas Warrell, of whom subsequent mention is made. Thomas Warrell Brockman, when a small boy, was taken in charge by his grandfather Warrell, with whom he made his home until he had attained his majority. Shortly after this he married Lizzie McMillan, a daughter of John McMillan, of Morris township. For five years after his marriage Mr. Brockman managed the Warrel farm, one-half mile west of Prosperity, which he now owns, and on which he resides. In 1889 he opened a furniture and undertaking business in Prosperity, the undertaking department of which he still conducts on quite an extensive scale, though the furniture department was dropped in 1891. Mr. Brockman is also dealing in real estate in Pittsburgh, Penn. He is one of those genial gentlemen who always look on the bright side of life, and his friends are numerous. In politics he adheres to the principles of the Republican party, though he is not a partisan.

Mr. and Mrs. Brockman are among those who believe in enjoying life, and devote considerable time to travel. During the oppressive summer months of each year they spend the time at some watering place, having in the summer of 1891 made an extensive trip up the great lakes. They are the parents of three children: Sarah, born in May, 1887; Margaret, born in October, 1889, and Mabel, born in February, 1892.

Mrs. Priscilla Warrell, widow of Thomas Warrell (mentioned above), is the daughter of Luther Day, who was born in 1792, in New Jersey, and came to Washington county with his mother, Bethany Day, in the latter part of the eighteenth century, locating in Morris township. He married Mary Van Kirk, a daughter of William Van Kirk, of Washington county, and to their union eight children were born: William V. (deceased); Daniel, a resident of Morris township; Arvida, also a resident of Morris township; Thomas W., who died when young; Priscilla; Lavina (deceased);

Maria and Artemus. Luther Day died in 1880, his wife having preceded him to the grave in 1849.

Priscilla Day was married in 1842 to B. F. McVay, to which union four children were born: Demas Lindley, of Morris township; Elmas D. (deceased); Samuel Bayard, of Morris township, and Wallace (deceased). Mr. McVay died in 1853 and in 1869 Mrs. McVay married Thomas Warrell, a native of Ireland, who emigrated to Washington county in 1824, locating on the farm now owned by his widow, where he died July 23, 1889. Mrs. Warrell is an amiable Christian lady, revered by all who know her.

ONIAS MONINGER, one of the prominent citizens of Amwell township, was born August 24, 1837, on the old home farm in Amwell township, and, with the exception of two years, has always lived on the place of his birth. He is of German ancestry, his grandfather, John Moninger, having emigrated with his family from Germany to Hagerstown, Md., in 1801, and thence journeying to Washington county, located on the farm which is now occupied by Onias Moninger. He was a farmer and carpenter, and followed both vocations very successfully all his life, having a good farm of 130 acres. In politics he was a Whig, and among the first to organize and promote the cause of that party in Washington county. His children were Henry M., George, John, Jacob, Mrs. Mary Harshaman, Mrs. Catherine Harshaman and Mrs. Elizabeth Moore.

John Moninger was born March 27, 1791, in Germany, and when nine years of age immigrated with his parents to America. His youth was passed in attending the rate schools, and assisting in farm duties. He was a soldier in the war of 1812. On September 28, 1814, he was united in marriage with Catherine Dagne, and to them were born eight children: John Michael (deceased), Mrs. A. S. Frazee, George W., Mary Garber (deceased), Mrs. Catherine Riggles, Mrs. D. L. Reynolds, Demas M. and Onias. Mr. Moninger passed his life in agricultural duties, and owned a farm of 186 acres. He was very successful, and managed a considerable amount of business in settling estates. Politically he was a Republican, and in religion was a member of the Disciple Church. He died in 1872, in his eighty-second year, and his faithful wife survived him but four years.

Onias Moninger received his earlier education at the common schools, and afterward attended Pleasant Valley Academy five terms. He began teaching school at the age of twenty-one, and taught four winters in District No. 2, Amwell township. On June 24, 1865, he was united in marriage with Emily A. Leyde, of Ohio, and their union has been blessed with five children: Mary Florence, Netta C., John Wildon, Henry Herbert and Olive Leyde. Mr. Moninger is an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and is always interested in local matters. He has served as assessor and clerk, and is now assistant assessor; all being positions requiring a man of good judgment and energy to acceptably fill, which Mr. Moninger has done. In 1890 a well was drilled on the farm, which proved to be a light gasser (about 300 pounds pressure), which he now has full control of, as he purchased the entire well, and is using it all through the house for both heat and light.

MATHIAS MOUNTS, a prominent and prosperous agriculturist of Franklin township, was born in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., February 15, 1821.

His grandfather, John Mounts, had the following named family of children: Richard, John, Mathias, Enoch and William. The family came from Maryland to Pennsylvania about 1785, settling in the town of Washington, this county, where they passed the remainder of their lives.

William Mounts, father of our subject, was born in Washington county, Penn., in 1777; was educated in the subscription schools of those early days, and was brought up to farm life. He was married in 1808 to Elizabeth, daughter of James McMounis, of the same county, and the young couple then settled on the farm now occupied by their son Mathias. The children born to their union were Anna (Mrs. William Uhler), John, James, Enoch, Mathias, Jane (Mrs. Thomas White), William, Elizabeth (Mrs. Elisha Van Kirk), Richard and Maria (Mrs. William Ravencroft). The father of this family died August 2, 1872, the mother March 17, 1860, and they lie buried in Washington cemetery. They were members of the Presbyterian Church at Amity, and in politics Mr. Mounts was first a Jacksonian Democrat, then a Whig, and lastly a Republican; he served as supervisor for twenty years.

Mathias Mounts was reared from boyhood to farm life, and received a fair education at the common schools. On March 18, 1852, he was married to Asenath, daughter of Joseph Baker, and the children born to them were: Mary E., Eunice J. (deceased), Sophia, Joseph, Anna, Hollace G. and Martha. The family are members of Liberty Chapel, M. E. Church, at Washington, in which Mr. Mounts has been trustee and steward, serving in the latter position for twenty-five years. Politically he was originally a Whig, and since the formation of the party he has been a pronounced Republican.

THOMAS F. ALLEN is a native of Washington county, Penn., having been born November 7, 1827, in South Strabane township. He is a son of John and Mary (McClellan) Allen, both natives of Pennsylvania, who were married in 1819 in Washington county. Of the six children born to them, two are now living, namely: Mary J. and Thomas F.; Nancy died December 12, 1892. Grandfather Allen was a soldier of the Revolutionary war, and afterward followed farming. He was a highly respected citizen of the community. He died in 1836, in this county, having been preceded by his wife some years.

Thomas F. Allen was reared on the home farm in South Strabane township. He received a common business education in the country schools, and on April 12, 1854, was united in marriage with Nancy A. Hill, who was born in 1830, daughter of David and Eliza Hill, early settlers of Washington county. The following children were born to this union: Lizzie J. (wife of David Hamilton, a farmer of North Strabane township), Mary (married to William Emery, a farmer of Washington county), Anna B. (living at home), John T. (residing on the home farm), Robert W. (living with his parents) and Johnnie (deceased). In 1862 Mr. Allen embarked in mercantile business at Clokey, Washington county, in which he continued until 1865. He then moved to Scaright's, Fayette Co., Penn., and sold goods there two years, when he disposed of his stock and came to Washington borough, where he resided one year, and in the spring of 1868 bought the place where he carried on farming and stock raising until September, 1892, when he moved into the borough of Washington. Mr. Allen has always taken an active interest in the questions of public moment; in politics he is a Democrat, and has been school director for three years. He is a successful business man, and owns a farm of 188 acres of good land. Mrs. Allen is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

JAMES W. HUGHES, a well known and respected citizen of Anwell township, was born November 5, 1850, in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. His paternal grandfather, Samuel Hughes, was a native of New Jersey, his parents having emigrated from Ireland to that State. Samuel came to Washington county at an early day, and, locating in Anwell township, conducted a hotel on the place which is now the home of John Little. He was united in marriage with Nancy Sample, and reared a large family. He was a successful business man, and in his later years moved to near Fort Madison, Iowa, where he died about 1860.

Workman Hughes was born February 5, 1822, in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a common-school education. At the age of twenty-two years he began business for himself, first buying a farm on the National pike, and afterward purchasing the "McGiffin farm," as it is now called, consisting of 300 acres, situated in the southern part of Anwell township. In 1847 he was married to Rachel Taylor, of South Strabane township, and their children were Samuel Taylor, James W., John H., Mary E. (Mrs. Closser), Nancy J., William and Rachel (Mrs. Myers). Mrs. Hughes died May 12, 1862, and Mr. Hughes in 1864 wedded Margaret Vance, who died in 1879, and in December, 1880, he married Martha Scott. As a result of his own untiring efforts he has prospered in life. Politically he is a Democrat, and has held several offices.

James W. Hughes, son of Workman and Rachel (Taylor) Hughes, remained on the parental farm in South Strabane township, this county, and was educated in the common schools until his twenty-second year, when he began business for himself upon a farm below Ten-Mile, Anwell township, where he remained two years. In the fall of 1876 he went to Iowa, but, returning home the following year, he purchased a hundred acres of the old farm in Anwell township, which he now owns. He then rented the H. H. Reynolds farm, and worked upon it for three years, when he moved to the small house on Mr. Lacock's farm, and in 1883 built the barn on his own place, erecting a house there in 1886. On January 1, 1880, he was united in marriage with Margaret Horn, and their union has been blessed with the following children: Nellie R., born October 13, 1880; Samuel W., born December 24, 1881; Alonzo R., born December 10, 1883; George Russell, born February 7, 1886; Sabina A., born February 24, 1888, and Elsie Garnet, born March 29, 1891. Mr. Hughes is an eager reader of agricultural papers and current news. He votes the Democratic ticket on State issues, but in local politics he casts his ballot for the best man. He was auditor of the township from 1878 to 1881, and from 1887 to 1889, and is now committee-man from Anwell township, having also held other town offices.

TAYLOR FAMILY. Some time prior to the Revolutionary war, Henry Taylor, the first ancestor of the family under consideration, took up 1,000 acres of land in South Strabane township, part of which is now in the possession of Matthew Taylor's heirs. He was married to Jane White, whose home was at the stone house still standing near the County Home, Washington county, Penn.; she had ten brothers and one sister. In those days all the grain was gathered by the hand sickle, Mr. White's ten sons reaping grain in the same field with their father, who prided himself in his farming, and was always out to see that it was properly done. Henry Taylor had children as follows: Sons—Matthew, Joseph, John, Henry, James, George—and daughters—Jane (married to Richard Dagg), Mary (wife of A. Patton), Eliza (wife of Dr. Layton) and Ann (married to A. McCalmont). The father of this family was the first judge of Washington county. In 1800 Judge Taylor built the first brick house ever erected in Washington county, Penn., the walls of which are eighteen inches thick from foundation to top; it is still standing, apparently as good as ever, and is now owned by the Willets.

Joseph Taylor, son of Henry the pioneer, was born on the old homestead in South Strabane township, where he passed his entire life. He married Annie Stewart, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, who came over the mountains on horseback from the "Forks of Elk," Maryland. She died in March, 1831, leaving two sons: Henry and David S., and her husband followed her to the grave in May or June, 1845, at the age of sixty-eight years.

David Stewart Taylor, Sr., was born August 10, 1803, on the Taylor homestead in South Strabane township, and received a fairly liberal education at the subscription schools of the vicinity, although much of his early boyhood time was passed on the farm. When yet a lad, he followed teaming over the mountains, driving six horses and hauling loads of as much as six thousand pounds, consisting of flour and farm produce, which were exchanged for various articles of merchandise. This business he followed thirteen years, during which time but two days were lost, when all travel was stopped on account of the deep snow. On March 11, 1833, he was married to Sarah Oliver, who was born August 20, 1812, in Westmoreland county, Penn., a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Pinkerton) Oliver, of Sewickley township, in that county, of Scotch Irish descent. Andrew Oliver (grandfather of Mrs. D. S. Taylor, Sr.) was married to Margaret Madole. He took up 500 acres under the "tomahawk claim" in Hempfield township, Westmoreland Co., Penn. Samuel Oliver, father of Mrs. David S. Taylor, Sr., was a son of Andrew Oliver, who was born in the "old country," where he married. From there they emigrated to the shores of Columbia, settling finally in Westmoreland county, Penn., where he took a "tomahawk claim," and here they died. Their children were Joseph, Samuel, James, Sarah (married to Thomas McCune, in Pittsburg), Elizabeth (married to James Peoples, near Mt. Pleasant, Westmoreland county), and Jane (wife of William Hunter, in Westmoreland county). Samuel Oliver was born on his father's farm in Westmoreland county, where his entire life was passed. He was three times married, first time to Nancy Henderson, by whom he had two daughters: Mary and Margaret; his second wife was Mary Pinkerton, who bore him two children: Jane and Sarah (wife of David S. Taylor, Sr.); his third wife was Salome Markle, by whom there was one daughter, Elizabeth. Of these five children all are now deceased except Jane and Sarah. The father, who had been a lifelong agriculturist, died in Westmoreland county, September 10, 1855, aged seventy seven years; the mother of Jane and Sarah had passed away several years previously.

At the time of his marriage David S. Taylor, Sr., in company with his brother Henry, was conducting a flourmill at Madison, Westmoreland county, and also managing a hotel. In 1834 he came to what is now South Strabane township, this county, remaining there until 1849, when he moved to Adams county, Ohio. The ague being prevalent there, he soon returned to Washington county, locating about one mile north of Raccoon Station on Big Raccoon creek, Smith township, and purchased a farm. The following children were born to him: Mary Ann, born December 29, 1833 (married to J. F. Cooke, and living in Florence, this county); Joseph, born December 25, 1835 (in 1859 he went to Michigan Bluff, Cal., in order to dig for gold, taking the overland route, and he is now a butcher in San Jose); Samuel Oliver, born April 4, 1838 (a lawyer in Wheeling, W. Va.); Henry G., born November 9, 1840 (a farmer in Smith township); William P., born January 7, 1843 (a physician in Noblestown, Allegheny Co., Penn.); Jane O., born February 22, 1845 (living on the old homestead); David S., born October 7, 1847; James Buchanan, born March 30, 1851 (a carpenter of Smith township), and Matthew, born January 5, 1854 (died March 28, 1857). The father died March 11, 1888. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, having joined it, along with his wife, in 1855, and in his political affiliations he was a leading member of the Democratic party. In business he was very successful, accumulating by earnest and patient toil a considerable amount of property. In height Mr. Taylor stood five feet eleven inches, his weight being 180 pounds, and all his life he enjoyed splendid health until sixteen years prior to his decease, when he received a slight stroke of paralysis, from which he suffered more or less up to the day of his death. His widow, still hale and remarkably active for her years, more like a woman of sixty than one who has seen over four score and one summers and winters, is at the home of her sons David S. and J. B., and an unmarried daughter, calmly awaiting the summons that will call her hence.

HENRY G. TAYLOR was born on a farm situated about one and one half miles north of Washington, Penn., after some years moving with his parents to Smith township. In February, 1870, he was united in marriage with Susan Scott, who was born in 1840, daughter of Benjamin Scott, of Hanover township, this county, a representative of a pioneer family. They resided in Hanover township a short time after their marriage, and April 1, 1871, came to their present home in Smith township, this county, near the Jefferson township line. He has followed farming, stock raising and dairying. On June 18, 1883, the farm was visited by a cyclone, which devastated the neighborhood. His barn was thrown down, the house unroofed, and the out-buildings completely destroyed. But he set to work with undaunted energy, and soon from out the ruins arose a handsome new residence, the other damage being repaired as rapidly as possible. In political opinion Henry G. Taylor is a counselor and adviser of the Democratic party in his locality, and he frequently held offices of honor and trust to the utmost satisfaction of all concerned. He and his estimable wife are supporters and attendants of the Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown. Their family consists of one daughter—Sarah Oliver—a bright girl of twelve summers, who adorns and cheers their home, and who possesses some skill as a musician.

WILLIAM PINKERTON TAYLOR, M. D., was born January 7, 1843, on the old family homestead in South Strabane township, where the greater part of his boyhood was passed. He worked on the farm in summer time, and attended the schools of the neighborhood during winter, his first teacher being J. L. Judson. One year he spent on a farm in Ohio. In 1863 he commenced the study of medicine under Dr. T. W. Bradley, of Burgettstown, and then entered Sterling Medical College at Columbus, Ohio, where he graduated in the spring of 1866, and April 2, same year, he located at Noblestown, Penn., in the general practice of his chosen profession.

On March 14, 1877, Dr. Taylor was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Proudfit, daughter of J. L. Proudfit of Burgettstown, Penn., and two sons have been born to them, viz.: David S., a bookkeeper and stenographer, and John P., telegraph operator and agent at Canonsburg, Penn. On January 8, 1892, the Doctor had the misfortune to lose his house and barn by fire, but he at once rebuilt. He is a Freemason in high standing; a member of Richard Vanx Lodge, No. 454, Burgettstown; Washington Chapter, No. 150, and Jacques de Molay Commandery, No. 3, Washington, Penn.

DAVID S. TAYLOR was born October 7, 1847, in North Strabane township, this county, and in childhood came with his parents to Smith township, locating upon the farm which he and his brother James B. now own. He assumed control of the home place when his father retired from active life, after the elder brothers had left home, and has become a very successful farmer. Mr. Taylor is a wide-awake and energetic man, and an active member of the Democratic party. He has filled various township offices with eminent success, and in the spring of 1892 was elected a justice of the peace for a term of five years. The home farm, which is situated about two miles northeast of Burgettstown, comprises 257 acres, nearly all in a high state of cultivation, and the present large and elegant residence was built in 1889. Mr. Taylor has never enlisted in the noble army of Benedictus.

ROBERT HORACE McCLAY is a prominent member of his family, who have so many years been residents of Canton township. His grandfather, Samuel McClay, emigrated from Ireland when a small boy, and locating in Chester county, Penn., was, when a young man, married to Sarah McClellan, who was also of Irish birth. Some years after their marriage they settled on the farm in Canton township, Washington county, which has since been the home of their children. He died in 1838, and Mrs. McClay in 1842.

John McClay, son of Samuel and Sarah McClay, was born in 1809 upon the home farm in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his early youth upon the farm, receiving a very limited education in the primitive schools of the period. On April 26, 1838, he married Jane, daughter of James Smith, and after her death married on September 15, 1841, Jane, daughter of Robert Welch, who bore him four children: Sarah (Mrs. W. C. Morrison), William, John H. and Robert H. In 1857 Mr. McClay was again married, this time to Sarah Taggart, and after her death was united to Margaret Brownlee, daughter of James Brownlee, one of the earliest settlers of Washington county. Mr. McClay is an active member of the United Presbyterian Church, with which he united in 1853, having formerly been connected with the Seceder Church. Politically he was first a Whig, later a Republican, and is now a leader in the Prohibition party. He is a prosperous man, one who favors all progressive movements.

Robert Horace McClay, son of John and Jane (Welch) McClay, was born January 12, 1850, on the old farm in Canton township, this county, and passed his youth at home, where he received a very limited education in the usual sense of the term, but daily acquired valuable training in the lessons of economy, which trait has become a characteristic of the family, and has greatly enhanced their success in life. On January 11, 1876, he was united in marriage with Miss Rachel A., daughter of William Wright, of Buffalo township, this county, and they settled on a farm in Canton township, where they resided nine years, and erected a handsome residence, making many improvements; but in 1885 they removed to their present admirably situated home, a large, commodious dwelling, having all conveniences. The children born to this union are: Annie A., John W. and Maggie M. Mr. McClay has ever been a close observer, and in political opinion has always been a Republican. With his family he is an active member of the United Presbyterian Church at North Buffalo.

ROBERT J. MUNCE, M. D., a leading farmer and retired physician of North Strabane township, was born July 4, 1824, in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. His grandfather, Thomas Munce, was a native of County Down, Ireland, where he was married and had the following named children: Robert, Joseph, Thomas, John, Samuel, and Mattie (Mrs. John Manown). In 1804 he immigrated with his family to the United States, landing at New Castle, Del., whence they at once proceeded to South Strabane township, this county, where they settled on a piece of land on which the grandfather passed the rest of his life.

Robert Munce, father of Dr. Munce, was educated in County Down, Ireland, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He was married in Ireland to Mary, daughter of William Quail, and in 1804 immigrated to this country with the rest of his father's family, making a settlement on the farm in South Strabane township, this county, where, after rearing a family of children, he peacefully passed from earth. The mother died in 1856, and they sleep side by side in the cemetery at Washington borough. They were members of the Chartiers Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. Munce was an active Democrat. He was a successful farmer and stock raiser. The children born to this honored pioneer couple were Sarah (Mrs. William Morrison, deceased), Mary A. (Mrs. William Andrews, deceased), Margaret (deceased), Jane (Mrs. Robert Carron), Catherine (Mrs. John McLain), Thomas (deceased), William J. and Robert J.

Dr. Robert J. Munce received his primary education at the log school-house of the locality of his birth, and as soon as he was old enough commenced to work on his father's farm, his chief occupation at first being to thresh the grain. Everything was of a very primitive nature, both inside and outside the old log cabin, and "homespun" was the material from which most of the clothing was made, while boots were looked upon as articles suggestive of extravagance in the extreme. In the spring of 1842 he entered Washington College, Washington, Penn., attending and teaching school alternately until September, 1847, when he graduated in a class of thirty-three, one of the number being the late Hon. James G.

Blaine. In April, 1853, Dr. Munce married Mary Ann, daughter of Lewis Reighard, of Richland county, Ohio, and the young couple took up their residence in Henry county, Iowa, where they remained some five years, at the end of which time they returned to North Strabane township. Dr. Munce then purchased his present farm, which, by assiduous labor, he has brought to its present fertile condition. Our subject had studied medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Stephens, of Washington, with whom he remained three years, and later took a course at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He first practiced in Richland county, Ohio, whence he moved to Henry county, Iowa, where he continued to practice, but his health failing he returned to this county, as already related. The children born to Dr. and Mrs. Munce are: Thomas, Robert, George, William, Anna, Maggie (Mrs. Park Weaver), Phoebe (wife of Rev. J. L. Thome), and Lizzie and Emma, who reside at home. The family are members of the Hill Presbyterian Church, of which the Doctor is a liberal supporter. He is a staunch Republican, and has served as a member of the school board several years. Dr. Munce has prospered in his farming, and is now the owner of 475 acres of as fine land as there is in the county.

MRS. ELIZABETH (STOCKDALE) SPROWLS, daughter of Robert Stockdale, of Allen township, Washington Co., Penn., is of English ancestry. She was born October 25, 1832, and on May 15, 1856, was married to William W. Sprowls, who was a worthy representative of one of the most prominent pioneer families of Washington county.

John Sprowls was the first pioneer of his name to locate in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn. He was a native of Ebniskillen, Ireland, and in 1784 was there married to Elizabeth Love (also of Irish birth), who bore him the following children: Arthur, Jane, Edward, John, Henry, James, Elizabeth, Nancy, William and Mary, the latter two being born after their arrival in America. In 1793 the family emigrated from Ireland, and landing at Philadelphia, pushed westward to Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Penn., where they remained some time, thence removing, in about 1795, to Washington county, Penn. Mr. Sprowls located near California, West Pike Run township, and soon afterward went to Allen township, but finally settled in East Finley township, where, in the midst of an unbroken wilderness, he erected a log cabin, about three quarters of a mile southeast of the present postoffice of Good Intent. In this humble little home John and Elizabeth Sprowls passed the remainder of their lives; and having well begun the herculean task of establishing a home in the desert wilds for his descendants, the courageous pioneer left the completion of his work to his children; he died September 6, 1845, and was laid to rest in the land of his adoption. Mrs. Sprowls died August 10, 1818. The two daughters, Elizabeth and Nancy, never married, and passed their lives on their father's farm.

William Sprowls, youngest son of John Sprowls, was born October 5, 1794, in Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Penn., and on coming to East Finley township, Washington county, shared the privations of a frontier life. He passed his youth in assisting his father on the farm, and in 1823 was married to Dorcas Towne, who was born in 1797, a daughter of Eli Towne, of East Finley township, this county. Of the children born to them the following is a brief record: Eli (deceased) lived to an advanced age; James died at the age of twenty-four; John married Miss McCreary, and entering the war of the Rebellion, died in the service; William W. is husband of our subject; Abigail died at the age of seventeen; Elizabeth died at an advanced age, unmarried; Henry married Miss McClellan, and is now farming in West Finley township; Dorcas Ann is a resident of Washington, Penn.; Isaac and Ezra died in youth; Cyrus enlisted in the Civil war, in Company E, Eighty-fifth Regiment P. V. I., and died in the service. After his marriage Mr. Sprowls began to farm a place near that of his father, where he remained until his death, which occurred December 27, 1868. Mrs. Sprowls died January 30, 1870.

William W. Sprowls was born in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., August 17, 1826, and during his earlier years assisted his father on the farm, afterward learning the cooper's trade. After his marriage to Elizabeth Stockdale Mr. Sprowls settled on the old home farm, and passed his life in agricultural pursuits. The following children came to this union: Fremont, born April 14, 1857 (now living in Morrow county, Oreg.); Stockdale, born October 22, 1858 (residing in East Finley township, this county); Eli W., born May 12, 1861 (a farmer of West Finley township); Deborah, born May 25, 1864 (residing with her mother); Mary B., born August 6, 1865 (wife of John Golden, living in Good Intent, this county); Cyrus, born January 8, 1868 (remaining at home); Asbury, born May 30, 1870 (deceased in infancy); Robert A., born May 12, 1872 (still living at home), and Hannah A., born August 24, 1873 (residing at home). Mr. Sprowls was a man of sterling worth. In politics he was a Republican. He was a member of the Disciple Church, and contributed liberally to its support. He died April 20, 1888. His widow now manages the farm. She is a member of the Disciple Church.

ADAM G. WEAVER. The great-grandfather of our subject, also named Adam Weaver, came from Germany, with his son John, at an early period, and locating in Washington county, Penn., bought the land which is just below the present home of Adam G., and there spent the remainder of his life. His son, John, purchased a farm of 400 acres on Fish Pot run, in East Bethlehem township, a mile west of Fredericktown. He had received a limited education, but was a man of general information. In 1788 he married Catherine, a daughter of Martin Spohn, and the following children were born to them: Adam (deceased), Mrs. Sarah Michner, Jacob (deceased), Martin, Daniel (deceased), Mrs. Elizabeth Ault (deceased), Mrs. Catherine Huffman, Mrs. Mary Smith (deceased), John (deceased), Joseph (deceased) and Margaret. Mrs. Weaver was a member of the Reformed Dutch Church. Mr. Weaver died in 1816, and Mrs. Weaver in 1866.

Adam Weaver was born in May, 1791, in East Bethlehem township, this county, and there lived all his life. He was educated in the schools of the period, and when about twenty three years of age, bought a ninety acre farm in East Bethlehem, and began to work upon it. He was very successful, and added to the land as the business prospered. In 1810 he married Elizabeth Black, and she bore him eight children, viz.: Mary (deceased), John (deceased), Daniel (deceased), Mrs. Elizabeth Mechner, Jacob, Solomon, Sarah and Adam G. Mr. Weaver voted an independent ticket, selecting the best men, without regard to party. He was a member of the M. E. Church, while his wife belonged to the Bible Christian Society; she died in 1836, and was followed by her husband January 17, 1857.

Adam G. Weaver was born in East Bethlehem township, October 8, 1828, and remained upon the farm until twenty-two years of age. He received a limited education at the common schools, but has by general reading acquired much valuable knowledge, and improved his mind. After he became of age he went to Indiana, where he engaged in agriculture, remained there a year, and on his return worked a farm belonging to an uncle, about two years. On February 16, 1851, he married Cynthia, daughter of James and Charlotte Hill, of West Bethlehem township, and worked on Mr. Hill's farm five years, at the end of which time (1859) he purchased his present place of 170 acres of prime land. The following children were the result of his marriage with Miss Hill: James C., born August 8, 1856; Sarah E., born March 22, 1859; Clarence E., born January 1, 1863; and Mary J., born September 17, 1865. Sarah E. is the wife of James C. Addleman, and Mary J. married Michael Menchy. Mrs. Cynthia Hill died June 29, 1869. On June 26, 1873, Mr. Weaver was married to Elizabeth, daughter of James and Catherine Wherry, and the following children were born to this union: Adam E., born June 19, 1874; Elizabeth C., born September 3, 1876; Francis A., born March 21, 1879; John T., born January 8, 1882; and Charles E., born April 3, 1884. Mr. Weaver has always been a Republican, a zealous worker for the interests of his party. He is a member of the M. E. Church.

MRS. ELIZABETH V. BOYLE is a daughter of Joseph Henderson. The latter was a native of Bucks county, Penn., and received a subscription-school education. In early life he was employed as a stage driver, finally locating on a farm. He was married to Miss Rachel Stroud, and they had six children, namely: Resen, living in Minneapolis, Minn.; John B., residing at Washington, this county; Anna (Mrs. Ross), living in Kansas; Sarah, residing at Washington; J. H., and Elizabeth V. The father was a Methodist, and contributed liberally to the support of the cause. Elizabeth V. Henderson grew to womanhood on the home place, and in February, 1873, was united in marriage with Felix Boyle, son of Felix.

Felix Boyle, the father, was born in County Donegal, Ireland. When a young man he crossed the ocean and settled in Pennsylvania, first locating at Williamsport (now Monongahela). He was there married to Ann, daughter of James Rice, who came to Washington county in 1780, and in 1791 erected a house, the corner-stone of which perpetuates his memory. Mr. and Mrs. Boyle began wedded life on the farm in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., where he followed his trade of a stone-mason. For several years his farm produce was shipped down the Monongahela river by flat-boat, and in company with other pioneers he made many trips to New Orleans. On arriving at their destination these boats were sold, and the men returned home by land or came via Philadelphia by water. During one of these journeys Mr. Boyle was taken seriously ill on the vessel, and so low was the spark of vitality that many of the crew thought him dead, and in accordance with their custom, prepared to throw him overboard. At this critical juncture a comrade named Black stepped above the apparently lifeless body of his friend, and waving aloft a hatchet, dared the men to touch him. His fearless courage and heroic devotion conquered, and life soon becoming apparent, he was permitted to care for the unfortunate man until his health was restored. Mr. Boyle voted with the Democratic party, and in religion was a Catholic, often attending services at Pittsburgh and Brownsville. He owned 123 acres of land in Carroll township, Washington county, and in connection with general farming conducted a distillery, making a specialty of peach brandy. He died January 2, 1841, and April 15, 1864, his wife was laid beside him. The children of this family were born as follows: Alice, Connel, John, Esther (Mrs. Richard Crosby), Maria, Felix and James.

Felix Boyle, son of Felix and Ann (Rice) Boyle, was born June 13, 1813, on the homestead in Carroll township. He received a good education, and learned carpentry and ship-building at Elizabethtown, Penn., working at the latter business for many years. For a time he was employed on the United States vessels, and in that capacity traveled extensively, having been on the Red river under Capt. Shreve, who founded the town of Shreveport, La. Mr. Boyle was instrumental in breaking up the immense raft in the Red river some years ago, also being employed on the Rio Grande river in Texas. After leaving the river he assisted in the two large shipyards near Monongahela on the Monongahela river, operated by his brothers—Connel and John Boyle, also in the black-smith shops, mills and in opening coal mines, etc. After following this business several years with great success, he retired to his farm in Carroll township, where he died October 4, 1884, of cancer, for which he had been unsuccessfully treated by skillful New York physicians. Politically he was an ardent Democrat, serving in many township offices, but declined to serve in county positions. An enterprising citizen and successful business man, he was also a cheerful, kind-hearted neighbor, ever ready to aid the needy. He left a widow and one son, the only daughter, Maria, having preceded him to the grave on Christmas day, 1878. The son, Joseph James, was born October 19, 1876, and is now living on the old farm with his widowed mother. He is a leader in his classes at school, and bids fair to do honor to the name he bears. Miss Crosby, granddaughter of Felix Boyle, the elder, is living with Mrs. Boyle. The latter superintends the management of the home place, which contains 123 acres of fertile land.

GLARK M. UNDERWOOD is a son of James, and a grandson of Abraham Underwood. The latter was descended from one of nine brothers who were English Quakers, and came to America with William Penn. Abraham Underwood was born in 1765, in Philadelphia, Penn., and after the Revolutionary war, engaged in mercantile pursuits at Baltimore, Md. About the year 1800 he came to Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., and there followed his trade of tailor. He reared a family of five children, of whom George is the only one yet living. Another son, Cyrus, has been one of the most prominent and useful citizens of Washington county, and served for twenty-four years as member of the school board of Monongahela, and recorder of Washington county one term. He was a man of unusual intelligence, and very popular in the community. He died in 1855. The father removed to Monongahela City in 1832, and worked at his trade until just before his death, which occurred in 1840. He was a member of the Whig party. With other brothers' families he was a member of the M. E. Church.

James Underwood, son of Abraham, was born in 1810, in the house which is yet standing on the homestead near Brownsville, Penn. He there learned the trade of a coverlet weaver, making the old fashioned but beautiful bed clothing so seldom seen in the present day. He followed his trade until thirty years of age. The increasing use of machinery then obliged him to abandon the business, and he learned ship carpentry in the yards at Brownsville, Penn. In early manhood he was married to Miss Lydia Bright, who was born in 1810, and the following children blessed their union: Clark M.; Cyrus, who was for thirty years a resident of Chicago, and is now the wealthy manager of large safe works at Elizabeth, Penn.; Catherine, Mosoria, both of whom died in infancy; Sarah, wife of Rev. Fanning, of Minneapolis, Minn., and Maggie, widow of Joseph Powell, who died in 1889, living with her mother in Fayette county, Penn. After locating in Brownsville, Mr. Underwood continued to follow his trade until ten years prior to his death in 1884, in his seventy-fourth year. In politics he was a Republican, and served as school director for many years, and was also a member of the M. E. Church. Continuing to reside on a farm, four miles from Brownsville, and two and a half miles from his birthplace, until his death. The mother is yet living with her daughter in Fayette county, Penn.

Clark M. Underwood was born January 14, 1834, on Front street, in Brownsville, Penn., and learned ship carpentering of his father, with whom he worked for ten years. He then engaged in the shoe business at St. Louis, Mo., and sold out when the Civil war began. Commissioned by the Secretary of the Navy, he entered the navy as master ship carpenter, serving on the famous "Essex," under Admiral David D. Porter. He was aboard one of the vessels, the "Lafayette," which ran the blockade at Vicksburg in 1863, and participated in many other well known engagements. At the close of the war he returned to Washington county, Penn., and settled on a farm near Claysville, where he resided until 1866. He then sold the place and moved upon another farm in West Finley township, residing there for twelve years, and in 1878 sold that property, and lived in Monongahela City for two years, in the residence he bought from Henry McKaine on Chess street. In 1880 he bought the beautiful farm in Carroll township, where he is now living, containing 1044 acres of land, situated a short distance from Monongahela. He was married May 4, 1852, to Miss Harriet, daughter of Benjamin Foster, who was then living in Monongahela. The following children were born to this union: Ida, Mrs. H. B. Carroll, of West Finley township; Charles, who resided in Dakota for several years, and recently moved to a farm in Iowa; Edward E. Underwood, residing in Morton, Kans., is an extensive grain buyer; Clarence P., living in Nebraska, has a farm of 480 acres; Frank, the youngest son, is a student in the West Pennsylvania Medical College, and will graduate in 1894, and Margaret, a teacher in the public schools of Washington county, is the youngest child. Mr. Underwood is an independent voter, always casting his ballot for the candidate who is best fitted for the office, regardless of his party preferences. In religious faith he and his wife prefer the Presbyterian Church.

JAMES SAMPSON, a patriarchal son of the Keystone State, a retired agriculturist, and, in his younger days, a typical follower of Nimrod, is a native of Westmoreland county, born in 1806. William Sampson, his father, came, when a young man, in company with several brothers, from their native home in Ireland to the shores of Columbia, and made a permanent settlement in Westmoreland county. William married Mrs. Mary (Neal) Beazell, daughter of the pioneer of the Monongahela Valley, Matthew Neal, and widow of Matthew Beazell. To them were born four children: James (formerly president of the Peoples Bank), Harvey, Thomas and Dorcas. The latter married Elijah Teeple. To her marriage with Matthew Beazell five children were born: Catherine, Elizabeth, Margaret, William and John. In 1812 William Sampson moved to Horse Shoe Bottom, in Carroll township, Washington county, where he successfully followed farming and distilling, at the time of his death owning 200 acres of land, part of which he had bought at $12 per acre. In his day grain was cut with a sickle, and he was famed far and near for his dexterous handling of that primitive implement, and for the amount of wheat, barley, oats or grass he could cut in a day. He died at the age of forty-five years.

James Sampson, of whom this sketch more especially treats, married, in 1840, Miss Mary, daughter of Robert Grant, of Carroll township. This lady died March 25, 1888. To them were born nine children, of whom two died in infancy. Harriet first married Thomas Reeves, by which union there were two daughters: Mary (wife of Harvey Fry, by whom she has one son) and Lena (wife of Harry Nuttall, of Pittsburgh; they have one son). Mrs. Reeves was again married, this time to Joseph Truman, since deceased. Mrs. Truman, who is a lady of true refinement, now resides with her father on the home farm. William Sampson married Miss Lou Welch, daughter of John Welch, of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and to them five children were born: Mary, Sarah, John, Lulu and Willie. Kate married Capt. Jenkins, and to her two children were born, Mary and Virginia. Jennie married T. J. Weddell, and has three children, James, Jessie and Mary. Harvey married Miss Jennie Yorty, to whom six children were born: Bertie, Grace, James, Ada, Frank and Ethel. John married Mary V. Williams, and to them five children were born: Gertrude, Howard, Grant, Helen and Alice M. Ada Ethel married C. R. Dallas, of Pittsburgh, they are the parents of four children: James S., Sarah, Charlie and an infant, deceased.

Mr. Sampson has been a hardworking, honest and frugal man, and, though now past the eighty-sixth milestone on his journey through life, is keen and bright in intellect. In middle life he was fond of hunting, and took great pride in being the owner of the fleetest dogs in his section. Many a time, after doing a hard day's work on the farm, he would spend almost an entire night in the pursuit of game, accompanied by his faithful dogs. In politics he has been a Whig, Know-nothing and Republican, in the ranks of which latter party he has voted since its organization. Now, in peaceful retirement, the owner of 1,200 acres of land, Mr. Sampson finds himself surrounded with the comforts that come to the sunset of a well-spent, industrious life.

ABIA MINOR HAYS, a prominent and popular dealer in general merchandise in the village of Simpson's Store, East Finley township, was born April 12, 1852, on the banks of the Little Kanawha river, Wood county, near Parkersburg, W. Va., his parents having a short time before his birth removed thither from Waynesburg, Greene Co., Penn.

His father, James Wilson Hays, who was born in Waynesburg December 21, 1817, was engaged in mercantile business for many years in his native town, and Graysville, same State. He represented the Fortieth Senatorial District of Pennsylvania in the State Senate, serving two terms. His wife (the mother of our subject), also a native of Greene county, was Hannah M., daughter of Abia Minor, and granddaughter of Gen. John Minor, who was one of the associate judges of Greene county for many years, in fact, up to the time of his death. William Hays, the paternal grandfather of A. M. Hays, migrated in 1804 from Adams county, Penn., to Waynesburg, where he embarked in mercantile business, and for nearly a score of years held the office of prothonotary of the county. Sarah (Wilson) Hays (grandmother of A. M. Hays) was a daughter of James Wilson, a native of Ireland, who emigrated to America and settled at Washington, Penn., along with many other so-called "Scotch-Irish Presbyterians," in the latter part of the last century. He was there married to a Miss Lytle, and removed to Waynesburg at the time Greene county was founded, and that village was made the county seat; he became the first postmaster at Waynesburg.

Abia Minor Hays served an apprenticeship of several years with his father in the mercantile business at Graysville, Greene Co., Penn., and then, in 1878, embarked in business for himself, in merchandising at Enon, in Richhill township, Greene county. In 1879 he moved to the village of Simpson's Store, subsequently purchasing the property. He sold his interests there to W. E. Jenkins, October 1, 1892, and moved to Washington, Penn. Early in 1893 he leased the Whittla store, No. 25 Broadway, New Brighton, Beaver county, and established there an extensive dry-goods house with departments devoted to carpets, millinery, books and stationery. Mr. Hays is a Democrat, but not a politician. He was postmaster at Harvey's, Greene county, for three years, and afterward at Simpson's Store for twelve years, or until his removal to Washington, Penn. Mr. Hays was married April 24, 1879, to Miss Nannie Houston, who was born in Richhill township, Greene county, November 25, 1852. She is a daughter of Simon Houston, Esq., who removed to Greene county in 1848 from Washington county, and died March 14, 1877. Her mother, Maria (Cummins) Houston, now living, was born August 3, 1824, in Greene county, of which her parents were natives. To the marriage of A. M. and Nannie (Houston) Hays four children were born, namely: Nancy Maria, October 20, 1880; Sophia Elizabeth, February 9, 1883; Wilson Houston, February 14, 1887, and Harry Minor, December 10, 1892. The three first named are now (March, 1893) residing at Simpson's Store. Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Hays and their eldest daughter are members of the Christian Church.

DEMAS L. AMES, one of the prominent citizens of West Bethlehem township, is a son of John Ames, whose father, Jabez, was born in Maryland, where he grew to manhood and married Elizabeth Smith.

Jabez Ames came to Washington county, and erected one of the first log cabins here. The country was very wild, and the Indians became so hostile that Mr. Ames, after repeated efforts to clear his land (for which he had previously secured a patent), turned Indian fighter and hunter. In that lonely little cabin were born five sons and three daughters, all of whom are dead. John, who was the youngest of the boys, attended one of the first schools organized in Washington county, and at the early age of seventeen, in the year 1818, married Mary Thompson, a daughter of Thomas Thompson, who came to Washington county about the same time as the elder Ames, and whose family also consisted of five sons and three daughters. To John and Mary Ames the following named children were born: Rosa Ann, now living in Scottsburgh, Ind., widow of Otto Mayheart; Elizabeth, in Hillsborough, this county, widow of Henry Bush; Arthur, a prominent farmer of West Pike Run township; E. H., living in West Bethlehem township; Demas L., our subject; Mary Ann (Mrs. Samuel Yoder), who died in April, 1880; John Martin, who died in 1878, and Joshua, Celia and Samuel, all three of whom died in infancy, Samuel breathing his last in the arms of his brother Demas.

Demas L. Ames was born October 17, 1840, and his early life was spent upon the home farm, and in learning the trade of blacksmith, which he was eventually compelled to abandon because of defective eyesight. He then returned to farming, which he has since followed. He married Lydia A. Miller, daughter of Joseph Miller, of Amwell township, December 21, 1861, and to them the following children were born: Joshua, who died in infancy; Elizabeth, a resident of West Bethlehem township, wife of Isaiah Grable; Emma Marsh, who lives at the home of his parents, and who married Lonisa Gauloe, a daughter of Henry Gauloe, of West Bethlehem township; and Arabella, living in Somerset township, the wife of Jonathan Konkle. The mother of Demas, who is a remarkably prepossessing old lady, resides at his home. She enjoys the distinction of being the grandmother and the great-grandmother of forty-two descendants. During the war, Demas Ames was a member of Company A, 22d P. V. C., under James P. Hart; he was, however, transferred to Company B, 18th P. V. C., before the close of the struggle. He was a gallant soldier, and served his country long and well, but like many another, he contracted diseases while in the service, from which he is to-day suffering. Mr. Ames is a life long Republican, although not an office seeker, and has declined to accept nominations proffered by his party. Both himself and wife are earnest members of the Disciple Church.

SAMUEL GARRETT. This lifelong honored resident of West Bethlehem township is a grandson of Peter Garrett and son of Nicholas, who was born in Maryland in 1779, and there married Mary Ann Baumgardner. About the commencement of the present century they removed to Washington county, Penn. The children born to them were as follows: Elizabeth, Rachel, Mary Ann, Lydia, Catherine, Susan, Sarah, Jacob, Peter, Samuel, John and William.

Samuel Garrett was born July 15, 1816, in West Bethlehem township. His education was the best that could be secured under the circumstances, but he took advantage of every opportunity which might add to his store of knowledge, and is therefore a very well read man. In his youth the country was wild, and the young pioneer frequently encountered Indians and wild animals. In 1840 he married Deliah Grable, daughter of Samuel Grable, of West Bethlehem township, and after marriage they removed to the farm which he now owns. The following children have been born to them: Cephas, Silas, Lebens, Lavina, Clara, and one that died in infancy. The mother of these children died in 1857. Mr. Garrett is a Democrat, but ill health has prevented his taking an active part in politics for the last five years. Prior to 1887 he was prominent in the political affairs of his township, and was repeatedly elected to the office of justice of the peace. His farm consists of 135 acres of very fine land. The house in which he resides was built by Jacob Garber in 1818. Mr. Garrett is a member of the Lutheran Church.

GUYON MORRISON. The Morrisons of the Upper Chartiers Valley trace their ancestry to Guyon (or Gavin) Morrison, who removed from East Nottingham, in Chester county, Penn., and settled on a tract of land on the waters of Chartiers creek, within the limits of Chartiers township, in Washington county, of the same State, prior to the war of the Revolution. By comparison of data, from traditions and records, it is reasonably certain that Guyon Morrison came from Northern Ireland to Delaware Bay with the great Scotch-Irish migration of the year 1729. He was born, probably in Londonderry, about the year 1705. His ancestors, doubtless, had come with the influx of Presbyterians from Scotland, prior to the famous siege of that place in 1689. The family name "Morrison" had belonged to a clan in Scotland from an early period.

In this country, as far as known, the earliest mention of the name of Guyon Morrison is found in the taxable lists of East Nottingham, Chester Co., Penn., for the year 1730. In the lists referred to, his name appears in the class of unmarried men; in the lists for the year 1734 his name appears in the class of householders or married men, from which fact we infer that his marriage had taken place in the year 1733. His name recurs, in the East Nottingham lists, continuously until the year 1770, after which date it disappears from the lists. The official records of Chester county show that in December, 1770, Guyon Morrisson disposed of his property in Chester county, and, as his name is not found there on records of a later date, it is certain that he must have removed from that county in the year 1771. Some records recently found in Washington county show that in the year 1776 the Morrisons had been settled on the waters of a tributary of Chartiers creek, for a sufficient length of time to give to the stream the name of "Morrison's run." In fact, the name "Morrison's run" became the official designation of the stream, as will be learned by reference to the Patent records of the Pennsylvania Land Office. The family traditions likewise confirm the conclusion that the Morrisons, on their removal from Chester county in the year 1771, came directly to the place of their settlement in the Upper Chartiers Valley. Soon after Guyon Morrison had settled on Chartiers, this entire region passed under the control of the colony of Virginia. For many years he held the tract on which he had settled, under the original "tomahawk" right. He lived, however, to witness the re-establishment of the authority of Pennsylvania, and the creation of the county of Washington. Of the tract on which he settled, the larger portion still remains in the possession of descendants bearing the same name, having passed by inheritance until it is now, after a lapse of 120 years, in the hands of his great grandchildren.

In the will of Guyon Morrison, which was made on August 28, 1782, his son John and Hon. Matthew Ritchie were named as executors. This will was entered for record on July 2, 1783. From the date of the entrance of the will for record it is reasonably certain that the death of Guyon Morrison occurred in June, 1783. Of the history of his wife nothing is known. There is reason to believe that her maiden name was Margaret Wilson. From the fact that her name is not found in the conveyance of the Morrison property, made in December, 1770, it seems probable that her death had occurred prior to that time. They had issue: William, Elizabeth, John, Jane, Margaret, Francis, Guyon, Jr., and James.

(1) William, eldest of the family of Guyon Morrison, Sr., was born probably in 1735. About the year 1760 he married Ann —, and resided for a time in Chester county. On his removal to this region he settled on a tract in Peters township, near the east branch of Chartiers creek, where he resided until his death in July, 1818. His wife had died about twenty years before. They had issue: John, James, George, Elizabeth, Francis, Guyon, Ann, William, Jr., Seth and David.

John (eldest of the family of William, Sr.) died in early manhood. James (son of William, Sr.) was born probably in 1765; he married Phebe M. —, and resided in Robinson township, where he died September 11, 1832; his wife survived him some years; they had issue: John, Barnabas, Keziah (wife of John Brown), James, Martha and Elizabeth. George (son of William, Sr.) was born in 1767; about 1800 he married Mary Graham, and resided in Robinson township until his death, May 12, 1854; his wife died in 1845; they had issue: John, William, Seth, Mary (wife of Joseph Partridge, Sr.), George, Jr., Rachel, Jared, Ann (wife of William Best), and David. Elizabeth (daughter of William, Sr.) was born in 1771; in 1791 she married Stephen Sexton, who was a stepson of Thomas Wilson, an early settler of Peters township; in April, 1802, she removed to Poland, in Mahoning county, Ohio, where she resided until her death, April 30, 1830; her husband died in 1856, aged ninety-four years; they had issue: John, Nancy (wife of John Justice), Joseph, William, Stephen, Jr., and Martha (wife of Isaac Justice). Francis (son of William, Sr.) was born in 1773; in 1795 he married Rosanna Frew, daughter of Alexander Frew, and soon afterward removed to Slippery Rock, in Lawrence county, where he resided until his death June 5, 1837; his wife died in 1846; they had issue: Ann (wife of Joseph Eccles), William and Alexander. Guyon (son of William, Sr.) was born in April, 1775; in 1807 he married Hannah Cannon, and resided in Peters township until his death, October 1, 1846; his wife died in 1872, aged eighty-five years; no issue. Ann (daughter of William, Sr.) was born in 1777; after the death of her father she removed to the home of her sister, Elizabeth Sexton, at Poland, Ohio; in 1821 she married John Frew, son of Alexander Frew, and removed to Slippery Rock, in Lawrence county, where she resided until her death, June 11, 1852; her husband died in 1853, aged eighty-three years; no issue. William, Jr. (son of William, Sr.), was born in 1779; until middle life he resided in Washington county; in his latter years he removed to Lawrence county, where he resided with his nephew William, son of his brother Francis, until his death in 1855. Seth (son of William, Sr.) was born in 1781; in 1809 he married Rachel Laird, daughter of James and Elizabeth Laird; in 1811 he removed to Mesopotamia, in Trumbull county, Ohio, where he was killed by the falling of a tree, June 16, 1823; no issue; his widow, who married John Chambers, died in 1850, aged sixty years. David (youngest of the family of William, Sr.) was born in 1783; he married Priscilla Braden, and resided in Peters township until his death, January 28, 1830; no issue; his widow married Alexander McBurney.

(2) Elizabeth, daughter of Guyon Morrison, Sr., was probably the second in order of birth. About 1760 she married John Loughridge, Jr., and resided in East Nottingham, in Chester county, until her death in 1767. Her husband had died in 1766. They had issue: Elizabeth and Margaret, who accompanied their grandfather Morrison on his removal to the Chartiers Valley. By his will they were made legatees of his estate. There is reason to believe that Elizabeth married a Mr. Cochrane, prior to the year 1789. It is thought probable that Margaret was unmarried, and had died prior to that year. Nothing further is known of them.

(3) John, son of Guyon Morrison, Sr., was probably the third in order of birth. He was one of the executors of his father's estate. His name is found in the list of the first grand jury called, under the authority of Pennsylvania, to meet in Washington county. He acquired a large tract of land in Peters township, where he resided until his death in March, 1789. He was unmarried.

(4) Jane, daughter of Guyon Morrison, Sr., was born probably in 1740. About 1762 she married Thomas Grier, who had come from Northern Ireland some years before, and removed to the adjoining township of Oxford, in Chester county, where she resided for a time. Afterward she removed to a tract of land near Carlisle, in Cumberland county, where she resided until her death in January, 1823. Her husband had died in March, 1803. They had issue: Catherine, Elizabeth, Mary, James, Guyon, George, Margaret, Jane, David, Rebecca, Thomas and John.

Catherine (eldest of the family of Jane) was born about 1764; after the death of her mother she removed with her brother John to Perry county, where she died in 1840; she was unmarried. Elizabeth (daughter of Jane) was born about the year 1766; she married James Wilson, Jr., and resided in Cumberland county; while visiting her kindred in Beaver county she died at the home of her brother George about 1835; no issue. Mary (daughter of Jane) was born probably about 1768; after the death of her father she removed to the home of her brother Thomas, with whom she resided until her death, the date of which is not known; she was unmarried. James and Guyon (twin sons of Jane) were born in 1770; about 1800 James married Miss Espy, who died soon afterward without issue; in 1807 he married Maria Stuart; in 1810 he removed to the Chartiers Valley, and resided in North Strabane township, Washington county, until his death November 22, 1833; his wife died in 1859, aged seventy-nine years; they had issue: Samuel Stuart, Thomas, Guyon, Jane, David and James, Jr. Samuel Stuart, born in 1808, married Margaret Donaldson, and resided in Columbiana county, Ohio, until his death in 1886. Thomas, who entered the ministry, became pastor of a Presbyterian Church in a western city, where he died during his pastorate; he was unmarried. Guyon and Jane died on reaching adult years. David completed a course in medicine, and settled in Warren county, Ill., where he was engaged in practice until his death in 1886. James, Jr., born in 1820, married Hannah Van Eman, and resides on the homestead; they had issue: Mary (deceased), William, Jane, Rebecca, Anna, Frances and Thomas. Guyon (twin son of Jane) came to Washington county probably as early as 1795; about 1800 he married Polly Allison, and removed to Beaver, where he resided until 1819, when he removed elsewhere; some years afterward he returned to Washington county, and resided at the home of his brother James until his death, August 12, 1832; his wife had died probably about 1819; they had issue: John, born probably about 1805, who resided in Wheeling, W. Va., at the time of his father's death, but of whose subsequent history nothing is known. George (son of Jane) was born probably in 1772; about 1800 he removed to Beaver county, and founded the town long known as Griersburgh, now called Darlington; about 1804 he married Anna Taggart, who died in 1811; they had issue: Robert, Jane (wife of John Rider, and afterward wife of John Boon, of Washington county), and Margaret, wife of John Duncan; in August, 1812, he married Elizabeth Woods, who survived him; he died October 10, 1844; they had issue: George, Jr., and Elizabeth (wife of William Adams). Margaret (daughter of Jane) was probably the next in order of birth; she married Thomas Clemens, and removed to Beaver county, where she and her husband died many years ago; they had issue: Thomas, John, Margaret (wife of Mr. Parkinson), Elizabeth (wife of Jonathan Stewart), James, Jane, Ann, Alexander, Guyon and Robert. Jane (daughter of Jane) was probably the next in order of birth; on March 29, 1796, she married William Campbell, and removed to Beaver county, where her husband died prior to 1820; she survived her husband many years; they had issue: Thomas, James, Robert and Alexander. David (son of Jane) was probably the next in order of birth; about 1800 he married Rachel Stuart, and removed to Beaver county, where he resided for some years; afterward he removed to Portage county, Ohio; about 1840 he removed to the West; he is said to have survived his wife, and to have died about 1850; they had issue: Thomas, Alexander, William, James, David, Jr., and Rachel. Rebecca (daughter of Jane) was probably the next in order of birth; she married Hon. Robert Sears, of New York, whom she survived; she died many years ago without issue. Thomas (son of Jane) was born in 1780; he graduated at Dickinson College in 1797, studied for the ministry, and was licensed by the Presbytery of New Castle in 1800; in 1801 he was installed as pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Middletown, Lancaster county, where he remained some years; about 1830 he was called to the pastorate of the church of Cold Spring, in Putnam county, N. Y., where he died May 19, 1834; he was twice married, but the names of his wives are not known; he had issue: George, William, John, Smith, Decatur and Charles. John (youngest of the family of Jane) was born probably in 1782; in 1803 he was appointed one of the administrators of his father's estate; in 1829 he married Maria Bovard, and soon afterward removed to Perry county, where his wife died in 1848; he removed to Harrisburg, where he resided until his death in 1854; they had issue: Mary Ellen (wife of Mr. Crumleigh), Rebecca Jane and Charles.

(5) Margaret, daughter of Guyon Morrison, Sr., was born probably in 1742. About 1763 she married Josiah Crawford and resided, for a time, in East Nottingham, Chester county. It is probable that she accompanied her kindred on their removal to the Chartiers Valley. She resided on a tract in North Strabane township, near the east branch of Chartiers creek, where she died about 1795. Her husband died in May, 1797. They had issue: Elizabeth, Andrew, John, Josiah, Jr., James, Alexander, Guyon, Margaret, Hannah, William and Mary.

Elizabeth (eldest of the family of Margaret) was born in 1765; about 1788 she married James Laird; in 1809 she removed to Mesopotamia in Trumbull county, Ohio, where she resided until her death, August 23, 1826; her husband survived her some years; they had issue: Rachel (wife of Seth Morrison), John, Matthew, Andrew, Josiah, Seth and James. Andrew (son of Margaret) was probably the next in order of birth; about 1809 he married Mrs. Sarah (Ray) Sparks, and resided in Chartiers township until his death in 1813; his wife died near the same time; they had issue: Hannah, born in 1810, who married David Palmer about 1840, and resided in Chartiers township until her death in 1873; they had issue: Thompson, Margaret (wife of George Newton Watson), Elizabeth (wife of Mr. Reed), and Sarah (wife of James Arthurs). John (son of Margaret) was probably the next in order of birth; he was one of the executors of his father's estate; after the settlement of the estate, he removed to Trumbull county, Ohio, where in 1805, he married Margaret Wilson; nothing further is known of him. Josiah, Jr. (son of Margaret) was born in 1770; in 1795 he married Eleanor Reynolds, and resided on the homestead in North Strabane township, where his wife died in 1826; they had issue: John, Margaret, William and Elizabeth; secondly, he married Prudence Hanna, who survived him but left no issue; he died March 8, 1851. John, born in 1797, married Sarah Quivey, and they removed to the West where they had issue of whom nothing is known. Margaret, born in 1799, married Daniel Bell, and resided in Peters township until her death in 1889; she survived her husband many years; they had issue: Elizabeth, Eleanor (wife of James Coleman), John, Jacob, Solomon, Anna, Margaret and Jane. William, born about 1805, married Miss Bennett, and afterward Miss Hamilton, and resided on the homestead until his death in 1887; he had issue: Josiah, John, William Hamilton, Joseph, Eleanor and Mary Jane. Elizabeth, born about 1815, married James Kerr, and resided on a portion of the homestead until her death in 1889; her husband died in 1891; they had issue: Josiah, Prudence Jane (wife of David Bradford Craig), and James, William and Robert. James (son of Margaret) was born probably in 1772; he is said to have removed to Trumbull county, Ohio, but nothing is known of his history. Alexander (son of Margaret) was born probably in 1774; at an early day he removed to Trumbull county, Ohio, where, in 1816, he married Catherine Hoyles; nothing further is known of him. Guyon (son of Margaret) was born in 1776; he removed to Mesopotamia, in Trumbull county, Ohio, where he died in 1822; he was unmarried. Margaret (daughter of Margaret) was born in 1780; she married Alexander Shields, and removed to Hanover in Columbiana county, Ohio, where she and her husband died many years ago; they are said to have had issue, but nothing further is known of the family. Hannah (daughter of Margaret) was born about 1782; she resided on the homestead, where she died many years ago; she was unmarried. William (son of Margaret) was born probably in 1784; he removed to Trumbull county, Ohio, where he died in 1807. Mary (youngest of the family of Margaret) was born probably in 1787; she married Thomas Ray, and removed from Washington county. They are said to have had issue, but nothing further is known of the family.

(6) Francis, son of Guyon Morrison, Sr., was born about 1745. In 1768 he married Agnes Frew. On his removal to this region, he settled in Peters township, near the junction of the east and west branches of Chartiers creek. In October, 1778, he was appointed lieutenant of the militia by the court of Yohogania county, Va. In December, 1791, he disposed of his property in the Chartiers Valley, and removed to the region of Sugar Loaf mountain, in Fayette county, where he resided until his death, which occurred about 1800. His wife died in Lawrence county about 1830. They had issue: Elizabeth, Alexander, Guyon, James, William, John, Francis, Jr., Nancy, Rachel, David and Thomas.

Elizabeth (eldest of the family of Francis, Sr.) was born September 23, 1769; in 1791 she married Daniel Quivey, Sr., and resided near Canonsburg, in Washington county; she survived her husband some years, dying about 1850; they had issue: John, James, Daniel, Jr., Sarah, Nancy, Julia, Henrietta and Elizabeth. John and James (sons of Elizabeth) removed to Ohio, and nothing further is known of them. Daniel, Jr. (son of Elizabeth), married and settled in Chartiers township, where he and his wife died a number of years ago, leaving issue: Maria (wife of Stewart Miller), Letitia, James (who married Mary White, and resides on the homestead) and Julia. Sarah (daughter of Elizabeth) married John Crawford, survived her husband and resided in the West until her death, the date of which is not known. Nancy (daughter of Elizabeth), born about 1800, married William Flanagan, and resided near Canonsburg until her death in 1890; she survived her husband some years; they had issue, of whom we have no information. Julia (daughter of Elizabeth) married John Holland, and resided at Bentleyville, where she and her husband died a number of years ago, leaving issue of whom we have no information. Henrietta (daughter of Elizabeth) married John Melbravy, and removed to Harrison county, Ohio, where they resided for some years; afterward they removed to the West, where she and her husband died some years ago, leaving issue of whom nothing is known. Elizabeth (daughter of Elizabeth) married Benjamin Crawford, and resided in North Strabane township until her death in 1889, at the age of eighty years; she survived her husband, and left issue: Daniel, Benjamin, John, Morgan, Elizabeth, Nancy, and Margaret (wife of Samuel Phillips). Daniel married Jane Chubbie, and resided in North Strabane until his death, in 1891; he left issue: D. Quivey, Bathsheba and Lonsarba, who reside in Canonsburg. Of the history of the other members of this family we have no information.

Alexander (son of Francis, Sr.) was born May 16, 1773; he married Catherine Hoagland, and removed to Lawrence county, where he resided for a number of years; he survived his wife; they had issue: Hoagland, Agnes (wife of John Francis), William, Alexander, Catherine (wife of Charles Lytle), and Guyon; about 1820 he returned to Fayette county, where he resided until his death in 1817; his second wife was Rachel Simmons, who survived him some years; they had issue: Mrs. Rachel Daniels, Mrs. Elizabeth Daniels, Mrs. Anna Woodmansee, Susan, the wife of Andrew Boyd, Francis Thomas, Mrs. Naomi Daniels, and Hannah the wife of Owen Burgess. Guyon (son of Francis, Sr.) was born on June 21, 1775; about 1800 he married, and resided in Somerset county for a time; afterward he removed to Frankfort, Ky., where he resided until his death by drowning, the date of which event is not known; he is said to have left issue, but nothing is known of them. James (son of Francis, Sr.) was born July 23, 1777; about 1800 he married Elizabeth Clay; in 1811 he removed to Camp Run, in Lawrence county, where he resided until his death in August, 1821; his wife survived him many years; they had issue: Francis James, Leonard, Mrs. Ruth Ashton, William, Job Clark, David, Nancy (wife of William Ayers) and Thomas. William (son of Francis, Sr.) was born June 7, 1779; when eighteen years of age he went on a trip down the Ohio, and was never heard of afterward. John (son of Francis, Sr.) was born February 22, 1781; it is probable that he died in youth, as nothing further is known of him. Francis, Jr. (son of Francis, Sr.), was born February 13, 1783; about 1804 he married Elizabeth Wellington whom he survived; they had issue: James, Enoch, William and Mrs. Elizabeth Wells; about 1820 he married Mary Thorp; he resided in the region of Sugar Loaf mountain until his death, November 14, 1845; his wife survived him; they had issue: Francis D., Nancy (wife of Isaac Hall), and Mary Ann (wife of Samuel Hall). Nancy (daughter of Francis, Sr.) was born June 16, 1785; she married Col. James Stewart, and settled on a tract, near Camp run, in Lawrence county, where she resided until her death, the date of which is not known; she is said to have left issue but nothing is known of them. Rachel (daughter of Francis, Sr.) was born November 5, 1787; she married John Scott, and settled on a tract, near Camp Run in Lawrence county, where she resided until her death, the date of which is not known; she is said to have left issue, but nothing is known of them. David (son of Francis, Sr.) was born April 5, 1790; he married, and resided for a time in Lawrence county; afterward he removed to Homer, in Champaign county, Ill., where he died many years ago; he is said to have left issue, but nothing is known of them. Thomas (youngest of the family of Francis, Sr.) was born July 16, 1792; on February 9, 1813, he married Nancy Eceles, and settled on a tract near Camp run, in Lawrence county, where he resided until his death February 21, 1851; his wife survived him some years; they had issue: Joseph, David, Angelina (wife of Samuel Brandon), and others whose names are not known.

(7) Guyon Morrison, Jr., son of Guyon Morrison, Sr., was born probably in 1750. About 1776 he married Hannah Rankin, and settled on a portion of the homestead. In October, 1778, he was appointed lieutenant of the militia by the Court of Yohogania county, Va. In May, 1792, he sold the portion of the homestead (which he had inherited from his father) to Rev. Matthew Henderson, and soon afterward removed to Cynthiana, Ky., where he resided until his death September 1, 1825. His wife died in 1846, aged about ninety-six years. They had issue: Margaret, Hannah, David and Matilda. Margaret (eldest of the family of Guyon, Jr.) was born about 1778; about 1800 she married Mr. Steele, and resided at Versailles, Ky., where she died in October, 1808; she is said to have left issue, but nothing is known of them. Hannah (daughter of Guyon, Jr.) was born probably in 1782; she married Thompson Wigglesworth, and resided near Cynthiana, Ky., until her death, May 30, 1853; they had no issue. David (son of Guyon, Jr.) was born in 1784; about 1814 he married Sarah ———, and resided on the homestead until his death, July 2, 1826; they had issue: Zerelda (wife of Perry Wherritt), John and Guyon. Matilda (youngest of the family of Guyon, Jr.) was born about 1790; she married Mr. Keenon, and removed to Mt. Olivet, Ky., where she resided until her death February 28, 1819; they had issue: Matilda (wife of Mr. Goff, of Mt. Olivet).

(S) James, youngest of the family of Guyon Morrison, Sr., was born in 1755. He inherited that portion of the homestead on which his father had lived and died. After the formation of Washington county, he was commissioned as captain of a company of the Washington Rangers, who were organized for defense against the intrusions of savage foes. In 1791 he married Mary Gibson, daughter of William Gibson, Sr., of Lancaster county, and sister of the wife of James Bradford, Jr., of Strabane township. He was a member of the first board of trustees of the Chartiers (Presbyterian) Church, over which Dr. John McMillan so long served as pastor. He resided on the homestead until his death, November 14, 1813, and was buried in the graveyard on his own farm beside the remains of his father. His wife died August 23, 1834, at the age of sixty-five years. Her remains were deposited beside those of her husband, in their quiet resting place. A few years ago their remains were removed, and were interred in the cemetery at Washington. They had issue: William, Margaret, John, Elizabeth, James, Jr., Guyon and Mary.

William, the eldest of the family of James, Sr., was born March 19, 1793; in 1833 he married Sarah Munce, and resided, for a time, on a portion of the homestead; afterward, he purchased an adjoining tract to which he removed, and on which he resided until his death, on May 13, 1853; his wife died February 26, 1885, aged about eighty years; they had issue: Mary, Sarah, Elizabeth, Margaret, James G. and Anna. Of the family of William, Mary, Margaret and James G. are unmarried, and reside in the borough of Washington. James G. owns his father's portion of the Morrison homestead. Sarah, daughter of William, married John B. Miller, late of Canton township, but died a number of years ago, without issue. Elizabeth, daughter of William, married John Russell in 1864, and resides in Chartiers township; she survives her husband, who died in January, 1893, leaving issue: Lula (wife of Rev. J. R. Hosick), Anna and J. Mack

(a student of medicine). Anna, youngest of the family of William, married John Gibson Johnson, and has since resided in Cross Creek village; they have issue: George V., William M. and Ernest.

Margaret (daughter of James, Sr.) was born January 2, 1795; in 1818 she married James Bradford, and removed to Cadiz, in Harrison Co., Ohio, where her husband died in October, 1826, at the age of thirty-seven years. They had issue: James M., David and Elizabeth (surname Bradford). Afterward she returned to the home of her kindred in Washington county. In 1832 she married David Watson, and resided in Chartiers township, where her husband died May 22, 1843, at the age of fifty-one years. They had issue: John M., Mary and George Newton (surname Watson). Afterward she removed to her inheritance in Peters township, where she resided until her death, January 17, 1875.

James M. Bradford (eldest of the family of Margaret) was born in February, 1820; on reaching adult years he returned to Harrison county, Ohio, where he has resided ever since; in 1844 he married Juliana Lewis, who died in December, 1890; they had issue: Ann Eliza, born in 1845, who married Dr. J. G. Kennedy, and, secondly, Marion Coats, and died in April, 1890, leaving issue, Wilbur W. Kennedy. David Bradford (son of Margaret) was born December 24, 1824; on July 14, 1859, he married Rebecca Ann Bell, and has resided in Chartiers township ever since; for many years he was engaged in the mercantile business, but, latterly, he has retired from that employment, and for some time has resided in Houstonville; politically, he has been honored, by the people of Washington county, with a term as county auditor, and with a term as county commissioner; they have had issue: John and Mary. John, who was born August 22, 1860, is unmarried, and resides with his parents; Mary died October 5, 1889, in early womanhood. Elizabeth Bradford (daughter of Margaret) resided with her mother in her declining years; after the death of her mother she removed to Scio, Harrison Co., Ohio, where she still resides; she is unmarried. John M. Watson (son of Margaret) was born January 31, 1834; in 1866 he married Sarah Borland, and resided on the homestead in Peters township for some years; afterward he purchased a tract in North Strabane township where he has since resided; they have no issue. Mary Watson (daughter of Margaret) was born about 1836; in October, 1859, she married Peter Martin, and has since resided in Chartiers township; they have issue: Eva (wife of John Jamison), Anna, George and Elizabeth. George Newton Watson (youngest of the family of Margaret) was born in December, 1839; in 1876, he married Margaret Palmer, and removed to Washington county, Iowa, where he resided until his death in May, 1891; they had issue: two daughters.

John (son of James, Sr.) was born March 19, 1797. He inherited that portion of the homestead on which his father and grandfather had lived and died. In 1867 he removed to Harrison county, Ohio, where he resided with his nephew, James M. Bradford. In 1870 he sold his inheritance in Chartiers township, in Washington county, to his brother Guyon. Afterward he returned to Washington county, where he resided at the home of his nephew, David Bradford, until his death, November 25, 1880. He was unmarried.

Elizabeth (daughter of James, Sr.) was born November 11, 1798. On December 4, 1823, she married Andrew Allison, son of Judge James Allison, and resided on the Allison homestead, in Chartiers township, where her husband died, January 26, 1854, at the age of fifty-nine years. After the death of her husband, she removed to Canonsburg, where she resided for some years. Afterward she removed to the home of her daughter, Henrietta, in Warren county, Ohio, where she resided until her death, November 19, 1878. They had issue: Mary, James, George, Rachel, Margaret, Elizabeth, Henrietta and Andrew, Jr. Of the family of Elizabeth, Mary, George and Margaret died in January, 1836. James (son of Elizabeth) was born April 16, 1826; he completed a classical course in Jefferson College, but died soon afterward, on January 21, 1849. Rachel (daughter of Elizabeth) died, July 26, 1857, in early womanhood. Elizabeth (daughter of Elizabeth) was born October 21, 1836; on March 29, 1855, she married Dr. John W. Martin, a physician of Canonsburg, who afterward entered the mercantile business in which he has been engaged ever since; she died September 14, 1881; they had issue: James Allison (deceased), Charles Edward, John Clark, Ralph, and Mary (wife of William A. Dickson). Henrietta (daughter of Elizabeth) was born March 31, 1840; on May 3, 1865, she married Joseph W. Culbertson, and removed to Warren county, Ohio, where she still resides; they have issue: Mary (wife of John Harkrader), James Martin (deceased) and Isabella. Andrew, Jr. (youngest of the family of Elizabeth) was born January 26, 1845; he graduated in the classical course at Jefferson College in 1865; he completed a course in medicine in Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and removed to Westchester, in Butler Co., Ohio, where he was engaged in the practice of medicine until his death, September 26, 1871; he was unmarried.

James, Jr. (son of James, Sr.) was born November 28, 1800. He settled on the portion of the homestead, which he had inherited from his father, where he resided until his death September 27, 1875. He left his inheritance to his son James, who still owns the property. James, son of James, Jr., was born April 26, 1835. On December 11, 1866, he married Elizabeth McPeak, and for a time resided on the homestead. Some years ago he removed to Canonsburg, where he has resided ever since. They have no issue.

Guyon Morrison, whose portrait appears in connection with this sketch of the Morrison family, and who is a son of James Morrison, Sr., was born August 5, 1804. He attended Jefferson College for some time, but did not graduate. On May 23, 1833, he married Jane Johnston, daughter of Richard and Jane (Bradford) Johnston, and removed to Belmont county, Ohio, where for a time he was engaged in mercantile business. In 1836 he removed to the adjoining county of Harrison, and resided on a farm near Franklin until 1870. In that year he purchased from his brother John the homestead inheritance, in Chartiers township, Washington county. In the same year he returned to the home of his boyhood, where he resided until his death, December 11, 1876. The death of his wife occurred June 2, 1888, at the age of seventy-seven years. They had issue: John.

In a brief reference to the life of Guyon Morrison, it may be stated that from his youth he was a diligent student of science, history and literature. In regard to public improvements and public issues, his views were liberal and progressive. In accord with the history and traditions of his kindred, he was a Whig, and, later, a Republican. In his religious belief, he was a strict constructionist. He had been reared under the ministry of Dr. John McMillan, who, during his long pastorate, had rigidly adhered to the use of the Scripture Psalms in the worship of the sanctuary. After his removal to Ohio, he became a member of the Associate Reformed Church, and retained his connection also with its successor the United Presbyterian Church, until his death. He was chosen a ruling elder in the Associate Reformed Church of Franklin, and served in that capacity until his removal from that region. He was tolerant of the opinions and prejudices of his fellow-men. He died as he had lived, a consistent Christian.

John, son of Guyon, was born November 18, 1848. He completed a classical course at Monmouth College, at Monmouth, Ill., where he graduated in 1869. In January, 1879, he became associated with Rev. A. G. McCoy in the publication of the Christian Instructor, which they had purchased, and removed from Philadelphia to Chicago. He was engaged in this work for sixteen months, when he disposed of his interest in the publication and retired from the management. Afterward he was, for some time, engaged in mercantile business in Chicago. After disposing of this property, he entered upon the study of medicine. He completed the course at Rush Medical College, where, in 1887, he received the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Afterward he removed to Canonsburg, Penn., where he has since resided. He is a life member of the Western Pennsylvania Humane Society, Historical Society and University Extension Society. He is still in possession of the Morrison homestead in Chartiers township.

Mary Morrison (youngest of the family of James, Sr.) was born November 16, 1806. In 1829 she married Marshall McCall, and removed to Belmont county, Ohio. From there she removed to the adjoining county of Harrison, where she resided until her death, September 17, 1849. Her husband married a second time, and removed to Wenona, Marshall Co., Ill., where he resided until his death, September 29, 1873, at the age of sixty-eight years. They had issue: John A., James M., Mary Jane and Margaret. John A., eldest of the family of Mary, was born probably in 1830. He attended a course at Franklin College, New Athens, Ohio. He studied law at Cadiz, Ohio, where he was admitted to the bar. Soon afterward he married Margaret Henderson, and removed to Wenona, Ill., where he resided for a number of years. Afterward he removed to Kansas, where he has since resided. They have issue: Marshall, Elizabeth, Sarah, and perhaps others whose names are not known. James M., son of Mary, was born probably in 1832. He accompanied his brother John on the removal of the latter to Wenona, Ill., where he has resided ever since. He is unmarried. Mary Jane, daughter of Mary, was born about 1835. About 1854 she married Leonard D. Rowley, and resided some years in Harrison county, Ohio. Afterward she removed to Mendota, Ill., where she resided until her death about 1876. Her husband, who survived her, removed to Akron, Ohio, where he has since resided. They had issue: Catherine (wife of Mr. McGalliard, of Akron, Ohio) and John (who resides at the same place). Margaret, daughter of Mary, was born about 1838. About 1858 she married Dr. Arter, of Carrollton, Ohio. After a residence of some years at that place, she removed to Canton, Ohio, where she has since resided. They have no issue.

THOMAS H. RALSTON is a native of Brooke county, W. Va., where his ancestors were among the earliest residents along King's creek. The first member of this well-known family to locate in that vicinity was Joseph Ralston, who was born and married in Scotland. He came to America prior to the Revolution, and finally settled in Brooke county, W. Va., where he took up a vast tract of land on King's creek. Indians were numerous then, and wild beasts roamed through the forest, making pioneer life extremely dangerous. The family of Joseph Ralston consisted of but two sons, Joseph and Samuel. They were frequently taken with the mother to Fort Pitt (where Pittsburgh now stands), while the father lived for months in his cabin in the wilderness, without a fire, lest the attention of the Indians should be attracted. Joseph Ralston and his wife passed their days on the farm, and in a good old age were laid to rest in Three Springs cemetery, Brooke county, W. Va. The land, which had then increased in value, was left to his two sons. Samuel (the younger son), was married to Martha Tucker, of Hanover township, who bore him four sons and eight daughters, all of whom lived to marry and have children.

Joseph Ralston, eldest son of Joseph, was first married to Ann McCready, of Beaver county, who lived with her parents on Mill creek, now Hookstown, Penn. They were early settlers in that section, and of Irish descent. To this union were born ten sons and one daughter. The youngest child, named McCready, died unmarried at the age of twenty-eight years, and the only daughter was married to Daniel Wilson; the others were also married. The mother died and was buried in Three Springs cemetery. For his second choice Joseph Ralston selected Sarah Greer, a native of Carroll county, Ohio, living near Harlem Springs. She bore him seven children, of whom one died in infancy, and another never married. The father lived to be about seventy-two years of age, dying about 1835. The greater part of his life was passed in farming, and he built the first gristmill in that country. His property became very valuable, and the gristmill was owned and operated by his descendants of the two generations following. After a long and useful life, he was laid to rest in Three Springs cemetery, where his parents and wives were buried.

Joseph Ralston was the oldest of the eleven children born to Joseph and Ann (McCready) Ralston. He was born March 5, 1791, on the old homestead in Brooke county, W. Va. When a young man he learned the miller's trade in his father's mill, and finally took charge of the business, which he conducted for many years. In 1817 he married Lucinda P. Holmes, who was born March 7, 1795, east of the mountains. She was a daughter of Thomas and Nancy (McNeely) Holmes, both of whom were natives of County Donegal, Ireland. The McNeely family was an eminent one in Ireland, and the brothers of Nancy were all legislators there. Thomas Holmes was a shoemaker, and in about 1789 came to America, locating temporarily near New York City. He removed farther west and settled in Brooke county, W. Va., where he died at the age of ninety-six years. His wife died when over one hundred years old, in Guernsey county, Ohio, at the home of her son, Isaac Holmes.

The children of Joseph and Lucinda P. (Holmes) Ralston were born as follows: Isaac, was killed when a young man, by a horse; Mary A., is the wife of J. H. Harper, of Burgettstown, Penn.; Joseph, a miller, while taking a cargo of flour to New Orleans, contracted bilious fever in that city, died May 30, 1846; Thomas H., whose sketch follows; Eli, deceased at the age of two years; Caroline, Mrs. Miller Shane, of Burgettstown, Penn.; and William, a school teacher, died January 1, 1861, at the age of twenty-eight years. Mr. Ralston passed his life on the old place, and followed milling. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and voted with the Democratic party. • He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Three Springs, of which he was an elder for many years. In 1846, while on a trip to Buffalo, N. Y., with a cargo of flour, he was taken sick with bilious fever, and returning home, died July 18, 1846, followed by his wife December 26, of the same year. They were buried in Three Springs cemetery, which now contains four generations of this name, who were at one time by far the most numerous family on King's creek.

Thomas H. Ralston was born July 19, 1826, in Hancock county, W. Va., on the ancestral acres. In early life he learned the cooper's trade, in which he became an expert. When his elder brother died, he took charge of his father's mill, in which business he continued many years. On April 26, 1859, he was married to Rebecca Graham, who was born January 17, 1833, in Hancock county, W. Va., a daughter of Thomas and Honor Graham. Their union has been blessed with the following children: Lucinda P. (Mrs. James Work, of Florence), William S. (a farmer of Hanover township), George G. (at home), Anna K. (Mrs. S. F. Campbell, of Hanover township), and Jessie M. (at home). Mr. Ralston conducted the old mill until April 10, 1873, when he came to Hanover township, Washington county, locating on the "Moses McLaughlin" place, where he has since resided. He is now following farming and stock raising, having made many improvements on the place, which are indicative of his progressive spirit. He owns several good farms, and is one of the leading men of Hanover township. He, his wife and children are members of the Frankfort Presbyterian Church.

MRS. JEMIMA JACKMAN was born July 30, 1805, in East Pike Run township, Penn. She is the widow of Joshua Jackman, and daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Dixon) Bailey. Her parents were born in eastern Pennsylvania, and came, when children, with their parents to Washington county, where they were afterward married. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey were the parents of the following children: Ann, John, Mary, Martha, Thomas, Ruth, Hannah, Isaac, Elizabeth, Henry and Jemima. Of this family the latter is the only one living. The father was a farmer and stock dealer, and died at the age of eighty years, the mother having been laid to rest at the age of sixty years. Both were members of the Quaker Church. On April 11, 1835, Jemima Bailey was united in marriage with Joshua Jackman, son of William and Elizabeth (Conley) Jackman, who were natives of County Carlow, Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Jackman came to America many years ago, and settled on a large tract of land in East Pike Run township, where their children were born and reared as follows: Bernard, William, Mary, Eliza, Joshua, John, Margaret, Nancy, and four who died in infancy.

Joshua Jackman was born January 29, 1795, on the home place in East Pike Run township. He always resided on the farm, and in politics voted the Republican ticket. He died September 27, 1867, and his widow is living in the old house, which has been her home since 1839. The farm embraces 100 acres of well cultivated land, including a good storehouse, barn and all modern improvements. Mrs. Jackman is now in her eighty-seventh year and bids fair to see her fourscore years and ten, being yet as active as many a woman of but sixty years, and still doing the greater part of her housework. She is a member of the Taylor M. E. Church, with which her husband was also identified. They had two daughters, namely: Sarah E., born February 11, 1840, who died December 29, 1845; and Mary M., born August 10, 1841, died January 3, 1846.

MRS. MARIA SPEER, one of the oldest and most highly esteemed residents of Peters township, Washington county, is the widow of James Speer, a son of James Speer, whose father, Robert Speer, came from Adams county, Penn., at a very early date, and first located in Washington county, but soon after moved with his family to New Concord, Muskingum Co., Ohio, where he died.

James Speer, son of Robert, was born in Adams county, Penn., and when quite young, came east of the mountains with his father, and spent the greater part of his boyhood days near New Concord, Ohio. In those days but few white settlers had penetrated the western forests of Ohio, and the Indians still held possession of the land. The Redmen of that vicinity were for the most part friendly to the "Palefaces," and often paid visits to the Speer family, on which occasions the squaws would invariably leave their papooses outside tightly strapped to a board. In the forest wilds, surrounded by Indians and savage beasts, James Speer grew to manhood, and was married to Miss Catherine Latta. After their wedding the young couple moved to Washington county, Penn., and settled on the farm in Peters township, where they lived until his death, November 14, 1849. Six children were born of their union, viz.: Deborah, Robert, Thomas L., James, Jane and Nancy, all of whom are now deceased. James Speer, Sr., was a member of the Associate Reformed Church, of Cross Roads, and one of its organizers. In politics he was a Whig.

James Speer

James Speer, son of James and Catherine Speer, was born December 10, 1810, on the farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., where his widow is yet living. He was trained in the usual duties of agriculture, and passed his youth on the place. On February 2, 1839, he married Miss Maria Calahan, who was born October 4, 1814, in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of the late Thomas Calahan, who was a son of Joseph Calahan, a native of Ireland. Her father was a carpenter. Her mother died when she was but five years of age, and she went to live with John Rankin, a farmer of Washington county, Penn., where she remained until her marriage. Of the union of James and Maria Speer were born eight children, viz.: Mary (Mrs. William Boon), Kate, Eliza J. (deceased), a son deceased in infancy, Adeline (wife of George Scott, of Des Moines, Iowa), Blanche (Mrs. James Emery, of Washington county), an infant daughter (deceased), Anna Margaret (widow of William Paden, has one son, Lloyd H., and is now living with her mother, Maria Speer). The home farm contains 127 acres of excellent land, on which a test oil well is being put down, oil having already been found in paying quantities; and they are still drilling with the expectation of finding more of the valuable lubricant. Mr. Speer was a Republican, and a member of the United Presbyterian Church, of Mt. Prospect. He died April 29, 1878.

FRANK CRAVEN. This enterprising young business man has from early boyhood been identified with the interests of California, Penn. His elementary education was obtained in the public schools of this village, and he then attended the Southwestern State Normal School, at California. After leaving school he was engaged in various pursuits near California, and served one year as mail clerk between Pittsburgh and Harrisburg, on the Pennsylvania Central Railroad. He then entered the employ of Morgan & Dixon, and soon afterward purchased a general store in partnership with L. T. Claybaugh. One year later Mr. Claybaugh sold his interest to John Dixon. Later Mr. Dixon retired and John S. Beazell purchased his interest; the firm is now Craven & Beazell, extensive dealers in groceries and general produce.

Frank Craven married Myrtilla, daughter of Jonathan West, October 17, 1878. This lady's father was a son of Thomas West, and grandson of Jonathan West. The latter was born in Ireland, and coming to America in youth, located permanently on a farm in Washington county, Penn. He was an Old-line Democrat in politics, and in religion one of the founders of the "West" Protestant Episcopal Church. His children were born as follows: Jonathan, Robert, Thomas, Edward, Mary (wife of Robert Gregg), Ann (Mrs. Morris) and Jane (Mrs. Howden). Thomas West, son of Jonathan, Sr., was born and reared in West Pike Run township. In early life he was married to Margaret Hopkins, who bore him three children, namely: Thomas, Catherine and Jonathan. The father followed agricultural pursuits, and lived but a few years after his marriage. Jonathan West, son of Thomas, was born in February, 1827, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., receiving his early education in the neighboring schools. In 1850 he was united in marriage with Melinda, daughter of Edward Gregg, who was born and reared in Washington county, Penn. Edward Gregg was married to Mary Maple, and their children were Mary J., wife of James Baker; Stephen; Melinda, wife of Jonathan West; Seth; Maria; John and Maple. Mr. Gregg was a prosperous farmer and stock raiser. He voted with the Whig and Republican parties, and was a member of the Taylor M. E. Church, in which he officiated as elder, class leader, and Sunday-school superintendent. He and his wife were buried in the Taylor Church cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. West resided on a farm in West Pike Run township until 1861, when they moved to Virginia, where he enlisted in Company B, Eighty second O. V. I. He was then sent to the army of the Potomac, and participated in numerous engagements. On July 2, 1863, he was captured at the battle of Gettysburg, and was first taken to Belle Isle, thence to Andersonville, where he died the following June. The children of this soldier were born as follows: Mary E. (deceased), Margaret E. (wife of D. H. Lewis), Mary J. (married to Emerson Reed), Dora I. (wife of John S. Beazell), Myrtilla (married to Frank Craven) and Kate.

THOMAS H. ACKLESON, an enterprising and prosperous farmer of Smith township, is a son of Thomas, and grandson of Thomas Ackleson, Sr. The last named was born, reared and married in Ireland, and coming to America soon afterward, located in the Chartiers Valley, Allegheny county, Penn., and reared the following children: Robert (born on the voyage across the ocean), John, James, Samuel, Thomas, Isabel and Mary, all of whom lived to an adult age. The father passed his life in agricultural pursuits, both he and his wife dying on the home farm.

Thomas Ackleson was born in 1800, on the home farm in Allegheny county. He received a limited education, then learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed in connection with agriculture almost to the close of his life. He married Letitia McConnell, daughter of George McConnell, a native of Ireland, who served in the war of the Revolution and in the war of 1812. She was born in Allegheny county in 1802. To her were born Mary Ann (who married Andrew Butler, who died two years after, leaving one daughter, Mary E., now Mrs. William Adams of Allegheny county. She next married Bingham McKnight, and to them one son was born—Alexander—now of Denver, Colo. He died in 1860), Sarah J. (unmarried, resides with her brother, Thomas H.), Isabel and Elizabeth (unmarried), Martha (deceased wife of John Woodburn), Thomas H. (of whom further mention is made), David McConnell (enlisted in Company I, First P. V. C., killed near Belle Plains) and Margaret (widow of George M. Pyle).

Mr. Ackleson followed farming in Allegheny county for some time after his marriage, then came to Washington county, locating on a farm near Hill's Station, Cecil township, and his last days were passed on a farm in Smith township. He was a Democrat before the war, afterward becoming a Republican; in private life as well as in public, he won the esteem of all. In religious connection he was a member of the U. P. Church. He died in 1881, having been preceded by his wife in 1856.

Thomas H. Ackleson was born February 25, 1839, in Cecil township, this county, and in early life began to assist in the duties of the farm, being educated in the neighboring district schools. He married Margaret Scott December 25, 1867, who was born in 1816, daughter of Finley Scott, of Smith township, this county, and they have had the following children: David M. (deceased at the age of nine years) and Finley S., Thomas L., Ida M., Chessie E., Samuel S., Emma M., John H., Annie B., Lizzie and Jennie Viola, all living at home. Thomas H. and Margaret (Scott) Ackleson first settled on a farm near Bavington, Smith township, and for several years sold agricultural implements at Burgettstown, this county. Afterward selling out, he moved to a place near Bulger's Station, and shipped milk to Pittsburgh. In 1887 he moved upon the well-improved farm he now occupies, situated about one mile and a half northwest of Burgettstown, Smith township, where he is very extensively engaged in the shipping business, being the leading dairyman in the vicinity. He is decidedly practical and progressive in his work, and has been president of the first creamery and cheese factory in Washington county, located at Bulger's Station, and has served as school director different terms, and other township offices. He has always been a leader in progressive movements, and identifies himself with everything tending to aid or improve his special work. He and his esteemed wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, and politically he is an adviser and counselor in the Republican party.

JACOB B. PHILLIS. The Phillis family were among the earliest residents of Smith township, Washington county. On May 10, 1776, Joseph Phillis received the first genuine land title which was issued in Smith township. He was born in Ireland, about 1744, and was married in that country to Elizabeth Little. In 1775 he came to America, locating in this county, near the present site of McDonald village. He raised the first crop of corn in that part of the county, which crop yielded fifty bushels to the acre, then considered a very large average. Joseph Phillis was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and after its close located on a part of the Hoagland and Crawford tract in Smith township, which has since been in the possession of the Phillis family, a portion of the old farm being now owned by the widow of Andrew Phillis. Before the first crops were raised, the family came near starving, and driven to desperation they decided to watch a cow and see upon what kind of vegetation she subsisted. After observation they made "greens" the food of the family, and so managed to exist until the grain was ripened to replenish the empty larder. Indians were numerous and hostile in those early days, and wild animals were plenty. The home of these early pioneers was known as the "Dunmore War tract," and under careful cultivation the wild land soon assumed an air of comfort and civilization, becoming in time a valuable piece of property. Joseph Phillis died in 1830, at an advanced age, his wife having "gone before" in 1827, leaving the following children: John (who died in Guernsey county, Ohio, was the father of sixteen children), James (deceased in the lumber regions of Pennsylvania), Joseph (passed the latter years of his life in Columbiana county, Ohio), Charles (deceased in Ohio), Jacob (mentioned farther on), William (deceased in youth), Thomas (passed his entire life in Smith township), Nancy (wife of David Alexander, a farmer of Smith township), Elizabeth (married to Thomas Cherry, of Mt. Pleasant township), Jane (wife of Joseph Walker) and Catharine (Mrs. Gilbert Hallick, of Smith township).

Jacob Phillis was born April 8, 1792, and reared on the home farm in Smith township, receiving a subscription-school education. Ann B. Phillis, wife of Jacob Phillis, born July 13, 1798, was a daughter of Robert Bruce. She bore him children as follows: Andrew (deceased), Joseph (deceased farmer of Smith township), Elizabeth (deceased wife of William Hammond), Nancy (wife of Thomas Pyles, of Guernsey county, Ohio), John (deceased at Cairo, Ill.), Mary (wife of Ephraim Wallower, of Ohio, now living in Des Moines, Iowa), Margaret (deceased wife of William Vance, Elizabethtown, Ky.), Jacob (deceased in early manhood), Jane (deceased wife of Isaac James), and Ellen (deceased wife of Talbert Shipley). After his marriage Mr. Phillis made a permanent home on a part of the original farm, and successfully pursued agriculture. He died in 1847, and his widow passed away December 17, 1871.

Andrew Phillis, son of Jacob and Ann (Bruce) Phillis, was born February 5, 1818, on the old homestead in Smith township, where his boyhood days were passed, receiving his education at the country schools. In 1857 he was united in marriage with Mary M. Leech, who was born in 1828, daughter of James Leech, Esq., of Smith township. This wife died August 1, 1864, having borne him two children: James P. (deceased at the age of four years), and Jacob B. (whose name opens this sketch). The mother was laid to rest in the United Presbyterian cemetery at Burgettstown. On August 28, 1867, Andrew Phillis married, for his second wife, Mary A. Logan, who was born March 6, 1834, in Hancock county, W. Va., daughter of William Logan, a native of Ireland. The children born to the union of Andrew and Mary (Logan) Phillis were as follows: Margaret S., John L., Lizzie May, Annie M. and Ella J., all of whom are living at home. Andrew Phillis always resided on the home farm, where he died April 18, 1890. He was formerly a Whig, then united with the Republican party. In religion he was connected with the United Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, this county. He was a successful and respected farmer, and his widow and children have managed the place since his death.

JOHAN NEELY was but an infant when his parents came to Washington county, Penn. His father, John Neely, was born in 1798 in County Tyrone, Ireland, being a weaver by trade. In early life the latter was married to Elizabeth Finton, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, daughter of Robert Finton. In 1841 this couple sailed from Londonderry, Ireland, on the vessel "North America," commanded by Capt. William Baker. They landed at Philadelphia, Penn., thence pushing westward, and crossing the Alleghany mountains on the old inclined planes, located in Hanover township, this county, where they began farming. They were the parents of three children, all of whom were born in Ireland, viz.: Samuel M. and Catherine, living in Hanover township at very advanced ages, and John. The father died in 1881, having been preceded to the grave by his wife.

John Neely, son of John and Elizabeth Neely, was born February, 20, 1840, in Cooley Parish, County Tyrone, Ireland, and was reared on the farm in Pennsylvania, also attending the subscription schools of his adopted State. On January 21, 1868, he wooed and won Clarissa A. Hart, of Tuscarawas county, Ohio. She was born in October, 1844, and was a daughter of Leonard Hart, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, who was an early settler of Ohio. The children of John and Clarissa Neely were as follows: George P., Margaret E., John L., Clarissa J., Stewart E., Catherine A., Emma L., Samuel M., Clarence H., Robert S., and Ray, of whom Stewart E., Catherine A., and Ray are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Neely resided in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, for sixteen years after their marriage, and in 1881 came to Washington county, Penn., locating in Hanover township on the "old Fullerton farm," where they have since lived. Mr. Neely is a farmer and stock raiser, and was among the first to conceive the idea of a creamery in his neighborhood. He took an active part in organizing a stock company for the operation of the proposed industry, which unfortunately failed to materialize, resulting in financial loss to Mr. Neely. Politically he is a Democrat, and in religious faith both he and his estimable wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Samuel Neely was married in 1875 to a Miss Maria Dixon, of Clinton, Washington county. They have three children: John D., James S. and Catherine B.

JOHAN JAMES MARTIN, one of the most progressive citizens of West Bethlehem township, was born February 28, 1828, on the farm of his father, in that township.

He is a grandson of James Martin, a native of New Jersey, who emigrated to Washington county in the latter part of the last century, settling upon the tract in West Bethlehem township, part of which his grandson still owns. Here he toiled until death called him, at an advanced age. He was a blacksmith, and made many of the hinges, nails, etc., used on his buildings. His education was received at the subscription schools. Joseph Martin, father of John James Martin, was born on the old homestead in 1784, and passed his boyhood in attending the common schools, and working on the farm. By taking advantage of every opportunity, he succeeded in obtaining an education superior to that of many of his associates. In 1822 he married Nancy James, daughter of John James, who for many years conducted a milling business in Amwell township, this county. To this union were born the following children: Morgan, a prominent farmer of Amwell township; Elizabeth, who died in infancy; John James, subject of this sketch; Ann, the wife of Andrew Van Dyke, of Amwell township; Sarah, wife of Neal Zollars, of East Bethlehem township, and Joseph, who departed this life in 1852, aged twenty-two years.

John James Martin passed his young days upon the farm, and received a fair education in the schools of the period. In 1852 he married Elizabeth Barr, daughter of Samuel Barr, of West Bethlehem township, and to them were born the following children: Joseph, Sarah, Jackson, Martha, Samuel and Clarion, all of whom are living except Joseph, who died in 1872 at the age of twenty-one years. Mr. Martin was a Democrat, and one of the counselors of his party, although by no means a politician in the general sense of the term. He and his family are members of the Winnett Chapel Methodist Church, Mrs. Martin being one of the most active and valued members. The farm of Mr. Martin consists of about 155 acres of land, all in a high state of cultivation.

PHILLO REYNOLDS, an esteemed and prosperous farmer of Amwell township, is a grandson of Benedict Reynolds, who came from New Jersey and settled in South Strabane township on a farm, about six miles southeast of Washington borough. The following are the names of his children: Richard, Henry, Zachariah, Lloyd, Polly, Susan and Sally. Mr. Reynolds was a successful business man, owning several nice farms, and of these he gave one to each of his sons before he died.

Lloyd Reynolds was born in South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., May 10, 1791, and lived at home until some time after his marriage. On March 23, 1826, he was united in marriage with Sarah Redd, who was born June 29, 1805, and to this union were born children as follows: Lonisa, born March 28, 1827; Silas M. Crispin (deceased); Philo, born October 30, 1828; Lucretia (Mrs. McCherry), born July 31, 1830; Alfred (deceased), born July 11, 1832, and Andrew Jackson. Mr. Reynolds died in about 1836.

Philo Reynolds, son of Lloyd and Sarah (Redd) Reynolds, was born in South Strabane township, Washington county, and when ten years old was taken by his mother to live on his grandfather Redd's farm. He attended the common schools a short time, then went to live with James Wright. At the age of sixteen he learned the blacksmith's trade of John Morrow, having lived with him four years, receiving $25 per year, and at the end of the four years had $42 coming to him. When twenty years of age he began business for himself by opening a shop near James Wright's place. On March 17, 1852, Mr. Reynolds was married to Rebecca Wright, who was born June 9, 1825, and they have had three children: James E., a lumber dealer in Washington; Marguerite Jane, who died at the age of seventeen, and Sarah Bell (Mrs. Paul). Mr. Reynolds has followed his trade all his life, and by dint of thrift and enterprise, has accumulated a good property; in 1872 he purchased his present home, as fine a farm as can be found in the township. In politics he is a Democrat, but believes in voting independently of any party or politician, when occasion so demands. In religious connection he was formerly a member of the Christian Church, but is not connected with any religious body at present.

WILLIAM SMITH. About the year 1785 Robert Smith came from east of the mountains and located in Bethel township, near Bethel church, in Allegheny county, Penn., and followed agricultural pursuits, and the original farm is now owned by his grandson, John Smith. In 1790 he married Jean, daughter of Daniel Moore, and of this union the following children were born: Daniel (who died in Nebraska); Jennie (deceased wife of Robert Cooley, of Beaver county, Penn.); Mary Ann (deceased wife of Henry Keifer, of Beaver county, Penn.); Elizabeth (wife of Robert Bryarly, of Beaver county, Penn.); Agnes (deceased wife of Jacob Keifer, of Beaver county, Penn.); Robert (deceased in Iowa); Polly (wife of John Lesnette, living near Bridgeville, Allegheny Co., Penn.); Margaret (deceased wife of James Orr, of Holmes county, Ohio); William (subject of this sketch), and John (who died in Allegheny county, Penn.). The father of this family died in 18—, aged eighty-three years, the mother in 1863, aged ninety-one, and they are buried in Bethel cemetery.

William Smith was born August 12, 1812, in Bethel township, Allegheny Co., Penn., and received his education in the common schools, the principal books in use at the time being the United States Speller and Western Calculator. On April 16, 1840, he was married to Sarah H., daughter of George and Jean Cunningham, who came from Scotland in 1802. To Mr. and Mrs. Smith eleven children were born, seven of whom were deceased in youth; those yet living are George C. (of Castle Shannon, Penn.); Adaline J. (wife of Alexander Bailey, of Xenia, Ohio); Daniel W. (of Bulger, Penn.) and Anna B. (wife of S. D. Jones, of Mount Pleasant township). Mr. Smith resided in Bethel township until 1846, when he moved to Baldwin township, same county, and there resided until 1872, when he moved to Bulger, Washington county, and retired from active business.

When Mr. and Mrs. Smith went into house-keeping he had but $2.50 to provide for himself and wife. He was a regular attendant at the Pittsburgh markets, and one article in demand at that time was cut straw, which he carried to market on horseback (tied on with ropes), and sold at 12½ cents a sack; he has sold butter at 6 cents per pound; has packed oats to Pittsburgh on horseback, and sold them at 12½ cents per bushel. With these prices obtained, he bought and paid for land.

On April 16, 1890, Mr. and Mrs. Smith celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. Of the Smith and Cunningham families represented in the union of this couple, there were twenty-two children, all of whom were married and raised families, seven of whom celebrated golden weddings. Of the ten children of Robert Smith they lived to an average age of seventy-five years.

DANIEL W. SMITH, son of William Smith, was born September 5, 1852, in Baldwin township, Allegheny Co., Penn., passing his boyhood days on the farm, and receiving a common-school education. In 1872 he came with his parents to Washington county, and on August 26, 1880, was united in marriage with Alice J. Russell, who was born December 8, 1855, daughter of J. S. Russell, of Smith township, this county. The following children were born to them: Mary V., Clara B., Sarah C., Agnes J., William and John R. Daniel W. and Alice J. Smith first located on a part of his father's farm in Smith township, and upon the death of the latter took charge of the home place, where he is now living. In connection with farming he raises stock and manages a dairy. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion he and wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Candor.

MRS. ELIZA C. ALLEN. George W. Allen (deceased agriculturist) was born June 2, 1818, in Fayette county, Penn., on a farm two and one-half miles from Connellsville. He was a son of Josiah and Rebecca Allen, who were natives of Fayette county, Penn., and came to Washington county in 1834, settling permanently in Carroll township.

On February 26, 1840, George W. Allen was united in marriage with Eliza C., daughter of Samuel, and granddaughter of Walter Davis. The grandfather died in Franklin county, Penn., and his son Samuel was born March 7, 1786, on the home place in that county. When a young man, Samuel Davis came to Washington county, and locating on Chartiers creek, became prominently connected with the earliest history of Somerset township. He was married to Mary, daughter of Isaac

Vance, and she bore him four children, none of whom are living. The mother died June 1, 1820, and for his second wife, Mr. Davis selected Mary, daughter of Isaac and Catherine Teeple. Two children were born to this marriage, namely: Samuel M., living in California, Penn., and Eliza C. (Mrs. Allen), whose name opens this sketch. The mother died April 23, 1824, and his third choice was Rhoda Falconer. They had six children. Of these, one daughter is living, viz., Emily Maria Taylor, living at Brownsville, Penn. Mr. Davis was a member of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church, and in political opinion was a Democrat. He passed away October 16, 1836, and was laid to rest beside his kindred in the Pigeon Creek cemetery.

To the union of George W. and Eliza C. (Davis) Allen, the following children were born: Mary Lucinda (wife of Lyman Jackson, a prominent railroad official in Allegheny City), born September 1, 1841; Emma R., born October 25, 1843; Martha T., born December 4, 1845; Elma L. (deceased March 6, 1854, interred in Round Hill cemetery, Allegheny county), born April 24, 1848; Edwin Benton (deceased August 20, 1890, interred in Knoxville cemetery, a prominent business man of Knoxville, Iowa), born October 5, 1850; Edith F. (deceased June 9, 1853, interred in Round Hill cemetery, Allegheny county), born January 24, 1853; Clarence M. (a merchant living at Charleroi, Penn.), born May 6, 1851; Milton J., born October 21, 1856, died October 25, 1888; Ella S. (wife of Samuel Swabe, a prosperous farmer of Fallowfield township), born February 16, 1859; Myrtilla F., born July 24, 1861; George B. Me. (a carpenter of Charleroi), born October 8, 1863, and Addison F. (living on the homestead), born May 24, 1867. At the time of his marriage Mr. Allen possessed little property, but by the assistance of his wife, coupled with his own untiring energy, he accumulated a competence, and finally became the owner of 275 acres of land. In his political opinion he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Monongahela City. He was interested in all movements tending to advance Washington county, and was especially devoted to educational progress. He died February 19, 1879, was interred in Monongahela cemetery. His widow, an agreeable and popular lady, is yet living on the place. She has in her possession a diary of her husband, containing the incidents of his life, from the date of his marriage until his death.

ANDREW J. PEESE is a representative of one of the oldest families of Washington county. His great-grandfather, Nicholas Peese, emigrated from Germany with an uncle when but twelve years of age. He afterward married, and located in Caniguaggi, east of the mountains. Three children were there born to them: Mary, Andrew and George. In 1769 he made an exploring trip on foot to western Pennsylvania, and took possession of 400 acres of land in North Strabane township, Washington county. He then returned to his family, and placing their household goods on one horse, with the youngest child perched on top of the load, the rest of the family journeyed on foot. They finally arrived at their new home, and a small log hut was erected in which they passed the winter near the present home of John M. Berry. Only two other settlers were then in the township, and in their pioneer home the four younger children were born: Nicholas, Catherine, Betsey and Susan. Of these children Nicholas died in youth. Mr. Peese was six feet and one inch in height, well formed, and possessed great powers of physical endurance. He died at the age of one hundred and five years, his wife at the age of ninety years.

George Peese, the second son of Nicholas, was four years of age when the family settled in Washington county, and was the hero of the horseback ride above mentioned. He grew to manhood, and was married to Lydia, daughter of John Vaughn, a native of New Jersey. The children born to this union were Polly, Andrew, Rebecca, Zacharias, John, Nicholas, George, Joseph, James, Eliza, Polly, Lydia, and two daughters who died in infancy. Polly was burned to death in childhood; Joseph died at the age of thirty years, and James died when twenty-five years old. The other children married, settled in Washington county, and all are now deceased excepting Zacharias, John and George. Mr. Peese died March 1, 1849, and was followed by his wife in 1865.

Zacharias Peese was born in the house which is now the home of John M. Berry. He lived at home until twenty years of age, receiving a limited education, and assisted his father in transporting the farm produce to Pittsburgh, making the journey by wagons through miles of unbroken forest. When Zacharias was twenty-one years of age his father traded farms with his uncle, Andrew Peese, and received in the bargain a saw and grist mill, of which Zacharias took charge and operated fourteen years. On December 27, 1820, Mr. Peese was united in marriage with Hannah, daughter of Andrew and Polly Peese, and to this union came the following children: William, born October 13, 1821; Joseph, born August 21, 1823; Andrew J., born July 4, 1824; Mary (Mrs. Jacob Anthony), born May 1, 1827; Lydia, (Mrs. Zacharias Peese), born July 24, 1830; Elizabeth, born June 5, 1833 (died March 11, 1841); George, born April 27, 1835 (died May 3, 1835); Hannah Jane, born May 20, 1839 (died May 16, 1841), and Phoebe, born April 7, 1841 (died October 30, 1841). Mrs. Peese died October 1, 1846, and on January 13, 1848, Mr. Peese was married to Jane Jackson, a native of Lancaster county, Penn., and a connection of Andrew Jackson. About 1825 Mr. Peese bought and prepared to move upon a farm in Ohio, but yielding to the request of his father, sold it, and settled on the place in North Strabane township where his son William is now living. He then bought the farm now owned by our subject. Mr. Peese has always been a Democrat, and has filled several township offices. He joined the Presbyterian Church at the age of eighteen years, and was an elder and member of the Pigeon Creek Church for many years.

Andrew J. Peese was born and reared in North Strabane township, on the home farm where he is now living, and received his education in an old-time log schoolhouse. On September 27, 1852, he was married to Julia A. Dickson, who was born September 15, 1822, in Peters township, Allegheny Co., Penn. Her parents were both natives of Pennsylvania, the father born in 1802, in Washington county, and the mother in 1805, in Lancaster county. They were married in this county, and seven children were born to them, all of whom married and had children. They were as follows: Julia A. (now living); Isaac (now living in Iowa; has been twice married and has had five children, three of whom are now living; he is a member of the Presbyterian Church; his wife is an active worker in the W. C. T. U.); John (married and has two children; his wife is now deceased, and he is now living in his native county, near Library); Henry (married and living in the State of California, where he is engaged in the mining business; he enlisted in the Union army, in an infantry regiment, during the Civil war, and being wounded in the battle of Spottsylvania, was discharged; he married Miss Mary French, now living, and is connected with several prominent families in the Monongahela region); Elizabeth (widow of Nelson Phillips; she had eight children: William, Sarah, Nancy, Estelle, Charles, Maggie, Bell and Jasper, of whom Sarah is now dead); Sarah (was twice married, first time to James Brown, by which union there were three children: George, Lizzie and John, the last named being deceased; her second husband is Isaac Lindley, by whom she has had six children, all yet living except one); Rebecca (married some time in the "fifties" to Jesse Canady, of Lancaster county, Penn., and one daughter was born to them, Ualia, married and yet living; Mr. Canady served a period in the Senate of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Rebecca Canady is deceased). The father died some time during "the seventies," a member of Baptist Church. Mrs. Dickson, who was a member of the Christian Church, died in 1877.

To the union of Andrew J. and Julia A. (Dickson) Peese three children have been born, namely:

Mason Z., born April 20, 1858; Ida E., born April 6, 1860, and John D., born May 3, 1863. Of these children, Ida E. was, on January 2, 1881, married to John Rasel, a farmer of Amwell township, Washington county, and to their union two sons have been born: Ray and Harry (Mr. Rasel is actively engaged in the work and success of district-school education). In 1890 John D. was united in marriage with Agnes Dunn, who has borne him two children: Nellie M. and Julia Agnes. Mr. Andrew J. Peese owns and resides on the old homestead. In politics he was a Democrat for many years, but of late has been identified with the Prohibition party. He and his wife are members of the Christian Church.

HENRY L. STUDA is one of the oldest, most successful and highly esteemed farmers of Cross Creek township. He is a son of Charles and grandson of Louis Studa. The latter ancestor was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1757, and was a miller by trade. He there married Idolla Sagulf, a daughter of a leading attorney, and they died in their native land at advanced age, leaving four children, namely: Hannah, Henry, Charles and Lena. Of these Hannah was born in Hanover in 1787, and in 1817 married Christopher Fisher, who was by trade a carpenter, of Shunhogen, and resided there with his wife until death removed them at an advanced age; their five children were Charles, William, August, Henry and Christopher. Henry, brother of Hannah, was born in Hanover in 1789, and married Caroline Henna, daughter of the burghess of Shunhogen; he was a miller by trade; his four children were Charles, Henry, Millicina and Hannah. Charles, another brother of Hannah, was, like Henry, a native of Hanover and a miller by trade. He married Millicina Steingreiver, whose father was the hotel-keeper of Shunhogen; their children were Henry L. and Lena. This Charles Studa received a good education, and served several years in the wars of Napoleon. He participated in the memorable battle of Waterloo, and received a silver medal as an acknowledgment of gallant conduct on that occasion. This valuable relic is yet in the possession of his son Henry L. At one time Charles Studa, with others, was taken prisoner and sentenced to be shot, but was saved by the arrival of Russian soldiers, who captured the prison but a few hours previous to the time appointed for the execution. After the battle of Waterloo, the young soldier decided to seek a fortune in the New World. Lena, the youngest child of Louis and Idolla Studa, born in 1794, married Henry Alburn, a farmer, and bore him three children—Henry, Charles and Christopher; Louis Studa, his wife and the four children died at Shunhogen, each attaining an advanced age.

Charles, the son of Henry and grandson of Louis Studa, was born at Shunhogen in 1816, was a miller by trade, and was married to Millicina Steingreiver, whose father also was a farmer by occupation. They remain in their native land. Henry, the son of Henry and grandson of Louis Studa, was born at Shunhogen in 1818, was a farmer by occupation, and was married to Luweza Cook, whose father also was a farmer; they remain in their native land. Millicina, the daughter of Henry and granddaughter of Louis Studa, was born at Shunhogen in 1820, and was married February 20, 1848, to Henry L. Studa, who was a farmer by occupation; soon after their marriage they set sail for America, and landed in Washington county, Penn., where they have been residing ever since. Hannah, the daughter of Henry and granddaughter of Louis Studa, was born at Shunhogen in 1822, and was married to William Didritch, who was an officer in the military troops; they remain in their native land, having three children, namely: Richard, Emma and Menny.

Henry L., the son of Charles and grandson of Louis Studa, was born April 14, 1821, in Hanover. His father was a miller by trade, and was the possessor of both an oil and a grist mill, which were located in Capingburg, Germany; but as a panic set in in 1825 and lasted for several years, he and several of his neighbors became discouraged, and came to the conclusion they would proceed to a better country. He had been corresponding with an acquaintance of his in Jamaica, who informed him of some landlord there who was the possessor of a plantation of 2,000 acres, and was desirous of having it inhabited by Germans, just for the purpose of raising ginger and working sugar. So in the year 1833 Charles Studa and several of his neighbors set sail for Jamaica, where he lived for seven years; but as the climate was so much warmer than that of his native land they were troubled with a great deal of sickness, and lost their daughter Lena. In 1840 they set sail for America, landing in New York, where they resided for eight months, and then moved to Washington county, Penn., where his son Henry L. supported the family by working by the month and day for six years. In 1847 he returned to his native land to transact some business concerning his grandmother's estate, and, remaining there eight months, was married to Millicina Studa, a full cousin. In 1848 he returned to America with his young wife, and farmed on the shares for nine years. Putting his money at interest, he was enabled, in 1856, to purchase 133 acres, and some time later bought the balance of the present farm of 222 acres, the best land in Cross Creek township. Mr. and Mrs. Studa have four children, namely: John, David, Alfred and Albert (twins). Politically Henry L. Studa is a staunch worker in the Democratic party. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church at Mt. Prospect, also supporting the Mount Prospect Presbyterian Church in that village, which his children attend.

D W. MYERS, one of the leading young Republicans of West Bethlehem township, was born October 13, 1846, in that township. He is a grandson of John Myers, who came from Germany to America at a very early day, and located in West Bethlehem township, on Daniel's run; there he purchased a farm and passed the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. He married Elizabeth Conkle, and the following children were born to them: Mrs. John Letherman, Mrs. Speh, Mrs. Amos Walton, Mrs. John Hufford, Mrs. Thornton Young, John, Jacob, Henry and Stephen. In his political views Mr. Myers was a Whig; he and his family were all identified with the Lutheran Church.

Stephen Myers, father of subject, was born on the paternal farm, March 11, 1805. His early years were spent at home and in attendance of the common schools, where he acquired a good education. After leaving school he followed the drover business a few years, and in 1834 was married to Lucia Jenkins, a daughter of Nathaniel Jenkins, who lived in West Pike Run township, this county. Soon after his marriage Mr. Myers began business for himself, and in 1852 moved upon the farm of 127 acres which is now the property of his son Wilson. He was the father of five children: Mrs. S. C. Bane, Mrs. John Yorty, Elizabeth C., D. W., and Edwin (deceased October 2, 1845). Mr. Myers was a successful business man, and was much interested in all matters pertaining to progress in education. He was a Republican, and his colleagues evinced their appreciation of his worth by electing him to the offices of assessor and school director, which positions he held with credit for many years. Both he and his family were members of the United Presbyterian Church. Mr. Myers passed from earth December 9, 1875, and was followed by his faithful wife September 17, 1882.

D. W. Myers, son of Stephen and Lucia, has spent his entire life upon the farm where he now resides, having moved there with his parents when but six years of age. He secured the foundation of a good education at the common schools, afterward attending the Pleasant Valley Academy, which was followed by a year at Washington and Jefferson College. He has well profited by these advantages, and is now a well-read, intelligent man, one of the leaders in his county. After his education was completed, Mr. Myers began to work upon the home farm. On November 27, 1873, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of

J. D. Roberts, of Hillsboro, Washington Co., Penn. They have had four children: Nellie, born June 21, 1875, died September 17, 1875; Leona Irene, born February 4, 1877; Albert Emerson, born February 21, 1883; and Reno, born October 15, 1890, died December 1, 1890. Mr. Myers is a sturdy advocate of Republican principles. He has held the office of school director and assistant assessor of his township; in 1889 he was elected one of the directors of the poor for Washington county, for a term of three years, and re-elected in 1892. He has always taken an active part in all matters of interest to the county, and with his family is a member of the U. P. Church of Pigeon Creek, being a ruling elder in the same.

A LBERT MORROW, a representative of one of the most prominent families of Donegal township, and a son of Abraham Morrow, was born August 13, 1861, on the home farm in Donegal township, this county, and was reared to agricultural duties, attending, during the winter months of his boyhood, the common schools of the neighborhood. On April 16, 1891, he was united in marriage with Miss Gertrude Burig, daughter of Charles H. Burig, of Donegal township.

Albert and Gertrude (Burig) Morrow are residing on a pleasant farm, situated near the home place. He is engaged in wool growing, and is already one of the most prosperous young farmers in the vicinity. In politics he is a member of the Republican party.

THOMAS McGAHEY (deceased) numbered among the prominent and progressive farmers of North Strabane township, and was a member of an old and highly respected family. His grandfather, Andrew McGahey, was educated for the ministry, but owing to a difference in the churches to which his parents belonged, one a Covenanter, the other a Seceder, he declined to preach, and engaged in teaching. He taught the first select school of Braddock Fields, and there purchased a farm. He had one son and three daughters, all of whom reached maturity, viz.: Elizabeth (Mrs. William Powell), Mary (Mrs. Culbertson), Ann (who was first married to Mr. Wilson, and afterward to Mr. Carruthers) and Hugh.

Hugh McGahey was born in the North of Ireland, and was of a Scotch-Presbyterian family. When a child he came with his parents to America, settling in Allegheny county, Penn. Hugh McGahey was a man of refined mind and sterling principle, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He was married, in Allegheny county, to Miss

Thomas M. Yarky

Margaret Hannah, who was born in that county, a daughter of David Hannah, and their union has been blessed with two sons: Thomas (born February 1, 1812) and David (born October 17, 1813, and died in infancy). Mr. McGahey died some years after his return from the war of 1812, and was buried in the cemetery at Dr. Herren's Church, in Pittsburgh. Several years afterward his widow married Robert McElroy, and by this marriage had four children, viz.: John (born September 5, 1824, and died unmarried), Sarah (born December 13, 1826, and married to John Groove), Maria (born June 7, 1829, and married to Eli Myers) and Robert G. (who was born August 2, 1832, and married Elizabeth Donnell). The mother died in April, 1833. David Hannah (father of Mrs. McGahey, who was afterward Mrs. McElroy) was a prosperous farmer, of Scotch ancestry. He settled on a farm near "Braddock Fields," in Allegheny county.

Thomas McGahey, subject of sketch, was born near Turtle Creek, Wilkins township, Allegheny county, February 1, 1812, a son of Hugh and Margaret (Hannah) McGahey. Mr. McGahey married Miss Martha Sample, who was born March 27, 1812, a daughter of James and Elizabeth Wallace Sample. They were both members of the Presbyterian Church, and were buried in Oak Spring cemetery, Canonsburg. Five children were born of their marriage, viz.: Elizabeth Mary (of Canonsburg, unmarried), Hugh (who died in childhood), James (who died in childhood), Margaret Anna (living in Canonsburg, unmarried) and Thomas McGahey.

James Sample emigrated from the North of Ireland, and after reaching America settled in Pennsylvania, when yet a young man. In 1804 he was married in Cumberland county, Penn., to Elizabeth Wallace, who was born March 19, 1785, and was nineteen years of age at the time of her marriage. She was a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Eliot) Wallace, of Cumberland county, Penn., the former a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Immediately after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Sample moved to Pittsburgh, Penn., then called "the backwoods" by people in Cumberland county. He had money, and located on Coal hill (now Mt. Washington), where he engaged in farming. At a later date he came to this county, and lived a few years in Washington, then moved to Allegheny county, and rented a farm where Wilkesburg now stands. He died on a farm in Versailles township, near Turtle Creek. Ten children were born of their marriage, viz.: John (who died unmarried), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Mitchell), James (who married Rachel Dougherty), Mary (Mrs. George Mitchell), Martha (Mrs. Thomas McGahey), William (who married Hannah Dunbar), Adam (who died in childhood), Nancy (Mrs. Robert Wiley), Samuel (first married to Margaret Jordan, and afterward to Eliza Thompson) and Rosanna (who died in childhood).

Thomas McGahey was born January 24, 1854, and was educated in the select schools of Wilkesburg. He came with his parents to North Strabane township in 1874, and after his father's death conducted the farm for his mother and sisters. On April 2, 1889, Mr. McGahey married Miss Minnie T. Brown; she was born in Fairview, Todd Co., Ky., daughter of Milton D. and Sarah A. (Daniel) Brown. Her parents were both members of the M. E. Church. Her father was raised on a farm, taught school, was admitted to the bar, and is now city judge in Hopkinsville, Ky. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. McGahey came to Canonsburg, Penn., where he owns a handsome residence. They are members of the M. E. Church of Canonsburg, and he is one of the most prosperous men in that borough. In politics he is a Republican. One child has blessed their union, Arthur F., born June 15, 1890.

R M. GEE'S SONS. The members of this family are of English descent. The pioneers of the family in America were Moses, William and Joshua Gee; but from Moses Gee this special branch is descended. He emigrated with his brothers and landed at Plymouth, Mass. John, the grandson of Moses, was a millwright. He died at Wilkesbarre, Penn., at the age of one hundred and five years, and with the honor of service in the Revolutionary war.

Samuel Gee, son of John (who had fifteen children, most of whom settled in Pennsylvania and New York), was born and reared in New York State, where, when a lad, he learned the millwright's trade—a trade he followed in New York and Pennsylvania. He married Hannah Hopkins (a niece of Stephen Hopkins—the tenth signer of the Declaration of Independence). They had thirteen children, among whom were John, James, Ransom M., Sylvester and Ruth. Samuel settled with his wife at Painted Post, Penn., where he constructed the first turbine water-wheel in that section, and where he was known as an uncompromising Democrat and Presbyterian.

Ransom M. Gee was born in 1818, in Elmira, N. Y., where he was reared and educated. At the age of fourteen years he commenced to learn harness-making with a brother-in-law at Williamsport, Penn., with whom he lived, having left the paternal roof at that early age. When eighteen years old he moved to Massachusetts, and there learned the trade of marble cutter with his brother John, and when twenty-one years old he opened a shop in that line at Elmira, N. Y., where he remained until 1847, in which year he went to Waupun, Wis..

and after three years' residence there, he proceeded to Allegheny county, where, in West Newton and elsewhere he carried on his trade until 1852, when he came to Monongahela and opened a shop in the first ward, near the present river bridge, and here carried on a prosperous marble and granite business until his death, March 27, 1890; he was also a contractor for the building of bridges from 1853 to 1857. He married Mary M., daughter of Samuel Gangwere, a native of Pennsylvania, of German ancestry, and whose children were Elizabeth, Sarah, Mary M. and Samuel. Mr. Gangwere was by trade a millwright, in politics a Democrat, in religion a Baptist. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Ransom M. Gee were as follows: Oris D. (Mrs. William Oliver), Joseph L. (deceased), William R. (deceased), William M., John R. (deceased), Alexander (deceased), Charles W., Ada L. and Samuel M. The mother died September 11, 1885. Mr. Gee was a Democrat, and held various offices of trust in the city of his adoption; was a school director, and always took an active interest in everything tending to the prosperity of his section. He was for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but during the later years of his life, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and was a vestryman of St. Paul's. Mrs. Mary M. Gee was a Baptist.

WILLIAM M. GEE was born in Pennsylvania March 18, 1845, and received a liberal education in the schools of Monongahela, where his parents settled in 1852. He was employed in the river traffic as far as New Orleans, and became a licensed pilot on the Monongahela river, which he followed ten years. On November 10, 1869, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob Ulery, of this county, and their children were Ransom M., Charles W., Mary, Jacob, Alfred D. and Lillie, all now deceased except the last named.

CHARLES W. GEE was born in Fond du Lac county, Wis., October 23, 1849, and received his education at the public schools of Monongahela. On March 9, 1876, he married Rosanna, daughter of Jonas Weygandt, of Carroll township, this county, and their children are as follows: Two that died in infancy, Desdemona, Theodore P., Charles F., Benjamin F., Sarah, and John R., the latter deceased.

SAMUEL M. GEE was born September 29, 1856, in Monongahela, his education being received at the public schools. On April 11, 1878, he married Emma, daughter of Thomas Wilson, and their children are William T., Ada L., Nancy D., Zilla H. A., Bessie L. and Margaret L.

Since the death of Ransom M. Gee the firm has been known as R. M. Gee's Sons, and they conduct the largest works of the kind in the Monongahela Valley, carrying a full line of marbles and granites besides a complete assortment of iron fence work. The brothers are all Democrats and members of the Episcopal Church and M. E. Church.

HENRY C. SWART, the subject of this notice, was born November 8, 1825, and was the fourth child of Philip and Asenah (Walton) Swart.

He was born in Amwell township on the home farm near Amity, and was raised to the life of a farmer, receiving his education in the old log schoolhouse, with its slab benches for seats. In his early manhood he dealt in stock, mostly hogs and horses—driving through on foot to Cumberland, Md., and shipping thence to Baltimore, Md., by railroad. He relates seeing, on one of his trips east, a lot of thirty slaves, driven along the National pike to Baltimore market, all chained and in charge of two men. On August 26, 1852, he married Miss Abigail, daughter of John and Sarah (Miller) Day, of Morris township, and they went to housekeeping on his father's farm, where they resided until he purchased, in 1857, the farm which he still owns, one mile south of Amity, formerly known as the Patterson farm. To them were born two children: John D. and Laura B.; the son, having married, still remains on the farm; the daughter, now married to a Mr. Horn, a lawyer, lives at Denver, Colo. On August 22, 1862, Mr. Swart enlisted in the Amity company, raised by Capt. Silas Parker, which afterward became the famous Company D, of the 140th P. V. I. He served faithfully, never missing a roll call. He participated in the battles of Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and Spottsylvania, as well as in a number of lesser battles and skirmishes. On May 12, 1864, at the battle of Spottsylvania, after having been under fire every day for a week, he received the terrible wound which made him a cripple for life. In this same battle Mr. Swart had two brothers, John and Amos, the latter killed during the fight. His brother, A. J., was wounded in the battle of Gettysburg. Thus it will be seen that there were four brothers who enlisted and entered their country's service, all of whom left their farms and comfortable homes in the care of wives and children. After Mr. Swart was wounded he lay on the field from 4 o'clock A. M. until evening, when he was taken to a field hospital, and during the night was loaded into an army wagon and taken, with others, to Fredericksburg, a distance of some fourteen or fifteen miles, over a very rough road on a fearfully dark night, during which his sufferings were intense. To escape falling into the hands of the enemy, the trip had to be taken. After remaining at Fredericksburg some two weeks, the wounded were taken by transports and hospital boats to Washington, D. C., where he was placed in Lincoln hospital, and where he remained some ten days. He then received a leave of absence from the War Department to report when able at nearest army hospital, and was brought home to his family on a hospital stretcher in the latter part of June. Although given the best attendance, Mr. Swart suffered terrible agony for several months, and when only partially able, after an absence from hospital of about ten months, reported personally to a hospital at Pittsburgh, Penn., the following April. Remaining there about a month until his application could be acted upon, he received from the War Department an honorable discharge, returned to his home and family, but will ever bear the marks of suffering, and the scars of war. He has never since been able to do any physical labor, but successfully managed his farm and farm work until the spring of 1872, when he retired and moved to Washington, Penn., in order that his children might have better educational advantages.

In 1859 Mr. Swart made a profession of religion, and united with the Methodist Protestant Church at Amity. For nearly thirty-five years he has been a zealous, Christian worker, his membership still remaining with the church at Amity, in which he filled several important positions, representing it in the Pittsburgh Annual Conference for five or six years, and in 1884 was one of the lay representatives of the Pittsburgh Conference to the General Conference at Baltimore, Md. In early manhood he was a Whig, casting his first presidential vote in 1848 for Zachary Taylor. Upon the organization of the Republican party he united with it, and voted for Gen. Fremont in 1856, in which party he continued until 1884, in which year he joined the temperance cause, and voted for the Prohibition presidential candidate. From his youth up he has been a strong advocate of temperance, and now, having a political party in the great work of temperance, rejoices that he is in the fight, having enlisted under its banner there to remain during the war on the liquor traffic. In addition to Mr. Swart's severe wound in the hip, received at Spottsylvania, he received a slight injury on the side of the nose which has never healed, and has slowly worked its way into the eye until the sight of that eye is entirely gone, the other being also weakened, so that he is no longer able to read.

Mr. Swart's father, Philip Swart, was the eldest son in the family of ten children of Jacob and Sarah (Evans) Swart. Philip was born in 1797, and died in 1876; Asenah, his wife, was born in 1798, and died in 1870. The ancestry of this numerous family is traced to Philip Swart, a native of Germany. His children were Jacob (before mentioned) and Susan, who married John Philips, of Greene county, Penn. Mrs. Abigail (Day) Swart was born in 1831, and is still a well-preserved woman. Her father, John Day, was born in 1788 and died in 1871. During the war of 1812, he served in a cavalry company. His wife, Sarah (Miller) Day, was born in 1794, and died in 1837. Henry C. Swart and his amiable wife now live in a comfortable home in the suburbs of Washington, where they enjoy the fruits of their united labor.

JAMES NEELY is a native of Cooley Parish, County Tyrone, Ireland, and the eldest child of Charles and Elizabeth (McGinnis) Neely. Charles Neely was born in 1782, in County Tyrone, Ireland, and in early manhood married Elizabeth, daughter of James McGinnis. She was born in 1792. Nine children blessed this marriage, viz.: James, Catherine (deceased in youth), John (deceased in Philadelphia), Ann (unmarried, living in Allegheny, Penn.), Elizabeth (wife of Robert Pringle, in Mercer county, Penn.), Charles (in Allegheny, Penn.), William (a member of the U. S. Army for seven years, and of the Seventh Infantry U. S. A. during the war. He was twice wounded before Richmond, one shot piercing his right lung, from the effects of which he died two years later), and twins, who died in infancy. The father was a linen weaver by trade, following that business in connection with farming. In 1845 they came with two children, William and Elizabeth, to America, and joined those who had preceded them to Mercer county, Penn. The father passed away in 1856, followed by the mother the next year.

James Neely was born November 11, 1813, and learned the linen weaver's trade under the parental roof. In 1841 he accompanied an uncle, John Neely, to America. They embarked at Londonderry, Ireland, on the good ship "North America," commanded by Capt. William Baker, bound for Philadelphia. On landing in America, they proceeded to Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., and soon afterward moved to Mercer county, Penn., where some relatives were living. Here James Neely married Catherine, daughter of John Walford, who was of German parentage. She was born in May, 1811, in Mercer county, Penn., and married Mr. Neely March 10, 1842. For a short time the couple lived with Mr. Walford, then moved upon a small farm. James Neely afterward worked on the Pennsylvania Canal, but finally resumed agricultural pursuits, in Mercer county, Penn. In 1855 he purchased 180 acres of woodland in Sugar Creek township, Venango Co., Penn., which he cleared and cultivated. In 1865 he sold this place, and coming to Hanover township, this county, bought 128 acres of land for $10,000. This tract is situated one mile west of Florence, on the Steubenville & Pittsburgh pike, where he has since resided. Beginning life as a poor boy, Mr. Neely has amassed a good property, and has become prominent in farming and stock raising. In 1888 he was called to Ireland on business, and visited, perhaps for the last time, the scenes of his boyhood, returning on the same vessel on which he made the outward voyage, the "Alaska." Politically Mr. Neely has always been a Democrat, and in religious faith he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church. They have been wedded over fifty years, and have reared the following named children: John W., an oil operator of Ohio; Elizabeth, wife of Solomon A. Dow, of Corry, Penn.; William C., deceased, in 1888, in Chattanooga, Tenn.; James M., deceased in infancy; James M., a farmer of Hanover township; and Catherine J., living at home.

JOHN GARRETT, a well-known and prosperous agriculturist and stock raiser of West Bethlehem township, was born February 16, 1825, upon the farm adjoining the one whereon he now resides. He is a grandson of Peter Garrett and son of Nicholas, who was born in Maryland in 1779, and there married Mary Ann Baumgardner. Thence, about the commencement of the present century, they removed to Washington county, Penn. The children born to them were as follows: Elizabeth, Rachel, Mary Ann, Lydia, Catherine, Susan, Sarah, Jacob, Peter, Samuel, John and William.

John Garrett received his education in the subscription schools of the neighborhood, and in early boyhood received a thorough training in farm life. On April 1, 1852, he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of John Watson, and by her had one child, Franklin Pierce, who assists on the farm. The young mother died at his birth, and in 1854 our subject married Miss Lavina, daughter of David Morrow, of North Strabane township, this county, by which union there were born eight children: four died in infancy; Thomas now resides upon a farm adjoining that of his father; Lydia and Sadie are now married and living in Ohio; Elizabeth lives at the parental home. Mr. Garrett owned and operated one of the first threshing machines built in the county, and has given almost his entire attention to threshing ever since. In 1869 he, unfortunately, caught his left hand in the machine, and it was ground to a pulp, rendering amputation necessary. Mr. Garrett is a thorough Democrat, and has been elected to many offices of trust by his fellow-citizens, who appreciate his ability. He now owns a fine farm, consisting of 260 acres of well-cultivated land; while upon the hillsides and meadow browse nearly 200 sheep and other stock.

JP. LAWTHER. The beginnings of this family in America post-date the close of the Revolution by nine years. James Lawther, Sr., born in Ireland, March 15, 1769, married Jane Shaw in 1790, shortly after sailed for the young Republic and settled in Virginia, where they resided for twenty-one years before removing to Pennsylvania (in 1812). Here the pioneer died on his farm December 23, 1821. Of their eleven children, Alexander Lawther was the ninth in order of birth. He was born June 22, 1808, and on May 8, 1844, married Nancy Smith (born March 7, 1814), a daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Smith, of Richland county, Ohio. He died March 19, 1878, leaving a widow, now living. Of the five children born to this marriage, Ellen C., born September 2, 1845, married Robert Cunningham, of Jefferson township, April 25, 1889; Mary J., born December 10, 1847, died August 7, 1870; J. P. Lawther is the subject of this sketch; Thomas B. was born August 2, 1852; and James A., born November 8, 1854, died October 2, 1863.

J. P. Lawther was born March 10, 1850, reared to farm pursuits on the paternal acres, and on August 24, 1876, married Eliza, daughter of James Black, of Hanover township. One daughter was born to this marriage: Nancy, who is yet living. The mother died March 30, 1888, and was buried in Paris cemetery. For his second wife, J. P. Lawther married, February 25, 1890, Amy Price, of Orange township, Carroll Co., Ohio, who was a daughter of Benjamin Price. After his marriage they located on the present farm, having since been engaged in general farming, stock raising and the dairy business. Mr. Lawther is an admirer of fine cattle, and has a specially fine lot of Devons on his farm. He is a progressive citizen, which the many improvements on his farm, such as the new house and barn prove. In politics he is a Democrat.

JOHN LAWTON (deceased) was a successful agriculturist and an energetic, useful citizen. His father, Joseph Lawton, was born in Rhode Island, and in early life was married to Mary Alma, of the same State, who bore him the following children: Amy (wife of William Rankin), Pardon, Samuel, Sarah, Peter, Joanna, Anna and John. In 1819 Joseph Lawton and his family came to Washington county, Penn., the journey—necessarily a tedious one, having to be made with ox-teams—being accomplished in seven weeks. They settled on a farm in Cross Creek township, where Joseph Lawton died in 1839. In his political preferences he was an old-school Democrat.

John Lawton was born June 7, 1816, in Rhode Island, and was consequently three years of age when the family moved to Pennsylvania. On August 6, 1835, he married Margaret Miniken, daughter of William Miniken, who came from England in 1803, settling in Pittsburgh; in 1805 he married Margaret Powell, and they had children as follows: Mary (Mrs. Barlow Folk), John, Nancy (deceased), William, Sarah (wife of Harvey Lawton), Hannah, William, Margaret (married to John Lawton) and Julia (wife of Joseph Maxwell). Mr. Miniken made his first home in the New World in Pittsburgh, Penn., where he resided several years, and then removed to Washington, this county, where he conducted an extensive bakery and confectionery. He was a leading politician in the ranks of the Whig party, and in religious connection a zealous member of the Episcopal Church. He died in 1827, and in January, 1853, his wife was laid beside him.

John Lawton

John and Margaret (Miniken) Lawton passed the earlier portion of their married life in Butler county, Penn., afterward settling on the home place in Cross Creek township, this county, where they remained several years. They then moved to West Middletown, and some years later proceeded to Wisconsin, thence to Minnesota (residing there two years), finally returning to the home farm in Cross Creek township. Mr. Lawton was a successful farmer, and for forty years was a resident of Cross Creek township. Politically he was originally a Democrat, afterward becoming an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party. He died January 9, 1882, aged sixty-four years six months, and was laid to rest in Brownsville Cemetery, West Middletown, Penn. He was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church at Upper Buffalo, of which his widow is also a member.

MRS. ELIZABETH KING. William King, a son of Thomas, was born in Ireland and came with his father to America. He was married in this country to Margaret, a daughter of James McNall, a native of Ireland, and the following children were born to their union: James, born February 27, 1809; Thomas, born October 2, 1810; Eleanor, born August 25, 1812; William, born January 30, 1815; John, born December 6, 1817; Joseph, born January 26, 1820; Andrew, born June 16, 1822; Hugh, born December 15, 1824; Wells, born April 13, 1828, and Margaret J., born October 25, 1830; all of whom are now deceased except Andrew and Margaret J., and their children are scattered through different parts of the country.

William King was born January 30, 1815, in Washington county, Penn., and when eleven years of age came with the family to his present home in Robinson township. Though enjoying but limited educational advantages, Mr. King possessed much intelligence and business capacity. In 1840 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Hooper.

To them five children were born, namely: Margaret, Jane (Mrs. Robert Geary), Martha E. (deceased), William J. and Anna Zetta, all of whom are living on the home farm with their widowed mother. The father was a staunch member of the Democratic party, and in religious faith was a member and liberal supporter of the Robinson United Presbyterian Church. He died September 6, 1884, leaving to his family a double inheritance, an untarnished name being the first and most important. By careful management he had accumulated a good property, leaving 269 acres of excellent land, underlaid with a six-foot vein of the best coal, which greatly increases the value of the property, now considered one of the best estates in Robinson township.

Hugh King, a brother of William, died while on the ship "Claremont," during her passage from New Orleans to Philadelphia. He was traveling for his health at that time. The following statement was sent home by the captain of the ship: "Hugh King died January 5, 1847, on board the bark 'Claremont,' on her passage from New Orleans to Philadelphia, in Latitude 25 degrees 12 minutes North, Longitude 84 degrees 12 minutes West. He was a native of Robinson township, Washington Co., Penn. Capt. Edward Lamond, commander." The following lines by Anna L. Lear were written on the death of Hugh King:

Low in the deep we laid him down!
Sweet is his sleep, and bright the crown
The sea shall weave around his head,
While pearl and amber deck his bed.

High in the sky the evening star,
With pitying eye looked from afar—
The tender moon, through the still night,
Shed o'er the scene her lambent light.

His requiem the soft wind wailed
As far from him our fleet ship sailed,
While he, no more to wake or weep,
Unheeding lay, low in the deep.

No marbled grave o'er him shall rise,
No human trace tells where he lies,
Yet He, whose hand holds all the waves,
Forgets no lonely ocean graves.

MRS. ELIZABETH KING, a resident of Robinson township, is a daughter of William Hooper, who is a son of Philip Hooper, who was of German descent and a tanner by trade. Philip Hooper came to Allegheny county, Penn., when the forests were teeming with wild beasts and nomadic Indians, naturally jealous of the white man's encroachments on their soil. Mr. Hooper sunk vats for his tannery under the branches of sugar trees, as he could not afford to build a shed for them. He was married to Jane Hill, who bore him seven children: Philip, Alexander, Samuel, John, William, Elizabeth and Nancy. William Hooper was born on the home place in Allegheny county, becoming familiar from boyhood with the hardships and dangers incident to frontier life. He selected as his life companion Miss Jane Wright, whose father, James Wright, was born in Ireland, and, emigrating to this country, settled in Allegheny county, Penn. The Indians were often heard moving along the creek just below his cabin door, while the listener would wait breathlessly until the sound of their footsteps was lost in the distance, or if coming nearer still, then the terrified family would flee to a neighboring fort for refuge. To William and Jane (Wright) Hooper thirteen children were born, of whom the following lived to maturity: James, Philip, John, William, Elizabeth, Samuel, Jane and Archibald, of whom Elizabeth is the only one yet surviving. She was born November 5, 1815, on the old Hooper homestead in Allegheny county, Penn., where she grew to womanhood, assisting with the household duties. On December 28, 1840, she gave her hand in marriage to William King, a son of William, whose father, Thomas King, settled near Washington, this county, at an early day.

THOMAS ALEXANDER BLACK is the only male representative of an old Irish family, his grandfather, Thomas, having been the first of the family to settle in America.

Thomas Black (the grandfather) was born May 12, 1777, in Ireland, and when a young man was married in his native country to Margaret Hunter, who was born September 1, 1775. Before leaving Ireland, four children were born to this couple: William (a resident of Washington county, Iowa), born December 25, 1799; Samuel (living in Washington county, Ohio), born March 8, 1801; Mary Ann (unmarried), born February 14, 1804; and James, born March 15, 1807. Thomas Black and his family came to America about 1809, locating in Washington county, Penn. In 1811 he settled on the home farm in Hanover township, upon which his grandson (Thomas A.) is now residing. Mr. Black amassed a valuable property, and passed away June 21, 1851, followed by his wife, May 29, 1855. They were buried in Paris cemetery. Both were consistent members of the Seceder Church. After coming to America the following children were added to their family: Margaret (first married to a Mr. Bell, now widow of a Mr. McLaughlin, is living in Omaha, Neb.), born July 11, 1810; Griskey (unmarried), born March 22, 1813; Jane (wife of John McWhirter, Mercer county, Penn.), born in February, 1818. Of these children Margaret and Griskey are the only ones living.

James Black, son of Thomas, was born in Ireland, and was but a child when his parents came to the farm in Hanover township, where his youth was passed. On March 18, 1844, he was married to Charlotte McWhirter, a lady of Irish parentage, who was born January 21, 1819. After his marriage, James Black located on the old homestead, and continued to follow farming during his life, with the exception of one year in which he was engaged in the milling business. He was a successful farmer and esteemed citizen. Politically he was a Whig, then a Republican, and in religious faith both he and his wife were members of the U. P. Church. He died March 6, 1881, his wife having gone before him to the "Silent Land," October 24, 1867, and both are now buried in Paris cemetery. Their children were born as follows: Samuel, born January 21, 1846, is now a U. P. minister of Tarentum, Allegheny Co., Penn.; Mary Jane, born August 10, 1847, deceased wife of Cyrus G. Arnold; Margaret, born September 13, 1849, was fatally burned and died November 2, 1853; Eliza Ann, born October 31, 1851, deceased wife of J. P. Lawther; Thomas Alexander, whose name opens this sketch; Margaret H., born October 10, 1856, deceased wife of Lee Arnold; and Sarah E., Mrs. J. M. Herron, of Hanover township, born March 6, 1859.

Thomas Alexander Black was born December 28, 1853, on the old farm in Hanover township, which he now owns and resides upon. He attended the "Old McCausland School," and assisted with the farm duties. On July 4, 1881, he married Alice E. Cassidy, daughter of Hugh and Nancy (McCune) Cassidy, of Hanover township. Since his marriage Mr. Black has followed farming on the old homestead, and in 1883 took an extended tour through the West, visiting several of the growing States. He is an admirer of fine cattle, as the number of thoroughbred Holsteins to be found on his farm amply proves. In politics he is a Republican, but upholds the principles of the Prohibitionists. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church. They have one daughter, Beulah O., born January 6, 1883.

WILLIAM B. LIBBEY, a dentist, born in Columbiana county, Ohio, is a son of Bennett and Agnes (Littell) Libbey, the former a native of Vermont, the latter of Beaver, Penn. Mathias Libbey, grandfather of William B., was also a native of Vermont, where he died. He was the father of three sons and one daughter—Bennett, William, Haines and Alvira, all now deceased except Haines, who resides at Lynn, Mass.

Bennett Libbey was a machinist, who moved to Pittsburgh in youth, where he married Agnes Littell, whose father emigrated from Ireland and settled in the southern part of Beaver county, where he married Mary Walker. The couple lived at Pittsburgh for a number of years, then moved to Columbiana county, Ohio, where William B. Libbey was born; five years later, the family returned to Beaver county, Penn., where Bennett Libbey died December 19, 1856, aged fifty-two years. His widow, Agnes, died at Pittsburgh, November 15, 1888, in her eightieth year. Their children are: Alice, William B., John E. and James A., all residents of Pittsburgh except William B., who lives at Washington, Penn. Bennett Libbey was a Presbyterian in religious opinion. In 1854 or 1856 he abandoned the Democratic and united with the Republican party.

William B. Libbey was reared in Beaver county, Penn., his education being secured at the common schools of the neighborhood, and at Beaver academy. For some years he was a traveling salesman for a wholesale house, but abandoning commercial life commenced the study of dentistry in the office of Dr. J. G. Templeton, Pittsburgh, Penn., attending also the Dental College at Ann Arbor, Mich., and the Pennsylvania Dental College, where he graduated. In 1880 he came to Washington, and engaged in the active and successful practice of his profession. At Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Dr. Libbey was united in marriage, April 11, 1882, with Adelaide, daughter of Charles and Phoebe (Lockwood) Sutton, of Fairfax C. H., Va., whose ancestors were Quakers from Dutchess county, N. Y. Mr. Sutton had eight children—Mariana, Alice, Josephine, Adelaide, John and Charles (twin brothers), Jennie and Ella. To this union two children were born, Helen and Florence. The family residence in Washington is on the corner of Wade avenue and Wheeling street. In 1863 the Doctor enlisted in the one hundred days' service, and in 1864 re-enlisted, this time in Company H, Fifth P. V. A., was promoted second lieutenant of his company, with which he served until the close of the war, being mustered out June 30, 1865, at Vienna, Virginia.

JOSEPH S. CULLEY. Among the prosperous agriculturists of Hanover township, there are few, if any, who have made more practical application of scientific principles in their vocation than has this progressive citizen. He is a native of Washington county, Penn., and grandson of Levi Culley.

Levi Cully was born about 1739, in Maryland, and there married Esther Smith, a Marylander, who was born about 1775. Levi was a farmer, who, about 1800, came to Washington county, Penn. The long journey was made in a large covered wagon drawn by four horses. When crossing the Susquehanna river, a singular experience befell them. As the large covered wagon stood on the ferry-boat, a strong breeze was blowing, and the cover served to catch the wind, the force of which drove the boat some distance out of its course, causing much trouble in securing a suitable place to land, since they were unable to reach the usual place. This wagon contained the father and mother, with their two children, Jesse and Joseph. They proceeded on their journey, sleeping on their wagon beside the road at night, and finally arriving in this county, located near Bulger Station, Smith township, where the father rented a farm. He was a tenant on different farms several years, and by energy and economy eventually accumulated a small sum, purchased 277 acres of John L. Proudfoot, partially lying in Hanover and Smith townships. Levi Culley was a cooper, following that trade in connection with his farm. He was a hard worker, and very successful in his business. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church. He died in 1818, and his widow, with the assistance of her sons, managed the estate which he left, until in 1840 she too was laid to rest by the side of her husband in the Florence cemetery. Of their children, the following is a brief record: Jesse was born in Maryland, and when but a small boy came to Washington county, Penn., with his parents (he was married to Susan, daughter of Elder John Duncan, and settled on a farm in this county, where he died in his seventy-second year); Joseph, of whom a sketch follows; George was the first child born after the family settled here (he was married to Jane Fulton, and was a farmer; he died in Hanover township, aged seventy-two years); Robert was a cabinet maker by trade (his wife was Amanda McCond; they settled in Florence, this county, where he died August 21, 1848); Sinie never married (she died in early womanhood); Lydia was married to James Cubbison, a cabinet maker (they afterward settled on a farm in Gernsey county, Ohio, and in 1814 moved to a place near Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, where she died); Rebecca was the wife of William Cole, of Hanover township, where she died; Levi learned the tailor's trade at Florence, afterward entered into a partnership with Andrew Conn, at Mansfield, Ohio (he was married to Mary Ann Butterfoes, and is now living on a farm in Morrow county, Ohio); Helen married Robert G. Smith, a farmer of Hanover township, where she died; and John.

Joseph Culley, born in Maryland, was brought by his parents to Washington county, Penn., in infancy. He was reared on the farm, received a subscription-school education, and there learned the cooper's trade. When his father died, the management of the large farm was given to Joseph and an older brother, Jesse. In 1825 Joseph Culley married Martha Scott, who was born December 13, 1796, daughter of a pioneer, Joseph Scott. Three children were born to this marriage, namely: Maria, widow of John Armor, born June 21, 1826, is now living near Murdocksville, Hanover township; Elizabeth, deceased wife of James Anderson, of Beaver county, born December 21, 1829; and Joseph S., whose name opens this sketch. The parents passed their lives on a portion of the "Old Scott Tract," near Raccoon creek, in the eastern part of Hanover township. The father followed his trade, and being a very skillful workman could easily set up ten barrels a day, besides attending to the general duties of the farm. He was an old-time Whig, but united with the Republican party upon its organization. He possessed the spirit of industry, which seems to be a special characteristic of this family, and was an influential citizen. He died on the farm, and in 1882 was followed by Mrs. Culley. Both were conscientious members of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, and are buried side by side in the Florence cemetery.

Joseph S. Culley was born March 26, 1838, on the home farm in Hanover township, where his boyhood was passed in attending the old Coventry school, and receiving his initiation into the mysteries of agriculture. His tastes led him to the choice of a rural life, which he has continued to pursue on the old home place. On June 15, 1864, he married Sarah Donaldson. Miss Donaldson was born March 31, 1843, in Hanover township, and was a daughter of Richard and Mary (Bigger) Donaldson. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Culley, namely: Edward A., now studying for the Presbyterian ministry at the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, and is a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, was born August 8, 1865; Annie M., deceased at the age of fourteen years, born September 9, 1867; George W., living on the home farm, born February 14, 1870; William C., at home, born June 5, 1873; Andrew D., born January 8, 1875; Sarah M., born October 31, 1878. In 1876 Mr. Culley erected his present residence, and to the old farm added an adjoining tract known as the "Richmond Farm." He now owns 300 acres of fine land. His wife died March 12, 1879, and was buried at Florence. On March 30, 1880, he married Carrie Buchanan, a native of Robinson township, and a daughter of John Buchanan. Joseph S. Culley is an ardent supporter of the Republican party, with which his first vote was cast. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Florence, of which he has been a trustee for several years.

ARTHUR A. POOLE, the popular jeweler of Washington, of English ancestry, was born in Bedford county, Penn., November 9, 1844. Denton Poole, his grandfather, emigrated from England to Maryland, where was born, in 1816, Samuel, the father of our subject.

Samuel Poole was a carpenter and builder. He married, in 1842, in Pennsylvania, Margaret Blankney, a native of Bedford county, and seven children were born to them, two of whom survive: Morgan, a resident of Braddock, Penn., and Arthur A. The parents lived in Allegany county, Md., until 1850, when they removed to Cumberland, Md., where the father died in 1877, and the mother in March, 1857, at the age of forty years.

Arthur A. Poole had the advantages of a good common-school education, after which he clerked in a shoe store in Cumberland, Md., until he enlisted in September, 1861, in Company H, Second Maryland Infantry, and served until the close of the war, chiefly in the valley of Virginia. After his discharge he learned the jewelry business with S. T. Little, in Cumberland, Md., and on finishing an apprenticeship, he worked as journeyman in various places. In 1875 he opened a jewelry store in Cumberland, Md., in partnership with P. J. Smith, the style of the firm being Smith & Poole; in 1878 he came to Washington, and opened a small store in the same line of trade, now one of the finest in the place. By industry and careful attention to business, Mr. Poole has met with well-merited success. To-day he is one of the leading business men of Washington. In October, 1871, our subject married Laura V., daughter of Capt. R. A. French, of Cumberland, Md. Five children were born to them: Arthur French (who graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in the class of 1891, and is now in his father's store), Edith V., Helen May, Herbert C. and Marguerite. Mr. and Mrs. Poole are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington; in politics he is a Republican.

MRS. NANCY REED, widow of James Reed, is descended from that noble stock of Scotch-Presbyterians who, owing to religious persecutions, passed over from Scotland to the North of Ireland. She is a daughter of John and Orpha (Cornwell) Hays, both of Chartiers township.

*The family of Hay (or Hays as they generally spelled their name after making their new home in the North of Ireland) have prominent place in the history of Scotland. It is said that about the year 980, in the reign of Kenneth III., the Danes having invaded Scotland, they were encountered by that king near Lancarty, in Perthshire. The Scots at first gave way and fled through a narrow pass where they were stopped by a countryman of great strength and courage and his two sons, with no other weapons than the yokes of their plows. Upbraiding the fugitives for their cowardice, he succeeded in rallying them, and the battle being resumed, the Danes were defeated. After the victory was obtained, the old peasant, while lying on the ground, wounded and fatigued, cried, "Hay, Hay," which word became the surname of his posterity, and the king, as a reward for his signal service, gave him as much land in the course of Gowrie as a falcon should fly over before it settled; and a falcon being accordingly let off flew over an extent of ground six miles in length, after called Errol, and lighted on a stone, still called "falcon stone."

HAY, EARL OF KINNOUL. This noble family is a branch of the illustrious family of Errol, and is sprung from Sir William Hay, ancestor of the house of Leys, who was second son of Sir David, and brother-german of Sir Gilbert Hay of Errol, who flourished in the reign of King Alexander III. From him was lineally descended Sir Edmund Hay of Melginch, who made a considerable figure in the reign of King James VI. He was father of Sir Peter, the father of Sir Patrick, who was in much estimation with King James IV. George, his second son, being, by the care of his father, well brought up, was, for the improvement of his education, sent to France, where he spent some years under the tuition of the learned Edmund Hay, his uncle; soon after his return, being about twenty-one years of age, he was introduced to the court of King James VI, by his kinsman, James Hay, Viscount Downcaster and earl of Carlisle, and in a very short time raised to be one of the gentlemen of his majesty's bed-chamber, and had a gift of the Carthusian priory of Perth. He was by the same king preferred to very prominent positions, among them that of lord high chancellor of Scotland, in which post he was continued by Charles I, King of Great Britain (for in the meantime the union of England and Scotland had been consummated), who advanced him to the dignity of Viscount Dupplin, and Earl of Kinnoul. The position of chancellor he held up to his death, which occurred December 16, 1634, a period of fourteen years. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Haliburton of Pitcur, and by her had issue Sir Peter, who died unmarried; George, his successor; and Lady Margaret.

George, second earl, was made captain of the yeomen of the guard to Charles I, and one of his privy council, but lost most of his estate in pursuit of his loyalty to the king.

William, son of George, third earl, died in 1677, and was succeeded by his second son.

George, fourth earl, who died in Hungary, 1687, without issue, and was succeeded by his brother.

William, fifth earl, who, dying a bachelor in 1709, the honor descended to Thomas Hay, of Dalhousy, near Perth, the next male heir.

Which Thomas, sixth earl, was the brother and heir of George Hay, of Bellhousy, son of Peter Hay, of the same place, third son of Sir Patrick Hay, of Melginch, and brother of George, first earl of Kinnoul, and so succeeding, was elected one of the fifteen peers of the third and fourth British parliaments. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Drummond, Viscount Strathallan. Their youngest son, Col. John Hay, of Cromlich, in 1715 followed the Pretender from Scotland, who gave him the title of Earl of Inverness.

George Henry (eldest son of Thomas), Viscount Dupplin, in 1711 was created a peer of Great Britain by Queen Anne. In 1718 he succeeded his father as seventh Earl of Kinnoul. In 1709 he married Abigail Harley, youngest daughter of Robert, Earl of Oxford, and by her had four sons and six daughters. The sons were Thomas, Viscount Dupplin; Robert, who took the name and arms of Drummond as heir of entail to his great-grandfather, William Drummond, Viscount Strathallan, and was elected in 1748 bishop of St. Asaph; in 1761 was elected bishop of Salisbury, and same year archbishop of York. John was rector of Lincoln; Henry Edward was consul-general in Portugal in May, 1754, and plenipotentiary to same king, 1762.

From a work giving an account of the "Clan Hay."

Thomas, eighth earl of Kinnoul, was commissioner of the revenue in Ireland, afterward commissioner of the board of trade in England; was ambassador to the King of Portugal, 1759, and was soon afterward appointed chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, but resigned all his offices in 1762. In 1741 he married Constantia, daughter of John Kirle Erule, of Whetham, in Wiltshire, Esquire; she died 1753 without surviving issue.

JOHN HAYS, a widower, emigrated from Lismore, County Londonderry, to America about the year 1775, accompanied by four sons, one, John, the second eldest, remaining in Ireland. He settled on Plum run in Washington county, Penn., taking up in his own name a tract of land containing some 419 acres, which in the patent is called "Hayfield." This patent, which had not been lifted until April, 1794, covered what was afterward known as the Anderson, Halft and Ramsey properties, the old homestead being on the Anderson tract. John Hays, after coming to this country, married a second time, and this wife, Jean, died September 15, 1795, aged sixty years. John Hays departed this life December 26, 1801, aged seventy-five years, and was laid beside his wife. He had five sons, all born in Ireland as follows: William, March 1, 1753; John, April 15, 1756; Robert, September 12, 1758; James, December 10, 1762; and Samuel, February 27, 1776. As the father lived in the bounds of Dr. McMillan's church, doubtless he was a member of same. Politically he was an Old-line Whig.

William Hays, eldest son of the pioneer John, on his arrival in the county from Ireland, took possession in his own name of a tract of land about one mile further up the Plum run valley, containing 441 acres, which he designated in the patent "Haywood." Soon afterward (probably about the year 1793) he married Jane Henderson who bore him children as follows: Jane, born November 4, 1794; William, March 26, 1796; Nancy, March 25, 1798; John, July 14, 1799; Isaac, March 15, 1801, died October 6, 1805; Catherine, August 29, 1802, died October 24, 1805; Robert, May 12, 1804, and Catherine, December 15, 1805, died September 4, 1806. The father of this family died suddenly October 26, 1805, and he and a son and daughter, all dying within a few hours of each other, were laid to rest in Miller's Run graveyard. The bereaved wife and mother subsequently married Henry McAfee.

John Hays, second son of William, was born in Chartiers township. He married, March 29, 1819, Miss Orpha Cornwell, and the young couple remained in Chartiers township until 1860, when he came to Canonsburg. The children by this union were William, born July 29, 1820, died April 27, 1881; Nancy, born June 17, 1822, married to James Reed, sketch of whom follows; Jane E., born September 7, 1824, married to Rev. McFarland; Isaac, born April 17, 1827; John Smith, born August 2, 1830; Matilda, born September 29, 1832, died September 2, 1833, and George Price, born February 2, 1838. The mother died November 2, 1851, in the fifty-fifth year of her age, having been born in 1796. The father subsequently married Miss Jane Daily, formerly of Monongahela City, but then of Pittsburgh. He died July 31, 1875; his widow is living on the old homestead in Canonsburg. He was first a Whig, afterward a Republican, and served many years as justice of the peace. He was a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run, and at Canonsburg, and was a trustee of Jefferson College.

James Reed, only son of Mathew Reed, was reared and educated on the old home place in Cecil township, and December 11, 1845, was married to Isabel Johnston, of Washington county, Penn. They had four children, namely: Mathew M., Eliza J., Carr and James L., all of whom died young. This wife dying January 21, 1857, Mr. Reed married, September 15, 1866, Nancy Hays, of Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn. He remained on the farm until the spring of 1869, when failing health compelled him to give up agricultural pursuits, and he removed to Canonsburg, where he died December 4, 1890. Like his father he was a thorough Presbyterian and liberal supporter of the church.

WILLIAM H. UNDERWOOD is a descendant of a family of Quakers of that name who came to America with William Penn, and made a settlement in what is now the State of Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather of William H., a tailor by trade, was a resident for a time of Fayette county, this State, whence he moved to Monongahela, where he died about the year 1843, at the age of seventy-seven years.

George Washington Underwood, father of our subject, was born February 22, 1814, at Red Stone, Fayette Co., Penn., and was reared to the tailor's trade. In Monongahela he married Elizabeth Jay, a native of this county, and this union being outside of the Quaker faith, his name was dropped from the list of Society of Friends, as was then the custom. When William H. was seven or eight years of age the family returned to Fayette county, whence, after a stay of some years, they came, in 1850, to Washington, where the father followed tailoring in partnership with George W. Deiver for several years, but is now living retired in Erie county, at the age of seventy-seven years; the mother was called to her long home in 1856, aged forty years.

William H. Underwood is a native of Washington county, born in Monongahela, June 4, 1839, and was consequently eleven years old when the family came to Washington, the common schools of which city he attended in his boyhood and early youth. He then commenced clerking in a store in the borough, continuing in that capacity until 1861, when, in response to Lincoln's call for troops he enlisted in Company E, Twelfth P. V. I., which was ordered to the vicinity of Baltimore, Md. At the end of the three months' term he returned, invalidated with camp fever. In January of the following year he re-enlisted for three years, in Company A, One Hundredth P. V. I. ("Round Heads"), and participated in the memorable expedition to South Carolina. His war record in this regiment is as follows: Mustered in January 1, 1862; promoted first sergeant May 12, 1865; mustered out with the company at Harrisburgh, Penn., July 24, 1865. Prior to the expiration of his term he veteranized, in East Tennessee. He was twice wounded, first November 29, 1863, at the siege of Knoxville, Tenn., a minie rifle ball breaking his jaw. Declining to go to hospital, he tied his face up with his handkerchief, and remained on the field. The second wound he received June 2, 1864, at Cold Harbor, where he was struck by a minie ball in the right shoulder, which necessitated his going to hospital, where he remained until September following. After that he was present at the siege of Richmond, etc. At the close of the war he returned to Washington, and again took up clerking, which he followed four years, at the end of which time he bought the news-stand now occupied by McKay & Co., selling out the same in 1881. In the meantime, in the fall of 1878, he had been elected register of wills, in which office he served three years. After selling out his news business, he remained in Washington, engaged in various occupations, until the spring of 1884, when he bought a grocery store, carrying it on alone until his appointment in 1890 to the postmastership of Washington, a position he has since filled with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public. At the time of his appointment he sold an interest in his grocery business to R. B. Dougherty, the firm being now Underwood & Dougherty. On April 29, 1869, Mr. Underwood married, in Washington, Penn., Miss Emma, daughter of Silas Clark, whose family (now almost extinct) came to the county at an early day. They were for the most part stock dealers, and the village of Clarksville was named after them. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Underwood, viz.: Owen Clark (who is a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, class of 1891, in classics, and is now assisting his father in the postoffice), and Homer Krepps. Mr. Underwood is a member of the M. E. Church, and of William F. Templeton Post No. 120, G. A. R., Department of Pennsylvania.

JOSEPH HOWARTH, of the firm of J. Howarth & Son, of the marble, slate, granite and mantel works, Washington, Penn., was born at Barnsley, England, January 14, 1826.

Joseph Howarth, his grandfather, was a stone cutter in England, where he died. George Howarth, father of our subject, also a native of that "little spot," there married Ann Walker, an Englishwoman, who bore him the following-named children: Ann Elizabeth, widow of William Day, of Allegheny, Penn.; Joseph; John, who died in England; Sarah Anna, who died in infancy in Philadelphia; William James, in the marble business in Washington, Penn.; Hannah Mary and Emma (both deceased), and Emily Mary, deceased wife of George A. Lawman, of Pittsburgh. In 1830 George Howarth and his wife came to the United States, making their first home in Philadelphia, and moved to Pittsburgh in 1833. The father died at Sewickley, Penn., in January, 1876, at the age of seventy-nine years; the mother died in March, 1881, at Washington, Penn. in the home of her son Joseph, aged seventy-eight years.

Joseph Howarth, of whom this biographical sketch mainly treats, was brought by his parents to this country in 1830. He learned his trade of his father at Pittsburgh, and in 1865 came to Washington, Penn., where he established his present prosperous business. In 1874 he erected the building at present occupied as a business stand and dwelling, in which one store room is rented for a grocery. In 1852 he married, at Pittsburgh, Jane, daughter of John Tyler. Nine children blessed this union, namely: George, in the marble trade at Sacramento, Cal.; Elizabeth A., at home; Josephine, married to Rev. J. E. Irvine, of Altoona, Penn.; William E., in partnership with his father; Bertha E., Harry A., Annie W. and Edna Jane, all at home. Mary A. died in Allegheny. Mr. Howarth is the oldest resident marble cutter in Washington, and from a very small beginning has made his own success, and won an enviable popularity through strict attention to business, earnest perseverance, judicious economy and unquestionable integrity in all his dealings. Politically he is a Republican, and has served as a councilman of the borough of Washington.

MARTIN COULSON. Although this gentleman has been identified with the history of Washington for but a short time, he has already taken a place among the most prominent and valued citizens of the community. He was born October 6, 1830, on a farm on the National road, situated about one mile east of Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn., and there learned the blacksmith's trade of his father, who had followed that vocation all his life.

At the age of eighteen years Martin Coulson left home, and, taking a position on a steamboat, was rapidly promoted. For thirty-three years he served as engineer on the Mississippi, Ohio and Missouri rivers, having run on the Missouri river for sixteen years, and during the last seven years of his river life he was captain. On March 4, 1857, he married Violet G., daughter of Capt. Joseph Sheplar, a native of Westmoreland county, Penn. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Coulson resided in Allegheny until 1888 (where they moved in the highest social circles), when he purchased his present farm, about two miles west of Monongahela. He has given especial attention to stock raising, and now owns nearly fifty blooded trotting horses. The place consists of 260 acres, surrounded by a good fence of pine and cedar, which he had erected, and he also erected the buildings on the farm. The dwelling is a handsome modern structure, fitted and furnished in a manner affording ample evidence of the progressive spirit characterizing the owner. In politics Mr. Coulson votes with the Democratic party. He takes an active interest in all public enterprises. His children are Joseph S., Mrs. Margaret E. Adams and A. K., all living with their parents on the home place. Mrs. Coulson and her daughters are members of the Methodist Church, and are well-known society ladies.

JOHN WHITE was born December 10, 1814, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and is a son of Fisher I. White, whose father, Benjamin White, was a native of Delaware. The last named was a ship-builder by trade, and died in his native State. His children were Fisher I., James, and Sarah (wife of John McIlvaine).

Fisher I. White was born in 1773, in Delaware, and grew to manhood on the home farm, receiving a subscription-school education. In early life he was married to Helen Joy, who bore him four children, namely: Wesley, Mary, William and John, the latter being the only living representative. The father was identified with the Whig party, and served in many township offices. He died April 28, 1858, and not long after was followed by his wife to the grave. Both were members of the M. E. Church.

John White received an education in the neighborhood of his birthplace, and October 26, 1843, was married to Maria L. Allen, a native of Allen township, this county, born October 28, 1822. She is a daughter of Abia Allen, and granddaughter of Joshua Allen, whose father, Joseph, was a Quaker of eastern Pennsylvania. The last mentioned came here, and bought of William Penn a large tract of land near the present Fayette City. This tract was called in his honor "Allen township." He donated the grounds for the Mt. Tabor cemetery, in which three generations of the Allen family are now sleeping, his wife, Deborah (Hill) Allen, being the first tenant of a grave there. Joseph Allen became a wealthy farmer. Among his children was a son, Joshua, who followed his father's agricultural business, and, when a young man, married Elizabeth McCrory, who bore him eight children, all of whom are deceased except Mrs. Stark.

Abia Allen, son of Joshua and Elizabeth Allen, was born in July, 1799, in Allen township. In 1821 he was united in marriage with Mary Hough, born near Mt. Pleasant, December 22, 1799. They were the parents of Charlotta, wife of D. Morlin, a resident of Allen township; Barbara, widow of Wilson Jackman, of Henry county, Ill.; A. B., living at Cleveland, Ohio; Maria L., wife of John White, and two who are deceased. Mr. Allen was a prominent worker in the Republican party, and served in various local offices. He was a successful farmer, and died in 1849. In 1886 his wife was laid by his side. Both were members of the Disciple Church. To the union of John and Maria L. (Allen) White, three children were born: Allen J., a resident of Fallowfield township; Elliott S., a Methodist clergyman of Elizabethtown, Allegheny county, and Frank W., living at home. The home place contains 148 well-cultivated acres, upon which Mr. White carries on practical farming with signal success. He is identified with the Republican party, and in religious faith he and his wife are members of the Ebenezer M. E. Church.

WILLIAM IAMS. Prominent among the progressive farmers of West Bethlehem township is the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch. He is a grandson of John Iams, a native of New Jersey, who in early manhood removed to this county, where he secured a patent for nearly one thousand acres of land in West Bethlehem and Amwell townships, nearly all of which land is yet in the possession of his descendants. His children were: John, Mary, Sarah, Nancy, Charity and William, all of whom were born in Amwell township, where they lived and died respected citizens.

William Iams, son of John the pioneer, was born, in 1782, near Martins mill, Amwell township, and received a liberal education in the common branches of the subscription schools. He married Delilah, daughter of Elisha Meek, one of the early settlers of Greene county, Penn., and to them were born the following named children: Betsey (deceased), Miller James, John H. (deceased), Elisha, Thomas, Isaac, William, Delilah Johnson, Mrs. Mary Bigler (deceased), Abraham (deceased) and Rachel Smith. Abraham died in the service of his country at the battle of Fair Oaks, while a member of the Eighty-fifth P. V. L., serving under Capt. Sellers. Miller Iams resides in Ritchie county, W. Va., where he is a well-known farmer; Delilah Johnson and Thomas live in Greene county, Penn.; Isaac resides in Amwell township; Elisha, William and Rachel are residents of West Bethlehem township. The father of this family was a Christian, and a member of the Baptist Church; a brilliant Bible scholar and faithful toiler in the service of his Master. He was a Democrat of the Old School, but, aside from doing his duty at the polls, was not prominently identified with politics. His death took place in 1868, aged seventy-nine years. His wife died in 1877, aged eighty-four years.

William Iams, son of William and Delilah Iams, was born March 2, 1830, on the old homestead farm still retained in his possession. In early manhood he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed five years, when he turned his attention to farming and stock raising, in which he has been very successful. He married February 9, 1854, Eliza, a daughter of Zebulon and Catherine Ferrel, a native of New Jersey, and an early settler of Washington county. They have the following family: Sadie F., John H. (deceased), an infant (deceased) and Laura A. Mrs. Eliza Iams died July 8, 1863, and on February 13, 1870, he married Mary, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Swihart. The children born to this union were: Etta R. (deceased), Lizzie B. (deceased), William J., Mary E., Miller A., Clark J., Isaac W., Charlie P. and Tris M. Miss Laura A. Iams, who married Samuel Greenlee, resides in Amwell township, also Sadie, married to James Hufford. Mr. Iams is a remarkably intelligent man, and an active member of the Democratic party, who have shown their appreciation for him by electing him to township offices of trust, which he has filled with credit to himself and the satisfaction of his constituents. He is a member of the Baptist Church, and an ardent believer in the teachings of our Lord. The home farm consists of 127 acres of very good land, upon which he raises a fine breed of cattle and sheep.

WILLIAM WOLF is descended from a stalwart German family who in an early day made a settlement in Washington county. Peter Wolf, great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Germany, and prior to the French-Indian war in this country emigrated from his home on the banks of the Rhine, to seek a new one on the less densely populated American continent, where

A man is a man if he's willing to toil,
And the poorest may gather the fruits of the soil.

When the Wolf family came to Washington county they made their home in the dense forest, where roamed the wolf, the deer and the bear, and the ofttimes less welcome Indian. Here they lived in comparative safety in their little log house, enduring all the hardships and privations incident to pioneer days, and ere they passed from earth were eyewitnesses to very many of the changes that brought about the development of civilization in their midst. At one time the Indians became so hostile that the settlers were compelled to seek safety in the nearest blockhouse. Peter Wolf bought three farms in this county, one for each of his sons, William, John and Jacob. Two sons, Peter and Cresley, had moved to Ohio, where all trace of them is lost. The father died in this county at a very advanced age, and it may here be mentioned that the family have generally been remarkably long-lived.

William Wolf, grandfather of William, was born in Lancaster county, Penn. In 1775 he came to Washington county, and soon afterward enlisted in the service of Louis Wetzel, the great Indian-hunter, as a spy. For some time he taught in country schools. In those days the Indians were very hostile, and the only protection the settlers had was a blockhouse or fort, situated some distance off. William Wolf married Miss Susan Ashbaugh, who bore him eight children: Mary, Betsey, Susan, William, Peter, John, Simon and Christopher, all of whom lived to be over eighty years of age, except William who died when sixty years old. The mother died some time in the early part of the present century, and the father afterward remarried in Ohio; he died in 1840, aged fourscore years, his second wife surviving him. Jacob Wolf, his brother, followed farming in Buffalo township, and was also a justice of the peace. His home was on the road usually taken by travelers, and his house frequently served the purposes of an inn. One of his daughters, Sabina, was a beautiful girl of a comely figure. In 1780, when she was eighteen years of age, Judge Hugh H. Brackenridge, of Philadelphia, being en route, in company with several friends, for Wheeling, W. Va., stopped at her father's house, to seek a night's lodging. Sabina was told to "put the gentleman's horse away," and supposing herself unobserved sprang lightly on the horse's back, and galloped off to the stable. The Judge, however, saw the act, and also observed that on her return to the house she cleared the fence with a running jump. Brackenridge was so delighted at seeing such an agile female, so different from city girls, that he passed the entire evening in conversation with the fair damsel, and became so infatuated with her, that, just as he was about to renew his journey the following morning, he asked the "old squire" for his daughter's hand in marriage. A few days later, on his return trip, the Judge again stopped at the house of his lady-love, married her in her father's house, and took her with him to Philadelphia, where he had her educated in a select seminary. Some of her descendants are now residents of Washington county, where she died some twenty years ago.

Peter Wolf, father of our subject, was a native of this county, having been born in the year 1786, in Buffalo township, where he was reared to farm life, but subsequently learned the trade of cabinet maker with John Wilson, of Washington borough, where he followed the business forty years. In 1849 he was elected sheriff of the county, serving three years, and then retired into private life. In 1813 he married Miss Sarah McGonigal, a lady of Irish parentage, and a native of Carlisle, Penn., who had come to Washington, Penn., when about thirteen years of age. The children born to them were William; Elizabeth, wife of William K. Shannon, of South Strabane township; Jane, wife of John C. Copeland, of Steubenville; Sarah, wife of J. H. Bristow, also of Steubenville, and Simon, who died in Washington, Penn. The father died in 1865 at the age of eighty years, the mother in 1846, aged fifty years.

William Wolf, the subject proper of this sketch, was born in the borough of Washington, Penn., June 10, 1815. He was educated at the schools of the place, and learned the trade of cabinet maker, at which he worked in Washington some twenty-eight years. For twenty years he has been speculating and dealing in real estate. He built the John A. Best store, which he afterward sold to Mr. Best. In 1836 Mr. Wolf was married in Washington to Lavina, daughter of Joseph Hallam; they have had no children. He is a Republican in politics, and during his father's incumbency as sheriff he served as deputy under him. He is a Sir Knight Templar, and at one time was a member of the I. O. O. F. Strictly a temperance man, Mr. Wolf has not tasted liquor for forty years, and has never used tobacco in any form. For thirty-four years he has lived at the same home, in South Strabane township, just outside the borough limits. Mr. Wolf has made his own success in life, and has accumulated a comfortable competence.

GEORGE W. STACEY, proprietor of a handsome glassware and china store in Monongahela, has become prominently identified with the interests of that town during his short residence within its limits, and is a most valued citizen.

John Stacey, his father, was born in Cut Lambeth, London, England, and coming to America, when a young man, settled in Kentucky and followed the trade of a marble cutter. After remaining some time in that State, he came to Allegheny, Penn., where he died in 1858. His wife, Louisa, was the daughter of John Larcombe, also a native of England, who, before coming to America, married Mary Bird. They located at Burgettstown, Penn., but after a time moved to a permanent home at a place called Joseph's Mills, W. Va. Their children, eight in number, were born as follows: Louisa (Mrs. Stacey), Charles, Martha, Jane, George, Levi, Virginia and Ann. The father was a staunch advocate of Democratic principles, and in religion was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He died at his home in 1879. The following named children were born to John and Louisa Stacey: George W., John W., Louisa and Deborah.

George W. Stacey, the subject of this sketch, was born October 15, 1849, at Allegheny, Penn., where he was reared and educated. At the age of eighteen years he began working for a merchant, with whom he remained three years; then he embarked in the trading business, which he followed seventeen years in different portions of Pennsylvania. In 1890 he opened a glassware and china store in Monongahela, which is now one of the largest and most complete establishments of the kind in the Monongahela Valley. Politically he is an active Republican. He was married August 9, 1886, to Annie, daughter of John Freed, a resident of Beaver Falls, Penn., to whom one son was born.

HENRY RIDER. Among those hardy frontiersmen whose energy and patient toil have made the dreary wilderness "to blossom as the rose," the ancestors of this gentleman were prominently associated. His grandparents, Christopher and Mary Magdalene Rider, were early settlers of Fallowfield township, and of the children born to them was a son, named John.

John Rider was born in 1799, in Fallowfield township, this county. He attended the subscription schools in early life, and was afterward married in Washington county, to Hannah Budd, who was born in Westmoreland county in 1800. They settled on a farm adjoining the home place in Fallowfield township, and children were born to them as follows: Joseph; Henry; Hannah, wife of John Carson of East Pike Run township, and five who are deceased. The father was a Whig and Republican, having served as justice of peace, also filling the office of constable for ten or fifteen years. He and his wife were members of the Disciple Church, of which he was an elder. He died in 1882, aged eighty-three years, followed by the mother in 1891.

Henry Rider was born March 10, 1824, on the farm in Fallowfield township. From boyhood he was trained to agricultural pursuits, which he has continued to follow. In early manhood he was married to Eliza, daughter of Solomon and Rebecca (Sheplar) Cooper, pioneers of this county, now deceased. The young couple settled on the homestead in Fallowfield township, where his wife died, leaving four children, namely: John, Teagarden, Rebecca Ann, and Hannah (who is living in Fallowfield township). After the death of his first wife (June 5, 1859), Henry Rider was married September 6, 1861, to Rebecca, daughter of Simon and Rebecca (Crawford) Wilson, pioneers of Fallowfield township, who have both been laid to rest. After his marriage, Mr. Rider bought 107 acres adjoining the homestead, and now owns 239 acres of well-cultivated land, where he carries on a general farming and stock raising business. He takes an interest in public questions, votes with the Republican party, has been prominently identified with educational progression, and has served as a member of the school board. In religious faith he is a member of the Disciple Church. Mrs. Rider died in 1880, leaving two children, Henry E., a widower (living on the home place), and Simon.

WILLIAM BEALL is a representative of a family of Scottish pioneers, who were early settlers in Brooke (now Hancock) county, W. Va. The first ancestor who came to West Virginia was Philip Beall, who was born in Maryland, of Scotch parentage. In early life he came to Hancock county, W. Va., and took up a tomahawk claim of 600 acres. The family were often compelled to leave their cabin and flee for safety from the Indians, to a fort which the pioneers had united in erecting. After selecting his land, Mr. Beall began to clear ground to plant the amount of corn required by law in order to secure the tract. In the meantime their supplies were brought over the mountains from the East, and some years later their salt was all brought from the East. Philip Beall and his faithful wife lived to a ripe old age, and saw the wild country around them dotted first with cabins and then more substantial homes. Mr. Beall possessed great physical strength, and was of massive proportions, weighing over two hundred pounds. He died in 1805, and his wife survived him only a few years, when she was buried in "Three Spring" cemetery, Hancock Co., W. Va. Nine children were born to these pioneers, seven daughters and two sons, of whom William moved to Jefferson county, Ohio, where he died.

Philip Beall, youngest son of Philip, was born in 1793, in Hancock county, W. Va. He attended the rude schools of that time until the death of his father, when the care of the farm fell upon him and his brother William. The former was not yet thirteen years of age, but he went bravely to work, and, preparing the ground, the boys each planted ten acres of corn and oats, using the clumsy implements which were then provided. Philip remained on the home farm until after the death of his mother, when, the old place being sold, he lived for some time with a brother-in-law. In early manhood he was married to Mary Gibson, who was born in 1800 in Washington county, Penn., a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Campbell) Gibson. The following children were born to them: Elizabeth (died in early girlhood), Mary Ann (deceased wife of John Carson, Stark county, Ohio), William (whose sketch follows), Rebecca (Mrs. James Morrison, of Paris, Penn.), James (living in Kansas), Melinda (an unmarried lady, of Salem, Ohio), Nancy (deceased) and Philip (of Salem, Ohio). The parents began married life in Hanover township, this county, and in 1827 came to the home farm, where the father passed the remainder of his active life. He was a popular citizen, and in politics was a lifelong Democrat, being an enthusiastic supporter of his party. Although not a church member, Mr. Beall contributed liberally to the U. P. Church at Paris, of which his wife was a member. He died October 24, 1860. His wife died September 12, 1849. They are buried in the Paris cemetery.

William Beall, son of Philip and Mary (Gibson) Beall, was born December 11, 1826, in Hanover township. When a young man he learned the blacksmith's trade at Frankfort, Penn., which he followed a year and a half. He then sustained an injury which necessitated his temporary absence from the anvil, and finally compelled him to abandon the business. He returned to the farm, and followed rural pursuits until 1852; then joined in the California Argonauts, making the trip from St. Joseph, Mo., to Placerville (then "Hangtown"), Cal., in 104 days. He remained in California six years and eight months, returning via Aspinwall, Panama City and New York, and resumed work on his father's farm. In the fall of 1860 he married Margaret Ann, born in 1836, in Smith township, a daughter of Robert and Mary (Reed) McCready. The following children were born to them: Mary L. (Mrs. Seward Walker, of Toronto, Ohio), Harry E. (a skilled railroad man in Nevada), James A. (a farmer of Hanover township), Addie L. (Mrs. Dr. Mayo Patterson, of Greensburg, Penn.), Laura V. (wife of Thomas McWright, of Hanover township), Dessa L., William C. and Alvie J., all of whom are living at home. After his marriage William Beall located on a farm which he had previously purchased near Florence, Penn., and when the old homestead was sold in 1864, he purchased it, and took up his residence there. The old place has been greatly improved under his care, and is now adorned by a fine residence. He cultivates small fruits, and was formerly interested in the wool business, but now devotes his principal attention to a dairy. In politics Mr. Beall is a lifelong Democrat, taking an active interest in his party. Both he and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Paris, and all the family are highly esteemed.

JAMES BROWN TENAN. A record of the substantial citizens of Washington county would be incomplete were the names of this representative family of Smith township not included in the list. They were among the large number of pioneers who emigrated from Ireland to America during the eighteenth century.

James Tenan was born in 1758, in County Londonderry, Ireland, where he was educated. Soon after the close of the Revolution the young man crossed the ocean to America in a small sailing vessel, and in the course of time located in Pennsylvania. He married Jane Brown, near the town of Octoraro, Lancaster county, where they remained until 1785, when they purchased and settled upon a small tract of land in Smith township, this county, where the following named children were born: John, Robert, James, William, Mary and Moses. Mr. Tenan (who then spelled his name Tynan) united with the Democratic party. In religion he was an early member of the Associate Reformed Church. He died in 1840, having been preceded to the grave by his wife in 1836.

James Tenan, son of James and Jane (Brown) Tenan, was born in 1796, in Smith township, and received his education in the subscription schools of the neighborhood. In 1829 he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of George M. McCullough, a native of Lancaster county, Penn. Mr. McCullough grew to manhood there, and there married Agnes Gibson, to whom the following named children were born: Christina (Mrs. James Wilson), Agnes (wife of Thomas McCullough), Susan, Jane (Mrs. Joseph McNall), Mary (wife of James Brown) and Margaret (Mrs. James Tenan). Mr. McCullough came to Washington county and settled on a 400-acre tract of land in Smith township, where his life was passed. He brought a few slaves with him to Washington county, where they remained until they died. Politically he was a Federalist, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Florence, where both he and his wife were buried. James and Margaret (McCullough) Tenan passed their married life on the home place in Smith township, and to their union two sons were born, viz.: George McCullough and James Brown. The father was liberal in his political views, and voted with the Jacksonian Democrats. In religious faith he was a member and liberal supporter of the Associate Reformed Church until his death, which occurred April 1, 1859.

James Brown Tenan was born September 14, 1832, the day of the burning of New York City, in Smith township, where he received a common-school education. On June 5, 1860, he married Mary, daughter of Jonas Amspoker, of Smith township, and to this union one son, Douglas, was born (died at the age of three years). On March 21, 1864, the mother died, and for his second wife Mr. Tenan married, at Philadelphia, in October, 1876, Harriet E., daughter of William H. Bozman, of McConnellsville, Morgan Co., Ohio. Her parents are both deceased; the father died in September, 1860, and the mother died at Athens, Ohio. In politics Mr. Tenan is an active Democrat, and with the exception of three years, spent at Athens, Ohio, has been a resident of Burgettstown ever since. He is a member and earnest supporter of the United Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, Mrs. Tenan being a member of the M. E. Church. On the farm in Smith township, which is situated two miles from Burgettstown, are two oil wells, with fair prospects for others. Mr. Tenan had (on his mother's side) two aunts (McCullough by name), who lived to be over ninety years of age.

SAMUEL McCOY (deceased), a pioneer farmer of Chartiers township, is a son of John and Lydia McCoy, who came to Pennsylvania about the time of the Revolution, and took out a patent of the land in Chartiers township, Washington county, where the widow of Samuel McCoy is now living. John and Lydia McCoy remained on the farm until their death, and reared the following children: Elizabeth, born December 2, 1801; Agnes, born September 23, 1803; Nancy, born January 19, 1805; Robert (deceased September 19, 1819), born January 25, 1808; Neal (living in Washington county, Penn.), born September 16, 1813; John (deceased October 24, 1889, in this county), born September 13, 1815; Samuel, born September 17, 1817; and Lydia (Mrs. William McWilliams of Canonsburg), born May 27, 1820.

Samuel McCoy, whose name opens this sketch, was born on the farm in Chartiers township, this county, remaining at home during his boyhood and receiving an education at the subscription schools of the vicinity. On March 3, 1859, he was married at Paris, Penn., to Isabelle Anderson, a native of Hancock county, Va., and daughter of Alexander and Anne (Anderson) Anderson, both of whom were also born in Hancock county. Alexander Anderson learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed, and in 1860 moved with his family to Washington county, Penn., settling in Washington borough. He died a few years later, and his widow survived him many years. Their children were Isabelle (Mrs. Samuel McCoy), Sally (widow of Robert Andrews, living in Prosperity, this county), Nancy (Mrs. Joshua Hartman, residing in Liverpool, Ohio, wife of John Arnold, both deceased), Elizabeth Hattie (living in Washington), Minnie (deceased in November, 1889), Alfred (enlisted in Washington county in the war, and was killed at the battle of Gettysburg), William (married), a blacksmith in Nebraska, and John, who died a few years ago.

Samuel McCoy passed his married life on the place where his widow is now residing, and followed agricultural pursuits. Five children were born to his union with Isabelle Anderson, namely: Mary, born March 5, 1860; Lydia Ann, born March 19, 1862 (married on September 9, 1885, to Samuel Fee); Samuel (deceased October 8, 1866), born June 16, 1864; John, born February 24, 1867; and Elizabeth, born October 2, 1869. The father of this family died October 9, 1871, in Chartiers township, at the age of fifty-five years. During life he took an interest in political questions, voting with the Democratic party, but preferred to spend the greater part of his time in home work. The old home farm, where Mrs. McCoy is now living has been in the possession of the family for more than a century, and is a valuable piece of property.

MRS. ELMIRA REDD is a daughter of John Conrad, and the widow of Thomas C. Redd, who was a son of Solomon Redd. The latter was born in Washington county, Penn., and there married to Mary, daughter of Squire Scott, also a native of this county. The children of Solomon and Mary Redd were as follows: Thomas C. (deceased), Samuel, Sarah A. (wife of James Wygant), Margaret (married to William Dicky), Susan (wife of Dr. Riggs), John, Solomon and Parke (the last named being deceased). The father was a farmer, also a boatman on the Ohio and Monongahela rivers. In politics he voted with the Whig and Republican parties, and he was a member of the Baptist Church.

Thomas C. Redd was born April 12, 1822, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education in the subscription schools of the neighborhood. He then worked on the farm, and also went on the river with his father to New Orleans. On September 25, 1851, he was united in marriage with Elmira Conrad, and the following children have been born to their union: Marion P., Josephine, Melissa E., John H., S. Ellsworth, William Henry, Marguerite and Charles F. The parents resided for twenty linen, towels, etc. Shoemakers would carry their tools on their backs from house to house, and "shoe the families" for the winter season; in summer time they generally went without shoes.

Henry Moninger, son of John Moninger, the pioneer of the family, was born in 1789 in Shunkstown, Md., and came with the rest to Washington county, where he followed farming, and was extensively engaged in stock buying, driving cattle to Baltimore and Philadelphia. He also dealt largely in real estate, and finally purchased a farm in Brooke county, W. Va., to which he moved, dying there in 1864. He was a member of the Disciple Church. In early manhood he was married to Susan Hass, who bore him children as follows: John, George, Mary (wife of Isaac Iams), Henry, Ann (wife of Jackson Closser), Jackson, Jacob, Catherine, Sarah (wife of William Gilmore) and Elizabeth. The mother of these children died June 29, 1841, at the age of fifty years, and some time in the following year the father married Mrs. Sarah Pettit (nee Hughes), by whom he had three children: Robert (deceased), James A. and Emma. Politically Mr. Moninger was a Whig, and he took an active part in building up the community in which he lived.

Jacob Moninger, subject of sketch, was reared on the home place, and received his education at the schools of the neighborhood. While yet young he was wont to assist his father in driving live stock to the Eastern markets, walking the entire distance each way. He seems to have inherited his father's penchant for real estate dealing, and has, probably, owned and improved more farms in Washington county than any other resident. On February 10, 1846, Mr. Moninger was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of Samuel Vance, and by her had four children: John, Martha (Mrs. John Chambers), Margaret (Mrs. Albert McElree) and Samuel. This wife dying July 2, 1856, Mr. Moninger on January 28, 1858, married Elizabeth, daughter of William Fife, and she bore him seven children, named as follows: Morgan, Joseph, William, Frank, Harry, George and Charles E. Mr. Moninger is a member of the Second Presbyterian Church at Washington; in politics he was first a Whig, and has, since the formation of the party, been a strong Republican. His present commodious and elegant residence in South Strabane township is one of the pleasantest in his section. He was a large stock dealer in Washington and adjoining counties, his business running into the hundred thousands yearly; but now in his old age he is resting quietly on his farm, one mile and a half north of Washington.

[Since the above was prepared for the press, we have information of the sudden death, April 1, 1893, from apoplexy, of Mr. Jacob Moninger.—Ed.]

MAXWELL WORK. Although this gentleman has but recently become a citizen of Washington county, he is already prominently identified with its business, political and social interests. He is a son of Alexander and Prudence (Rankin) Work (the former of whom was a resident of Fayette county, Penn.), and was born December 8, 1856, on the home farm in Dunbar township, Fayette county. His brother's name is Winfield S., and his sister's name is Nancy Jane. His boyhood was passed in the various employments usual to agricultural life, the monotony of which was varied with a few months' attendance at the common schools each winter. As he was the eldest son, the greater portion of the work fell to his share, thus depriving the boy of enjoying even the primitive educational advantages within his reach. But the keen observation of an intelligent mind supplemented the lack of literary training, and he has become one of the most successful business men of the county. On January 12, 1877, he married Susan Hair, who was born February 18, 1859, in Dunbar township, Fayette Co., Penn., a daughter of Daniel and Harriet (Work) Hair. Three children were born to the union of Maxwell and Susan (Hair) Work, namely: Maud D., Bessie F. and one deceased in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Work passed the first thirteen years of married life on a farm in Fayette county, Penn., residing there until 1891, in which year they came to Smith township, Washington county, locating in Cherry Valley, on the Thomas McFarland farm, a well-improved and valuable tract of land upon which they are yet residing. Mr. Work is a very progressive farmer, ever ready to assist in all worthy enterprises, and takes an active interest in the success of the Republican party, of which he is an active member.

DANIEL WILSON SOWERS, one of West Bethlehem's most enterprising and representative citizens, is a grandson of George Sowers, who was born in Maryland about the year 1813. While yet a boy the grandfather came to West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., thus becoming one of those bold pioneer settlers who inaugurated a work which their descendants are now carrying on to completion—the formation and improvement of Washington county. George Sowers was married to a daughter of Daniel Gardner, one of the earliest settlers of West Bethlehem township. Mr. Sowers spent his life as a farmer in that township, and died at the advanced age of seventy-eight years.

Levi Sowers, the only son of George Sowers, passed his boyhood in the usual manner of pioneer boys, attending the old log schoolhouse with its great fireplace, slab benches and primitive furnishings. He married Samantha Enoch, and to them were born the following children: Andrew J., Warren, Elizabeth J., Daniel Wilson, Catherine, Mary C., David Enoch, Madison B., Amanda, Elmer and George W., all of whom, except Mary and Madison, are yet living; David is a prominent attorney, and resides in Topeka, Kans. The others are residents of West Bethlehem township.

Daniel Wilson, son of Levi Sowers, was born July 30, 1848, in the old stone house, on the farm which adjoins his present home, and which is now the property of his brother Warren. His education was very good for the period. On May 9, 1872, he married Belle Oller, a daughter of Jonathan Oller, of West Bethlehem township, and their children are Thorman Tilden and Maggie May, both residing at home with their parents. Politically Mr. Sowers is a Democrat, and has served in the offices of supervisor and auditor of the township where he resides. He is an esteemed citizen, respected by all who know him.

MRS. MARGARET A. HARRISON is a daughter of Andrew Bryce, a native of Scotland, who was there married to Jane Gilchrist. Mr. and Mrs. Bryce settled in Fayette county, Penn., where he followed the trade of miller, conducting the mill at Merrittstown for many years. Mrs. Margaret A. Harrison had two sons by her former marriage, October 11, 1845, to Samuel Edmiston, namely: William Alexander, cashier of the Monongahela National Bank, Fayette county, Penn., and James M., superintendent of the water-works at Atchison, Kans. On March 2, 1865, Mrs. Margaret A. Edmiston was married to George W. Harrison, son James Harrison.

James Harrison was born in Maryland, where he remained until about forty years of age. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Hedgel, a native of Berkeley county, W. Va., who bore him the following children: William, George W., James, Joseph (all born in West Virginia), Eliza (deceased), Mrs. Harriet Vau Gilder (living in Centreville, Washington Co., Penn.) and Maria (deceased). In 1817 the family moved to Washington county, Penn., where the father was a cropper for several years, then rented a farm and finally settled near West Brownsville, Penn. He died in 1825, his widow in 1861. In politics he was an active member of the Whig party.

George W. Harrison was born in 1812, on the eastern shore of Maryland, and when yet a small boy came with his parents to Pennsylvania. His father died soon afterward, leaving no property, and, being the eldest of the family, much of the care of his mother and the younger children fell upon his youthful shoulders. The child bravely accepted the heavy responsibility thus suddenly thrust upon him, and continued to bear his share of the burden until the younger ones were old enough to support themselves. He was then released from that duty, but continued to work industriously, and carefully saved his earnings until he had accumulated a sufficient amount with which to purchase thirty acres of land in East Bethlehem township, this county. After buying this place he proceeded to cultivate it to the highest extent, and soon sold it at a good profit, then went with his brother Joseph to Indiana, where they bought a farm which he also sold at a good price. The brothers then returning to Washington county, Penn., purchased a handsome place on the National pike, in East Bethlehem township, where they resided together for one year. At the expiration of that time George W. sold his share to his brother, who is yet living on the place. After disposing of this property George W. Harrison bought 123 acres of well-improved, valuable land, upon which a handsome brick edifice has been erected. Mr. Harrison won his success by years of patient toil, and when he had attained prosperity was ever ready to lend a helping hand to others who were struggling upward. In politics he was a valued member of the Republican party, but invariably declined the political honors of which his friends vainly urged acceptance. The latter years of his life were filled with pain, and he was laid to rest January 5, 1890, in the beautiful "God's acre" adjoining the Taylor M. E. church. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Harrison has continued to reside in her pleasant home, personally superintending the work of the farm. Her only daughter, Lillian, a cultured young lady, is living with her mother, and whose son, George W., died in infancy.

WILLIAM COVENTRY, one of the best known and substantial citizens of Hanover township, traces his ancestry to the "Emerald Isle," from whose shores so many of our early pioneers had sailed.

John Coventry was born in 1750, in County Donegal, Ireland, where he learned the trade of a weaver, and when a young man was married to Martha Brown, who was born in 1754. Some years after their marriage this young couple sailed for America. After their landing and securing a temporary home in eastern Pennsylvania, their household effects were moved thence in a churn, and their only child was carried by the parents. John Coventry joined the Continental army, taking an active part in the struggle for independence, and undergoing the terrible sufferings which were the common lot of those heroic patriots. Long and difficult marches were made, their only food consisting of cold potatoes. After the war money was almost worthless, and the most common articles sold for fabulous prices. A little dress which was purchased for a son, cost $60 in Continental currency. In 1782 John Coventry and family concluded to secure one of the cheap homes offered to the settlers in western Pennsylvania, and packing up their few earthly possessions, started on foot to make the long and tedious journey across the mountains. The hardships which they endured can not be imagined, yet on they toiled, carrying their little son Robert, who was at that time about two years of age. At last they arrived at Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., and purchasing a small piece of land, erected their rude log cabin in the midst of the surrounding woods, and there Mr. Coventry followed his trade of a weaver in connection with farming. This cabin was soon supplanted by one more substantial, which is yet standing. With true Irish enterprise and industry John Coventry struggled on, and prosperity finally crowned his patient efforts. When the need of a permanent piece of ground for a school-house became apparent, he gave the necessary amount of land to be used for ninety-nine years, and the building which was there erected has ever since been known as the "Coventry School." In politics he was a Democrat, adhering to the principles of his party. He and his wife were members of the Seceder Church, which was nearly ten miles from their home, and walked the entire distance. A church was afterward organized at Burgettstown, to which their membership was then transferred. John Coventry died February 5, 1845, in his ninety-fifth year, and was laid to rest by the side of the wife who had gone before him April 8, 1832. Both were buried in the U. P. cemetery at Burgettstown, Penn. The following children were born to this heroic couple: Robert (deceased in Hanover township), William (of whom a sketch follows), James, John (a school teacher, who lived some time at Steubenville, Ohio, thence moving to Philadelphia, Ohio, where some of his descendants are yet living), Jane (deceased), Elizabeth (deceased wife of William Smiley), and Martha (deceased).

William Coventry, son of John and Martha (Brown) Coventry, was born in 1782, having been the first member of the Coventry family who was born in Hanover township. He was reared amid the usual scenes of pioneer life, attending a few months in each year at the subscription schools. In 1815 he selected a life companion in the person of Rebecca Ramsey, who was born in 1791, a daughter of Robert Ramsey, who was born east of the mountains and came to Washington county.

The children of William and Rebecca Coventry were as follows: Martha, deceased in Carroll county, Ohio, married Thomas Smiley; Mary, Mrs. Hamilton Walker, of Carroll county, Ohio; John, a carpenter of New Brighton, Penn.; Robert R., deceased farmer of Hanover township; James, a citizen of Des Moines, Iowa; Elizabeth, wife of J. H. Lawther, Carroll county, Ohio; William, whose name opens this sketch; and David, living at East Liverpool, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Coventry settled on Brush run, two miles from Florence, this county, where he successfully followed farming. He was fond of reading, and had a practical and thorough education. He was a member of the Seceder Church, and in politics was a Democrat, serving in numerous township offices, taking a lively interest in all the political and social questions of the day. He died February 26, 1850, followed, March 25, 1872, by his wife, who rests beside him in the U. P. cemetery at Burgettstown.

William Coventry was born January 2, 1830, on a farm adjoining his present home, and attended the rude schools of those days, with their rude furnishings; wooden benches, an old, rickety door, and a stove which was accustomed to fall down at the slightest provocation, to the great delight of the weary urchins and the discomfiture of the dignified master. On February 18, 1857, William Coventry was married to Sarah Spence, who was born February 16, 1835, in Beaver county, Penn., a daughter of John and Mary (Adams) Spence. The young couple located on the farm on Brush run, where they are yet living, about two-thirds of which Mr. Coventry has cleared, and by incessant toil and labor has succeeded in converting it from an unbroken forest into a fertile, producing tract of land. He thoroughly understands every department and detail of agriculture, having won a signal success in this vocation. He votes the Democratic ticket, having been called upon to fill various offices in Hanover township, which he has done with great credit to himself, and to the satisfaction of all. Three daughters were born to this couple, namely: Rebecca J., Mary Agnes and Elizabeth A., all of whom died of diphtheria in October, 1864; thus leaving the parents childless, but living in the anticipation of a glad reunion on the other shore. They are both consistent members of the Frankfort U. P. Church.

JOHAN C. LOFINK was born on the Atlantic Ocean, May 30, 1844, and arrived at Baltimore, Md., with his mother, Anastasia, her four brothers (Joseph Lofink, Louis Lofink, Simon Lofink and Frank Lofink) and his little sister, Lavina, when he was two weeks old. He was baptized in St. John's Church at Baltimore, and then was taken to Pittsburgh, where the family lived for some time before their removal to Caseyville, Ky. In Pittsburgh the mother married George Green, by whom she had two children: Francis and Tone. In Kentucky John C. Lofink worked for Mr. Bell (the candidate of the Free-Soil party), but left that State in 1862 to learn mechanical engineering at Pittsburgh. Owing to the depressed condition of this branch of industry at that city he went to Monongahela City and found work in the coal mines there.

Mr. Lofink was married June 20, 1864, to Hester Burgan, daughter of Peter and Mary Burgan. This lady was born at Minersville, Penn. They are the parents of twelve children, namely: John, Peter, Frank, Joseph, Samuel, James, Mary, Elizabeth, Annabel, Lena, Jane and Catherine. In Centennial year James, Jane and Catherine (triplets) were born. Of this large family there are eight children living. The maternal grandfather of these children was a centenarian, and the grandmother sixty-four years old. Both were of French descent. The paternal grandfather is not remembered by even the father, but Mrs. Anastasia Lofink died when the subject of this sketch was only five years old. The family have resided on the Riverview farm in Carroll township for over twenty years. Here Mr. Lofink owns forty-five acres, devoted to agriculture. On the land is a valuable deposit of coal which he has developed. He carries on a store here and is the postmaster of this section. The members of the family are Catholics. Politically Mr. Lofink votes with the Democrats of Pennsylvania for State and National officials and legislators.

ADAMS GILLILAND, a highly esteemed citizen of Buffalo township, was born June 6, 1826, in Hopewell township, Washington Co., Penn., on the farm of his father, where he remained several years after attaining his majority. His father was a native of Maryland, and came to Washington county in early life, settling on a farm in Hopewell township, where for several years he successfully followed agricultural pursuits. He died by an accident in 1831, and his widow and our subject then moved to Pleasant Hill, near West Middletown, where the latter lived till he was fourteen years old, when he lived with Asa Manchester, a wealthy farmer, in Independence township, sometimes by the month and sometimes by the year. His mother was born in 1787, died February 1, 1869.

On April 1, 1819, Adams Gilliland was united in marriage with Louisa Low, who was born June 11, 1824, in West Virginia, a granddaughter of David Low, a rich planter of the same place, and a daughter of John Low, who lived in Brooke county, Va., in the days of slavery, and was the owner of many slaves. David Low died in 1840, and John, his only son, in 1871. Mary Bryson, beloved wife of John Low, died January 6, 1860. She was born in Indian times, a daughter of John Bryson, a native of Ireland, who came to this country in early life, and married a French lady named Priscilla Lafavers; they settled on a farm near Dunsfort, situated on Buffalo creek in Washington county. It 1861 Mr. Gilliland removed to his present place in Buffalo township. He has been industrious and progressive, and all he has is the result of his own individual efforts. He received nothing from his father's estate, as there were other heirs. In political preferences he is an ardent advocate of the principles embodied in the platform of the Democratic party, but has never been an aspirant for political office.

MRS. RACHEL BELL, a well-known and highly esteemed lady of Burgettstown, is a daughter of Free Gift Crawford, son of Elijah Crawford, and representative of one of the oldest families in Smith township.

Elijah Crawford was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and on June 22, 1778, was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Free Gift and Elizabeth Stout. They afterward moved to Smith township, Washington Co., Penn., there purchasing an unimproved farm, and became the first settlers of that locality. The men were obliged to carry guns with them to their work to defend themselves from the Indians lurking near. Amid these scenes the following children were born to Elijah and Elizabeth Crawford: Joseph, Isaac, Free Gift, Rebecca, Elizabeth and Anna. The father was a surveyor, and also served under Gen. Washington in the Revolutionary war. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Florence, this county, where he and his wife were buried.

Free Gift Crawford was born October 22, 1785, in eastern Pennsylvania, where his boyhood was passed, afterward coming with his parents to Washington county. On January 12, 1811, he was married to Sarah, daughter of Thomas Cole, a native of Maryland. Mr. Cole was married to Nancy Hunter, who bore him children as follows: Sarah, Abraham, Thomas, William, Rachel, Betsy and Nancy. The father was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the M. E. Church. Mr. and Mrs. Crawford passed their married life in Smith township, where he followed farming and milling, also teaming over the mountains. The mill was first called the "Scott mill" and then the "Burgettstown mill." They kept the hotel in Burgettstown for thirty years. Free Gift Crawford was also an extensive dealer in stock. In politics he voted with the Democratic party, and he held various township offices; in church relation he was connected with the Baptist denomination. Mrs. Crawford being a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1854, aged seventy-six years, followed in 1876 by his widow at the age of ninety-one years; both are buried in the cemetery at Florence, this county. They were the parents of five children, viz.: Thomas (deceased), Elijah (deceased), Sarah (first married to Benjamin F. Wood, afterward to John McCartney), Margaret and Rachel. Of these Rachel Crawford was married August 28, 1861, to George W., son of Samuel Bell, proprietor of the Frankfort Springs at that time.

Samuel Bell was born in Washington county, and in early life was married to Malvina Sowers, also a native of the county. Their children were: George W., Mattie, William, Delia (wife of W. K. Bailey) and James (deceased). Mr. Bell traveled for a wholesale house in Philadelphia until 1880, when he moved to Clark county, Mo. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion an active member of the M. E. Church, taking a prominent part in the Sunday-school and church work.

George W. Bell was born September 12, 1831, in Beallsville, Washington Co., Penn. He was educated at Washington and Jefferson College, and after graduating attended Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, receiving his degree in 1858. He graduated with first honors in a class of 600 students, and was the valedictorian of the class. He read medicine with Dr. Wilson, of Beallsville, where he practiced his profession a short time, afterward locating permanently in Burgettstown, where he practiced for thirty-six years. He won an enviable reputation as a skilled physician, and enjoyed a lucrative practice. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and in religious faith he was a member of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown. To his marriage with Rachel Crawford was born one child, Samuel, who died at the age of two years and four months. Dr. Bell was called to rest from his labors September 6, 1884, at the age of fifty-one years. The remains of the deceased, by his own request, made some time prior to his death, were taken to Washington, where the body underwent the process of cremation, and the sleeping dust was finally placed in the Beallsville cemetery.

Far away in the land of the pure and the bright,
Is the city of God, with its golden light;
Oh, there is our home, and we ever shall stand
'Mid the shining ones of that better land.

Oh, that beautiful land we are nearing now,
Where a crown of bright glory encircles each brow;
Where the tree of life grows on that beautiful shore,
Where flowers shall freshen to fade no more.

Oh! beautiful home, oh! beautiful home,
Where beautiful saints surround the white throne;
How I long to be there and forever to stand
'Mid the shining ones of that Better Land.

DR. WILLIAM S. DODD, a leading physician of Charleroi, is a representative of one of the oldest and most distinguished families of Pennsylvania. Their lives were indissolubly linked with the early history of Washington county, with whose progress they were most prominently identified.

Rev. Cephas Dodd, M. D. and D. D., son of the famous Rev. Thaddeus Dodd, was born October 12, 1779, on Ten-Mile stream, Washington county, Penn. Cephas Dodd took a thorough classical course at the Canonsburg Academy, then studied theology with Rev. John McMillan. In 1801 he began preaching in Ohio, and in 1817 came to the church at Ten-Mile, Washington county, Penn. He then began to study medicine, and being finally led to believe that he could do more good as a physician than pastor, devoted his later years principally to medical work.

Thaddeus Dodd, a son of Cephas, was born March 22, 1810, near Amity, Amwell township, Washington county, Penn. His early education was obtained at the subscription schools, and he then took a course of study at Washington College. He afterward attended medical lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, having previously studied with his father. After receiving his degree, Dr. Dodd began to practice his profession in Millsborough, Washington Co., Penn., where he remained about three years, and then lived in West Bethlehem township a short time. He afterward moved to Amity, and ten years later located in Dunningville, remaining there four years, and finally returning to Amity. On April 24, 1860, he was united in marriage with Mary Stockdale, who was born February 8, 1817, daughter of William Stockdale, a native of Greene county. The following children were born to the union of Thaddeus and Mary Dodd: Hannah, born September 16, 1840, deceased February 28, 1847; Cephas D., born July 16, 1842, a decorator by trade, living in Montgomery, Ala.; Agnes B., born June 29, 1844, deceased August 12, 1845; William S., born June 23, 1846; Sarah E., wife of W. C. Sargeant, born February 3, 1848; Thomas D., born November 16, 1849, deceased March 17, 1852; Norton McGiffin, born June 23, 1851, living at Charleroi; Alice, born May 15, 1853, wife of J. W. Thatcher, of Columbus, Ohio; Ruth, born April 17, 1855, wife of J. K. Hazelett, living at New Salem, Fayette Co., Penn.; James D., born March 10, 1857, living in La Fayette, Ind., and Mary M., born July 6, 1859, wife of John H. Jewel, of Charleroi. The father of this family was a Whig and Republican, and in religious faith a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church. He died August 25, 1877, and Mrs. Dodd was laid by his side July 27, 1882.

Dr. William S. Dodd was born on the farm in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the public schools of the neighborhood. He then began to study medicine in his father's office, afterward taking a thorough course in the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery, from which he graduated in 1878. He began his professional life at Amity, having been given his father's practice, and remained there until November, 1889, when he went to Pittsburgh, and in 1890 came to Charleroi, this county. He was married June 9, 1886, to Sarah R., daughter of J. Wesley Chambers, a native of Amwell township, and they have had one son, John Wesley Chambers, born May 22, 1889. Dr. Dodd has acquired an enviable reputation, both as a citizen and physician. He is a staunch supporter of the principles embodied in the Republican party, and in religion is a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church.

WL. DODD, M. D., of Amwell township, traces his ancestry back to Rev. Thaddens Dodd, a man of pioneer fame in that township, concerning whom the following excerpt has been taken from Dr. Waine's "Historical and Farewell Addresses:" "In the summer of 1777 Mr. Thaddens Dodd, of Morris, N. J., a licentiate of the Presbytery of New York, paid the Ten-Mile people a visit. They were extremely anxious that he should settle among them. But how was he to be supported? Silver and gold they had none; but such as they had they freely offered. Mr. Dodd accepted the call, for he was a man of kindred spirit. He went back to Virginia, was ordained by his Presbytery, and brought his family for a permanent residence to Ten-Mile, in the autumn of 1779. His position was advanced post, the forlorn hope of our Western Zion. Long after the members of other congregations could go and come in safety, those of Ten-Mile were kept in constant terror by the inroads of the savages. Mr. Dodd was confessedly the most learned among the ministerial compeers of the West. He possessed an extraordinary mathematical genius. He was an excellent classical scholar, and had time permitted and inclination prompted, he might have excelled in the composition of poetry. The first classical school west of the Alleghanies was established by Rev. Dodd in 1782, and he was also the first principal of Washington Academy (now Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Penn.). Rev. Dodd was a great lover of music, he had a delicate ear, and had thoroughly mastered the science. He delivered sermons and lectures on the science, and in that way aroused the interest of the people. Dr. Dodd died of pulmonary consumption on the 20th of May, 1793, after a ministry of nearly sixteen years. Rev. Cephas Dodd, the son of Thaddens Dodd, succeeded his father about ten years after his father's death, in the Upper and Lower Ten-Mile congregation. He was possessed of a clear, strong mind, enriched by manly culture and varied learning." Rev. Cephas Dodd also practiced medicine in connection with his ministerial duties. He was the great-grandfather of the subject of our sketch on his mother's side, and of his lineal descendants seven have chosen the medical profession.

Daniel F. Dodd, father of subject, was born December 25, 1825. On August 6, 1853, he was married to Ruth McFarland, a lineal descendant of Maj. Daniel McFarland, of Revolutionary fame, through William McFarland, Esq., James and John McFarland. Daniel F. Dodd, who was a farmer, died August 20, 1880; his widow is still living, and is in her fifty-eighth year.

Dr. W. L. Dodd was born October 17, 1866, in Amwell township, where he has always resided. He pursued his literary studies at home under the direction of a tutor, and in 1886 attended a course of lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore; then studied a year with his preceptor, Dr. W. S. Dodd, at Amity, this county. In 1887 he began a course at the Western Pennsylvania Medical College at Pittsburgh, graduating in the spring of 1888, the youngest member in a class of forty-five. After leaving school he practiced with his preceptor at Amity one year, and then, having won a large and lucrative practice, bought him out. Descended from eminent patriots, sturdy soldiers and intellectual leaders, this intelligent young physician has a bright future opening before him. Young in years, but older in experience, with the wisdom of a race of brilliant men behind him, he cannot fail to become one of the foremost men in his profession.

WILLIAM S. MOORE, an enterprising and successful farmer of Independence township, is a son of James Moore, whose father was born near Dublin, Ireland, and when a young man immigrated to America. The latter located in Washington county, Penn., becoming one of the early settlers, and there passing his whole life, enduring all the usual dangers and hardships incident to pioneer life. He married and reared the following children: John, James, Joseph, Samuel, Michie (wife of James Wilson), Maria (Mrs. David Waugh), Eliza (wife of Richard Waugh) and Jane (married to William Mayhall), all of whom lived to an adult age. Mr. Moore died at a ripe old age, and his widow afterward died in Brooke county, W. Va.

James Moore was born in Washington county, Penn., on his father's farm, and received a preliminary education at the primitive schools of the day. He intended to prepare for the ministry.

but the death of his father changed his plans, making it impossible for him to finish the course which had been mapped out. However, he attended the West Liberty (W. Va.) Academy, and being an apt and intelligent student, acquired a considerable amount of information during the short time he remained in the school. After abandoning his former hopes he learned the trade of a millwright under R. Mayhall, assisting in building the old "Waugh Mill" of Brooke county, W. Va. On April 12, 1827, he was united in marriage with Nancy Boyd, who was born February 13, 1806, daughter of James Boyd, of Independence township, and the following children were born to their union: John, born February 13, 1828, died March 16, 1889, in Indian Territory, and was buried at Coffeyville, Kans.; James, born August 6, 1829, died in infancy, and was buried in Lower Buffalo cemetery; David (a farmer of Putnam county, Ill.), born February 7, 1831; Marshall, born January 6, 1833 (living in Independence township); Samuel, born December 28, 1834 (residing in Independence, Penn.); Mary J., born November 7, 1836 (formerly widow of G. M. L. Plummer, now Mrs. Stephen Smith, of Florence, Penn.); Joseph (farming in Knox county, Ohio), born July 26, 1838; Margaret, born December 8, 1839 (living in Independence township, Penn.); William S.; Robert, born June 6, 1845 (residing in Canonsburg, Penn.); and Richard (deceased in youth). For some time after his marriage Mr. Moore lived in Brooke county, W. Va., at the home of Richard Waugh, where he superintended a "fulling-mill." In the spring of 1828 he purchased the "John Thom farm" in Independence township, this county, upon which he removed, and divided his time between farming and performing the work of a civil engineer, being very skillful and efficient in the latter vocation. He was naturally of a mechanical turn of mind, and was also a good financier and business manager. He was fond of reading, and was well informed on general topics. Politically he was a Democrat. His death occurred November 28, 1848, and in the fall of 1892 his remains, with those of his son Richard, were removed from the old cemetery to the new one at Independence, where a monument is erected to their memory in the center of the four lots owned by William S. Moore. The widow of James Moore passed the most of her remaining years with her son William. She died December 16, 1890, and was buried in the new cemetery.

William S. Moore was born September 8, 1841, on the farm which is yet his home. His boyhood was passed in attending to the usual farm duties, and in obtaining a common-school education, and he partially learned the carpenter's trade, but never followed it continuously. On August 30, 1876, he was married to Martha Ann Murchland, who was born March 28, 1851, daughter of John Murchland, of Jefferson township. To Mr. and Mrs. Moore have been born children as follows: Lydia W., Joseph L., Artie L. and Nancy V., all of whom are living with their parents. For several years previous to his marriage Mr. Moore lived with his mother and sister on the farm which has always been his home. In connection with his other work, he raises first class stock, being very successful in both vocations. He was one of the promoters and founders of the beautiful new Independence cemetery, which is a credit to the community, much taste having been exercised in its arrangement and construction, the grounds being arranged with exquisite care and neatness. Politically, Mr. Moore favors the Democratic party, but votes according to the dictates of his own judgment, believing that more attention should be given to the character and ability of the man than to his political views. On February 12, 1892, Mrs. Moore passed from earth, and was laid to rest in the new cemetery at Independence. She was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, with which denomination Mr. Moore is also united.

DAVID M. McCARRELL, M. D., a prominent physician and surgeon of Hickory, was born November 6, 1833, in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Thomas McCarrell, who was a son of Lodowyck. The latter was born in Ireland, and left his native land in early youth, coming to America and settling in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., where he was married to Martha Lemau, a native of this county. At Hickory, in that township, Mr. McCarrell was engaged in mercantile work. Some years later he moved to Ten-Mile, where he carried on a milling business, but afterward returning to Mt. Pleasant township he settled on the farm yet owned by the McCarrell family, and here engaged in agriculture and distilling. The following children were born to Lodowyck and Martha McCarrell: John (deceased, who had settled in Venango county, Penn.), Isabella (deceased wife of Isaac Hodgens, of Taylors-town, this county), Thomas, James (a minister of the U. P. Church, of Beaver county, Penn.), Elizabeth (Mrs. John Cockins, who died in 1890, at Canonsburg), Andrew (who resided on the old homestead in Mt. Pleasant township), and Lemau (deceased in Taylorstown), all born in Mt. Pleasant township, and all now deceased.

Thomas McCarrell was born in Washington county, and was married to Esther McNary, a native of the same place. They settled on a farm in this county, and children were born to them as follows: John (formerly a physician and surgeon of Wellsville, Ohio, who died in 1891), Martha (died January 12, 1893, in this county), Margaret (wife of Joseph Cowden, of Cecil township), and James (a physician of Allegheny, Penn.). The mother of this family dying, Thomas McCarrell was married in June, 1832, to Elizabeth McConaughy, who bore him the following children: David M. (our subject), Leman (a farmer of Mt. Pleasant township), Thomas Jefferson (deceased in 1854), Lodowyck (an attorney of Washington, Penn.), Alexander Donnan (a U. P. minister at Stewart's Station, Westmoreland Co., Penn.). This wife died in 1858, and Thomas McCarrell was again married, his third choice being Margaret Martin, a native of Canonsburg, this county. Mr. McCarrell was an active member of the Democratic party, and served his county as associate judge and county commissioner, also as justice of the peace for several years. He died October 21, 1872, in Mt. Pleasant township; his widow died in 1891 at Canonsburg, this county.

Dr. David M. McCarrell was reared on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and educated in the schools of Hickory. After his elementary studies were completed he entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, attending during the year 1856-57. After graduating, Dr. McCarrell came immediately to Cross Creek village, this county, and began practice. In 1861 he settled in Hickory, where he has since been established, being the oldest physician in that part of Washington county. On December 25, 1862, he was united in marriage with Adeline, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Campbell) Cassidy, all natives of Cross Creek township. Mr. Cassidy and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church; he died in Jefferson township, his wife having long before passed over the river. After his marriage to Adeline Cassidy, Dr. McCarrell settled permanently in Hickory, this county. During his professional life twelve students have been inducted into the mysteries of medical science under his instruction. Mrs. McCarrell died October 6, 1888, leaving her husband and the following children to mourn her loss: Lizzie Ora Lulu Blanche (deceased at the age of eight months), Mattie Leila, David Leander and James Patterson (twins). Dr. McCarrell has erected a handsome brick residence upon his place, and improved his property in many ways. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect, as was his wife; politically he affiliates with the Democratic party.

JOHAN C. MORGAN, the leading dry goods merchant of Canonsburg, Penn., was born October 28, 1846, in Allegheny county, Penn. His father, James Morgan, was born on the same farm where his son John C. first saw the light of day. John C. Morgan remained on the home farm until about twenty years of age, when he went to Marshalltown, Iowa, and worked for a railroad company. He then returned to Pennsylvania, and in the spring of 1881 came to Washington county, settling in Canonsburg, where he opened a dry-goods store, and has since remained in that business. In April, 1886, he was united in marriage with Miss Clara Wilson, and three children have blessed their union, namely: Edith and Edna (twins) and Clara.

Mr. Morgan is not an old resident of Washington county, but since his first identification with the interests of Canonsburg has been a prominent leader in every movement for the general advancement and upbuilding of his adopted city. The beautiful store, which is now the pride of every citizen of Canonsburg, was at the time of Mr. Morgan's arrival a dilapidated and broken-down old structure. With characteristic energy and perseverance he remodeled and added to the original building until a complete transformation was effected. In 1891 he completed one of the finest four-story blocks within the limits of Washington county. It is built of pressed brick, and has two fronts, nine store rooms, seven offices and two lodge rooms. When this building was in process of erection, this enterprising citizen saw the pressing need of a public hall in Canonsburg, suitable for lectures and other entertainments, tending to educate and entertain the people, and to keep them abreast of the times. To think, with him, was to act, and in an incredibly short time afterward his beautiful and commodious opera house was erected. This provides a seating capacity of 500, and is fully equipped with all necessary articles, being undoubtedly the superior of any similar hall in this county. Mr. Morgan keeps a full stock of goods which meet the wants of the surrounding community. His store is both beautiful and expensive, fitted to be an ornament to any city. In the very prime of life, surrounded by friends and family, John C. Morgan is indeed a prosperous man, possessing wonderful business capacity, combined with untiring energy. He believes in patronizing home industries, and to this end endeavors to supply his customers with a full line of modern goods at reasonable prices. It is almost needless to add that these endeavors have met with hearty approval and earnest co-operation from the citizens of Canonsburg, who appreciate the debt they owe to enterprising and public spirited men like these. John C. Morgan is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, in the western part of Canonsburg, and in politics is a Republican.

THOMAS B. HIXON is a prominent farmer of North Strabane township. His paternal grandfather was a native of Germany, and came to the United States prior to the year 1790. He fought under Gen. Harrison in the war of 1812, and then made a permanent home in Washington county, Penn., where he remained until his death, which occurred in 1847, his wife passing away in the same year. He was a man of quiet tastes and habits, never entering public or political life. He reared a family of six children, of whom James was the youngest son.

James Hixon, father of our subject, was born in 1790, on the farm adjoining the present home of his son Thomas B. He grew to manhood on the home place, and was then married to Jane Batey, who was born in 1809, and she bore him three children, namely: Thomas B., Mary and Lucy (wife of H. H. Raney, of Washington county). Mr. Hixon was a representative citizen of the county, and in religion he and his wife were members of the United Presbyterian Church. He died in 1881, on the farm where he was born, and his widow was laid beside him in 1889.

Thomas B. Hixon was born October 14, 1810, on the old home farm in North Strabane township, where he is now living. He passed his boyhood in attending to the school and farm duties. In the year 1861 he was married to Priscilla J. Horner, who was born in 1843, in North Strabane township, daughter of Robert and Matilda Horner, early pioneers of this county. Mr. and Mrs. Hixon have had the following children: James H., Mary A. (wife of George Beebout, of Ohio), Nettie P. (married to Thomas Berry, a farmer of Missouri), Louis, Scott, Anna, Thomas, George, Howard, Charles and Ella. Mr. Hixon has owned and operated a public gristmill, and also two portable sawmills, for many years. He has a fine farm of 114 acres, which he manages with marked success. He is a Democrat, and has served the township in the capacity of assessor four years, and as school director for three terms. He and his wife are devoted members of the U. P. Church.

ROBERT S. COOLEY was born September 16, 1843, in Hanover township, Beaver county, Penn. He was a son of Joseph, whose father, Robert, was born near Pittsburgh, Penn. Robert Cooley was married to Jane Smith, who was born near Saw Mill run, in Allegheny county. He was a blacksmith by trade, and worked near Pittsburgh for some time, then moved to Hanover township, Beaver county, locating about two and a half miles east of Frankfort. He worked at his trade there, and afterward turned his attention to farming, following that pursuit the remainder of his active life. His death occurred about 1868, having been preceded by his wife in 1863, and both are now buried in Hopewell cemetery, Allegheny county. They were the parents of the following children: Joseph, Jane, Mary Ann, Robert, Francis, Nancy, Elizabeth, Mary, Margaret, Ellen and William (who died in infancy). The children of this family now living are: Francis, residing near Abilene, Kans.; Elizabeth, a maiden lady of Beaver county; and Margaret (Mrs. McCallister Dunlap), of Beaver county.

Joseph Cooley, son of Robert and Jane Cooley, was born in 1816, in Allegheny county, where he attended the rate schools. He then served a four years' apprenticeship as a carpenter, and worked at his trade in various places. In 1838 he was married to Matilda Anderson, who was born in 1818, and their children were born as follows: Mary Ann (Mrs. Samuel Kiefer, of Beaver county, Penn.), Elizabeth J. (wife of John Cool, of Allegheny county), Robert S. (whose sketch follows), Letitia E. (Mrs. Thomas), Joseph (a farmer of Beaver county), Matilda (wife of John Donnell, of Allegheny county) and Nancy (who died in infancy). After his marriage Joseph Cooley located on the farm of his father, in Beaver county, and resided there the remainder of his life. In politics he was a Republican, taking an active interest in the success of his party, and in religion was formerly a member of the Presbyterian Church at Hopewell, in Allegheny county, afterward uniting with the Frankfort Presbyterian Church. He died in 1881.

Robert S. Cooley was born September 16, 1843, in Beaver county, passing his youth on the farm, and being educated in the common schools. On October 28, 1874, he was married to Jennie L. Gilleland, who was born in 1849, daughter of William Gilleland, of Beaver county. Robert S. and Jennie L. (Gilleland) Cooley have had six children, viz.: Mary E., William R., Harry A., Estella, a son deceased in infancy, and Robert C. Mr. and Mrs. Cooley began wedded life on the farm in Hanover township, Washington county, where they yet reside. He has been engaged in general farming and stock raising, and is numbered among the well-to-do and successful farmers of the community. He is ever ready to assist in any beneficial enterprise, and was among the first to aid in the establishment of a creamery, which was opened near his home some time since. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion he and his wife are members of the Frankfort Presbyterian Church, in which he is a member of the Session.

MRS. NARCISSA V. YANT is the widow of James H. Yant, and daughter of Newton and Nancy (Cooper) Vanvoorhis. Isaac Vanvoorhis, a well-known farmer of Somerset township, this county, is an uncle of Mrs. Yant.

James H. Yant was a son of Daniel, who was born in Chester county, Penn., his parents having emigrated from Germany to Pittsburgh. In 1825 Daniel Yant came to Washington county, Penn., and bought a good farm, to which he brought his wife, Sarah Applegate, a native of Allegheny county, Penn. They were the parents of two children: Martha, widow of John Stoud, living in Allen township, and James H. The father died on the farm in September, 1867.

James H. Yant was born April 30, 1827, in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a subscription-school education. His youth was passed in assisting his parents, and he early evinced a strong inclination for mechanical pursuits. In November, 1852, he selected a life companion, in the person of Miss Narcissa Vanvorhis, who bore him the following children: Clarence Linden, James Taylor, Lona May (all of whom are deceased); Daniel Newton, born December 13, 1857, is superintendent of the iron mills at Allegheny City; Samuel Linton, living on a farm in Allegheny county, born August 26, 1863; Theodore Clinton, a carpenter, of Washington, Penn., born May 22, 1867; Nora Ethel, living at home, born August 24, 1874, and Harvey A., also at home, born January 20, 1879. Mr. Yant was a hard-working man and an excellent manager, having owned 135 acres of good land. When his health failed, the sons took charge of the place, which they have since conducted very successfully. Mr. Yant voted with the Republican party, and in religion associated with the Presbyterian Church. In business circles he possessed the thorough confidence of all, and "his word was ever considered as good as his bond." He died July 10, 1888, and was buried in the Vanvorhis cemetery at Pigeon Creek. Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Yant has rented a portion of the farm, and resides in the handsome brick residence, which is located about two and a half miles from Monongahela City. She is a very popular, agreeable lady, and a valued member of a large social circle.

GEORGE H. MILLER, M. D., one of the leading physicians of McDonald, in this county, was born near Claysville, Penn., April 23, 1846. He is a son of Christopher and Sarah J. Miller, who were married in 1840. To them were born nine children—six sons and three daughters. The sons are Leamon, Calvin, George H., Charles W., William and John; the girls are Mary Jane, Margaret (wife of John Holmes) and Frances E. (widow of Bruce Ramage). Of the boys, three are dead—Leamon, William and John.

Dr. Miller was born in Donegal township, this county. He received his elementary education at the common schools, at the Southwestern State Normal School, California, and the normal school at Millsboro, and after teaching four or five years in the different schools of the county commenced the study of medicine, in 1867, with Dr. John Kelly, now of Washington, Penn. In the fall of 1870 he attended medical lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He then conducted a drug store at Burgettstown until the fall of 1872; again attended medical lectures at the Miami Medical College, Cincinnati (Ohio), from which he graduated in March, 1873, and commenced the practice of his profession at Claysville. After remaining there for eighteen months he moved to Midway, Penn., and after staying there some four years moved to Imperial, Allegheny Co., Penn., where he remained for eight years. He then moved to McDonald, his present location, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession, also conducting a drug store.

On May 30, 1872, the Doctor was united in marriage with Frances E. Woodburn, daughter of John and Margaret Woodburn, of Burgettstown, both of whom are still living—he at the age of eighty-two and his wife at the age of eighty-one. The following named children were born to this union: Lawrence E. (deceased), Anna M., William M., George F. and John Stanley. Dr. Miller is an attendant of the United Presbyterian Church, and in political opinion is a prominent member of the Republican party; was one of the first members of McDonald council, and also one of the first members of its school board. He now enjoys a very lucrative practice, and is a popular physician.

WILSON S. CAMPBELL. The great-great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch came from Scotland in the beginning of the sixteenth century, and settled in eastern Pennsylvania or New Jersey, where he died. The great-grandfather of Wilson S. was married to ——— Hammond about 1775 (a native of eastern Pennsylvania), and shortly afterward they came further west, settling in the northern part of Washington county, Penn., near what is now Cross Creek village, at a time when the forests were abounding in wolves and other wild beasts. They had nine children: Gracie, John, James, William, David, Charles, George H., Betsey and Polly, all of whom lived to be married, and scattered. Gracie, John, James, William and David moved to Belmont county, Ohio; the other four married and remained in Pennsylvania. Gracie married Benjamin Bay; John married Betsey Lyle; James married Peggy Smith; William married ——— Smith; David married Ann Ray; Charles married Easter Mason; George H. married Elizabeth Ray; Betsey married William Ray; Polly married William Fulton. George H. and Charles remained on the old homestead, and died there at advanced ages.

George H. Campbell, grandfather of subject, had eleven children: Jane, married to John Wilson, of Noble county, Ohio; John, married to Eliza Moore, of Hickory, Penn.; Mary, married to John Graham, of Knox county, Ohio; William, married to Elizabeth Nichols, of Greene county, Penn.; Elizabeth, who died at the age of fifty-eight, unmarried; Samuel S. (named for Dr. Scott, deceased, Mrs. President Harrison's father: was married three times: first time to a daughter of Dr. Wright, of Ashtabula, Ohio; second time, to Ann E. Wallace, of Washington, Penn.; third time, to Mary Law, of Harrison county, Ohio); George W. (the father of our subject); Esther I. (unmarried), living in Cadiz, Ohio. The others died when young. Mason Campbell, son of Charles, now lives on the old home place.

George W. Campbell was born in 1826, in Cross Creek township, and was reared to agricultural pursuits on the old home farm, attending in his boyhood the subscription schools of the vicinity. In 1855 he married Miss Charlotte, daughter of James and Margaret Wilson, of West Pike Run township. After marriage they located on the old farm in Cross Creek township, and there remained till October, 1867, when they moved to Midway, Robinson township, and two and one-half years later built the hotel in Midway, which they occupied and carried on till September, 3, 1885, at which date the father died very suddenly, aged fifty-nine years. The family remained at Midway, continuing the hotel business, until March, 1890. Mr. and Mrs. George W. Campbell were the parents of five children, as follows: Johnetta Jessie, who died at the age of ten months; Wilson S. (our subject); Graham S., living at McDonald, this county; Esther Elida, married to W. H. Baldwin, of Cadiz, Ohio, and Mary Velma, deceased at the age of nine months.

Wilson S. Campbell was born April 20, 1858, in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., on the homestead where he was reared to farm life, his education being received in the public schools of the neighborhood. He removed with his parents to Midway, and at the age of fifteen commenced clerking in a general store in that town, in which he continued nine years. Then for six years he conducted a furniture establishment in the same town. On January 5, 1891, he was appointed clerk of the commissioners of Washington county, and removed into the city of Washington, where he is now residing. Under President Arthur's administration he had been appointed postmaster at Midway, and served in that office until the appointment of a Democratic successor under President Cleveland. On September 20, 1882, Mr. Campbell was united in marriage with Miss Kate E., daughter of J. J. and Margaret Cleland, of Buffalo township, this county, and two children were born to them, James St. Clair and Flora Elida. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell are members of the Second Presbyterian Church at Washington, and while at Midway he was a member of the Session, of Raccoon Presbyterian Church. In politics he has always been a straight Republican.

EDWARD P. CHERRY. This well-known and successful gentleman can boast a prouder lineage than lord or lady of royal birth, for his ancestors were among the first rulers of the New World, and martyrs for the future generation, freely giving their lives that "the children" might have happier homes and the God giving liberties which were denied our fathers. Shall the memory of these ancestors, our royal peerage, sink into oblivion while we enjoy the priceless liberties for which our fathers toiled, suffered and died? Small wonder that we are eager to obtain and record every incident of those noble lives, hoping to thus rear a monument for our loved and honored ones, which will live in the hearts of our children when we, too, "are gathered to our fathers." Among the earliest of early pioneers the name of Cherry takes a prominent position.

Thomas and Mary Cherry were born near Bristol, England, and emigrated to America in 1770, first settling in Frederick county, Md. In 1774 they moved to Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., where he erected a log cabin. He was a spy in the Revolutionary war, and one morning was found lying dead by the spring near the cabin, scalped by the Indians; his son John was also killed by the Indians the following year. In 1774 Fort Cherry was built on the home farm, containing three log buildings, one twenty-five feet square, and the smaller ones arranged in a triangular manner. This was used some years as the residence of the Cherry, McCarty and Rankin families.

Edward Cherry was born in July, 1776, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where his boyhood was passed amid the dangers of pioneer life, trebled by the horrors of the Revolution. On March 4, 1802, he was united in marriage with Rebecca Perrin, who was born in 1781, in New Jersey, and bore him children, of whom the following is recorded: William P., born in December, 1803, was reared on the farm, receiving a meager subscription-school education, but by close application became an expert mathematician (he was several times offered the chair as professor of mathematics, but would not accept it, preferring to remain on the old farm; he was actively interested in politics; he died April 10, 1890); Eleanor, born March 10, 1805, on January 20, 1825, was married to Thomas Stewart, a farmer, and resided in Allegheny county, Penn. (she passed away February 5, 1872); Nancy, born in November, 1806, on March 12, 1835, gave her hand in marriage to Matthew Rankin (they settled in Mt. Pleasant township, where she died December 5, 1855; her husband married again and died at Burgettstown June 13, 1880); Aaron, born August 29, 1808, on May 19, 1834, was united in marriage with Margaret Benward, first settling in Mt. Pleasant township, thence moving to Wooster, Ohio, and afterward returning to Mt. Pleasant township where they lived twenty years on the farm, then went to Uhrichsville, Ohio, where he died September 17, 1875; Maria L., born in November, 1810, was never married, and died August 12, 1886; Rebecca, born in December, 1812, passed her life on the home farm and died October 8, 1881; Rachel, born in December, 1814, was married on October 8, 1840, to James Stewart (they settled in Allegheny county, Penn., where she died); Sarah, born in 1817, lived with her brother, Edward P., until her death, which occurred in December, 1891; Edward P., born May 19, 1819, whose sketch is given below; Eliza Jane, born in 1821, was married October 8, 1850, to William Cherry, Guernsey county, Ohio (they first settled on the home farm, and in 1875 moved to near Waco, McLennan Co., Tex., where they now reside).

The father of this large family was a soldier in the war of 1812, and in politics was a staunch adherent of the Whig party. He was a man of sterling moral worth and true piety, but a member of no church. Mrs. Cherry was a member of the Presbyterian Church of Candor, this county. He died July 1, 1854, in his seventy-eighth year, on the farm where his whole life had been passed.

Edward P. Cherry was born on the old farm in Mt. Pleasant township, on Cherry's run, in Cherry valley, which is yet his home. He was educated in the subscription schools of the neighborhood, and on September 26, 1854, was married to Mary Jane Lawton, a native of Cross Creek township, this county. She is a granddaughter of Joseph and Mary (Alway) Lawton, natives of Rhode Island, who came to this county in 1824, and settled in Cross Creek township, where he died in 1839, his wife passing away in 1841. She is a daughter of Pardon Lawton, who was born, in 1798, in Rhode Island, and in 1824 he and his parents came with a six-ox team over the mountains to Washington county, Penn., settling in Cross Creek township. In 1826 he was married to Tabitha Vincent, daughter of Alexander and Jane Vincent, natives of Maryland, who moved to Washington county, Penn., settling in Hopewell township, and the young people settled permanently in Cross Creek township. He was an active politician of the Whig party. Mrs. Lawton was a member of the Buffalo Presbyterian Church, and both she and her husband were conscientious Christians.

He died January 27, 1876, and was followed by his wife October 25, 1884. Their children were born as follows: Joseph (living in West Middletown, Penn., married to Mary Louisa Quest); Rosanna (married to Samuel Davidson, Hopewell township); Mary Jane, born April 18, 1830 (married to Edward P. Cherry); Sarah (living in Hopewell township, wife of George Leggett); Peter (living in Cressna Park, Penn., married to Mary McCoy); Alexander (living in West Middletown); Charles (residing in Washington, Penn., married to Sarah Guiney); John (enlisted in 1861, at West Middletown, in the Forty-second P. V. L., serving till the end of the war, when he went to Monmouth; he was married to Matilda Brownlee, and died in September, 1878); James (living in West Middletown, this county); Thomas Vincent (a resident of West Middletown) and Margaret Elizabeth (also living in West Middletown).

Mr. Cherry owns a good farm containing 103 acres, part of which he rents and uses as a pasture. It has been in the possession of the Cherry family since 1774, and many improvements have been made, a good house being erected in 1884. Mr. Cherry is fond of hunting and is a skillful marksman. Politically he has long been an active Republican, having voted for General Harrison, and served his party in various township offices. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Hickory, this county. [Since the above was written, Mr. Edward P. Cherry died at his home in Mt. Pleasant township, December 23, 1892, in his seventy-fourth year.

THE FARLEY FAMILY. The oldest member of the family of this name, of whom there is any record, was Joseph Farley, a farmer by occupation, a native of County Armagh, Ireland, who there married Sarah Carr, a resident of the same county, and reared the following children: Joseph, William, Robert, James, Samuel, John and Rebecca (Mrs. John Kennedy). Mr. Farley was a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. James Harvey was the pastor.

Joseph Farley was born in 1779, in County Armagh, Ireland, and received his education in the schools of that country. In early manhood he was married to Nancy Lindsey, a resident of the same neighborhood, and the children born to them in Ireland were: John, Mary (Mrs. Samuel Palmer), James, William, Rebecca and Samuel. In 1824 Mr. Farley and his family embarked at Warrenspoint, Ireland, for America, and after a voyage of five weeks and three days landed at Quebec, Canada, in which city they remained eight weeks, and thence traveling slowly by boats and carriages, arrived at Pittsburgh with but $15 with which to begin a new life. They pushed bravely on, however, and finally reached Washington county, Penn., where Mr. Farley rented a farm in Chartiers township. Here he remained four years, and then moved to South Strabane township, where he lived five years, at the end of which time he returned to Chartiers township, where he resided nineteen years, afterward purchasing a farm in South Strabane township, to which he soon added the place now occupied by the family, and hither he moved. After settling in Washington county, two daughters were born to them: Sarah and Nancy J. Mr. Farley was another example of what success might be achieved by patient industry, for from small beginnings he became a prosperous farmer and stock raiser. In politics he was a leading Democrat, and in religious faith he was a member of and liberal contributor toward the United Presbyterian Church at Cross Roads, in Chartiers township. In June, 1857, he was laid to rest by the side of his wife, who had preceded him to the grave in November, 1856.

JAMES FARLEY was born in Ireland, March 2, 1814, and when a small boy came with his father to Washington county, Penn., where he imbibed the fundamental principles of education in the common schools, becoming a good reader, well-informed on current topics. On August 28, 1851, he was united in marriage with Jane Ross, who was born January 12, 1814, daughter of Thomas Ross, a native of eastern Pennsylvania; they afterward adopted Rebecca Ann McLaughlin, who remained with her foster parents till 1877, when she was united in marriage with Rev. Lyncurgus Mechlen, of New Athens, Ohio, and their children were James F., George, Robert D. and Jane Rebecca. Mr. Farley was a successful farmer, and engaged extensively in the live stock business. He was a leading member of the Democratic party. On April 14, 1891, he died, and was buried in the cemetery at Washington. His widow still lives on the farm.

WILLIAM FARLEY (a brother of James) was born in May, 1816, in Ireland, and coming with the family to America in 1824, received the greater part of his education in the common schools of this country. He is an eager reader, and an enterprising member of the community. In political life he is a Democrat, and though never caring to assume a prominence in the arena of politics, still he is ever ready to advance the cause of his party.

JOHN FEE, a successful farmer of Chartiers township, was born March 10, 1817, in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. His ancestors were natives of the Emerald Isle, the grandparents, William and Elizabeth Fee, having emigrated from Ireland to Maryland, where they were married. They afterward came to Canonsburg, Washington county, where William Fee died about 1815, being followed by his wife a few years later.

William Fee (father of subject) was born in Maryland, coming to Washington county, Penn., when about sixteen years of age, and was afterward married to Elizabeth Hamilton, a native of North Strabane township, this county, and daughter of David Hamilton, whose father came to Chartiers township when but five years of age. He served six months in the Revolutionary war. The father of Miss Hamilton was born March 10, 1750, near Carlisle, Penn., where he was united in marriage with Margaret Gardner, and afterward came to Washington county, settling in South Strabane township, where he followed farming. He died in 1840, his widow in 1848; both were members of the Presbyterian Church.

After his marriage to Elizabeth Hamilton, William Fee lived for some time in North Strabane township, this county, moving to a farm in Chartiers township about 1822, where the following children were reared: Harriet (widow of William Harsha, of Canonsburg, this county), Elizabeth (deceased in 1851), John (subject), David (married to Maria McLaughlin, and died in 1852), Samuel (deceased October 8, 1849) and William G. (of whom mention is made further on). Mr. Fee was an active member of the Whig party, serving as justice of the peace for many years, and in religion a member of the Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church. He died November 25, 1861, being followed by his wife on October 28, 1877.

John Fee was educated in the schools of Chartiers township, and then learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed about thirteen years, spending six months in Cincinnati in 1843. On September 29, 1847, he was married to Hannah Quinn, a native of Washington borough, but reared in Chartiers township. She is a daughter of James Quinn, who was born in Ireland, and settled in Washington county, Penn., at an early day. Mrs. Fee has one living brother, James Quinn, of Tyner, Ohio. The following children have been born to John and Hannah Fee: Lida A., John, David (married to Eva Pattison, and living at Canonsburg, this county), Rebecca (wife of Matthew A. Cain, of Chartiers township), Samuel (married to Anna McCoy, and living at McConnell's Mill), Ellis, Harry (married to Jennie McCarty, and living at McConnell's Mill), and William H. (married to Julia M. Humphrey, and living in Canonsburg). After his marriage John Fee settled on the farm of 113 acres, where he is now living. This farm is of excellent soil, has upon it a considerable amount of timber and is underlaid with a vein of No. 1 coal.

Mr. Fee has served the public several terms as school director, and both he and Mrs. Fee are held in high esteem by all who know them. Both are faithful and consistent members of Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Fee is a Republican.

Mr. Fee's only living brother is Prof. William G. Fee, of Cherokee county, Iowa, married to Elizabeth Welch. He is a noted educator, and has twice held the office of county superintendent of schools for Washington county, Penn. He removed from Canonsburg to Iowa in 1878, where he owns a quarter section of land. He is an elder in the United Presbyterian Church, of Quimby, Iowa.

J M. BERRYHILL. Among the progressive business men of Mt. Pleasant township, this gentleman is recognized as one of the leading citizens and most successful dairy farmers. He is a representative of one of the prominent pioneer families of Washington county.

William Berryhill was of Scotch descent, and served as captain under Washington throughout the Revolution. After that struggle he settled near Greencastle, Penn., and followed the blacksmith's trade some years, afterward purchasing the farm where his life was passed. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Ruth Steele, who was born in Ireland, coming with her parents to America when but one year of age. The children born to William and Ruth (Steele) Berryhill were as follows: Alexander S., Ruth (Mrs. Noble), William, Samuel, Elias and Isabella (wife of Rev. Blackburn). Mr. Berryhill was a Federalist in politics, taking an active interest in the affairs of the county. He and his family were members of the Presbyterian Church.

Alexander Berryhill was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and was educated in the schools of the neighborhood. In early life he came to Uniontown, Penn., where he was married to Mary, daughter of Moses Linn. After his marriage he moved to West Virginia, and conducted a tan yard for some time, and then opened a general store at West Liberty. He finally sold out, and became one of the pioneer boatmen of that vicinity, making trips from West Liberty, to Nashville, Tenn. He exchanged the northern produce for cotton, sugar, and other articles raised in the Southern States. While returning from one trip, he met the first steamboat that was ever on the Ohio river, and challenged the crew for a race to Short Creek. They accepted, and he won the race. In 1830 he came to Cross Creek township, this county, where he made a permanent home. In politics he was formally a Whig, afterward uniting with the Democratic party. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. They were the parents of the following children: William, Moses L., Alexander S., Maria I. (wife of William McKenly), James, John, Samuel and Martha.

William G. Berryhill (son of Alexander) was born in 1802, in West Liberty, W. Va., and came with his parents to Cross Creek township in an early day. On December 8, 1831, he was united in marriage with Maria Marshall, who was born in 1803, in Venango county, Penn., and coming with her parents to North Strabane township, there grew to womanhood. Mr. Berryhill was a teacher of Cross Creek township, and after his marriage resided in different parts of the county until 1841, when he and his wife moved to Knox county, Ill., thence to Richland county, Ohio, where they remained one winter; then located in Knox county, Ohio, where he followed his profession in connection with farming; in 1848 he returned to Cross Creek village, Washington Co., Penn. In politics he was an ardent Democrat, and in religion he and his wife were members of the Union Church in Mount Vernon, Ohio. He died in June, 1848, and within a fortnight his wife was laid beside him. They were the parents of six children, viz.: Alexander (deceased in 1856, a cabinet maker of Mount Vernon, Ohio), T. M. (whose name opens this sketch), Abner (deceased in 1858, Armstrong county, Penn.), Moses Linn (deceased when two years of age), Arabella (deceased in Allegheny county, Penn.) and James (accidentally killed near Burgettstown, Penn.).

T. M. Berryhill was born September 19, 1834, in Cross Creek township, this county, where his boyhood was passed, excepting an interval of seven years which he spent in Ohio. His early education was obtained in Knox county, Ohio, and in 1848 returned to Cross Creek village, Penn. On March 21, 1861, he married Miss Jane Griffith, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, the marriage taking place at Hickory, this county. Miss Griffith was born on the farm which she and her husband have occupied. She is a daughter of Isaac, and granddaughter of John and Jane (Martin) Griffith, natives of Maryland, who settled on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township many years ago, he dying April 1, 1825, his widow April 2, 1834. Isaac Griffith was born, in 1800, on the old home farm, and in 1836 was married to Elizabeth Esler, who came with her parents to Cecil township when a child, locating on Miller's run. Isaac Griffith was a farmer, in politics a Whig, afterward becoming a Republican; he and his wife were members of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church. She died in 1857, and in 1867 he was laid by her side. The children born to this union were as follows: Jane (Mrs. T. M. Berryhill), Robert (living in Missouri), John (living in Mt. Pleasant township), James (assassinated in August, 1890, in Arizona, near Flagstaff), Elizabeth (residing in Hickory, this county), Isaac M. (accidentally shot himself in 1884 at Coffeyville, Kans.), Letitia (wife of M. J. Liggett, living in Independence township, this county), and Harriet Ann (wife of J. S. Liggett, a resident of Independence township).

T. M. and Jane (Griffith) Berryhill first settled in Hickory, this county, where he followed the blacksmith's trade until 1863. He then moved to Jefferson county, Ohio, where he bought a farm and remained until 1867, when he sold out, and returning to Washington county, settled on the farm of 162 acres which he now owns. He has followed dairy farming exclusively for six years, milking from twenty to twenty-four cows daily, and raising enough stock to supply the dairy. He has a good house and barn, and is a prosperous citizen, in politics voting with the Republican party. Mr. and Mrs. Berryhill are members of the U. P. Church at Hickory, of which he is a ruling elder. Their union has been blessed with the following children: Nettie A. (wife of Robert A. Russell, Mount Pleasant township), William G. (a medical student, married to Della McCarrelli), Blanche B. (wife of Harry A. Smith, Mt. Pleasant township), Charley M. and Lulu A. (the latter two yet living at home).

MRS JANE SAWHILL, widow of John Sawhill, was born in 1824, in Ohio county, W. Va., a daughter of Thomas Pollock. In 1843 she was united in marriage with John Sawhill, who was born December 6, 1812, in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., where he received a common school education, which he afterward considerably improved by reading. Alexander Sawhill, his father, was a native of Ireland, whence he came to this country with his parents who settled in eastern Pennsylvania where they died. He was there married to Mary Neely, a daughter of native-born Irish parents, and after the death of his parents the young couple came, about the year 1803, to Washington county, locating in Buffalo township. Here they remained several years, and then moved to take up their final residence in East Finley township, near the Buffalo township line. Twelve children were born to them, of whom John was sixth in order of birth.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. John Sawhill settled down to farm life, in East Finley township, near Claysville. Some years later he purchased the Milligan property, situated about one mile from Claysville, in East Finley township, and near the Donegal township line, where his widow still lives. Here he died August 30, 1887. He was a successful farmer, and by industry and good management accumulated considerable property. He was a prominent man in the community, enjoying the highest respect and esteem of his neighbors. In politics he was a staunch Republican; in religion he belonged to the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, toward which he was a liberal contributor.

To Mr. and Mrs. John Sawhill were born children as follows: Anna M., born February 8, 1845, wife of James McConahey, of Donegal township; Mary A., born August 1, 1849, died July 10, 1870; Thomas A., born February 3, 1851, now living in Concordia, Cloud Co., Kans.; Elizabeth Jane, born July 5, 1853, wife of John Post, of East Finley township; William F., born October 16, 1855, now in Concordia, Kans.; John E., born October 7, 1858, residing in Iowa; Elden C., born May 30, 1861, now a Presbyterian minister in Enon, Lawrence Co., Penn., and three that died in infancy.

DAVID E. McNARY. No family has been more prominently identified with, or can boast a prouder record among, the heroic pioneers of Washington county, than those who bear the McNary name. The earliest ancestors of the race were natives of Scotland, in which country one James McNary was born in 1711. His boyhood was passed among his native hills, but in early manhood he went to Ireland, remaining there a short time. Youth is ever restless, and, longing for new and wider fields of action, the young man emigrated to America in 1760, where he made a permanent settlement in Chanceford township, York Co., Penn.

Thomas McNary was born on his father's farm in York county, and in 1782 located on a place of 250 acres on North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., for which he paid £375 in current specie. He was married, and reared a large family of children. From 1799 to 1820 he was an elder in what is now the Chartiers United Presbyterian Church. In personal appearance he was a large, fine-looking man. He died in 1820.

David McNary was born in 1771, in York county, Penn., and came with his parents to Washington county when yet a boy. He was reared to manhood on the farm in this county, and was married to Miss Jane Edgar, who was born about 1791 in Ireland, daughter of Samuel Edgar, a very prominent man in his day. The following children came to their union: Phoebe, born May 28, 1818; Thomas J., born January 21, 1820; Samuel, born January 22, 1822; Jeanette, born November 29, 1823; Mary, born February 6, 1826; David E., born March 3, 1828; Matthew, born February 21, 1830; James, born August 17, 1833; and Joseph, born January 28, 1836. Of this family are yet living: Samuel (who is a very large man, weighing 330 pounds); Mary (married to John Templeton, a farmer of North Strabane township); Joseph (a retired farmer, living in Washington, Penn.), and David E.

David E. McNary was born on the old McNary homestead in North Strabane township. He worked on the farm in boyhood, mowing hay with an old-fashioned scythe, and gathering it with a wooden fork cut from a bush. On August 11, 1853, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Ann, daughter of Samuel Martin, a well-known citizen of Chartiers township, and the following children have blessed their union: Samuel M., born May 29, 1854; James B., born July 29, 1856; Adeline, born February 15, 1858; Anetta, born May 23, 1860; Thomas A., born December 17, 1861; Mary B., born November 20, 1865; and Elizabeth E. and David C. (twins), born August 20, 1869. Following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. McNary resided in North Strabane township until 1871, when they located on their present place in Cross Creek township, erecting their handsome residence in 1875.

Mr. McNary is another practical witness to the possibilities which lie before every industrious and intelligent young man. Beginning life a poor boy with limited education, by honest and hard work, strict economy and sturdy integrity he has risen step by step, and to-day he occupies a prominent and enviable position among the citizens of not only Cross Creek township, but of the entire county. He now owns 196 acres of fine land, and is much interested in stock raising, making a specialty of fine-wooled sheep, of which he owns between three and four hundred. Politically, Mr. McNary has ever been a staunch Republican, serving his party as county commissioner during the years 1888, '89 and '90. In religious faith he is a member and elder of the United Presbyterian Church of West Middletown.

PETER MARTIN, a prominent and enterprising farmer of Chartiers township, is a native of the same, having been born February 6, 1823, on his father's farm in this county. He is a grandson of Peter Martin, who was born in Scotland, and at an early day came here and settled in Washington county, Penn., where he made a permanent home. His son Samuel was born on the farm in South Strabane township, and there grew to manhood. He was married to Jane White, a resident of North Strabane township, and the young couple settled, about 1816, in Chartiers township, this county, where they made a permanent home. The following children were born to their union: Mary (Mrs. Robert Morgan, who died in 1888), Eleanor (deceased wife of John Fergus), Peter, Sarah, Jane (married to John Morgan, of Chartiers township), and Ann Elizabeth (wife of David E. McNary, of Cross Creek township). Mr. Martin was a farmer, and was always prominently identified with the interests of the community. His wife died in 1836, and he passed to his last resting place in 1864.

Peter Martin passed his boyhood on the home farm, where, together with the neighboring urchins, he attended the country school. On November 10, 1859, he was married to Mary A., daughter of David and Margaret (Morrison) Watson. Miss Watson was of Scotch descent, her great grandfather, Gavin Morrison, having come from Scotland in 1773, with his family of three sons. Gavin Morrison died in Washington county in 1782, and the elder son, James, grandfather of Mrs. Martin, settled on the land, it having been surveyed for him in 1784. The Morrison family trace their lineage to this ancestor, who died in 1813. David Watson married Margaret Morrison. He died many years ago, leaving a family of children, among whom was Mary (Mrs. Martin). His wife died in 1875, aged eighty years and sixteen days.

After his marriage Peter Martin settled on his present home in Chartiers township, a well-cultivated, productive farm of 142 acres, with two good gas wells on the place. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have had four children: Anna M., Eva Jane (Mrs. John R. Jamison, of Chartiers township), Lizzie B., and George C. Mr. Martin has a good grade of stock, and is a successful business man. He is not an active politician, but casts his ballot with the Republican party. Both Mr. and Mrs. Martin are members of the Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church.

JAMES BUCHANAN MONTGOMERY, a prosperous and progressive young farmer, and extensive landowner, of East Finley township, is a native of the same, born July 27, 1856, a son of Silas and Margaret (Elliott) Montgomery.

Hugh Montgomery, his grandfather, was born in Ireland in 1780, and when yet a young man left his native land to seek his fortune in the New World. He landed in Philadelphia, whence he pushed on to Washington county, and October 21, 1803, he took up 200 acres of land embracing what is now the home tract of the Alexander Montgomery estate, situate about seven miles southeast of Claysville; the farm is situated on the headwaters of Big Wheeling creek. Here he built a log cabin in the midst of the wilderness, and began to clear the land. In 1808 he was united in marriage with Ruth Enlow, a resident of East Finley township, and who was living near the lonely young pioneer, to which union were born the following children: Susanna (Mrs. Thornberry), born February 20, 1810; Anne (Mrs. Spowls), born November 17, 1811; James, born October 23, 1813

Silas Montgomery

(moved to Ohio); John, born November 5, 1815 (settled in East Finley, where he died); Jesse, born September 27, 1817 (settled in East Finley); William, born July 23, 1819 (was a resident of Washington borough for many years; he kept a store, and was justice of the peace twelve years); Rebecca (Mrs. Post), born May 24, 1821; Phoebe (Mrs. Martin), born November 14, 1823 (lived in Ohio); Alexander, born August 6, 1825; Mary (Mrs. Sprowls), born May 13, 1828, and Silas, born June 18, 1830. Only one of this family is now living, Mary, residing in East Finley township, the widow of Simeon Sprowls. Hugh Montgomery was a farmer all his life, and his success in business was but a just reward of his industry and economy. In addition to the land which he first took up after settling in Pennsylvania, he afterward purchased over 600 acres, and at his death he bequeathed 150 acres to each of his six sons; he was also an extensive stock dealer. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat. He died May 17, 1817, aged sixty-seven years, followed by his wife July 22, same year, aged sixty-one years.

Silas Montgomery, the youngest child of Hugh Montgomery, first saw the light in East Finley township, this county, and his boyhood and early youth were passed on his father's farm, his education being limited to a few weeks' attendance at the old log school-house at Stony Point. On September 7, 1855, he was married to Margaret, daughter of William Elliott, of Morris township. By this union two children were born, as follows: James Buchanan and Elliott Wilson, the latter born October 31, 1857, and died September 15, 1877. Silas Montgomery died August 27, 1883, since when his widow has made her home with her son J. B. Silas Montgomery was a successful farmer, and at the time of his death owned a considerable amount of property. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religious connection he held to the Cumberland Presbyterian doctrine; he was one of the founders of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Fairview.

J. B. Montgomery received a good, practical common-school education, and learned farming with his father, an occupation he has since successfully followed. On August 22, 1878, he was united in marriage with Kate, daughter of Samuel Hunt, of West Finley township, and to this union were born children as follows: Ross, Silas, Ida, Robert, Janettie, Samuel, Lucinda, Rosella and Catherine (latter being now deceased). Since his father's death, Mr. Montgomery has continued to reside on the old home farm, consisting of 333 acres of well-improved land lying between Bartholdi and East Finley postoffice, on it being one of the finest residences to be seen in the township. Mr. Montgomery, in addition to his general farm interests, is extensively engaged in threshing in the season, and has a large sawmill on his property which he operates; he also gives particular attention to the breeding of Short-horn cattle. In politics he is a Democrat. Religiously Mr. Montgomery belongs to the United Brethren. He has always been very charitable, giving to all charities and helping the poor.

THOMAS FERGUS. The Fergus family are of Scotch descent, John Fergus, the grandfather of Thomas, having been born in Scotland, where he was married. He came with his family to America, and settled in Huntingdon county, Penn., where he died. John Fergus had three sons: Thomas, John and Samuel.

Samuel Fergus was born in Huntingdon county, Penn., and passed his youth on the home farm, receiving his education in the common schools. In early manhood he was married to Miss Mary Paxton, and the following children were born to their union: Hugh, Mary (Mrs. Andrew Hart), Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Maxwell), John, Martha, Thomas, Sarah (Mrs. Hugh Fergus), Jane and Nancy. He was a member of the Seceder Church at Canonsburg, and was an elder for many years. In politics he was a Whig. He died April 14, 1853, at the age of ninety years, and was followed by his wife February 18, 1861, in her ninety-third year.

Thomas Fergus was born November 2, 1802, on the home place in South Strabane township, and received his education at the subscription school, which was at first held in a log cabin on his father's farm. The floor was of ashes, and the seats were slabs of wood supported by wooden pegs. They had no backs for the weary urchins to rest upon, and the chimney consisted of a hole in the roof. The fireplace occupied one end of the building, and the windows were made by removing a portion of a log, and covering the space with greased paper. The only text-books used were the Testament, the United States Speller and the Western Calculator. But even with these meager opportunities Thomas acquired a fair education. On May 3, 1831, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of John D. Roberts, and to their union have been born the following children: John D., Mary, Susan (deceased), Hannah J., Maria, Isabella, Samuel P., Addison R. and Sarah M. After his marriage Mr. Fergus settled on the farm in South Strabane township now owned by Mr. Roberts, and resided there seven years, when he removed to his present home. He was formerly a Whig, and since the formation of the party has been a Republican, being actively interested in the political issues of the day. In religion he is a prominent member of the United Presbyterian Church at Pigeon Creek, to which he gives a liberal support.

MH. BORLAND, a leading stock raiser and prominent agriculturist of Cecil township, is a son of Cornelius Borland. His grandfather, Matthew Borland, was born in County Down, Ireland, and about 1790, while in early manhood, immigrated to America, first locating in Allegheny county, Penn. He married Margaret Connor, a native of upper St. Clair township, where the young people began their married life. In 1829 they moved to South Fayette township, Allegheny county, where their lives were ended. He was an active participant in the Whisky Insurrection. Politically he was a Democrat and afterward a Whig, and in religion was a member of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church. He died in 1842, his wife in 1837.

Cornelius Borland was born June 10, 1806, on the home place in Upper St. Clair township, Allegheny county. In June, 1836, he married Rebecca Kelso, who was born in 1816, in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn. The young people first located on the old homestead, afterward moved to North Fayette township, and in April, 1846, bought 204 acres of land in Cecil township, upon which they settled. This tract was originally patented by Edward Cheese, who disposed of his right to Mrs. Kerr, who sold it to Arthur Long, who afterward sold it to Dr. Riddile, and Mr. Borland finally purchased it from the heirs of the last-named owner. To Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Borland the following children were born: M. H., Martha M. (wife of David Reed, of Smith township), Margaret C. (Mrs. Vincent McBride, of Canton township), Mary E. (wife of James A. Little, of Cecil township), Agnes R. (wife of Andrew R. Paxton, of Savannah, Ohio), Andrew C. (who married Amanda R. Stevenson, is living on the old homestead), and John K. (also living on the home farm). The father was a colonel in the State militia for seven years, and was actively interested in the political questions of Allegheny county. He and his wife were formerly members of the Associate Reformed Church at Robinson's Run, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church at Venice, this county. He died in 1872, aged sixty-seven years. His widow is yet residing on the old home farm.

M. H. Borland was born August 27, 1837, in Upper St. Clair township, Allegheny Co., Penn. When nine years of age he came with his parents to Cecil township, Washington county, and there received a district-school education. On July 6, 1875, Mr. Borland was united in marriage with Mattie Miller, a native of Canonsburg, this county, a daughter of Reed and Martha (Fergus) Miller, natives of Washington county, and residents of Canonsburg. The father was born in 1817 and died in 1873; the mother died in 1851.

After marriage, our subject and his wife settled on the farm of 157 acres where they are now living, and which is situated on Miller's run. Mr. Borland has made many improvements, and has erected a pleasant new residence and other buildings. The proprietors of the Ridgeway Bishop Coal Company have bought twenty acres of Mr. Borland's farm, which already has railroad facilities, making it easy of access to Pittsburgh. In August, 1862, Mr. Borland enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-third P. V. I., for a term of nine months, and was assigned to the army of the Potomac, taking part in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. He received an honorable discharge in May, 1863, at Harrisburg, Penn., and returned to his farm in Cecil township. In politics he votes with the Republican party; he has been justice of the peace several years; has served in various other positions, and was secretary of the school board for ten years. Mr. and Mrs. Borland are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Venice, this county. They have six children: John M., Agnes R., Matthew H., Anna M., Ida M. and Rose E.

JOHAN G. PAXTON, an enterprising and successful citizen of Chartiers township, is extensively engaged in the dairy business, together with farming and stock raising. He represents an early pioneer family, being a son of Thomas Paxton, whose father, John Paxton, was born in York county, Penn. John Paxton came to Washington county in 1782, and was married to Martha Paxton, a native of York county, who crossed the mountains on horseback, coming to this county when but a child. She afterward returned to York county, and carried salt from there to Washington county on horseback. After their marriage the young couple settled in Chartiers township, where both died, leaving several children to perpetuate their memory, viz.: Eliza, Thomas, John and Samuel, all dead but Samuel.

Thomas Paxton was born in 1804, on the home place in Chartiers township, and in 1833 was united in marriage with Jane Mills, who was born in Jefferson county, Ohio, where the wedding took place. Her parents were of Scotch-Irish descent, and natives of Ohio, the pioneers of the family having settled in that State in an early day, and there their descendants are yet living. They made a permanent home in Chartiers township, this county, and reared the following children: John G., George Mills (deceased at the age of twenty-six years), Samuel (married, and a farmer of Boone county, Iowa), Mattie (deceased in 1884, second wife of H. O. McKnight), Isaac N. (married and living in Chartiers township), Nancy (Mrs. Thomas McEwen, of Chartiers township), Mary (deceased in her twenty-third year), Thomas (married and living on the old homestead) and Minnie (wife of William Zeh, living near Monongahela City). Of these children, George Mills was educated at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, and afterward took a theological course at the United Presbyterian College, Allegheny City. He then filled part of an appointment at Rochester, N. Y., under the jurisdiction of the Presbytery, but soon after his return home was taken ill and died. Mr. Paxton followed farming in this county, and in politics was a Whig, afterward uniting with the Republican party. He was a member and trustee of the Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church. He died in 1887, on the old homestead.

John G. Paxton was born August 18, 1836, on the home farm in Chartiers township, where he was reared and educated. On January 1, 1863, he was united in marriage with Ann Knox Miller, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, and daughter of John and Margaret Miller. They were natives of this county, and of Scotch-Irish ancestry, the grandparents of Mrs. Paxton having emigrated from Ireland, and patented a claim which is yet in the possession of the family. John Miller was a farmer, and in religious faith was first a member of the Seceder Church at Hickory, this county, then united with the United Presbyterian Church at Cross Roads. He died many years ago, and was followed by his wife in 1872, both being very old at the time of their death.

In April, 1863, Mr. and Mrs. Paxton settled on the farm where they are now living, which he has improved with a good residence and barns. The farm contains 128 acres of well cultivated land. In 1876 he began dealing in stock, having been the first to introduce Holstein cattle into Washington county, Penn. He also dealt in Merino sheep, breeding some fine Black-Top. He milks an average of twenty cows, shipping forty gallons of milk per day, and has been in the dairy business since 1873. He has raised registered Yorkshire swine, having taken premiums at Detroit (Mich.) and other places. Mrs. Paxton died February 22, 1872, leaving four children, viz.: George Grant (living in Chartiers township, and married to Mary McNary, daughter of J. C. McNary, of Chartiers township), James, Lillie and John Graham (editor of the Kent Courier, at Kent, Ohio, employing five or six men). In 1873 Mr. Paxton was married to Ellen, daughter of William and Martha (Mitchell) Cameron, natives of South Strabane township, this county. The father was a farmer and died in 1874, having been preceded by the mother to the grave. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Paxton, viz.: William, Jennie A., Emma and Eva (deceased in infancy); the last two were twins. In politics Mr. Paxton votes the Republican ticket, and has frequently held township offices. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Houstonville, and he has been president of the board of trustees until quite recently. He ranks among the progressive men and farmers of his county.

ALLEXANDER BORLAND is a native of Washington county, Penn., and son of Andrew Borland, who was born in Washington county. In 1824 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander McClure, and eleven children were born to their marriage, namely: Alexander, Mary, Rebecca, Margaret A., Elizabeth, Sarah, Catherine, Andrew, Martha, Rachel and James. Of this family, Rebecca, Catherine, Martha and Rachel are now deceased. The father always followed farming on the old place, with the exception of about six years, and died in 1860. The mother passed away April 10, 1889.

Alexander Borland, eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Borland, was born December 10, 1825, on the farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., where he grew to manhood. On December 4, 1849, he was married to Margaret Jane, daughter of James and Agnes Crawford, who were the parents of nine children, namely: William (deceased), Sarah, Andrew (living on the old homestead in Peters township), Tamar, Mary Ann, Agnes, Elizabeth, Margaret Jane (Mrs. Borland) and Priscilla; of whom Andrew and Margaret are the only ones yet living.

To the union of Alexander and Margaret Jane (Crawford) Borland the following children have been born: James Crawford, Elizabeth McClure (Mrs. Caldwell), Andrew Alexander, Mary Agnes, and Elmer Ellsworth (deceased). In 1876 Alexander Borland purchased his present home of 110 acres in North Strabane township, all under cultivation. In politics he votes with the Democratic party, and has held various positions of trust in North Strabane township. He is an elder in the U. P. Church.

DANIEL SWICKARD, a prosperous shoe merchant of Monongahela, born November 26, 1816, in Somerset township, is a son of John and grandson of Martin Swickard who was born and reared in eastern Pennsylvania.

Martin Swickard came to this county among the earliest settlers, and locating in a log cabin in Somerset township, assisted in clearing up and improving the land. He was twice married. To the first union were born the following children: Matthias, Daniel, Samuel, John, Lucy and Sarah. Mr. Swickard always followed farming, and in 1805 went to Jefferson county, Ohio, where he remained until his death. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Lutheran Church.

John Swickard was born in 1783, in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth on the home place. When a young man he married Mary, daughter of John Smith. They continued to reside on the home place, where children were born as follows: Catherine, John, Samuel, Daniel, Mary, Barbara, Susan and Elizabeth. The father was a lifelong agriculturist, and a noted hunter and sportsman; in politics he voted with the Democratic party. The clothing for his family was made from wool carded by hand and woven by his wife, who died in 1860 and was buried in the Lutheran cemetery, where her husband was buried January 9, 1877. They were both members of the Lutheran Church.

Daniel Swickard was educated in the subscription schools of Nottingham township, his text books being limited to the Testament and United States Speller. In 1840 he was married to Harriet, daughter of Abram Leyda, a native of Nottingham township, who has borne him the following children: John, married to Malissa Beatty, living in Colorado; Mary E., wife of Daniel Berry; Hester A., married to Harrison Leyda; Daniel, deceased; James L., married to Maria Woodward, of Monongahela, living at Meadville, Penn.; Alex. Y., married to May C. Coulter, of Venango, Penn.; and David M., married to Carrie E. Van Kirk, of Amwell, now living at Monongahela. Mr. and Mrs. Swickard resided on the home place for twenty years after their marriage, or until he purchased the Leyda Mill in Nottingham township. Conducting that enterprise for thirteen years, he continued to own the home place. In 1865 he opened a grocery store in Monongahela City, but five years afterward sold out, purchasing a furniture and undertaking establishment which he kept for thirteen years. At the expiration of that time he opened the shoe store where he is now carrying on a profitable business. He is a representative citizen, a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, and has served in numerous capacities; in 1855 he was elected county commissioner, which office he held three years. In religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Swickard died in 1872, and Mr. Swickard again married, in 1874, M. L. McCurdy, of Allegheny county, Penn., daughter of Daniel McCurdy.

HENRY COOK, miner, is a well-known resident of Carroll township, and was born February 29, 1836, and reared in "Old England." His father, George Cook, was a laborer in the old country, and was there married to Annie Humphreys, descended from an old and prominent English family. After his marriage George Cook went to Australia, his family remaining in England. He died in the latter place when about twenty-seven years of age, leaving a widow and two sons, James and Henry, the elder of whom was accidentally killed with a hay-knife. The mother is yet living in her native land, and some years ago was married to Richard Cottle, to whom she has borne several children.

Henry Cook remained in England until five years of age, when, after the death of his father, the family left his birthplace and came to Wales. The mother there supported herself and children for one year by binding shoes, and Henry entered the coal mines, where he remained until nineteen years of age. He then returned to Worcestershire, England, and was married October 26, 1857, to Mary Ann, daughter of Thomas Hampton, and some years later moved to Yorkshire, finally emigrating to America in 1863. He first located at Monongahela, Penn., and then sent for his wife, who has borne him the following children: Henry W., George, Samuel (residing at Monongahela), Mary Ann (living in Illinois), Lucy (living at home), Anna, Jane, Elizabeth, Maggie, and Amelia (deceased). Mr. Cook has carefully saved his earnings, which he has invested in a tract of land at Riverview, near Monongahela, having also erected a neat little home near that city. One of his half-brothers is now living in America. In politics he is a staunch member of the Republican party, and holds an honorable place in the esteem of his neighbors, who recognize his sterling worth as a man and citizen.

THOMAS WRIGHT, who in his lifetime was one of the best-known and most highly respected prosperous agriculturists of Buffalo township, was a native of the same, born February 27, 1810.

His paternal grandfather, William Wright, a native of Ireland, followed the trade of weaver in County Monaghan, in that country. He was there twice married, and had the following named children: William, Thomas, Robert, John and Samuel. In 1785 he came to America, and after a short sojourn in Chester county, Penn., settled in Buffalo township, this county, where he continued to follow his trade. Here he and his wife died. He was a member of the Associate Church, and in politics was a Whig.

Samuel Wright, father of subject, was born in Ireland in 1782, and when a young lad came with the rest of the family to America. In Buffalo township, this county, he commenced farming on a place which was then entirely wild, but which he and his family, by dint of hard labor, in course of time reduced to a condition of fertility. In about the year 1804 he was married to Rachel, daughter of Thomas Hill, of Donegal township, but a native of Ireland, and their children were Mary

(Mrs. Thomas Carson), William, Thomas, Robert, Samuel and John, all now deceased except Robert. After the death of the mother of these children, which occurred February 8, 1817, Mr. Wright married Mary Howe, who bore him three children: James, Ann (Mrs. Samuel Graham) and Rachel, all deceased. The father died January 24, 1849, in his sixty-eighth year, the mother December 5, 1841.

Thomas Wright, whose name opens this biographical memoir, was educated at the subscription schools of the neighborhood of his birthplace, and early in life commenced farming. On December 13, 1844, he married Miss Sarah, daughter of John Carson, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, where his father James was also born. The latter was there married to Mary Hill, a native of Ireland, who bore him children as follows: John, Isaac, James, Adam, Mattie (wife of Hugh Meholin), Betsy (wife of David Carson), Ann (wife of Archibald Stewart), and Jane (wife of William Brownlee). Mr. Carson was a farmer, and came to Buffalo township, this county, in an early day, when Indians and wild animals were yet numerous. The family were all members of the Seceder Church. John Carson, son of the above, and father of Mrs. Sarah Wright, in early manhood married Sarah Hill, who bore him the following named children: May, Rebecca, Rachel, Martha, Adam, Jane (wife of James Howe) and Sarah (wife of Thomas Wright). The father died in 1840, the mother in 1855. They were members of the Seceder Church at South Buffalo, of which he was an elder and liberal supporter, and in politics he was a lifelong Whig.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wright continued to reside on the home farm, where were born to them three children: Rachel (who died at the age of twenty-four years), and two that died in infancy. Mr. Wright was called from earth May 31, 1881, and his widow is now calmly awaiting the final summons. He was a member and liberal supporter (as is his widow) of South Buffalo United Presbyterian Church; politically he was first a Whig, and after, on the formation of the party, a staunch Republican to the day of his death. Mr. Wright was a thoroughly representative, self-made man, and has left to posterity the heritage of a good name.

GEORGE DORSEY ranks among the successful agriculturists and prominent citizens of East Pike Run township, and is a member of an old and highly respected family. His grandfather, Joseph Dorsey, was born near Ellicott's Mills, Md., and in 1782 moved to Washington county, Penn., where he purchased 1,500 acres of land, two miles from West Brownsville, Penn. He erected a log cabin upon this tract, and resided there until 1787, then built a large stone house, which is yet standing on the old farm, in a good state of preservation. He was the father of the following children: Mrs. Dr. Wilson, of Steubenville, Ohio; Nancy, Mrs. John De Bois, of Ohio; Clarissa, Mrs. West, and Betsey, Mrs. Daniel Workman, both of whom died in Ohio; Matilda, Mrs. William Blair, who died in Kentucky; Edward G., who married Matilda Bra-shears; John D., who died in Cincinnati, and James.

James Dorsey, father of subject, was born in 1790, on the home farm in Washington county, Penn. In early manhood he married Elizabeth Elder, a native of Maryland, who was born February 4, 1800. She came to Pennsylvania when a child with her widowed mother—Mrs. Mary Elder, who died at the age of eighty three in Washington county, Penn. Mr. and Mrs. Dorsey passed their lives on the old homestead (of which he owned 500 acres), where two sons were born to their marriage, viz.: James (who died in 1883, in Allegheny county) and George. Mr. Dorsey was actively identified with the Whig party. He died in 1852, and his wife passed away January 27, 1883, having been connected with the M. E. Church for over sixty years.

George Dorsey was born November 11, 1833, in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and has given his attention wholly to the vocation of agriculture. On June 1, 1854, he selected a life companion in the person of Martha Phillips, a native of Washington county, Penn., who was born August 8, 1836. Her father, Solomon Phillips, was born December 23, 1793, in this county, and on May 23, 1835, married Maria Garrett, who was born September 19, 1812, and they were the parents of five children, viz.: Martha (Mrs. Dorsey), Jonathan, Rebecca (Mrs. Joseph P. Crawford, Madison county, Iowa), William (deceased) and Ruth (deceased). Mr. Phillips followed teaching for many years, and then took up farming. He voted with the Whig party. He died in 1848, followed by his wife in 1883. He was a Quaker in religious faith, his wife a member of the M. E. Church. George and Martha (Phillips) Dorsey reared the following children: Elizabeth (Mrs. W. S. Grimes), Cassius A. (who married Henrietta, daughter of John and Marjory Watkins, of East Bethlehem township), Charles I. (who married Anna Watkins), William, Anna, John, Ellsworth, and two who died in infancy. Three of these children are now living: Elizabeth, Cassius A. and Charles I. Mr. Dorsey is a prominent worker in the Republican party, and he has served in various local offices; and in religious faith he is a member of the Taylor M. E. Church, having been trustee, steward and Sabbath-school superintendent for several years. He owns 315 acres of good land on the National pike, where he has erected a handsome two-story brick residence, and a large frame barn.

His grandfather, Joseph Hill, was born in Maryland in 1770. He was educated in the rate schools of the day, and became an exceptionally well-read man. At the age of eighteen he married Mary Jamison, and to them were born: John, David, Mrs. Nancy Jamison, Joseph, James J., Mrs. Nancy Haviland, Margaret, Thomas and Eli. Mr. Hill began life upon the farm adjoining that of D. L. Hill on the north. He was originally a Whig, later a Republican, and was always an active politician. He and his family were members of the regular Baptist Church. Mrs. Hill died in 1835, her husband following her to the grave in 1852.

James J. Hill was born November 10, 1804, on the old home farm, and his younger days were spent at school, where he proved himself a good scholar and an eager reader. In 1826 he married Catherine Lyda, daughter of Benjamin Lyda, of Somerset township, and they had born to them the following children: Julia A., Mrs. Catherine McIlvane, George L., Benjamin L., Sarah, Demas L., Mary (deceased) and David (deceased). James J. Hill lived upon the home farm one year, and then moved to West Pike Run township, remaining there upon a farm of 100 acres, six years, thence moved to Pigeon creek, and lived there three years. He afterward came to Somerset township, where he resided twenty-one years, both farms being in this township. On March 26, 1860, he came to the place where his son and daughter now live, and there spent the remainder of his life, dying October 9, 1881. Mr. Hill was an active Republican, one of the "wheel horses" of the party, and served as inspector and auditor of his township. Mrs. Hill, who was a member of the Lutheran Church, died in May, 1884.

Demas L. Hill was born January 8, 1844, in Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education in the common schools. He assisted his father some time after attaining his majority; has always followed farming, and has been very successful. He is giving especial attention to sheep raising, and has some very fine breeds on his farm, which consists of eighty-seven acres. Mr. Hill was married November 12, 1876, to Melissa, daughter of Robert Latta, and they have five children: Orpha, Ulysses Grant, Alexander Leslie, Huber and Edgar. He is a Republican, though not an active politician, his time being all given to his private affairs. He occupies the farm together with his sisters Julia A. and Sarah, who have always lived at home. Julia A. is a member of the Regular Baptist Church.

ELI TOMBAUGH, an energetic farmer of Somerset township, is a son of Matthias Tombaugh, who was born December 26, 1792, in Ohio, and in early life was united in marriage with Rachel Sphon, who was born April 2, 1807, in this county, and they reared the following children: Solomon (living in Washington, Penn.), John (a farmer of West Bethlehem township, this county), George (an agriculturist of Gage county, Neb.), Eli (whose name opens this sketch), Isaac (living on the home farm) and Jacob (farming in Livingston county, Ill.) (twins), Adam (a grain dealer in Mulberry Grove, Ill.), Levina (who was married to Jacob Swagler, and died February 25, 1860), Mary (wife of A. J. Hildebrand, died August 10, 1877), and Matthias (who was drowned in the Illinois river in attempting to rescue a friend from the same fate). The father of this family died May 21, 1864. He was a member of the German Baptist Church, and in politics was a Republican. The mother died at the old homestead, May 17, 1892, at the advanced age of eighty-five years, a member of the German Baptist Church.

Eli Tombaugh was born May 26, 1838, and was educated in the country schools near the home farm in Somerset township, this county. He enlisted in the Civil war in 1864, and after serving three months under Capt. H. H. Templeton, was honorably discharged. He then returned to rural occupations, and on February 21, 1865, was united in marriage with Rebecca Wise, who was born in 1836, a daughter of Joseph and Permelia (Barnard) Wise, who were the parents of the following children: Solomon, Morgan, Mary, Elizabeth, Rebecca (Mrs. Eli Tombaugh), Maria, Barbara, Joseph and Emily (deceased). Both parents are dead. The father was a Democrat in politics.

Mr. and Mrs. Eli Tombaugh had five children, namely: Joseph Allen, born January 7, 1866; Percy Matthias, born August 15, 1867; Walter Scott, born December 24, 1869; Eli Edwin, born April 14, 1873; and Cora Josephine, born January 23, 1876. The mother was a member of the Baptist Church. She died March 6, 1880, and on April 21, 1887, Mr. Tombaugh was married to Sarah Smith, who was born January 4, 1850, a daughter of Israel and Hannah Smith. Mr. Tombaugh owns 204 acres of excellent farm land, which is kept in a good state of cultivation. He takes an active interest in public matters, and votes the Republican ticket.

JOSEPH SMITH is a son of Ralph Smith, whose father, also named Ralph, emigrated from England many years ago, and located permanently in Washington county, Penn. His son, Ralph, was born in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and was a slave until twenty-eight years of age. When a young man he was married to Mrs. Elizabeth H. (Shiveley) Hazellbaker, a widow, who bore him four children, viz.: Henry (deceased), Joseph, James (living in West Pike Run township) and Louisa (deceased). Mrs. Smith was also the mother of four children by her first marriage, namely: Daniel, Abraham, Jacob and Polly, all of whom are now deceased. The mother of these children died in 1850 and was interred in the Quaker cemetery in East Bethlehem township; in 1858 she was followed by her husband, who was buried in the Baptist cemetery at Washington.

Joseph Smith was born August 20, 1806, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and had no opportunity to secure a literary training, being obliged to give his whole time to farm work. In early life he was united in marriage with Mary Brown, who was born in 1815, in Washington county, Penn. Their children were born as follows: Matilda, wife of Jacob Simons, a Baptist minister of Monongahela City; Joseph, deceased; Henry, a resident of West Bethlehem township; Simeon, a farmer of West Bethlehem township; William, deceased; John; James; Mary, wife of Howard Wallace; Margaret; and George, deceased. James now residing in East Bethlehem township, was married to Jennie Maxwell, who died May 2, 1892, leaving three children: Mabel, Hazel and Eli. She was a member of the African M. E. Church. The father of these children is well known in West Pike Run township as an honest, industrious citizen. He began life as a farm laborer, pushing coal boats during the fall and winter, and by strict economy at length saved enough to purchase 194 acres of good land. He devotes most of his time to the care of this place. Mrs. Smith died in 1880, a member of the M. E. Church; Mr. Smith is associated with the U. P. Church, and in politics he is a Republican.

ROBERT H. HILL, one of the many highly esteemed farmer citizens of East Bethlehem township, is a grandson of Stephen Hill, an early settler of that township, who married a Miss Welsh, and had by her the following named children: George, John W., William, Robert, Stephen, Elenor, Mary, Margaret and Nancy. Of this family, William and Robert are living, the former in the borough of Washington, the latter in West Bethlehem township.

John W. Hill, father of Robert H., was born in 1800 in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and was reared to agricultural pursuits, his education being received at the subscription school of the vicinity, held in an old log cabin, and the copy book used by him is now in the possession of our subject. In 1825 he married Susan Hawkins, who was born in 1808, a daughter of William and Nancy Hawkins, and for a few years the young couple continued to reside in West Bethlehem township. In 1832 Mr. Hill bought a farm in East Bethlehem (where his son, Robert H., now resides), and here successfully carried on farming the rest of his life; he died April 21, 1857, thirty-one years after his marriage, and his widow survived him thirty-one years, dying in Beallsville, Penn., October 6, 1887. The children born to them were: William, in East Bethlehem township; Robert H.; George; John, deceased; Joseph, in Beallsville; Stephen, living with Robert H.; Mary Ann, married to Mr. Bishop, of Claysville, Penn.; Sarah Ellen, wife of Christopher Horton, in Centreville, Penn.; Eliza Jane, Mrs. Thomas Sargent, in Beallsville; Margaret E. (Mrs. Enloe), in Claysville, Penn., and two that died in infancy. The father was a Republican during the later years of his life, in former years a Whig; socially he was a F. & A. M., in church matters a Methodist.

Robert H. Hill was born July 12, 1832, on the farm now owned by him in East Bethlehem township, and was there reared to the occupation of his forefathers, his school training being restricted to a few months' attendance, in winter time, at the subscription schools of the vicinity. In 1867 he married Caroline Keys, who was born in 1836, a daughter of Abram Keys, of East Bethlehem township, and by this union there has been born one child, Cora May. Like his father before him, Mr. Hill is a Republican in politics, and in church connection a Methodist. His fertile and well-kept farm comprises 100 acres of prime land, devoted to general farming inclusive of stock raising, the breeding of sheep being a specialty with him. His comfortable and elegant residence is well situated, and provided with all modern improvements.

MRS. DELILA KEYS, widow of Parker Keys, was born January 8, 1838, on a farm in Greene county, Penn. She is a daughter of John Goodwin, a native of York, Penn., who came to Greene county when a young man. He followed farming and weaving, and was married to Sarah Gordon, who bore him the following children: Jackson, Daniel, William, Seth, John, Elizabeth (widow of Sylvester Rush), Mrs. Jane Webster, Mrs. Mary Richey, Mrs. Sarah Shuver, Lucinda (deceased) and Delila. Of this family all except our subject are residents of Greene county, Penn. Delila Goodwin was united in marriage, in 1855, to Parker Keys, son of Enoch Keys.

Parker Keys was born in 1826, on the farm in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., which is now owned by his heirs. He received a common-school education, and learned agricultural pursuits, which he followed, farming all his life. He and his wife were the parents of six children. He was a Democrat in his political preferences, but voted independently when the occasion in his opinion required it. He died February 4, 1891, at the age of sixty-five years, since which time his widow and children have resided on the home farm, consisting of ninety-four acres of valuable land. She and all her children are devout members of the Baptist Church.

JAMES A. MOUNTS, one of the leading representative farmers of Franklin township, of which he is a native, was born January 14, 1845, a son of Richard R. and Margaret (Johnson) Mounts. Our subject was educated at the schools of the district, the attendance being limited to a few weeks during the winter season, and the remainder of the year occupied in assisting on his father's farm, and learning the practical lessons of agricultural labor. From earliest life he has been accustomed to hard work, and he is now the owner of some 280 acres of prime land in an excellent state of cultivation. In 1870 Mr. Mounts married Martha, daughter of J. W. Chambers, and of this union the following named children were born: Margaret (Mrs. Brook Anderson), Harriet (Mrs. Mike Buckley), Jennie, Nellie and John W. The mother was called from earth January 27, 1891, deeply lamented by all who knew her. In political life Mr. Mounts has always been an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and in Church matters a liberal and earnest supporter of the Presbyterian Church at Buffalo.

JAMES CASSIDY, a leading citizen and retired farmer of Burgettstown, was born June 6, 1825, in Jefferson township, Washington county, and is of Irish parentage.

John Cassidy (father of subject) was born in 1792, in County Donegal, Ireland, where his boyhood was passed. In early life he crossed the ocean in a sailing vessel, the voyage occupying eleven weeks and two days. He landed at Philadelphia, and for a few years was employed in a powder-mill there. The young pioneer then proceeded on foot to Westmoreland county, Penn., afterward revisited Philadelphia, and again walked to Westmoreland county, where he was married to Jane, daughter of James Osburn. In 1816 the young couple settled on a farm in Jefferson township, this county, near the Virginia line, and resided there a few years, thence moving to the wild tract which has now been transformed by cultivation into a pleasant and comfortable home. In this wild country, surrounded by savage beasts, and yet more savage men, their children were born and reared as follows: Margaret (wife of Charles Scott), William (deceased), Ann (married to Robert M. Smith), James (whose name opens this sketch), Robert, Mary J. (Mrs. Charles Scott), Catherine E. (married to Frances Magee), and Martha E. (wife of John Gillespie). Mr. Cassidy made several journeys to Philadelphia on horseback, bringing back salt to his home. They raised their own flax, and made their clothing from that plant and from wool. Grain was cut with a sickle, threshed by tramping of horses, and cleaned by a sheet and "fanning." Politically John Cassidy was a Whig and Republican, and in religion an earnest, active member of the Protestant Methodist Church. He died in 1870, and was buried at Bethel Church in Jefferson township, this county.

James Cassidy remained on the home farm in Jefferson township, during his boyhood, and was an irregular student at the school which was held in a rude log cabin near his home. On January 31, 1856, he was united in marriage with Maria, daughter of Hugh Cosgrove, and granddaughter of Michael Cosgrove, who was born in Ireland, and after coming to America was married to Annie Campbell, a native of Maryland, who bore him four children: William, Margaret, Hugh and Hannah. The parents of this family settled in Maryland after their marriage, and the father followed farming. He was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Society of Friends. Hugh Cosgrove was born April 2, 1781, in the State of Maryland, passing his youth on the home farm, and also teaching school. He was married to Priscilla Jones, who was born March 15, 1789, daughter of Samuel Jones, of Maryland, and she bore him the following children: Eliza A. (wife of Rev. Jacob Comstock), William, Thomas, Amelia (Mrs. Isaac Everett), Catherine, Maria (married to James Cassidy) and Hannah (wife of William Thompson). Mr. and Mrs. Cosgrove passed the first years of their married life in Maryland, but finally decided to leave their native State. The journey was made in a two-horse wagon, which contained the emigrants and their entire stock of worldly goods. They purchased and located upon a farm in Jefferson township, Washington county, Penn., where the remainder of their lives was passed. Mr. Cosgrove accumulated a good property after locating in Pennsylvania. He was a Democrat, serving his township as school director, and in religion supported the Methodist Church. Mrs. Priscilla Cosgrove died January 17, 1847, and Hugh Cosgrove on March 4, 1854. Both are buried in the Eldersville cemetery.

James and Maria (Cosgrove) Cassidy resided on the home place in Jefferson township about seven years after their marriage. They then moved to Monroe township, Carroll Co., Ohio, remaining there five years, thence returning to Washington county, Penn., located in Independence township. Four and one-half years later Mr. Cassidy bought a farm in Cross Creek township, and in 1891 they moved to their present home in Burgettstown. The following children have been born to their marriage: Vista (deceased), Robert C. (married to Jennie M., daughter of George W. Osburn, and has one daughter, Ora), William J. (married to Fannie, daughter of Rev. Tuttle, and has one son Herschel), and Oliver J. Politically Mr. Cassidy was originally a Whig, uniting with the Republican party at the date of its organization, and has served his township as director; he is especially interested in educational matters. In religious faith he is a member and liberal supporter of the Methodist Church.

ANDREW PROVINES has passed his eighty-seventh birthday, and is now as hale and hearty as many a man of twenty years his junior. He is a son of William Provines, whose father, John, was born and reared among the hills of Scotland, where he was married and whence a few years later he moved to Ireland. William, the son of John Provines, was born in Scotland, and came with the family to Ireland when a boy. He was there reared to agricultural pursuits, and was married to Rebecca Hemphill, a native of Ireland. William Provines remained in Ireland about ten years after his marriage, where his eldest five children were born: Mary, Samuel, Andrew, John and Robert. At the end of that time, the family came to America, locating in Washington county, where children were born as follows: Margaret, James, Sarah, Jane and Rebecca.

Andrew Provines, the third child of William and Rebecca (Hemphill) Provines, was born August 11, 1805, in County Tyrone, Ireland, being seven years of age when his parents emigrated to America. They embarked in a sailing vessel named "William S. Bradford," and landed in New York, thence proceeding to the home farm in Washington county, of which our subject still owns a portion. Here Andrew grew to manhood and assisted in the general duties of a farm. At the age of eighteen years he began to work for neighboring farmers at a salary of $8. per month. He continued in this employment several years, then went to Washington, where he was employed to haul freight to Philadelphia and other points east of the mountains. Since then he has been engaged in various occupations, of late years having passed the greater part of his time upon the farm, but is now living a retired life with his brother-in-law, Robert Stewart, having never married. In politics Mr. Provines is a staunch Democrat, and has never missed but one election since he came of age. He has voted in the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania and Maryland.

ROBERT STEWART. Of the prosperous and highly esteemed citizens of Jefferson township, none are more universally esteemed or more widely known than the gentleman whose name introduces this article. The Stewart family trace their lineage back through the generations to one Lord Stewart, a native of Scotland, who afterward settled in County Tyrone, Ireland, at a place known as Foggy Hill.

James Stewart, a descendant of the old Scottish nobleman just mentioned, was married to Elizabeth Hemphill, and with his family sailed from Ireland for America on the ship "Doras." A long and tedious voyage followed, during which the vessel was boarded by a British man-of-war, and all the able-bodied men of the "Doras," as was customary in time of war, were impressed into the navy. Among those who were thus obliged to render unwilling service to the English Government was a son of James Stewart, named Robert, a youth of eighteen years. He was taken on board a British man-of-war, where he remained several months, finally obtaining his release through the efforts of his father, who persuaded a young lady to claim him as her husband. The ruse succeeded, and the young man was liberated, after which he came on to America, and first located in Philadelphia, whence after a year he joined the family in Smith township, Washington Co., Penn., whither they had preceded him. In course of time he moved to Mt. Pleasant township, where his father died. Here he was soon after married to Miss Ann McCough, also a native of Ireland, and though history is silent concerning the identity of the self-sacrificing young lady who freed young Robert from imprisonment, yet romance would fain hope that she and his chosen bride were one. However, there is no foundation for the supposition, and historians are expected to confine their statements to known facts. After marriage Robert and Ann (McCough) Stewart went to Jefferson township, and they reared a family of six children, named John, Elizabeth (Mrs. Kidd), Sarah, Robert, James and Andrew. The father was a Democrat, and a member of the U. P. Church.

Robert Stewart was born May 21, 1824, on the home farm in Jefferson township, this county, where he passed his youth in attending school and assisting with the general farm duties. He married Miss Sarah Jane Elliott, who bore him three children: John Elliott (born March 13, 1853), James (born November 25, 1855), and Robert (born February 26, 1858). The mother died September 25, 1858, and for his second wife Mr. Stewart was married to Miss Eliza Orr, of Irish descent, who died soon afterward, and June 17, 1864, he wedded, for his third wife, Miss Rebecca H., daughter of William Provines, who came from Ireland and settled in Jefferson township, this county. Robert Stewart is a popular and prosperous citizen. In political opinions he has always voted the Democratic ticket, being a counselor and adviser of that party, and in religious faith he gives a hearty support to the U. P. Church, of which his wife is a member.

BERNARD C. JACKMAN. This well known gentleman is a representative of a pioneer family of Washington county. His grandparents, William and Elizabeth (Conley) Jackman, were born in County Cavan, Ireland, and emigrated in 1789. They settled on a large tract of land in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., where the following children were born and reared: Bernard, William, Mary, Eliza, Joshua, John, Margaret, Nancy, and four who died in infancy.

John Jackman, son of William and Elizabeth Jackman, was born on the farm in East Pike Run township, this county, and received a subscription-school education. In early life he was married to Phebe Taylor, daughter of William and Phebe (Kirkwood) Taylor. Her parents were of Scotch-Irish descent, and after coming to Pennsylvania bought 160 acres on the National pike, between Beallsville and Brownsville, Penn. Mr. Taylor then conducted a tavern for several years, and also built the first M. E. Church in that locality, which is yet known by his name. The children of this family were born as follows: Edward, Sophia, William, Isaac (who died in his one hundredth year), Phebe, George, Joshua, Ann, John, and others who died in infancy. The parents both died on the old place, and were buried in the cemetery of the Taylor M. E. Church. To the union of John and Phebe (Taylor) Jackman eight children were born, namely: Elizabeth, wife of Wesley H. Taylor, a resident of Carroll county, Ohio; Bernard C., whose name opens this sketch; Mary A., Edwin, Caroline, and three who died in infancy. The father was a farmer, and for a number of years served as local preacher at the Taylor M. E. Church, with which his wife was also identified. He also erected the first log school-house in the neighborhood, serving for many years as school director, and doing all in his power to promote the educational and religious interests of the community. He was actively identified with the Whig party, and was one of the most influential men of his neighborhood. He died in 1861, followed by Mrs. Jackman in 1878.

Bernard C. Jackman was born August 26, 1824, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the public schools, and in 1852 was united in marriage with Ruth Lilley, who was born in 1829, in East Pike Run township. She is a daughter of Ellis and Elizabeth (Phillips) Lilley, who were pioneer settlers of this county. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Lilley were Solomon, residing in Alliance, Ohio; Ruth, wife of Bernard C. Jackman; Elizabeth, a resident of Ohio; Thomas, deceased; Phebe, living in Ohio, and Alica, deceased. Both parents were members of the Quaker Church. The father died in 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Jackman reside on the old homestead, consisting of 132 acres of land, upon which good buildings and other improvements have been erected. He votes with the Republican party, and has been school director for several years. They are the parents of three children, namely: Phebe E. (deceased), Hattie M. (wife of John F. Colvin, a farmer of East Pike Run township), and Wilbur S., a teacher in the Cook County Normal School at Chicago.

As already stated, Mr. Jackman's grandparents were natives of Cavan, Ireland, with the exception of the grandmother, Phebe (Hardman) Taylor, who was born in the Scottish Highlands, and came to Ireland with her parents (Moxruder Hardman and wife) to escape the Cromwellian atrocities. Mrs. Hardman, nee Miss Kirkwood, became owner of 1,000 acres of land near Dublin. Phebe Hardman married William Taylor. He was born in 1754, and emigrated in 1789. The ages of the grandparents are as follows: William Jackman, eighty-eight years; Elizabeth Conley, his wife, eighty-five years; William Jackman, eighty-six years, and Phebe Hardman, his wife, ninety-six years. Away back in 1831 William Jackman provided whisky for his harvesters. One of the men tasted it too freely, returned to his cabin and whipped his wife. On Mr. Jackman learning of this he emptied the whisky on the ground and introduced temperance in the harvest field, being the pioneer of the cause in this section of the State.

MATTHEW R. WELCH. In the foremost rank of the honored and prosperous citizens of Smith township is the name of this gentleman gladly welcomed. His father was Matthew Welch, who was born in County Down, Ireland.

Matthew Welch (the father) was educated in his native country, and, at the age of twenty four years, crossed the ocean in a sailing vessel, the voyage occupying eight weeks. He landed in New York, proceeding thence to Lancaster county, Penn. After residing in that county for about four years in 1797 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of William Reed. The young couple resided in Lancaster county three years after their marriage, and in 1802 moved to Washington county, Penn., the journey being made in an emigrant wagon containing their household goods and provisions, drawn by four horses. They were three weeks on the road, and finally settled until spring on a small place in Smith township, this county. They bought a place two miles distant, and immediately began to make improvements upon it, afterward raising a large amount of stock. In politics Matthew Welch was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Seecer Church, at Burgettstown, to which he gave a hearty support. He died in 1851, and in 1873 his widow was laid beside him in the United Presbyterian cemetery at Burgettstown. The children born to this marriage were: <sup>127</sup>Isabella (wife of William Galbraith), <sup>128</sup>Mary (married to William Campbell), <sup>129</sup>Jane (wife of James McNary), <sup>130</sup>Nancy (Mrs. Mark Stephenson), <sup>131</sup>Elizabeth (wife of Robert McBurney), <sup>132</sup>Margaret (Mrs. Thomas McCorkle), Rachel (married to R. K. Scott), Julia <sup>133</sup>(wife of James Vincent), Hannah <sup>134</sup>(married to Matthew Welch), and Matthew R. <sup>135</sup>Of this family Mrs. Robert McBurney, Mrs. Thomas McCorkle, Mrs. James Vincent, Mrs. Matthew Welch and Matthew R. Welch are yet living.

Matthew R. Welch was born December 19, 1826, on the home farm, in Smith township, where his boyhood was passed in working on the farm and attending school three months each year. The schoolhouse was built of logs and furnished with slab seats and writing desks, an ordinary quill pen being used for the practice. On October 17, 1850, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John and granddaughter of John White. John White, the grandfather, was born and reared in eastern Pennsylvania, where he was married to Ann Bonar. They made a permanent home in Chartiers township, near Cook's Station, where he purchased a large tract of land. Their children were James, Nancy (wife of Alexander McElroy), Ann (married to John Anderson), Mary (Mrs. John McCall), Sarah (wife of William Stewart), William, John, Ebenezer, Samuel, Jane, David, Matthew, and Margaret, who married John Malone. The father was a Whig. He was a member of the Associate Reformed Church.

John White was born in 1786, near Canonsburg, Chartiers township, and in early life began to haul goods over the mountains, having carried ammunition for the Government during the war of 1812. In 1814 he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John May, of Cecil township, this county, who bore him the following children: Ann (Mrs. John Scott), Phebe (wife of John Farrar), Julia, Jane, John, James, Mary (wife of Matthew R. Welch), Nancy (married to John Reed), Alexander and Samuel. Of these children, Julia, Jane, John and Alexander are deceased. In 1814 Mr. and Mrs. White located on Raccoon creek, in Smith township. Selling out in 1850, they bought a farm in Allegheny county, Penn., where they resided eight months. Thence they moved to Belmont county, Ohio, and lived there two years, finally returning to Canonsburg, where he died. Politically Mr. White was a Whig and Republican, and held many township offices. In church relations he was a member and elder of the Associate Reformed Church.

Matthew R. and Mary (White) Welch first settled on the home place in Smith township, but in 1889 moved to Burgettstown, where they are yet living. Five children have been born to them: Elizabeth M. (wife of M. L. Cook), Anna M. (Mrs. J. L. Malcolm), John W. (married to M. A. Daugherty), Jennie (Mrs. Robert Russell) and Julia B. (wife of J. C. Morrow). Mr. Welch has been a Republican in politics, and has held various township offices; he has ever been especially interested in the progress of educational matters. He is a member of the U. P. Church, and of the Session; formerly he was a member of the Associate Church of Burgettstown.

ROBERT D. WYLIE, a well-known representative, native born citizen of South Strabane township, is descended from rugged Scotch ancestry, of whom the first to come to this country were three brothers—two settling in eastern Pennsylvania, the third, the great-great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, taking up his abode in the western part of the State.

David Wylie, father of Robert D., was born, in 1799, near Wheeling, W. Va., where he was reared and educated. When a young man he came to this county, and for a time made his home in the borough of Washington, with Hugh Wylie, his uncle, at that time a leading citizen of the county. Hugh Wylie was postmaster at Washington, his nephew, David, being his assistant, and served during three administrations, the office during that period being important as a distributing one for Pittsburgh and all points west. In 1828 David Wylie married Eunice, daughter of David Hanna, of Columbiana county, Ohio, and they then settled on the place where David Wylie passed the remainder of his days. By this union there was one child, Emice H. (Mrs. E. M. Mansley), deceased. This wife dying, Mr. Wylie married, June 1, 1831, for his second helpmate, Harriet Belle, daughter of Gen. Robert Simison, of Columbiana county, Ohio, who had been a Revolutionary soldier under Washington, and was afterward sent west, during the latter's administration, to survey the State of Ohio, at which time he took up a large tract of land in what is now Columbiana county. He commanded, as brigadier-general, a division of the army detailed to keep the Indians in check, and, while on a forced march, was seized with a fever from which he died. He was a native of Cumberland county, Penn., where he married Margaret Sanderson. They had seven children as follows: Elizabeth who became the wife of Robert Leonard, of Hancock county, Ohio; Jane (wife of William Blanchard, of Lawrence county, Penn.); Margaret (wife of Robert Filson, in Columbiana county, Ohio); Martha (wife of James Scott, in Jackson county, Iowa); Ann, unmarried; Harriet Belle (wife of David Wylie) and Samuel S. By this marriage Mr. Wylie had a family of ten children, of whom the following is a brief record: Tappan W. died March 1, 1871; Hugh H. died in 1831; Simison R., living at home; Edmund B., in Jackson county, Iowa; Robert D., our subject, of whom special mention is made further on; William S., Catherine I. and James S. (triplets), all deceased; Rev. Samuel S. and David Austin. Of these, Tappan W. attended Washington College three years, and married Nancy, daughter of Ebenezer McLean, of Washington county, Penn. He was a soldier in the Civil war, serving in the army of the Potomac; he was killed in 1871 by the explosion of a boiler; Simison R. attended Washington College two years, after which he engaged in farming on the home farm in South Strabane township, where he still resides; he is still unmarried. Edmund B. attended Washington College two years and was married, in 1869, to Lizzie McConnell, a native of Beaver county, Penn., and their children are Robert B., Clyde K., Scott and Harry B. Edmund B. enlisted in August, 1862, and served throughout the entire war with Sherman, being at his post of duty without intermission. Since 1865 he has resided in Jackson county, Iowa, where he owns and manages a large and profitable farm. Samuel S. graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in 1866, studied theology for two years at the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Penn., and one year in Edinburgh, Scotland (he settled at Middle Springs, Cumberland Co., Penn., as pastor of the Presbyterian Church at that place, in 1872, where he now resides, having had but one charge in the ministry. While a student at college he enlisted in Knapp's Battery and served his country in guarding Washington, D. C., for six months. On November 9, 1873, he was married to Jane M. McCune, of Cumberland county, Penn., and his children are Hattie M., Eva and Samuel S.). David Wylie, the father of this family, died April 13, 1879, the mother August 25, 1883. Mr. Wylie commenced with 100 acres of wild land, which he vastly improved and greatly added to. In politics he was a Whig, afterward a Republican, and was one of the leading men in his party; in religion he was a member for many years of the Presbyterian Church in Chartiers township.

Robert D. Wylie, whose name opens this sketch, was born August 23, 1840, on the farm where he now resides; and in the same house, and was here reared. His primary education was received in the schools of the district. In 1857 he entered Washington (Penn.) Union School, attending that school for two years. In 1859 he was enrolled in the senior prep. class of Washington College, and went without interruption until he graduated in September, 1863, being graded fifth in his class. Soon after graduation he undertook to fill the different positions of tutor of ancient languages and professor pro tem. of mathematics in the same institution. In 1868 he gave up teaching as a profession. During that year he was entered as a law student in Washington bar, reading with Alex. Wilson; but owing to continued ill health, at the urgent solicitation of his parents he reluctantly gave up a profession and concluded to try farming. Since 1869 he has been actively engaged in farming on the farm where he now resides. On June 14, 1882, he was married to Margaret E. Walker, youngest daughter of Jonathan Walker, of Butler county, Penn. They have two living children: Walker M. and Leila M. McK. Wylie. R. D. Wylie is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Wylie is a member of the Lutheran church.

ROBERT WRIGHT, a representative native-born citizen of the county, is one of the most prominent and influential agriculturists of Buffalo township, standing well with his neighbors, respected far and wide for his many good qualities of head and heart; one who has prospered in those things that make even the humblest life well worth living.

Mr. Wright was born March 8, 1812, in Buffalo township, where he received his education at the subscription schools of his boyhood days, which was supplemented by considerable home study and close reading. His paternal grandfather, William Wright, a native of Ireland, followed the trade of weaver in County Monaghan, in that country. He was there twice married, and had the following named children: William, Thomas, Robert, John and Samuel. In 1785 he came to America, and after a short sojourn in Chester county, Penn., settled in Buffalo township, this county, where he continued to follow his trade. Here he and his wife died. He was a member of the Associate Church, and in politics was a Whig.

Samuel Wright, father of subject, was born in Ireland in 1782, and when a young lad came with the rest of the family to America. In Buffalo township, this county, he commenced farming on a place which was then entirely wild, but which he and his family by dint of hard labor in course of time reduced to a condition of fertility. About 1804 he was married to Rachel, daughter of Thomas Hill, of Donegal township, but a native of Ireland, and their children were Mary (Mrs. Thomas Carson), William, Thomas, Robert, Samuel and John, all deceased except Robert. After the death of the mother of these children, which occurred February 8, 1817, Mr. Wright married Mary Howe, who bore him three children: James, Ann (Mrs. Samuel Graham) and Rachel (all deceased). The father died January 24, 1849, in his sixty-eighth year; the mother December 5, 1841.

Robert Wright, whose name opens this sketch, in 1847 married Susanna, daughter of Samuel Neely, and one child, Robert N. (now a prosperous farmer in Donegal township), was born to them. The mother died in 1850, and June 18, 1857, Mr. Wright married Margaret L., daughter of Robert McNeal, of Claysville, this county, by which union there are two children: Mary (wife of Isaac Grimes) and John S., born October 14, 1865, now conducting the home farm (he was married September 30, 1890, to Miss Lou B. Crawford). After his first marriage, Robert Wright continued to live for some thirty years on the home place, the dwelling being an old log cabin, and then erected his present commodious residence, which is well situated, and admirably equipped with all modern improvements. The farm he cleared up and improved with his own hands. He and his worthy wife were originally connected with the Associate Church, but of late years they have been members of the United Presbyterian Church at South Buffalo, he being one of its most influential supporters, and a trustee of same. Mr. Wright has always taken an active part in politics, first as a Whig, then as a member of the Liberty party, and of late years as a Republican; and while taking an active interest in all movements for the good of the country, he has invariably avoided public preferments. By hard, honest work, judicious economy and sound judgment, he has secured a competence, being now one of the most extensive and prosperous farmers in his section. [Since the above was written, Mr. Wright died December 27, 1892.

Robert McNeal, father of Mrs. Wright, was born February 3, 1789, and learned the trade of blacksmith. His parents came from Scotland at an early day, settling near Pittsburgh, Penn. Robert McNeal married Polly Long, and to them was born one child: Jane L. On January 4, 1825, he married Isabella Bonar, a native of Donegal township, Washington county, born December 26, 1797, and to them were born the following children: John H., who died May 3, 1859; James B., who enlisted in the war of 1861-65, and died in hospital September 4, 1864, from the effects of a wound received in the battle of Jonesborough; Nelson R., who served through the Civil war, and now resides in Donegal township; Margaret L. (Mrs. Robert Wright); Sarah F., deceased at the age of eight years. Mr. and Mrs. McNeal located in Claysville, Penn., where he followed his trade many years. He died November 28, 1863, his wife having preceded him across the River July 8, 1855.

THOMAS STOCKTON is a representative of one of the oldest families of Franklin township. Thomas Stockton, the ancestor of the family in Pennsylvania, was a native of Virginia, and at an early age came to Chambersburgh, Franklin Co., Penn. He was for many years a member and elder in the Presbyterian Church. He died May 31, 1795, aged eighty-six years, of whooping-cough, at the house of his son in law, William Waddell, in Mercersburgh, Penn. (William Waddell was a brother of Rev. James Waddell, of Virginia, whose daughter, Jeanette, was married to Rev. Archibald Alexander, D. D.). Mr. Stockton reared the following children: Thomas, John, David, Robert, Elizabeth (Mrs. Waddell), Isabella (Mrs. Neilson), Mary (Mrs. Bard), and Margaret (Mrs. Johnston).

Robert Stockton was born October 19, 1737, in eastern Pennsylvania, near Chambersburgh, and on December 22, 1761, he was married to Mary McKennie. Mr. Stockton served in the Revolutionary war, taking part in the battles of Trenton and Monmouth. He moved to Washington county in 1782, and in the following July purchased a farm of Peter Jolly, which was named in the survey "Beaver Dam." It is situated three and a half miles west of Washington borough, in Franklin township, and is still in the possession of the family. To Mr. and Mrs. Robert (McKennie) Stockton were born the following children: Thomas, Col. Robert, Margaret (wife of Col. John Cotton, of Meadville, Penn.), Frances (Mrs. Charles Stewart), Jane (wife of Rev. John Brice), John (married to Margaret McCombs), Rev. Joseph (married to Esther Clark) and Elizabeth (wife of Rev. James Cunningham, of Ohio). Col. John Cotton and Col. Robert Stockton were both elders of the Presbyterian Church at Meadville, Penn.

Thomas Stockton inherited the old Stockton place together with his brother John, who afterward died, when Thomas purchased the remainder of the farm. He was united in marriage with Miss Sarah Graham, and the children born to them were as follows: Robert, Thomas, John, Mary and Sarah. Mr. Stockton was a Whig in politics, and in religious belief was for many years a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington, in which he was an elder.

Robert Stockton, son of Thomas and Sarah (Graham) Stockton, passed his youth on the home farm, and was united in marriage with Rebecca, daughter of John and Sarah Wilson. To their union were born children as follows: Thomas V., John Wilson, Emma O'Ella (Mrs. C. C. Cozad) and Maggie (Mrs. A. R. Gaybort). Mr. Stockton was a leading member of the Presbyterian Church at Washington. In politics he was a Whig and Republican. He died in October, 1864, aged sixty-seven years.

Thomas V. Stockton, son of Robert and Rebecca (Wilson) Stockton, is unmarried, and has managed the home farm since the death of his father. He is an enterprising young citizen of Franklin township, and a member of the Republican party.

Dr. John Wilson Stockton graduated in the scientific department of Washington and Jefferson College in 1868; he graduated from the Eclectic Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1877. He was married August 8, 1890, to Romaine Wade McKown, of Allegheny county. He is located at present at Washington, Penn., where he is engaged in the practice of his chosen profession.

DANIEL B. MOWRY was born November 17, 1827, in Allegheny county, Penn., near Pittsburgh. His father, also named Daniel, was born in 1783, and was married to Jane, daughter of William Wylie, of Washington county, of the lineage of David Wylie, being a full cousin, and the children born to this union were Margaret, wife of Edward Wood, now living in Philadelphia; William, who was killed in Custer's raid at Little Big Horn; John, a physician, who graduated from Philadelphia Medical College; Peter, deceased; Daniel B.; Robert G.; George W., deceased. Daniel Mowry, Sr., the father of these children, died in 1862; the mother, Jane Mowry, in 1874. In politics he was an Old line Whig, and in religion a member of the Covenanters Church. Mr. Mowry was a life resident of Pittsburgh, Penn., where he was for a time clerk of the courts, and, afterward, tipstaff.

Daniel B. Mowry, the subject of this biographical memoir, though born in Pittsburgh, lived with his grandfather Wylie during most of his minority, following the vocation of farming. He was united in marriage with Mary A., daughter of Major William Wilson, and the children born to them were William W., a major in the Pennsylvania Militia, and a resident of Washington, this county; John died in infancy; Charles E., in Pittsburgh; Lottie (Mrs. Herbert Wilson, of Nebraska); Harry; Mary A. and Sarah, of Washington county. The mother passed from earth August 27, 1890. In 1861, during the war of the Rebellion, Mr. Mowry enlisted in Company A, One Hundredth P. V. L., better known as the Round Heads, and served throughout the entire struggle. In politics he is a staunch Republican, by occupation a farmer.

ST. JACKMAN is of Teutonic ancestry, his grandparents, William and Barbara (Shively) Jackman, having been natives of the country of the Rhine. They emigrated from Germany before their marriage, which ceremony took place in a fort on the Monongahela river, in Westmoreland county, Penn. In 1788 William Jackman took out a patent for 368 acres of land called "Hobson's choice," in Washington county. He paid the Indians, for their right, $15, a gun, and a blanket. He made a permanent home on this tract, where seven children were born to him, all now deceased. The parents were members of the Baptist Church.

Simeon Jackman, son of William and Barbara (Shively) Jackman, was born, in 1795, in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., and there attended the subscription schools. In 1819 he was married to Mary Dunlevy, who was born in 1800, in East Pike Run township, and the young couple settled permanently on 100 acres of the original tract (above mentioned) in Allen township. He afterward bought 100 acres from his brother Cyrus, paying him $10 per acre. The following children were born to them: one deceased in infancy; Joseph Wilson, of Henry county, Ill.; Anthony D., a resident of El Dorado, Butler Co., Kans.; Melissa, wife of George Morton, a Presbyterian minister of Indiana county, Penn.; Elizabeth, wife of James Wilson, of McLean county, Ill.; Mary, married to John Steele, of Fayette county, Penn. Harriet, wife of George Hill, of McLean county, Ill.; William H., living in Wayne county, Ohio; S. T., whose name opens this sketch; Isaac K., living in Los Angeles, Cal., and Sarah D., wife of William Dunlevy, of Butler county, Kans. Of these children Mary, William H., S. T., and Isaac K. are yet living. The father was a Republican, and served for many years as justice of the peace; was also captain in the State Militia. He died in 1881, having been preceded by his wife in 1873. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church.

S. T. Jackman, the only living representative of his family in Washington county, was born October 23, 1835, in Allen township, Washington Co.,

Penn. He received his earlier education in the subscription schools of the neighborhood, and then took the sophomore year at Washington College. In 1862 he enlisted at Pittsburgh, Penn., in Company F, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, for three years or during the war, and was afterward promoted to the rank of first lieutenant of Company E, in the same regiment. He served in the battles of Gettysburg, Wilderness, also in the Shenandoah Valley and the Seven Days' fight before Richmond. In 1865 he received an honorable discharge at Cumberland, Md., and returned to the home farm in Allen township, Washington county. On May 20, 1868, he was married to Florence J., daughter of Azariah and Sarah A. (Murphy) Crow, pioneers of Washington county, now living in Howell county, Mo.

Mr. Jackman yet owns ninety-five acres of the original patent. In politics he votes with the Republican party, and served as a member of the school board, assessor and road commissioner of Allen township. Since the Howe cemetery has been established Mr. Jackman has served as treasurer and trustee, and is also a trustee of the Ebenezer M. E. Church, of which he and his wife are members. Their children have been born as follows: Nora Elsie, wife of William Steele, a grocer of West Belle Vernon; Leslie T.; H. Roscoe; Ruby C.; Mary S.; A. Parker; J. Riley (deceased at the age of six years) and Morton Hanson (deceased when seventeen months old). In 1891 Mr. and Mrs. Jackman moved to their present home in West Belle Vernon.

ROBERT C. HOLMES, a successful and well known farmer of Cross Creek township, is a son of James Holmes, whose father died in Ireland, the land of his birth.

James Holmes emigrated from his native country in 1837, and remained in New York two years after landing on American soil. He then lived four years in Westmoreland county, Penn., afterward renting a place in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., and purchasing the home farm just before the Civil war. His wife was formerly a Miss Margaret Thompson, to whom he was wedded in 1836. Children were born to their union as follows: Jane, Thomas, John, James, Robert C., William, Thompson B. and Joseph D., all of whom were born after the parents had settled in America. The father followed general farming and sheep raising, owning a good fertile farm of 144 acres. In politics he affiliated with the Democratic party, to whose interest he was ever keenly active, supporting its principles with enthusiastic ardor, and holding various offices of honor and trust in Cross Creek township, which he filled to the satisfaction of all. In religious faith he was an active member of the United Presbyterian Church at West Middletown, Penn., to which he gave a hearty and liberal support. He died in 1869. Of the children born to James and Margaret (Thompson) Holmes, William was married to Miss Emma Neely, a native of Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and the following children have blessed their union: Robert, Jane M., Grover C., Joseph, James and Mary, all of whom are living with their parents on the old home farm.

Robert C. Holmes, the fourth or fifth child of James and Margaret Holmes, was born in 1844. His boyhood and youth were passed in the arduous duties of farm life, and attending the district schools of the neighborhood. When his father died, Robert took entire charge of the business, which he is now managing with marked success, and caring for his aged mother, who lives with her son, awaiting the summons which will unite her again with those loved ones who have "passed over the river home."

Mrs. Margaret (Thompson) Holmes was born in Ireland in 1819. In 1840 her parents came to the United States and settled in Chartiers township, Washington county, following their children. Mrs. Holmes was the first of the Thompson family to emigrate, the other children followed her example, and the parents ultimately decided to settle in the New World. Of the eight children who came hither, five are living. The mother of Mrs. Holmes died in Cross Creek township in 1879, aged eighty-seven years.

THOMAS A. HINDMAN, a highly esteemed and prosperous citizen of Cross Creek village, Washington Co., Penn., is a son of William Hindman, and grandson of Samuel Hindman. The latter was born near Cautonsburg, in Chartiers township, this county, and was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he followed through life. When a young man he left Washington county and made a permanent home in Brooke county, W. Va. He was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Davis, a native of eastern Ohio, and nine children were born to their union, namely: Polly, William, Rebecca, Eliza, Samuel, James, Margaret Ann (Mrs. Barber, of Knox county, Ohio), Harriet (Mrs. Murehland, of Colliers Station) and Evau D. (also living at Colliers Station).

William Hindman (the second child of Samuel and Catherine Hindman) was born in 1812, in Brooke county, W. Va., growing to manhood on the home farm. He received a common-school education, which was supplemented by the reading of good books. He was married to Elizabeth Me-

Cullough, a lady of Scotch-Irish descent, and the following children were born to them: Andrew (a blacksmith living near Colliers Station, this county), Catherine (deceased in childhood), Samuel (farming in this county), Thomas A. (subject of this sketch), Charles (died when quite young), Jane (living in Dennison, Ohio), Mary (also a resident of Dennison, Ohio), Eliza (deceased), Evan (a farmer of Cross Creek township, Va.), an unnamed infant (deceased), Rebecca, William (died when eight years of age), and George, all living near Colliers Station. The father of this family possessed a remarkable memory, and was considered one of the most intelligent men of the community. He was a man of generous impulses and warm sympathies; never allowing any person to leave his door hungry, or refusing aid to worthy objects of charity.

Thomas A. Hindman was born January 23, 1840, in Brooke county, W. Va., where he worked on the farm during his boyhood. At the age of eighteen years he learned the blacksmith's trade with his brother Andrew, then worked as a journeyman, traveling over several States, and finally, in 1865, settled in Cross Creek village, this county, where he opened a blacksmith shop. In 1868 he sold out, and returning to Brooke county, W. Va., worked two years for his brother Andrew. At the end of that time he returned to Cross Creek village, and purchasing his old shop, has since remained in the place. On November 8, 1871, he was united in marriage with Miss Hannah Stephenson, daughter of Mark Stephenson, of Smith township, this county. Three children have been born to their union: Della May, Audley Oliver and Nettie Pearl. Della M. and Audley O. have attended the Cross Creek Academy for several years, the latter now being a student of the Northwestern University at Ada, Ohio. Mr. Hindman began life with no assistance from home, and by industry and perseverance is now one of the best and most successful workmen, owning one of the finest blacksmith shops in Washington county. In politics he is a staunch Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church of Cross Creek village.

JAMES H. BARKLEY, a well-known stock raiser of Nottingham township, is a native of the same. His father, James N. Barkley, was born in 1814, in this county, and when yet a boy learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed for one year, then bought the home farm, containing fifty-seven acres in Nottingham township. On October 25, 1837, he was united in marriage with Sarah Caster, who was born in 1816, in Allegheny county, Penn., and their children were born as follows: Robert, James, Thomas, Frank, Catherine (wife of L. Culbertson), Caroline (married to William Hamilton) and Maggie (Mrs. F. Irwin). The father died in 1886; the mother is yet living.

James H. Barkley was born May 12, 1850, in Washington county, where his youth was passed. He worked in a sawmill for three years for Maj. James Gaston, and on March 10, 1880, made choice of a life companion in the person of Patience B. Hamilton, a native of this county, and daughter of James R. Hamilton. The latter was born in 1818, in Peters township, Washington county, and received a classical education. During his earlier years he followed the profession of school-teaching, and being solely dependent upon his daily earnings for a livelihood, he was obliged to practice strict economy. In 1846 James R. Hamilton was married to Miss Patience Morrison, a native of this county, and having managed to save a small amount of his salary, the young man bought a little farm in Nottingham township, this county, upon which he and his bride began their wedded life. They were poor in worldly goods, but rich in the possession of health and love. Fortune soon began to smile on the brave young couple, who met her frowns with such cheery faces, and as years passed on children came to brighten the little home as follows: Patience B. (Mrs. Barkley), William H. L., Charles James Reed, John H. G., Joseph G. P., Elizabeth Ann, Margaret Elnora and Mary Jane. Of these the three latter are deceased. At the time of his death, James R. Hamilton owned 300 acres of land.

James H. and Patience B. (Hamilton) Barkley have had five children, namely: Reed, Lee (deceased), Earl, Mary and Ralph. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Barkley settled on the home place, where they have since resided, and upon which he raises a variety of good stock. Politically he is a firm believer in the principles advanced by the Republican party, and in religion he and his family are all members of the Methodist Church.

PATRICK RODGERS. Prominent among the most respected and the wealthiest citizens of Donegal township is found this well-known retired agriculturist.

He is a son of Francis Rodgers, a native of County Donegal, Ireland, who when a young man came to America, and to Washington county, Penn., making a settlement in Donegal township, about one mile northwest of where is now Coon Island postoffice, and where Franklin Rodgers, his grandson, is at present living. Here he hewed for himself a home out of the unbroken primeval forest, and naturally then began to look around him for a suitable helpmate. Her he was fort mate to find in the person of Elizabeth Hupp, a member of one of the oldest families of the county and first settlers of Donegal township. To their marriage were born children as follows: John, who was a farmer in Washington county, and died at the age of forty-five years; Patrick, the subject of this memoir; Rosanna, wife of Joseph Cox; Nancy, wife of Samuel Cox; Isabel, married to Jacob Stoolfire; Margaret, wife of Thomas Davis; Mary, married to George Linville; Sarah, wife of Isaac Deeds; and Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Davis, all now deceased except Patrick. The parents died on the old home farm, the father in 1829, and the mother in 18—. When Francis Rodgers came to America he was but a poor boy, and his success in life was due to the characteristic thrift, energy and good management of himself and his faithful wife. In his political life Mr. Rodgers was a lifelong Democrat, a useful, reliable man in his party.

Patrick Rodgers was born in February, 1808, in Donegal township, this county, where, on his father's farm, he was well trained to the manifold duties pertaining to agricultural pursuits, while his education was secured at the subscription schools of his day. At the early age of sixteen the care of a large farm fell on him, thus putting an end to his opportunities of attending school any longer; but the manner in which his extensive and trying duties were performed gave evidence of ideas far beyond his years, and promises of a brilliant future before him in his state of life.

Mr. Rodgers has been twice married, first time to Harriet, a daughter of Jerry Linville, of Donegal township, to which union there were born children as follows: Johnson, who died at the age of twenty-eight years, and Franklin, a farmer in Donegal township. The mother of these children dying in 1846, Mr. Rodgers afterward married Jane, daughter of Robert and Eleanor (Mitchell) McHalley, of Donegal township, and she bore him the following named children: Elizabeth, now the wife of J. O. Scott, of Washington, Penn.; Mary, at home with her parents, and Emma, now the wife of Avery Counselman, of Brooke county, W. Va. After his first marriage Mr. Rodgers continued on the home farm, engaged in general agriculture and stock raising, until 1870, when he removed to the old Cracraft farm, situated near Dunsfort, in Donegal township, on Buffalo creek, where he has since resided, now several years retired, the farm being operated by others. This property he had purchased some years before. In his political affiliations Mr. Rodgers is a staunch Republican, formerly a Whig, and has held numerous township offices pressed upon him by appreciative friends. In religious sentiment he is a member of and liberal contributor toward the Dutch Fork Disciple Church.

ROBERT M. PATTERSON is a prominent citizen of Cross Creek township, and a son of Samuel, whose father was Gen. Thomas Patterson. Thomas Patterson was of Irish descent, his grandfather having been born in Ireland in 1708, and immigrating to America in 1728, settled in Pennsylvania, where his son William was born in 1733. William was first married to Rosanna Scott, and reared a family of five children, among whom was Thomas. His first wife died in 1769, and in April of the following year William was married to Elizabeth Brown, who bore him ten children.

Gen. Thomas Patterson, the grandfather of our subject, was born October 1, 1764, in Lancaster county, Penn., and came to Washington county with his parents, at the age of fifteen years. In 1795 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Finley, of Westmoreland county, Penn. Of the twelve children born to their union the following lived to an adult age: William, James, Samuel, Mary, John, Thomas, Finley, Elizabeth, Moses and Rosanna. Gen. Patterson was a wealthy agriculturist, and actively interested in politics, having represented Washington county in the United States Congress for several years. He passed away November 17, 1841.

Samuel Patterson was born March 27, 1800, in what is now known as the "Mill Property" in Cross Creek township, this county. He was reared on the home farm, and, when a young man, took charge of the mill for a few years. In 1825 he came to the place now occupied by Robert M. Patterson, and passed the rest of his life in agricultural pursuits, making a specialty of raising fine-wooled sheep. He was married to Miss Anna McClave, daughter of the late Stewart McClave, who emigrated from Ireland at an early day and settled in the northern part of Jefferson county, Ohio, where his descendants are yet living. Samuel and Anna (McClave) Patterson were the parents of the following children: Thomas, Lydia, Eliza, Stewart, Robert M., Eleanor, Mary A., Harriet, Julia, Emily, Franklin (the latter three being deceased in infancy), Rosanna, Silas C. and Adeline (deceased at the age of nine years).

Robert M. Patterson was born June 19, 1829, in the house where he is now living, which was erected by his great-grandfather in 1794. It is a stone structure with massive walls, two and a half feet thick; the interior being divided by board partitions into several rooms which are finished in the best manner known to the workmen of those days. In this house Robert M. Patterson grew to manhood, obtaining his knowledge of farming from the instruction of his father. On October 15, 1868, he was united in marriage with Miss Lydia Ann McClave, daughter of Samuel McClave. She has son of him, as follows: Anne, Luella, Rue, Elsie, Charles L., Frank M., Mary F., Rebecca (deceased in infancy), William (deceased in infancy) and Harry (deceased when three years of age).

Robert M. Patterson is a most successful farmer, and has devoted his principal attention to raising sheep. He owns 745 acres of land in Cross Creek township, which he keeps in excellent condition and well filled with good stock, now having some of the most valuable fine woolled sheep within the limits of Washington county. He usually keeps from three to four hundred sheep. In politics Mr. Patterson votes with the Democratic party, but favors liberal and progressive views. He is much interested in educational matters, having been considered as a candidate for a valuable position as a college student. In church relations, he is a member of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, going to that Society a most regular worshiper.

ROBERT SUTHERLAND is a gentleman and a well represented one of one of the oldest and most highly esteemed families of Washington county, as a native of the same, born May 27, 1837, in West Valley township. John Sutherland, his grandfather, then was a great Scotch farmer of George Sutherland, a pioneer of that county. John Sutherland, grandfather of Robert, was also born in Scotland, and was there married twice, having by his first wife a daughter, Barbara, and by his second wife, Mrs. Gordon Sutherland, several children. Robert was born in George. Upon coming to America he married Margaret Morrow, and had the following children: John, Polly, Daniel, Alexander, David and Robert. Mrs. Morrow died before she came to this country, George and one daughter, Barbara, then coming to America, arrived here, and settling in a new place, Mary, of their father, began working for him four years in order to pay her own passage over. His occupation then was, as usual, a farmer, three hundred acres of land, and he was never known to strike or neglect any of his duties, so that many he treated the way of his kindred. After the arrival of the young man, Mr. Sutherland came to Washington county, Pennsylvania, where he had a very successful business, raising much of his wages. They then came to this county, Cross Creek township, and settled in 1858, moved to West Valley township, where they resided until the death of the head of the family, who occurred in 1875. His wife survived him six years, dying in 1881, and they now rest side by side in West Alexander cemetery. They were members of one of the "Three Ridges" Presbyterian Church, now known as the West Alexander Church, and in politics he was an Old Line Whig. The farm on which they settled covered 100 acres, nearly all wild land, which has since been from time to time improved by the family, it is now occupied by Joseph Sutherland, the great-grandson of the pioneer settler.

George Sutherland, father of subject, was born in the "land of cakes" in 1769, and when three years of age was brought by his parents to this country, as already related. He was a purely home taught, self-made man. In Washington county he was married to Charlotte, daughter of Alexander McCoy, who came with his family from Scotland to this county about the same time as the Sutherlands. In 1814 he settled on a farm in West Valley township, and there passed the rest of his life. The names of his children are Nancy, Jane, Charlotte and Alexander. Mr. McCoy was one of the first elders of the "Three Ridges" Presbyterian Church. The McCoy's were living here in August, 1839, when nine members of the Methodist church were killed by the Indians, just outside the blackhouse. A girl of fourteen years escaped, and the Sutherlands were the first to hear her cries, and rescue her. After marriage George Sutherland and his wife settled on a farm in West Valley township, and here carried on agriculture up to the day of their death. The children born to them were John, Alexander, Eleanor, Isaac, William, Daniel, Christiana, Robert, and one that died in infancy. The mother departed this life October 14, 1840, the father September 17, 1848, and both are buried in West Alexander cemetery. They were members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was a leading elder, and in politics he was a Whig.

Robert Sutherland, of whom this sketch is a particularly true, attended the subscription schools of the locality of his birth, and was early trained to the arduous duties of farming, which has been his vocation from boyhood. Mr. Sutherland has been three married, first time May 27, 1856, to Jane, daughter of John and Polly Tompkins of Lucas, and the children born to this union were Mary F., wife of Rev. John B. Dawson, Lydia M. (deceased), who married R. J. McKee (deceased), Martha J., Mrs. David G. Keney, John (deceased), James, Julia (deceased), and John F. A. wife of James McCloy. The mother of this family died in 1857, and in 1858 Mr. Sutherland wedded Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Lawson, who survived his marriage but five months. In 1881 our subject took for his third partner, Effie Ann, daughter of John Taylor. After his first marriage Mr. Sutherland settled on a farm in West Valley township, and successfully followed agricultural pursuits until 1874, when he retired from active labor and moved to the homestead in West Alexander, where he has since resided. He is a typical self-made man, and has always been an enterprising loyal citizen. He has been a Republican since the organization of that party, prior to which he was a Whig and a strong anti-slavery man, a "conductor on the underground railroad," having frequently aided in securing the escape of bound hunted slaves to the free soil of Canada.

RICHARD RAWLINS THOMAS, a representative citizen of Morris township, is a son of Rev. John Thomas, who was a native of Wales, born in the year 1800, near Swansea, in Glamorganshire. John Thomas' father died when he was but a small boy, and his widowed mother, inspired by a desire to give her two sons the best possible chance, emigrated to America in 1819. Landing at Philadelphia, they at once proceeded to Indiana county, Penn., where they located, and the support of the mother fell upon the two sons. John, the father of our subject, had learned the trade of a weaver in his native country, which served him well in this new country. He became an expert, and was enabled to make it pay him well. At the same time he occupied his leisure time in obtaining an education and in fitting himself for the ministry. Having progressed sufficiently to prepare himself for teaching, he afterward taught school at various places, among the others, at Morgantown, West Va. He then began preaching, to which he devoted himself the remainder of his life. Among the different places at which he preached were Mt. Herman, Beulah, Bethlehem, Ruff Creek and other places in that section. On October 25, 1821, Rev. Mr. Thomas married Jane Roberts, daughter of William Roberts, who was a native of Wales, and a wealthy merchant and prominent man of Cambria county, Penn. For a short time they lived in Indiana county, where Mr. Thomas owned a farm. Later they removed to Fayette county, near George's creek, and afterward to Turkey Foot, Westmoreland county. Here he remained some time, when he removed to Monongalia county, West Virginia.

To the union of John Thomas and Jane Roberts, children were born as follows: William R., December 11, 1825; Elizabeth, October 6, 1827; Mary Jane, March 20, 1829; John P., January 15, 1832; James Estep, March 11, 1834; Richard Rawlins, January 11, 1837; Harriet Eliza, October 10, 1839; Anna A. Judson, June 29, 1842; and Shadrach and Martha (twins), December 1, 1843. Mary, wife of James Vandyke, now resides at California, Penn.; John P. and William R. live in Indiana county, and are prominent coal operators. Anna A. Judson Thomas died March 12, 1843; James E. was a member of the Twelfth Regiment, P. V. I. during the late war, and died in the service

March 21, 1857. Harriet, wife of Annam McCollum, resides near Anby, Penn.; Shadrach and Martha were twins; Shadrach, a successful fruit gardener, lives near Ellensburg; Martha was married to Boyd Emery, of Ansell township, and died in March, 1845; Elizabeth died June 3, 1850.

Richard Rawlins Thomas was born January 11, 1837, in Fayette county, Penn., near George's creek. He received only a common school education, and made his home with his parents until he was thirteen years of age, when he left home to battle with the world on his own account, using his own language, "with only one extra shirt, a straw hat and no shoes." For twelve years he made his home with Lemuel N. Juhn, of Monongalia county, W. Va., when he returned home to assist in the erection of a house for his father, and took a piece of unenclosed land lying in Morris township, Washington county, near the Greene county line. After a few years he removed with his parents to the southeast corner of Morris township, Washington county, near the Greene county line. On June 2, 1853, the father died; he was an arduous worker and a liberal Christian man, and gave his family every comfort his moderate salary would allow. The wife and mother died December 15, 1849. On June 5, 1860, Richard R. Thomas married Sarah H. Liddle, born May 21, 1819, a daughter of M. Don Liddle, and Eliza B. Kinchly. To this union there have been born two children: Lindley Whitfield, born September 25, 1862, and Mabel Genevieve, born March 20, 1864. Mr. Thomas has been successful as a farmer and stock breeder, as the condition of his farm and the uniform high grade of his stock attest. In politics he formerly was a Republican, but is now an active Prohibitionist. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at West Union, Penn., and his wife is identified with the Upper Ten Mile Presbyterian Church at Prosperity.

JOB H. HILL, a prominent citizen of Cassville, is a native of West Bethlehem township, this county, born October 2, 1837, on the home farm. His ancestors were natives of the Emerald Isle, one family of whom concluded to seek their fortunes in the New World, emigrated hither. They settled in Washington county, Penn., and took a homestead right of 500 acres, which has since been in the possession of their descendants. James (the father of our subject) now owning a portion of the original tract. They built their log cabin home near the site of the present community residence. The Indians were numerous, and the early pioneers and many skirmishes with their copper-colored neighbors. An Indian lay in ambush for some time at a certain spring, and took every opportunity to seize the unsuspecting pioneer who chanced to come near, but he was finally killed. Of the children in this family little is known, but one son was born while the parents were crossing the ocean to America. This son grew to manhood, married and settled on the home farm in West Bethlehem township, and reared a family of children, three of whom were Joseph, John and William. The father was a Federalist in politics, and in religion was a member of the Baptist Church.

John Hill (grandfather of subject) was born November 10, 1785, in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth on the home farm. He was united in marriage with Nancy Sargeant, who was born December 25, 1789, and they had four children, namely: Jane, Sarah (Mrs. Joseph Grable), William and James S. Mr. Hill was a Whig in politics. In religious connection he was a member of the Baptist Church, and one of the founders of that Society in Washington county.

James S. Hill was born June 13, 1811, on the home farm in West Bethlehem township, this county, where he received his early education. On July 24, 1834, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Yohe, of German descent, and the following children were born to their union: Nancy (Mrs. Solomon Adleman), John H., Thomas T. and William H. Politically Mr. Hill was formerly a Whig, and since the formation of the Republican party has been actively connected with it.

John H. Hill passed his early years on the home farm, and received a common-school education. On June 16, 1859, he was married to Elizabeth Wygant, of Carroll township, this county, and they have had four children, namely: Frank (married to Artie Enlow), Ella J. (Mrs. Jacob Shoemaker), Nannie (deceased wife of E. Shivers, died May 14, 1890), and Albert G. Mrs. Elizabeth Hill died August 31, 1875, and on January 6, 1876, Mr. Hill was married to Sarah McElwee, daughter of John McElwee, whose father, Samuel McElwee, was born November 25, 1791, in Lancaster county, Penn., and on January 10, 1811, was united in marriage with Ruth Ann Edwards, who was born January 8, 1793, and she bore him children as follows: John, Samuel and Lavina (Mrs. Robert Simmons). Mr. McElwee was a Methodist Episcopal minister, and traveled on the Philadelphia Conference, following his calling throughout life. In political opinion he was a Whig.

John McElwee passed his early youth in Chester county, Penn., and when a young man came to Washington county, where he drove stage on the National pike until the Hempfield (now the B. & O.) R. R., was established, when he served as a railroad agent until 1879. On February 28, 1840, he was married to Susan, daughter of Walter Noble, of Bradford county, Penn., and the young people made a permanent home in Claysville, this county. Their children are Sarah (Mrs. John H. Hill), Ruth A. (deceased) and Celia J. (deceased). Mr. McElwee was formerly a Whig, and after the organization of the party became a Republican. He was an active and enterprising citizen. He and his family were members of the M. E. Church. Mr. McElwee died January 29, 1880, and was followed by his wife November 3, 1884.

In March, 1862, Mr. Hill enlisted in Company B, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, known as the "Ringgold Cavalry." He was sent to the army of the Potomac, and appointed first clerk to Gen. Emery, of the regular army. He was afterward appointed chief clerk in the muster office, which position he filled until the close of the war. After his return home, Mr. Hill located in Valley Inn, then went to Kammerer, thence to Monongahela City, where he remained seven years, during which time he was elected high constable over three other aspirants for that office, receiving all the votes cast except thirty-six. Afterward he was engaged in the general commission business at Wheeling, W. Va. In 1884 he came to his present home in Claysville, Washington county, and engaged in the grocery business. In 1889, he was appointed postmaster at Claysville, and abandoned the grocery. Mr. Hill is a charter member of Patterson Jobes Post, G. A. R., at Claysville, and is now serving his third term as post commander. He has been a member of the I. O. O. F. for twenty-three years, and is now D. D. G. P. of Washington county. He was also a charter member of the A. O. U. W. of Monongahela City, Penn., and is now a member of the Grand Encampment of Pennsylvania, also a representative to the Grand Encampment of the I. O. O. F. and the G. A. R.

WILLIAM SNODGRASS WHITE, retired agriculturist, is one of the highly respected citizens of Washington county. His grandfather, William White, came at an early date to this county, and was married here. He died in 1822, in Canonsburg, and his wife followed him in 1827. They had three children: one son, John, and two daughters.

John White, father of our subject, grew to manhood in Canonsburg, and after attending the elementary schools of his native town, entered Jefferson College, where he graduated in 1804. He next began studying law at Steubenville, where he was admitted to the bar. Later he returned to Washington county, where he married Agnes Park, daughter of John Park, of Cecil township; he took up his residence in Washington, and acted as prothonotary one year. Abandoning the law about this time, he commenced the study of medicine at Thompsonville, Peters township, under the tuition of Dr. Robert Thompson. He resided in Cecil township, and taught school while he studied medicine. After taking his diploma, he commenced the practice of his new profession, and in November, 1815, located about one and one-half miles east of Hickory, where he practiced. In the following April he moved to Hickory, where he continued to follow his profession up to the time of his death, which occurred in July, 1853, he being then sixty-seven years of age. His wife followed him to the grave August 19, 1866, in her seventy-seventh year. In religion they were Presbyterians, and in politics he was a Whig.

W. S. White

William Snodgrass White was born December 12, 1812, in Cecil township, Washington county, and was three years old when his parents moved to Hickory. He received his education in the common schools and an academy. From 1835 to 1841 he conducted a general store in Hickory, and then moved on a farm on which he remained until the spring of 1872, at which time he came to Canonsburg. On March 31, 1839, he married Miss Jane, daughter of Archibald Stewart, of Chartiers township, and of this union were born the following children: John Stewart (who died in April, 1880; he had served in the war of the Rebellion), Agnes Ann (widow of John M. Miller, who died in May, 1888), Margaret Jane (Mrs. R. H. Black, of Canonsburg), W. Vance (of Canonsburg), Rebecca Jane (who died in 1845), Archibald Park (who died April 19, 1859, at the age of twelve years), Jenette (living with her father), Howard (in Ohio) and Matilda K. D. (living at home). Mrs. White died at Canonsburg, August 21, 1881, at the age of sixty years. In 1856 Mr. White was a member of the old Know-Nothing party, but since the formation of the Republican party he enrolled under their banner. He has frequently declined to accept positions of honor and trust. The position of associate judge was offered him, but even that he found it necessary for various causes to refuse. For forty years he has been a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. His farm, containing 300 acres, lies about half a mile north of Hickory, and in addition he has ninety acres on which there is a coal mine, located near Hickory. Mr. White has retired from active life, and his home is cared for by his dutiful and affectionate daughters. Both his paternal and maternal ancestors were of Scotch-Presbyterian descent, from the North of Ireland.

WILLIAM M. HUTCHISON, a prominent citizen of West Finley township, is a son of Thomas, whose father, James Hutchison, emigrated from Scotland in 1785, and settled in Washington county, Penn., on a portion of the farm now owned by William

M. Hutchison. He erected a home in the wilderness, but was obliged to leave it, as the Indians were hostile and very numerous. Five years later he returned to his pioneer home, bringing with him a bride, Mrs. Elizabeth Scott, nee Miss Elizabeth Law. They began married life on the farm where they passed their remaining days. The following children were born to them: Matthew, born July 5, 1792; Margaret, born August 5, 1794; Elizabeth, born October 3, 1796; Thomas, born January 28, 1799; Catherine, born June 27, 1801, and Nancy, born July 20, 1803. Of these children, Margaret, Thomas and Nancy lived to be over four-score years of age.

Thomas Hutchison passed his earlier years on his father's farm in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., and assisted in the agricultural duties. In the year 1824 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth McClelland, after which event he bought out the heirs of the home place, and settled upon it. To the above union were born children as follows: Jane, born November 20, 1825; James, born June 7, 1828; William M., born December 17, 1830; Margaret L., born May 19, 1836; Mary E., born April 30, 1840; and Catherine, born April 2, 1843. The mother of these children died March 30, 1844, and Mr. Hutchison remained single for three years, caring for his family as best he could. In the year 1847, he was married to Isabella McMillian. In 1875 Mr. and Mrs. Hutchison moved to Independence township, this county, where he died November 24, 1884; his widow is still residing on the place. Mr. Hutchison was an elder in the U. P. Church at Dogwood Grove for over forty years.

William M. Hutchison was born on a part of the farm in East Finley township, Washington Co., Penn. He still resides on part of the farm in West Finley township and passed his youth at home. On March 26, 1857, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah G. Gilmore, and began married life in his present home. They have had four children: John G., born February 17, 1858, an attorney at Euporia, Kans., who married Lelia A. McKee, December 11, 1884, to whom a son, Curtis McKee, was born November 12, 1890; Thomas A., born September 9, 1859, married Zillah E. Giles, September 27, 1888, to whom two sons were born—William Henry, September 12, 1889, and Giles Virgil, September 14, 1891; James A., born December 6, 1861, married Ada V. Sutherland, to whom one son, Harry Sutherland, was born June 30, 1892, and Eva May Hutchison, born September 8, 1864. Mrs. Sarah (Gilmore) Hutchison died March 14, 1890. Mr. Hutchison started in life with no financial assistance, and the additional disadvantage of poor health. But his strong will and invincible determination overcame even these formidable obstacles. He now has a good farm of 125 acres, upon which are comfortable dwellings, and he has given to all of his children that invaluable inheritance—a good education. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Claysville, this county; his son John is an elder of a United Presbyterian Church in Kansas, and another son, James, is an elder of the same church in Dogwood Grove, East Finley township, this county. In politics, Mr. Hutchison was formerly a Whig, and since the organization of the party, has been a Republican. He has held several important township offices, and is highly esteemed by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

JOHN NELSON EALY, one of the well to do and substantial citizens of East Finley township, was born in Cross Creek township, April 27, 1811, a son of John and Eleanor (Sprowls) Ealy, both natives of the same township.

John Ealy, his paternal grandfather, was a native of Schuylkill county, Penn., where he married and reared a family of children, some of whom and his wife he brought with him when he moved to Washington county. He settled here, near where is now East Finley postoffice, not far from the headwaters of Wheeling creek, in East Finley township, and here died, as did also his wife. Their eldest son, George, was born in 1773, in Schuylkill county, Penn., and came to Washington county with his parents, as above related. His boyhood days were passed upon his father's farm and in attending, during a few months in winter time, the subscription schools of his district; but perhaps the most lasting of his lessons were those of practical experience in industry, economy and perseverance, which have all along been marked traits in the character of the Ealy family in Washington county. George Ealy was a farmer all his days. He was married to Christina Ealy, who was born in 1786, and to this union were born the following named children: John, Polly, Henry, George, Michael, Martin, Mary and Christina, of whom but two survive, viz.: Michael, living in Highland county, Ohio, and Christina (widow of Silas Sprowls), in East Finley township, this county. The father of these children died June 19, 1869, the mother having passed away in 1849.

John Ealy, father of subject, was born in East Finley township, in 1803, and at the schools of the neighborhood secured a somewhat limited education, the better part of his time being occupied in work on his father's farm. In 1834 he was married to Eleanor, daughter of John Sprowls, of East Finley township, and she bore him children as follows: Nancy, Jane, John N., Lewis, David, George W., and Silas, all of whom attained adult age, but there are only two now living: John N.

and George W. The father was called from earth November 4, 1857, the mother September 9, 1886.

John N. Ealy received a substantial common-school education, learned agriculture of his father, at whose death he came into possession of the home place, and has since resided there, engaged in general agriculture, including the breeding of blooded stock. The farm is situated about half a mile south of East Finley postoffice, and is highly improved. Mr. Ealy is a member of the United Brethren Church, of which he has served as trustee; in politics he is a lifelong Republican; and one of the advisers and counsellors of his party. He has never married.

George W. Ealy, the other surviving son of John Ealy, was born July 8, 1847, in Cross Creek township, this county, and received a good common-school education. He came to East Finley township when young, learned farming under his father's preceptorship, and his entire life has been devoted to agricultural pursuits. On December 17, 1872, he was married to L. V. Carroll, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Seeman) Carroll, of Irish ancestry, and the children of this union are Mary E., born October 26, 1873; William Hazlett, born August 3, 1876, and John Hamilton, born August 14, 1880, all living at home with their parents. Mr. and Mrs. George W. Ealy are members of the United Brethren Church at Fairmount, and in politics he is a staunch Republican.

DAVID SUMMY. The family, of which the subject of this memoir is a prominent member, have long been residents of Pennsylvania. Isaac Summy, father of David, first saw the light July 5, 1776, the day after the old Liberty Bell had proclaimed the birth of our infant nation. He was born in Westmoreland county, Penn., and in 1798 was united in marriage with Mary Furney (who was also born in 1776), and nine children were born to their union, of whom three sons are yet living. The father followed the potters' trade all his life.

David Summy, the fifth son of Isaac and Mary (Furney) Summy, was born June 6, 1808, in Westmoreland county, Penn., and learned the potters' trade of his father, following that business for thirty years. In 1830 he plighted vows at the marriage altar with Nancy Hand, a native of this county, who was born in 1808. Eleven children have blessed this union, all of whom are living in their native State, the family home circle having never yet been broken by the touch of the Silent Messenger. The children are as follows: Williamson, Julia A. (wife of Isaac Wolf), Maria (Mrs. J. Galt), Elizabeth (Mrs. Devree), Mrs. Mary Young, John T. (served three years in the war, and returned home uninjured), David H. (in the service three years, having escaped any injury), Isaac, Daniel, Benjamin F. and Nancy Isabelle (Mrs. Gilmore). These children are all married, and, with but one exception, are living in Washington county. The sons are farmers, and are all engaged in that vocation in connection with the various trades which they have mastered. Some years ago the father abandoned his trade and bought a small farm in Nottingham township, this county, consisting of forty acres, which is kept in an excellent state of cultivation. He has always been a worker in the Democratic party, having cast a vote for Gen. Jackson. He has served the township as school director. Mr. Sunny and his entire family, with a few exceptions, are members of the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAMSON SUNNY, son of David and Nancy (Hand) Sunny, was born April 29, 1827, on the old place in this county, there receiving his early education. On April 16, 1850, he selected, as a life partner, Miss Sarah Swickard, also a native of this county, and they have had five children, two of whom are yet living, namely: John S., who married Melissa Spowls, of this county, and Ann Eliza, wife of William Lusk, residing in this county. Mr. Sunny has followed the carpenter's trade since 1845, also being a millwright, and owns twenty acres of land in this county. He has filled various offices in Nottingham township, and in Church relation is connected with the Methodist denomination. Two of his brothers were soldiers in the war of the Rebellion: David and John T. They enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment P. V. I., participating in the battle of Gettysburg and all other engagements under Gen. Hancock. They both remained until the close of the war, when, John's health failing, he returned home, and afterward went West, becoming a pioneer settler.

On September 28, 1892, a reunion of the eleven children, husbands and wives, was held at the old homestead, numbering twenty one. There were present thirty one grandchildren and twenty great-grandchildren, numbering seventy-two present. Of the whole connection, there are living ninety two children, grandchildren and great grandchildren.

MRS. SARAH E. GILLESPIE, a representative of one of the best and most popular families of Washington county, is a daughter of John Gillespie, whose father (also named John) emigrated with his family from Ireland at an early date, and settled in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn. The wife of this John Gillespie was formerly Mary Derrickson, and six children were born to their union, namely: William, Nathaniel, John, Mary, Sally and Elizabeth, all deceased excepting Eliza and John.

John Gillespie (father of subject) was born, in the year 1810, in Washington county, and passed his early life on the home farm in Jefferson township. In 1838 he was married to Nancy Leggett, a native of Washington county, and they settled on the old homestead, where the following children were born to them: Mary Ann (deceased), Sarah E. Wesley, and Hester (deceased).

Sarah E. Gillespie (the subject proper of our sketch) was born May 1, 1842, in Jefferson township, this county, and assisted in the household duties of the home. At the age of eighteen years she entered Pleasant Hill Seminary, which she attended fifteen months, and was then married to W. J. Gillespie, her second cousin and son of William M. K. Gillespie. Their children were James W., John, Charles O., Nannie M., Minnie O., Venie B., Winifred and Ella Nora. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie moved to his father's farm, and tenderly cared for the old gentleman until his death. Mr. Gillespie then took charge of the farm, and bought out the interest of the other heirs. In politics he was a staunch Republican, but being of a retiring disposition would accept no political office, preferring to devote his time to personal business. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Bethel. Since Mr. Gillespie's death, his widow has kept the children together, all of whom live on the old homestead. The farm consists of 281 acres of highly cultivated and fertile land, well stocked with all necessary articles.

MRS. ELIZABETH GARDNER, an estimable and respected lady of Jefferson township, is a daughter of John and grandchild of Caleb Merriman, who were natives of the State of Maryland. She was born October 8, 1831, in what is now West Virginia, and assisted her mother in the household duties of the farm in her early youth. She was united in marriage March 15, 1855, with David Gardner, who was born January 29, 1827, in the house where Mrs. Gardner is now living. It was then known as a public tavern, and was kept by David's father, who came from Maryland in 1811, and on February 10, 1820, was married to Nancy Donovan. His father then erected the tavern for the accommodation of travelers going from Pittsburgh to Steubenville, and also engaged in farming. To David and Nancy (Donovan) Gardner fourteen children were born, of whom but ten lived to maturity, namely: Eliza, John, David, James, George M., William, Rachel, Ann, Martin and Mary. Mr. Gardner died September 9, 1845.

David Gardner was born on the home farm which came into his possession after the death of his father. He lived at home during his early manhood, and after his marriage to Miss Merriman continued to reside on the home place, where the following children were born: Laura A., born December 15, 1855; George S., born September 25, 1857; Howard, born March 25, 1860; Nancy K., born March 18, 1862; Henry, born July 14, 1864; John, born September 28, 1866; David F., born January 11, 1869; Chapline B., born February 12, 1874; and Thomas P., born April 26, 1873. Mr. Gardner was an industrious man, a good neighbor and an enterprising citizen. He was a member and liberal supporter of the Disciple Church; in politics he was an ardent Democrat, and served many years as justice of the peace. He died May 15, 1878, and was buried in the cemetery at Eldersville. He gave all his children a good education, and at the time of his death owned a good farm of 184 acres.

RINGLAND. The Emerald Isle has contributed largely to the intellect, and, consequently, the social and material development, of America. Many of the brightest minds and most successful business men which the United States has produced have emigrated from, or were descendants of natives of Ireland. Among the latter will be found the name of Ringland. The following is copied from a letter written by Col. Thomas Ringland at Grandview, Ill., in 1860:

As respects the Ringland branch, there is a tradition in our family that our common ancestor came to Ireland from Hanover, in the army of King William III., in the latter part of the seventeenth century, previous to the famous battle of the Boyne, in which William was victorious. After the war our ancestor settled in the North of Ireland, and all of the name of Ringland that I ever knew sprung from that ancestor. My grandfather, whose name was George, died when my father was an infant, and my grandmother again married another Hugh Ringland, and after the death of the latter she lived with my father until her death. My father, William Ringland, had one brother and one sister, both older than himself, and both living when we left the country in 1795. My mother, Prudence (Baillie), was born of an old and respectable Scotch-Irish Presbyterian family. Both her parents were members of the Presbyterian Church, in the parish of Bellee, County Down, Ireland, and was herself a member of the Presbyterian Church for some years before her death, February 6, 1824, at her home in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., aged sixty-three years.

William Ringland and wife, formerly Prudence Baillie, parents of the above-named Thomas Ringland, with six children—George, Margaret, Mary, Thomas, William (first James and first Nancy having died in infancy in Ireland) and second James emigrated from Ireland to America, and settled in the summer of 1795 in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., on the middle fork of Ten Mile creek. After their arrival in America they had children: second Nancy, Catharine, Robert (who died an infant), Eliza and Jane, in all thirteen children. William Ringland, Sr., died September 9, 1827.

George Ringland, first son of William, had four children: Thomas, Margaret, Rebecca and Matilda. Thomas settled in Natchez, Miss., became wealthy, and died many years ago. Margaret married Harvey Bane, whose family are very much scattered. Rebecca married William McKenna, a merchant of Hillsboro, Washington Co., Penn.; had one son, George R.; lost sight of. Matilda married Cephas Bane, lived in Streator, Ill., and both died there a few years ago, leaving a considerable family.

Thomas Ringland, second son of William, married Anna McCollum in 1813; had six sons: William, John Newton, Samuel, George, Benjamin Anderson and Alexander Hamilton, and three daughters: Mary, Nancy and Anna. Of these William married Christian Baue in 1836; had four daughters: Elizabeth, Anna Eliza, Clarissa and Emily; died in 1843. Of these Elizabeth married Col. W. A. Lowe, colonel of the Seventy-ninth Illinois Regiment, who died at Newman, Ill., in 1869; had one son, George W. Lowe, who is single in Kansas, Ill. Anna Eliza died in infancy. Clarissa married Henry Chambers, of Coles county, Ill., has several children. Emily married Thomas Lawhead, and lives near Kansas, Ill.; no children living. Nancy Ringland, daughter of Thomas, died at Kansas, Ill., in February, 1884. Dr. George Ringland, son of Thomas, married Margaret Rea, of Greene county, Penn.; has had three sons and three daughters: John Thomas, William Franklin, Rea Crawford, Hannah, Mary and Margaret. Of these John Thomas died in his sixteenth year, at Kansas, Ill.; William Franklin, a Presbyterian minister, has had charge at Pana, Ill., and Hastings, Neb.; is president of Hastings (Neb.) College; in 1881 married Anna C. McCorkle, at Crawfordsville, Ind.; has three sons: Paul Franklin, George Lyle and William. Rea C. married Josephine Hampshire, of Decatur, Ill., where he now lives; has had three sons, one living. Hannah married John Skinner, at Newman, Ill., and died soon after. Mary and Margaret, single, live at home with their mother at Kansas, Ill. Dr. George Ringland died at Kansas, Ill., in 1891.

John Newton Ringland married Patty Clark; had one child, and both mother and child died; he afterward married Jane Weir, and had three sons and one daughter: E. Bernard, Adam Weir, Thomas and Annie Mary. Of these, Dr. E. B. Ringland has a water cure establishment at Hamilton, Ill., opposite Keokuk, Iowa; has been married three times; child by second wife living. Rev. Adam Weir Ringland, Presbyterian minister, has had charges at Dubuque, Iowa, Tuscola and Beulah, Ill., and Duluth, Minn.; has recently been called to the presidency of a theological school in same State; was married to Lena Patten, of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, in 1873; has young son and daughter living. Thomas married Anna Nixon, lives in Iowa and has some children. Annie Mary is unmarried, living at Hamilton, Ill., with Dr. E. B. and his mother. John Newton Ringland died in Lee county, Iowa, in 1851.

Samuel Ringland, son of Thomas, died unmarried at Dudley, Ill., November 8, 1874. Benjamin Anderson Ringland, son of Thomas, is living at Oakland, Ill.; married Mary Smith, of Grandview, Ill., has four sons and four daughters. Alexander Hamilton Ringland, son of Thomas, is living in Chicago, Ill., married to Ellen Wallace; have three children living: Allie, Ralph and Bertha. Anna Ringland, daughter of Thomas, married Stephen Post, of Washington county, Penn.; had two sons, one living, Hamilton B. Post, married to Miss Lindley, and they have two sons. Mary Ringland, daughter of Thomas, married Jacob Braden in 1838; she died in 1846; had one son, James, and three daughters: Elizabeth Ann, Martha and Isabel. Of these, Elizabeth Ann died in infancy. Martha married a Mr. Bergen, and had two sons and one daughter, her husband having died, she married J. B. Weir, of Washington county, Penn., in 1886, and they live in Washington, Penn. Isabel married James S. Hewitt, of Dudley, Ill., has two sons and one daughter. Jacob Braden died at Dudley, Ill., February 4, 1893, aged eighty-one years.

Col. Thomas Ringland, son of William, came to America with his father and family in 1795, and settled in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., where he continued to reside until 1857, when he moved to Grandview, Edgar Co., Ill. During the war of 1812 the Colonel volunteered his services as a private soldier, and was afterward promoted to major for gallant conduct, and received an honorable discharge. By a life of uprightness the Colonel so endeared himself to the people of his adopted county, that in 1825 he was nominated and elected to a seat in the House of Representatives, and again in 1826 and 1827; and such was the fidelity and ability with which he discharged the duties of the office, that in 1828 he was elected to the Senate from the District then composed of the counties of Washington and Greene, and was re-elected and served with the entire approbation of the people until 1834. As an evidence of the high appreciation of his worth and integrity, his brother senators elected him to the honorable and responsible position of Speaker of that body, the duties of which he discharged with a courtesy and impartiality unsurpassed. In politics Col. Ringland was all his life an earnest, unswerving Democrat. He sustained the pure patriot, gallant soldier and eminent statesman, Gen. Jackson, throughout his eventful administration. During the struggle of that great and good man with the Bank of the United States, while others faltered and many yielded to the seductive influences of that corporation, Col. Ringland stood firm. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church for some years before his death, which occurred January 7, 1869, at Grandview, Ill., when he was aged eighty-six years.

William Ringland, third son of William, in 1826 married Mary Bane, of north fork of Ten-Mile creek, Washington county, Penn. Had four children: two sons—Isaac B. and Henry W.—and two daughters—Harriet and Mary V. All moved to Marshall county, Iowa, about 1856. Of these children, Isaac B. married, in 1857, Mary A. Evans, of Marshall county, Iowa; had two sons and three daughters: William, Harvey, Emma, Mary Eva and Margaret. Of these William died in infancy. Harvey is at school in Minnesota, studying pharmacy. Emma married H. F. Willson, in 1878, lives in Wayne, Neb.; have had two children, one living, Homer. Mary Eva married C. E. Smith in 1881; live in Correctionville, Iowa; no children. Margaret married R. E. K. Mellor in 1883; live in Wayne, Neb.; have four children—William, Mabel, Mary and Zoë. Henry W., second son of William and Mary (Bane), died unmarried in Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1867, aged thirty-five years; buried in cemetery at Boone, Iowa. Harriet L., first daughter of William and Mary (Bane), married Samuel Munnell in 1860; had five children; four died in infancy, one living; Mary R. Munnell, who is attending school in Chicago, Ill. Harriet L. died in 1871, aged forty-one years. Mary V., second daughter of William and Mary (Bane), in 1859 married D. M. Moninger, a successful farmer and stock raiser of Marshall county, Iowa, where they now reside; had four sons and one daughter: William R., John H., Frank B., Harry W., and Anna M.; of these, William, in 1887, married Mary H. Kellogg, of Grinnell, Iowa; have one daughter, Margaret; live in Marshall county, Iowa. John H. and Frank B. were drowned in the Iowa river near their home, in 1887. Anna M., a handsome little girl, died at the home of her grandfather, John Moninger, in Washington county, Penn., in 1870, aged three years. Harry W. lives at home with his parents, unmarried.

Maj. James Ringland, fourth son of William, was born in County Down, Ireland, in June, 1791, came to this country with the family in the summer of 1795; June 26, 1828, married Sarah, daughter of James Stockdale, who also emigrated from Ireland about the same time. On being duly elected and returned, he was commissioned major of the "First Battalion of the Washington and Greene Vanguards" (a regiment of volunteers of the militia of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania), by the Governor on August 3, following, for the term of seven years. Major Ringland joined the Lower Ten Mile Presbyterian Church about 1830, of which he was a faithful member until his death, which occurred May 12, 1874, when he was aged eighty years. Sarah Ringland, wife of Major James, was born near Zoliarville, Washington Co., Penn., in 1796; joined the Presbyterian Church at Amity in 1830, and died October 31, 1878.

William Ringland, son of James, left Washington county in September, 1862, located in Marshall county, Iowa, for a number of years. Then settled in Boone, Iowa, about 1866, where he now lives; owns a warehouse and lumber yard in Boone; was married to Miss Della M. Swaine June 9, 1870; have had eight children: one died in infancy; James, Edmund Allen, Guy Jay, Josiah Allen, Cady Stockdale, Annie Mary and Elsie Sarah, who are all at home with parents. George S. Ringland, son of James, went west in the fall of 1855; spent about one year in southern Iowa; then settled in Fort Dodge, Webster Co., Iowa, where he remained until the commencement of the Civil war. In 1862 he assisted in organizing a volunteer cavalry company, which joined the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry Regiment under Col. Harlin, in which he served for three years in eastern Virginia and North Carolina, during which service he was promoted to the captaincy of his company. After the close of the war, in 1865, he returned to Fort Dodge; about 1868 was married to Miss Anna A., daughter of Woolsey Wells, of Fort Dodge, for many years an attorney there; has one child, Jennie, now taking a course in Wellesley (Mass.) College. Captain Ringland is now engaged in the manufacture of plaster of paris and in banking. Mathew B., son of James, unmarried, remained at the old home all his life; died November 23, 1881. Elizabeth J., only daughter of James, married H. H. Conger, in November, 1863; now lives adjoining her birthplace; has three children: George R. (who married Miss Emma Casy in September, 1890), H. Hershel and Omar D. Of these Dr. George R. Conger is now located at Taylorstown, Washington Co., Penn., in the practice of medicine. H. Hershel and Omar D. live at home with their parents. Josiah, youngest child of James, now owns and lives on the farm which his grandfather, William Ringland, bought of William Clutter, August 25, 1795, the same summer they came to America. Has Edwin and Eva Young living in the house with him; though unmarried, still has hope that Cupid may yet come his way, and tarry with him through his remaining years.

Margaret Ringland, first daughter of William, married William Ferguson, and had one son, Henry, who married Nancy Young, and had a large family; moved to Clark county, Ind. Nancy Ringland, second daughter of William, married Moses Braddock, and removed to Hancock county, Ind., near Greenfield. Catherine Ringland, third daughter of William, married James Andrew; moved to Morrow county, Ohio, where James Andrew died; the widow and children returned to Pennsylvania; they had seven children: George, Hindman, Thomas R., Eliza Ann, Prudence, Mary and Sarah. Of these, George Andrew died before he became of age. Hindman married Ann Minton in 1855, and had eight children: James E., Lee H., M. W., Bell (who died when a child), Inez P., Florence, Annie M. and Osee B. Hindman Andrew died February 19, 1884, near Lindley's Mills, Washington Co., Penn. Thomas Andrew went West about 1855, and married there; now lives in Spring Hill, Iowa; has three sons and two daughters living. Eliza Ann married Ira Andrew, and has one son and two daughters living. Eliza Ann Andrew died the day her brother Hindman lay a corpse. Mary and Sarah went West about 1857. Mary married Mr. Bataw, in Illinois; now live with a daughter in Indianapolis, Ind.; have two daughters living. Sarah died unmarried. Jane Ringland, fourth daughter of William, married John Bane about 1830; had seven children: George, Mary, Thomas, Margaret, Addison, Ann and Nancy. Of these, George married twice and had a large family; names of wives and children not known. Thomas married Susan Collins, of Charleston, Ill.; no children. Mary married Mr. Enlow, who died leaving two small children, son and daughter; she still lives, a widow, at Stockton, Coles Co., Ill. Margaret married Mr. Nuby; had some family; she died some years ago. Anna married John McKinley; she is a widow with four children, two boys and two girls. Nancy married Mr. Ball. Addison married; name of wife unknown. Mary Ringland, fifth daughter of William; unmarried; lived with her brother James; died May 25, 1829. Elizabeth Ringland, sixth daughter of William; unmarried; quite handsome; died February 6, 1825, aged twenty-four years.

WILLIAM WHERRY. Among the public-spirited and successful citizens of Somerset township, the gentleman whose name opens this biography takes a prominent position. He was born July 2, 1815, and is a son of John, and grandson of James and Sarah (McConel) Wherry. The grandparents were natives of Chester county, Penn., and after their marriage settled on 100 acres of land in Washington county, where a family of eleven children were reared. The grandfather died in March, 1807, on the home farm, and was followed to the grave by his widow in the same year.

John Wherry, the second child of James Wherry, was born in 1776, on the farm in Washington county, and attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood. He followed farming and stock raising, and in early life was wedded to Elizabeth Welch, who bore him the following named children: William, Mary, James, John, Eli, Stephen, Ellen, Elizabeth and Margaret. Of this family, William and Mary are the only living members. The father was a Whig, and, in religion, he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. He died in 1831, being followed by his widow in 1866, in her eightieth year.

William Wherry passed his early years on the home farm, where his grandparents had also passed the greater part of their lives. He has always lived on the place of his birth, and having never married, his maiden sister Mary has managed the household affairs, and been a companion to him since the death of their mother. Mr. Wherry owns 300 acres of land, all in one farm, which is highly cultivated. Last year he shipped 10,000 pounds of wool, in which product he deals extensively. He is a Republican.

MRS. NANCY GILLESPIE, a cultured and highly-esteemed lady of Jefferson township, this county, was born October 3, 1815, near West Middletown, Hopewell township, Washington county. She is a daughter of Abraham Leggett, whose father, Sutton Leggett, was born in Maryland, and in early life was united in marriage with Hannah Green, a native of the same State, who bore him the following named children: Benjamin, John, Sutton, Jesse, Elijah, Ellen, Mrs. Pervard, Abraham and Nathan. In 1794 the family moved to Pennsylvania, locating in Washington county, near West Middletown.

Abraham Leggett was born in 1787, in Maryland, and was about seven years of age when his father moved to Pennsylvania. He was reared to agricultural life, and educated in the schools of the period. When a young man he married Miss Nancy Dempster, and six children were born to their union: Emmel, Sutton, Jesse, Nancy, Ellen, and an infant, unnamed.

Nancy Leggett was born on the home farm near West Middletown, Penn., and grew to womanhood, assisting in the household duties and attending school in the neighborhood. In 1838 she became the wife of John Gillespie, and a few years later happy voices called her "mother," little feet pattered through the house, for her home was brightened with four little ones, called by the following names: Wesley A., Sarah Ellen, Mary Ann and Hester Ann. The two last named have been laid to rest, and on May 19, 1885, the husband and father passed away, leaving his widow to the comfort of her two remaining children. Mr.

and Mrs. Gillespie started in life together with little of this world's goods, but industry and patience have accomplished much. A beautiful home, surrounded by 200 acres of fertile land, gives ample evidence of the prosperity of the family. Mr. Gillespie was a staunch member of the Republican party. Mrs. Gillespie is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Independence, this county.

JOSEPH HENDERSON, a worthy representative of one of the oldest families of Washington county, and one of its best known and most highly respected citizens, was born June 3, 1817, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of William Henderson, a native of eastern Pennsylvania.

William Henderson married a Miss Patterson, and had children as follows: Samuel, born January 29, 1784; John, born November 18, 1785; William, born January 10, 1788; Martha, born June 30, 1789; Hugh, born April 2, 1791; Thomas, born March 22, 1793; James, born December 18, 1794; Nancy, born in March, 1798, and Elizabeth, born August 28, 1801. The mother of this family dying, Mr. Henderson married, for his second wife, Mrs. Elay (Seffrey) Kain, widow of Jacob Kain, by whom she had children as follows: Jacob, born in October, 1797; Agnes, born August 13, 1799; John, born May 31, 1801; Sarah, born August 4, 1803, and Mary, born June 22, 1805. To the marriage of William Henderson with Mrs. Elay Kain, there came a family of five children, viz.: Matthew, born June 26, 1810; Ealy, born May 31, 1812; David F., born November 9, 1814; Joseph, born June 3, 1817, and Jennie, born January 15, 1822. In July, 1812, the father was called from earth, and was interred in the cemetery at North Church, Buffalo township. In politics he was an active Whig, and in religion a member of the Seceder Church. From the time of his coming to Washington county he was a resident of Chartiers township, where he successfully carried on farming and coopering. Mrs. Elay Henderson died in 1865.

JOSEPH HENDERSON, whose name opens this sketch, passed his early life in his native township, where he received his education. On October 12, 1811, he was united in marriage with Rebecca, daughter of James Laird, by whom he had one son, James L., a sketch of whom follows. This wife dying May 12, 1853, Mr. Henderson married in May, 1859, Anna B., daughter of James Stewart, of Chartiers township. Our subject is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Washington, and since 1871 has been an elder and office-holder in the church at Cross Roads. He is now living retired in Washington.

JAMES L. HENDERSON, son of Joseph and Rebecca (Laird) Henderson, is a native of Washington county, born in Chartiers township, March 6, 1844. His boyhood was passed on the home place until he was seventeen years old, when he enlisted in August, 1861, in Company B, First Virginia Cavalry, serving with distinction under Gen. Shields and Sheridan. When the regiment was mustered out he returned home, and entered Duff's Business College, from which he was graduated with high honors. On December 15, 1866, he was married to S. Jennie, daughter of John and Sarah (Harsha) Shaw, and the children born to this union are: Joseph B., Sarah R., Frank T., James L., and Earnest G. Mr. Henderson is extensively engaged in stock dealing and raising, and is one of the best known importers of sheep and cattle in his section; he owns one of the finest herds of cattle ever introduced into the county, one which he has collected regardless of labor and expense. In his political predilections he has always supported the Republican party, but close application to business has prevented his accepting political preferments. He has taken an active interest in educational matters, both in Chartiers and Canton townships, and is now serving his fourth term as school director. Mr. Henderson and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Washington.

JOHN GOURLEY, a retired agriculturist, having his residence in the borough of Claysville, comes of stalwart Scotch-Irish ancestry, noted for their indomitable perseverance, sound judgment and characteristic probity. His grandfather, Robert Gourley, a native of the Emerald Isle, at an early day came to the United States, where he married, and reared a family consisting of the following named children: Thomas, James, Robert, Mary (Mrs. James Jones), Nancy (Mrs. Thomas Dunn) and Mrs. Dunlap.

Of these, Robert was born near Greensburg, Penn., in 1800, where and in Donegal township, this county, his boyhood was passed. He lived on a farm in the latter township, which property came to be known as the "Gourley homestead." Here he was married to Margaret Roney, who bore him the following named nine children: Alexander, Susanna and Robert (all deceased), Ann Eliza, John, Thomas, Sarah J. (wife of Rev. N. E. Laferty), Catherine (Mrs. James Feather) and James. The father successfully carried on farming operations in Donegal township until 1859, in which year he moved to Warren county, Ill., where he died, July 29, 1882, and the mother in February, 1884. They were members of the Presbyterian Church, and in his political predilections Mr. Gourley was a wide-awake Democrat.

John Gourley, the subject proper of this biographical sketch, was born January 17, 1834, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and there received his education as well as early lessons in farm work. At the age of eighteen years he went to Warren county, Ill., where he followed farming until 1862, and then removed to Donegal township, this county, and has here since resided. He lived on his farm until 1865, when he removed with his family to Claysville, where he has since resided, and where he owns one of the most handsome residences of the village. On March 13, 1860, he was married to Mary J., daughter of John Marshall, a member of one of the oldest families in Buffalo township, and the children by this union were Adele (wife of George M. Gray) and Mary (now deceased). The family are members and strong supporters of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, and are much respected and esteemed. Politically Mr. Gourley was a Democrat till 1880, since when he has voted the Prohibition ticket, and he is recognized as a progressive, honorable and loyal citizen.

THOMAS MILLER, a retired agriculturist and one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens of Canonsburg, was born October 15, 1815, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county. Andrew Miller, his father, came from Ireland to America in 1812, bringing his wife, his parents (Thomas and Sarah Miller), and their children—Andrew, Thomas, Sarah, Margaret and Mary. These children all settled in Mt. Pleasant township, where many of their descendants are now living. Andrew Miller was married, in Ireland, to Sarah Steele, a sister of Rev. James Steele, who for many years was a Presbyterian minister at Strabane, Ireland, where his son, Frederic Steele, attorney at law, now lives. After his arrival in Mt. Pleasant township Andrew Miller commenced farming, an occupation he continued many years, and then, some forty years ago, moved to Chartiers township, where he died in 1853, at the age of seventy years. After his death, his widow lived with her daughter in Mt. Pleasant township, dying there in 1856 at a very advanced age. Andrew Miller was a prominent Democrat in his day, and held various offices of trust in his township and county, such as director of the poor. He was a member of the old Associate Church. Of their marriage four children were born, viz.: James (who was an attorney in Wooster, Ohio, and died in 1844), Thomas (our subject), Andrew (who died in Allegheny county, Penn.), and Jane (widow of Andrew Russell, residing in Chartiers township, with her daughter Mrs. Homer Wilson).

Thomas Miller received the rudiments of his education in an old log school-house on Chartiers creek, and his first day's attendance was indelibly fixed on his memory by his being an eye-witness to the singular freak of a snake climbing up the wall of the house. He had a thorough, practical training in all the departments of agriculture, which was his life vocation, and in 1875 retired from active labor. On May 17, 1843, Mr. Miller married Annie, daughter of David Reed, of Cecil township, Washington county, and the following named children were born of their union: Andrew S. (who served in the Union army in the defense of his country, and is now an attorney in Pittsburgh), David R. (a United Presbyterian minister in East Palestine, Ohio), J. Martin and John C. (both on the farm in Chartiers township), Almira (wife of Rev. W. T. McConnell, of Des Moines, Iowa), and Sarah Jane (Mrs. W. H. S. Ritchie, of West Point, Ky.). Mrs. Miller died in March, 1858, and November 20, 1860, our subject married Elizabeth, daughter of James Linn, who was born in South Strabane township, this county. No children were born to this union. In 1875 Mr. Miller built the elegant house in Canonsburg, into which he and his faithful wife moved the same year, and in which they now live, calmly awaiting the summons that shall call them from earth. They are lifelong members of the U. P. Church, in which he has been an elder for about forty-five years. Politically Mr. Miller was originally a Democrat, but left the ranks of that party on the slavery issue, and united with the old Whig party; he first voted for Martin Van Buren, then for William Henry Harrison. He was a delegate from Canonsburg at the first National Convention of the Republican party, held in Pittsburgh in 1856. In 1884, with a sense of duty to his fellow-men and to his God, he enlisted under the Prohibition banner. Although earnest and most conscientious in his political associations Mr. Miller has, nevertheless, consistently refused office. At the first Republican county convention he declined to become the nominee of his party for the State Legislature. He was a delegate to the Congressional Convention that nominated Hon. T. M. T. McKenman to fill the vacancy in Congress through the death of Hon. Joseph Lawrence, in 1842. Mr. Miller's old farm in Chartiers township, comprising 250 acres of highly improved land, is now owned and worked by his sons, J. Martin and John C. Miller.

J. MARTIN MILLER, son of Thomas Miller, was born November 27, 1848, on the farm above mentioned. He grew to manhood under the parental roof, and was educated in the schools of Chartiers township, then taking the freshman and sophomore years at Washington and Jefferson College. In 1875 he was united in marriage with Mary B. Stewart, a native of St. Clairsville, Belmont Co., Ohio, and daughter of John Stewart, who was born in Pennsylvania, and when a young man moved to Belmont county, Ohio. In 1832 he was married to Ann Bell, a native of the same county, and they settled on a farm in Ohio, where their children were born and reared. He was ruling elder for sixty years in the U. P. Church at St. Clairsville, Ohio. He died in February 1892, aged eighty-seven years, and the faithful wife was laid to rest beside him three weeks later, having passed through eighty years of life. The Stewart family are of Scotch origin, and trace their ancestry to Robert Bruce, of historic fame. They first settled in Pennsylvania, afterward moving to Ohio.

After his marriage to Mary B. Stewart, Mr. Miller bought the old homestead, consisting of 150 acres of land. He has since carried on general farming, including the raising of Holstein cattle and Delaine Merino sheep. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have had six children, viz.: Anna Bell, born November 7, 1875, died at the age of eight years; Stewart, born July 3, 1877; Lena Alice, born August 16, 1879; Karl Martin, born September 6, 1882; Edna Bruce, born December 11, 1886, and Mary Bell, born June 29, 1892. J. Martin Miller is a Republican, and in religious connection he and his wife are members of the Chartiers U. P. Church, Rev. W. B. Smiley, pastor, of which he was elected ruling elder in 1886.

JAMES T. PATTERSON, a leading citizen of Burgettstown, was born April 9, 1851, a son of John Patterson. His grandfather, James Patterson, was born in County Down, Ireland, receiving his early education in his native land. At the age of fourteen years he came with his parents to Washington county, Penn., and settled in Canton township, on the farm now owned by John McClay, erecting their cabin home in the wild new country. At the age of twenty-six years, James Patterson was married to Mary Miller, a native of Chartiers township, and after their marriage the young couple settled on the farm in Hopewell township, now owned by Lemon Patterson (a grandson). Politically, James Patterson was first a Federalist, then a Whig, and next an active worker with the Abolitionists. He was among the earliest members of the Seceder Church at North Buffalo, his parents being also members of that denomination. He was a member of and elder in the church for fifty years, holding that office at the time of the coalition of the Seceder and Union Churches. He was successful in business matters, having made his own way in the world. He died in 1868, in his ninety-second year, and was buried by the side of his wife in North Buffalo Cemetery. They were the parents of the following children: Alexander, Thomas, Margaret (Mrs. Samuel Leper), Elizabeth (wife of James Richmond), Jane (married to James Armstrong), James, David, Mary (Mrs. Taggart), John and Martha.

John Patterson, son of James and Mary (Miller) Patterson, was born on the home farm in Hopewell township, this county, receiving his training in a school which was held in the upper story of a log spring house. He was married in February, 1850, to Jane, daughter of Thomas McClellan, and they continued to reside on the old place until his death. John Patterson was a Whig and an Abolitionist, afterward becoming a Republican, being an active politician, and much interested in school matters, having served as director for years. He was formerly a member of the Seceder Church, and afterward united with the U. P. Church at North Buffalo, contributing liberally to the support of that denomination. Mrs. Patterson is yet living, making her home with her son Lemon. The remains of Mr. Patterson were interred in the cemetery at North Buffalo.

James T. Patterson received a common-school education in Hopewell township, and afterward attended Pleasant Hill Academy. He then studied medicine, but other matters taking his attention his medical course was never completed. On September 28, 1876, he was united in marriage with Jennie E. Witherspoon, daughter of John Witherspoon of Smith township, and the following children have blessed their union: Lenora, Lizzie Myrtle, Jennie Estelle, James Witherspoon and Emma Margaret (twins, deceased at the age of five months). After his marriage James T. Patterson settled on a farm in Hopewell township, remaining there six years. He opened an insurance office in Burgettstown, where he conducts fire and life insurance, and also deals in real estate. He and his family are members of the United Presbyterian Church, in which he has been a ruling elder for thirteen years. In politics he is a leading member of the Republican party, having filled several township and borough offices, and is actively interested in all political questions. He was appointed notary public by Gov. Beaver, holding that office four years, and reappointed by Gov. Robert E. Pattison in 1893.

JOHAN PRESLEY PROUDFIT, an energetic young farmer of Smith township, is a great-grandson of David Proudfit, a native of Scotland, who came to America and located in York county, Penn., where his son, John, was born January 28, 1775. In 1802 John Proudfit came to Washington county, Penn., locating in Hanover township. On April 9, 1809, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Lyle, a native of Cross Creek (then Hopewell) township, born March 24, 1793, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hays) Lyle. Some time after their marriage John and Elizabeth (Lyle) Proudfit returned to York county, Penn., as the father of John was growing old and feeble and needed the care of his children. The young people remained on the home farm until the death of the father, which occurred in 1826, and then John and his family again moved to Washington county, settling one mile west of Burgettstown, where he passed the remainder of his life. The trips across the mountains were full of dangers and accompanied with many inconveniences. On one occasion Mr. and Mrs. Proudfit rode 300 miles on horseback to visit relatives in York county, Penn., the wife carrying a young baby in her arms, and many hardships were endured on the journey. The following children were born to these pioneers: David (deceased September 19, 1813), born August 13, 1810; John L. (deceased), born September 3, 1812; James K. (deceased February 25, 1816), born April 21, 1815; Eliza J. (Mrs. Arthur Campbell, of Smith township), born January 2, 1817; Agnes (deceased August 15, 1824), born June 17, 1819; Robert F., born December 23, 1821; Cinderella (wife of Jacob Proudfit, resides in Ashland county, Ohio), born September 16, 1824; William, born May 10, 1828; Andrew, born March 20, 1831; and Eleanor (Mrs. Thomas Shipley, of Hanover township), born August 29, 1833.

Robert F. Proudfit was born in York county, Penn., coming with his parents to Washington county, when about four years of age. The family located one mile and a half west of Burgettstown, where Robert F. grew to manhood, working on the farm and receiving such education as could then be secured in the country schools. On January 15, 1819, he was married to Sarah E. Porter, who was born August 9, 1823, in the eastern part of the county, near Monongahela City. She was a daughter of William Porter, who kept a hotel along the National pike, two miles from Monongahela City. Two children were born to this union, namely: Margaret E. (Mrs. W. J. McNary, of Smith township), and John P. (subject of our sketch). Mr. and Mrs. Proudfit lived near Bayington, Smith township, for several years after their marriage. His father died in 1849 and he then moved upon the home place. When a lad of fifteen years, Mr. Proudfit received an injury from which he never fully recovered, and during his later years spent much time in travel, hoping to improve, physically. In 1870 he took a trip to Europe, and the benefit received from the journey, though encouraging, was but temporary. In 1876 he visited the western States, and the trip seemed to impart new strength, but, as before, the improvement was not permanent, and August 13, 1887, he passed away. He was an energetic and industrious man, leaving considerable property, and in politics was a lifelong Democrat. He was formerly connected with the Presbyterian Church, but not long before his death joined the U. P. Church. His widow has continued to reside on the home farm, which is owned by her only son, with whom she makes her home.

John P. Proudfit was born May 5, 1858, on the home farm near Burgettstown where he has always resided. He received a common-school education, and on September 3, 1879, was married to Carrie I. Russell, who was born April 25, 1858, daughter of Alexander Russell, a native of Chariters township, who settled in Muskingum county, Ohio. To John P. and Carrie I. Proudfit four children have been born, namely: Ethel S., born August 20, 1880; Alexander R., born May 3, 1883; Annie M., born February 24, 1886; and Robert F., born March 15, 1888. Mr. Proudfit has had charge of the home farm since coming of age, and is a successful and progressive agriculturist. In politics he has always been a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown.

MATTHEW WELCH (deceased) was one of the most prominent and highly esteemed citizens of Smith township. He was a son of John Welch, who was born in 1782, in County Down, Ireland, and when ten years of age came with some older brothers to America. They located in Lancaster county, Penn., where he was reared to manhood, and married to Jane McClelland, a native of that county. After marriage this couple came to Washington county, locating in the eastern part of Smith township; afterward moved to Harrison county, Ohio, where their children were born, as follows: Mary (married to Abraham Barger, of Harrison county, Ohio), Elizabeth (Mrs. Samuel Osburn, of Harrison county, Ohio), Ann (deceased wife of Matthew Slemens, of Harrison county, Ohio), Samuel (living in Washington county, Iowa), John (a resident of Unionport, Jefferson Co., Ohio), Matthew (subject of our sketch), Jane (deceased wife of John McCullough), David (a resident of Harrison county, Ohio), James and William (both in Harrison county). Mr. Welch possessed characteristic spirit of energy and enterprise, and beginning life a poor boy, he became a successful business man. In politics he was first a Whig, afterward a Republican. He and his wife were earnest members of the Presbyterian Church. They both died in 1872, and are buried side by side in the Ridge Church cemetery, Archer township, Harrison Co., Ohio.

Matthew Welch was born March 27, 1825, in Archer township, Harrison Co., Ohio, and remained on the home farm during boyhood, receiving a common-school education. In early life he took a trip west, but being seized with ague, did not remain, but returned east, settling in Washington county, Penn. On December 18, 1856, he was married to Hannah M. Welch, who was born September 19, 1823, in Smith township, this county, daughter of Matthew Welch. Mr. and Mrs. Welch first made their home in this county, in Cross Creek township, then moved to Robinson township, and in 1872 came to Smith township, locating about one mile and a half south of Burgettstown, where Mr. Welch died April 23, 1890. Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Welch has continued to reside on the farm, which is well improved and adorned with an elegant residence. Mr. Welch was a Republican, and was often called upon to fill offices of honor and trust in his township. He was a member of the U. P. Church, of which his widow is also a member. Their children were John M., Lizzie B., Matthew R. (deceased in childhood) and J. Vincent, all those living being still at home, the two sons having charge of the farm, which they manage with admirable success.

ALBERT D. SCOTT, a representative business man and leading grocer of Monongahela, is of Irish ancestry. His grandfather, James Scott, was born in Ireland, where he followed farming, and came to America when about twenty-five years of age. He and his wife (who was formerly a Miss Scott, and a native of Scotland) first settled on a farm in Maryland, and in 1800 came to Pennsylvania, locating on a wild tract of land in Carroll township, Washington county. They afterward moved to Millsborough, same county, where they died, leaving the following children: John, Alexander, William, Joseph, James, Robert, Elmer, Nancy and Rebecca.

John Scott, son of James, was born in 1798, in Elkton, Md., and in 1800 was brought by his parents in a pack-saddle to Washington county, Penn. He received his early education in the schools of Washington county, then learned the shoemaker's trade. In early manhood he was married to Miss Hannah Davis, of Ohio, and children as follows were born unto them: John Davis, Mary Jane, James Alexander, Lucinda, Hannah Louisa, Nancy Ann, Albert D., Amanda, Rebecca and Cassandra. For his second wife he was married to Mary Hazelett, but she bore him no children. After his marriage Mr. Scott followed teaming from Baltimore, often using six-horse teams, and also worked at his trade, proving an enterprising man. In his political opinion he voted with the Democratic party; in religious faith he was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in 1890.

Albert D. Scott was born April 4, 1845, on the home place in Washington county, where his school days were passed. In 1867 he began business for himself with D. H. Williams in the butchering line, which he continued to follow for ten years, and in 1868 opened the grocery establishment which he has since conducted at Monongahela, having won success by untiring industry. On December 15, 1869, he married Rebecca, daughter of Upton Ammon, a resident of Monongahela, Penn., and they have five children, namely: Anna, Mary, Tracy, Judson and John.

JAMES THOMPSON (deceased) was born March 30, 1814, at Evansville, Ind. His father, John Thompson, was a native of Ireland, and was married to Ann Lazalier, of English birth. John and Ann Thompson had three sons who were left orphans at an early age, then being taken charge of by an uncle, James Thompson. He gave them an education and trade, James choosing the tanner's trade and his brothers selecting the saddler's business. James served his apprenticeship, then, deciding to follow agriculture, engaged in that calling. He was offered a position in a mercantile business, but refused it, and with some assistance from his uncle, began to farm. He was married February 29, 1848, to Mary A. Provines, who was born December 31, 1817, near Burgettstown, Penn., and received a limited education in the subscription schools, walking three miles to secure her literary advantages. She was the daughter of Charles and Sarah (McConnell) Provines, both of Irish parentage. Her maternal grandparents came to Pennsylvania during the Revolutionary period. Mr. Provines died when Mary A. was but nine years of age, and when she had attained the age of womanhood, her mother sold the home farm, removing to West Middletown, where the daughter was married. Her grandparents were Thomas and Martha McConnell.

After his marriage, James Thompson settled in Cross Creek township, near West Middletown. He then purchased the adjoining farm in Hopewell township, where he remained until his death, which occurred August 5, 1879, he leaving four children: John L., James Franklin, William W. and Dorcas A. Mr. Thompson was a successful business man, and owned two large and fertile farms. He was prominent in local affairs, but accepted no public offices, although a zealous supporter of the Republican party. He was a regular attendant of the United Presbyterian Church, serving many years as a trustee, although never formally uniting with the congregation. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Thompson continued to reside on the old homestead which nestles among the hills near West Middletown. In the year 1891 she erected a handsome house of modern design in West Middletown, where she and her daughter are now residing. Among the family records preserved by Mrs. Thompson, there is a faded and worn scrap of paper, upon which is written, in her father's hand, the following lines, given as an indication of his character, for Charles Provines was ever as ready to avow his faith in the Creator, as to name his home:

Charles Provines is my name,
Ireland is my nation;
Omega is my dwelling place,
And God is my salvation.

Two of the sons of Mrs. Thompson are married: John L. selected as a life companion Miss Adeline McNary, of Cross Creek township, and they are living on the old homestead. James Franklin is married to Lucy L. Denny, of West Middletown, and is living in Independence township. They have three children: James D., Harold and Mary. The Thompson family are identified with the United Presbyterian Church, and are descended from ancestors who were God-fearing men and women.

NOBLE FAMILY. About the year 1801 William Noble, who was a weaver, a trade he followed for many years in his native land, Ireland, set sail with his family for America, the voyage across the Atlantic occupying fourteen weeks. They landed at New York, and from there proceeded to Shippensburg, Penn., where they remained two years, and then came westward to this county, arriving about the year 1810. William Noble settled on a rented farm in Buffalo township, where he engaged in agriculture until 1822, in which year he moved to Stark county, Ohio, where he and his sons, Robert, John and James, purchased a farm near the town of Massillon, which property was entirely unimproved, but was by the industry and care of the family ere long converted into a fine fertile piece of land. Here he died in 1845. He reared a family of five children, viz.: John, James, William, Robert and Elizabeth (wife of James Johnson). Mr. Noble was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and for thirteen years was an elder of the same in Ohio; politically he was a Democrat, at all times taking an active interest in the affairs of the party.

William Noble, son of this veteran pioneer, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1793, and when eight years of age came with his parents to the United States, and to Buffalo township, this county, where during the rest of his life he successfully followed farming, also worked at his trade, that of a weaver. He was married to Rachel Spencer, whose father was a native of Florida, and the children that came to this union were Sarah (wife of George Miller), James, Robert, Eliza, Henry C., Nancy A. (wife of Daniel McPherson), Samuel A. and William. The father passed from earth in 1867, the mother following him to the grave in 1884, and both repose in the cemetery at Claysville. They were devout members and liberal supporters of the Presbyterian Church at Upper Buffalo, and he was a warm friend of education and a zealous advocate of all public enterprises tending to the promotion of good in the community. A member of the Democratic party, he was an active worker and fearless partisan.

JAMES NOBLE, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of Buffalo township, was born August 13, 1816, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of William and Rachel (Spencer) Noble. He received his education at the primitive schools of his boyhood days, and at the age of thirteen years commenced to work on the farm of Isaac Hodgens, with whom he remained some twenty-two years, his wages being for first year $6 per month, increasing year by year until he was in receipt of $20 per month. In August, 1839, Mr. Noble was married to Maria, daughter of George Mealy, and one child was born to this union, Mary, now the wife of John Brown, of Donegal township. The mother of this child dying in 1841, Mr. Noble married, August 14, 1849, Rebecca, daughter of George Ritchey, of Donegal township, and the children born to this marriage are Rachel (wife of T. B. Craig), Hester J. (wife of Franklin Bebout), Amanda, Nettie (wife of W. F. Crothers), Clara, Blanche and James. Mr. Noble has passed his entire life in Buffalo and Donegal townships, twenty-three years in the latter, having, in 1870, come to his present fine home where he has 425 acres of well-improved land. In politics he is a Democrat, and has always taken an active interest in the affairs of the party in both the townships he has been a resident of, and has held various positions of trust. He and his wife are members and prominent supporters of the United Presbyterian Church at Taylorstown.

ROBERT NOBLE, another worthy representative of this prominent family, is also a native of Washington county, born in Buffalo township, April 4, 1819, a son of William and Rachel (Spencer) Noble. He received his education in the subscription schools of the locality in which he was born, and was reared to the arduous and manifold duties of farm life. On September 2, 1842, he was married to Rachel, daughter of John McKean, and the children born to this union are: William R. (a farmer in Buffalo township), Margaret J. (Mrs. John H. Van Kirk), and John W. and Wishart S. (both farmers of Buffalo township). The mother of this family dying May 5, 1855, Mr. Noble in 1856 married Mary Graham, who was called from earth in 1887, and our subject afterward, in February, 1889, was united in wedlock with Jane, daughter of John Zink, of Brooke county, W. Va. Up to the year 1885 he carried on farming operations in Buffalo township, and then came to the borough of Claysville, where he has since lived a retired life.

The family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Claysville. In his political preferences Mr. Noble has always voted the Democratic ticket, and he has held various township offices with much credit to himself, and the perfect satisfaction of his constituents. He is the owner of 550 acres of fine farming land in Buffalo township, and has always been regarded as an enterprising and progressive man, commanding the respect of all.

[Since the above was prepared for the press, word has been received of the death of Mr. Robert Noble, February 22, 1893.—Ed.]

HENRY CLAY NOBLE, a well-known representative citizen of Buffalo township, is a native of the same, having been born November 14, 1825, a son of William and Rachel (Spencer) Noble. His education was received in the subscription schools of the neighborhood, which, however, owing to his many duties on the farm he was unable to attend with any degree of regularity. His first "book" was a common shingle, on which were chalked the letters of the alphabet, and from this our youthful hero and his classmates (who were similarly provided) had to learn their "A, B, C's." This, it may well be imagined, became the source of no small amusement to, and a great deal of ridicule from, the boys of the more advanced classes, who teased these juniors unmercifully and unceasingly, so much so that, after school was dismissed, they took their shingles to the corner of the school-house and broke them into splinters, for which they were duly punished at home. Many were the hardships the early student had to contend with; but it was such hardships that produced brain and brawn in the community from which have evolved some of the very best men in our land. On June 21, 1854, Mr. Noble was married to Rachel C., daughter of Thomas Carson, of Buffalo township, and the children born to this union were: Thomas G. (living at home) and William L. (married June 13, 1878, to Miss Bertha R., daughter of William Mitchell, of Washington county, Penn., by which union there has been born one child, Mary H.; Mr. Noble died March 19, 1885). Henry Clay Noble has passed his entire life in Buffalo township, with the exception of ten years before his marriage and ten years after, during which period he was a resident of Donegal township. He is a typical self-made man, and is justly proud of his success, which he secured by hard work, judicious economy and enterprise. His farm of 208 acres is finely situated and well improved. He is an attendant and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, and in his political preferences is an active Democrat; he has frequently been urged to accept office, and has at various times been elected a justice of the peace, but has invariably either refused to accept or declined to serve. Physically, Mr. Noble is a large, strong man, well-preserved for his years, with the promise of a long life before him.

SAMUEL A. NOBLE, the next youngest son of William and Rachel (Spencer) Noble, was born October 14, 1827, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., where he was carefully reared to the arduous duties of farm life, attending in the winter months the schools of the neighborhood. Being a diligent student and an apt scholar, Mr. Noble soon fitted himself for the position of teacher, which he filled with marked ability during several winters, in his township. He remained on the home farm until his marriage, and then took up his residence on Dutch fork of Buffalo creek, in the same township, where he followed agricultural pursuits. For a couple of years his family lived in West Alexander, during which time he continued farm work, and in 1873 he moved to what was known as the "George Stoolfire farm" in the same township, which he now owns and lives on; it is situated two and one-half miles north of West Alexander, and is a highly improved piece of property. On September 3, 1851, Mr. Noble was united in marriage with Catherine B. Shaler, who was born August 31, 1831, in Donegal township, this county, a daughter of William Shaler, of that township, and the following children have come to bless their union: Clara (who was twice married, first time to W. O. Ralston, and after his decease to Joseph Wetzel, of Granville, Licking Co., Ohio), Luther and Flora (both deceased when young), and Harry (living with his parents, and working on his father's farm). Mr. Noble is now one of the largest landowners in this township, the result of hard work, good management and sound financiering. His farm is kept in excellent order, neat and trim, and well-merited success has repaid his labors, and he is extensively engaged in the wool business, keeping over one thousand sheep. He is a prominent member of the Democratic party, and he and his wife are substantial members of the Dutch Fork Disciple Church.

WILLIAM R. NOBLE, one of the most popular and best known farmers and stock raisers of Buffalo township, was born July 2, 1844, on the old homestead (originally the Carson farm) in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Robert and Rachel (McKean) Noble. His education was secured at the common schools of his district, which he has supplemented with much reading and general observation, and to-day he is one of the best informed men in his section. At the age of twenty-two he married Rachel, daughter of George Miller, of Donegal township, by which union there is one child, Laura B., now a highly accomplished young lady, attending the academy at Washington, this county. This wife dying December 16, 1872, Mr. Noble married, August 31, 1876, Miss Emma, daughter of David Clark, of Buffalo township.

After his first marriage Mr. Noble settled on the farm where the family now reside, and which he has greatly improved, having added many new commodious buildings, thereby making it one of the finest country seats in Buffalo township. It is situated near the western boundary line of the township, and comprises 175 acres of the choicest land. Here Mr. Noble's chief occupation consists in overseeing the work on the farm, and the raising and selling of live stock, in which he does a large business. He is an extensive breeder of Spanish sheep and Shorthorn cattle. Politically, Mr. Noble is a Democrat, and a leading adviser in his party. Mrs. Noble is a very highly esteemed lady, well-known and generally admired for her sterling qualities.

JOHN W. NOBLE, the next youngest son of Robert and Rachel (McKean) Noble, was born July 26, 1850, in Buffalo township, this county, on the old farm that has been in the possession of the family ever since it was patented. He was educated in the common schools of his district, and early in life evinced an aptitude for business, which, judiciously applied, has brought him well-merited success. On November 14, 1877, he was united in marriage with Miss Anna M. Jamison, of Donegal township, and two children have been born to them — Robert Andrew and Lester Floyd. Mr. Noble and his family attend the services of the United Presbyterian Church at Taylorstown, toward the support of which he gives liberally of his means. He is a staunch member of the Democratic party, always taking an active part in its councils. He is a leading man in his section, enjoying the respect and esteem of all as an honest, upright, loyal citizen.

WISHART STEVENSON NOBLE, youngest son of Robert and Rachel (McKean) Noble, was born July 20, 1854, in Buffalo township, this county, on the old home farm. His boyhood was passed in attending the common schools in winter time, and in assisting in the work of the farm during the summer months. Until the age of twenty-two he remained at the parental home, and then, having married, moved to his present farm in the same township, where he has since been engaged in general farming and stock raising (with the exception of one year he was engaged in the hardware business, in Finleyville, this county), and in all his enterprises he has been eminently successful. On August 17, 1876, Mr. Noble was married to Flora Bebout, who bore him children as follows: Jennie Bell, born March 25, 1878; Daztmease Burnell, born September 6, 1880; Susie B., born June 24, 1888, and Edna, born June 9, 1891, all yet living. Mrs. Noble and other members of the family are members of the Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Noble is a Democrat, and has filled with much credit several offices of trust in his township.

Samuel A. Noble

JOHN S. NOBLE is a grandson of William Noble, who was born in Woodside, Scotland, and there received a superior education. In the year 1805, William Noble immigrated to America, abandoning a large estate to seek a fortune in the New World. After arriving in the United States, he finally settled in Lancaster county, Penn., on a tract of land. He married Elizabeth Howe, and had a family. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and in that contest gave his life for his adopted country.

William C., a son of William and Elizabeth (Howe) Noble, was born in America, May 2, 1789, and in early manhood was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott, an early settler of Washington county. The following children were born to them: John S., born November 22, 1833; Elizabeth, born March 30, 1836; William H., born July 19, 1837; and James S. (deceased), born March 11, 1839. The father died April 20, 1859.

John S. Noble (the subject of this sketch) was born on the old homestead in Buffalo township, and received a good education in the common schools. When the Civil war broke out, he enlisted in Company B, First West Virginia Cavalry, Capt. Forbes commanding. He was taken sick while in the service, and lost his health. Mr. Noble has been a Republican in his political preferences. A sister now makes her home with him. She is a devout Christian lady, and has been a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Claysville, this county, since she was twenty-two years of age.

MRS. MARTHA MEHAFFEY, widow of Mitchell Mehaffey, was born June 20, 1818, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and is a daughter of Charles McRoberts, Jr., who was also a native of Buffalo township. Charles McRoberts, Sr., his father, was born in Scotland, and there married Mary Herron, shortly after which they emigrated to America, making a settlement in Washington county, Penn., where he patented a large tract of land. At this early period of the county's history, Indians and wild animals roamed the forests where are now peaceful valleys and fertile farms. Here this sturdy Scotch pioneer set to work and cleared a portion of the land, whereon he erected a saw and grist mill, which, despite the incursions and menaces of the Redmen, he conducted for many years. He departed for the "Better Land" in 1785, leaving a widow and seven children: James, William, John, Samuel, Charles, Charlotte and Mary, all now deceased.

Of this family, Charles, the father of the subject proper of these lines, was born June 1, 1773, in Buffalo township, where he received his education in the primitive schools of the period. In early manhood he taught for several years in the schools of Taylorstown and also several terms near Claysville. At the age of about forty years he married Mary, daughter of William Donaldson, a resident of Pennsylvania, east of the mountains, and the children born to this union were twin daughters—Martha (Mrs. Mehaffey) and Elizabeth (Mrs. Grimes, mother of A. J. and W. C. Grimes, farmers in Buffalo township). The father died May 29, 1857, aged eighty-four years, and the mother on October 1, 1855, aged seventy-nine years. They were honored and respected citizens, and devout Christians, members of the North Buffalo United Presbyterian Church.

Martha McRoberts was born June 20, 1818. She passed her girlhood on her father's farm, and received her education at the subscription schools of the neighborhood. On January 21, 1839, she was united in wedlock with Mitchell Mehaffey, of Donegal township, Washington county. His parents were natives of Ireland, who had emigrated to this country and made a settlement in Washington county, Penn., in an early day, where he was born December 29, 1811. To this union were born children as follows: Ellen (Mrs. McGuffin), died August 3, 1891; Samuel, residing in Washington, Penn., and Robert, John, Charles Madison, William A., Mary J. and Martha, all yet living on the old homestead. Mr. Mehaffey departed this life April 22, 1881. He was a sincere Christian and a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church; in politics he was a prominent Democrat, and had filled with much credit many offices of trust and responsibility in his township. Mrs. Martha Mehaffey is a lady of much intelligence and refinement, and possessed of remarkable memory for one of her years. She is a devout member of the Presbyterian Church, as are the entire family; and she is now calmly awaiting with Christian resignation the summons that shall call her to the River of Life. Her sons are highly respected citizens, and thoroughly practical farmers and stock raisers.

WILBERT ENGLE is a son-in-law of Henry Moninger, who was born in Hagerstown, Md., in 1790, and coming to Washington county at the age of twenty years, finally located near the Lutheran settlement on the place now known as the "Mike Moninger" farm, which he afterward bought. Henry Moninger's education was received in the subscription schools of his day, and he was considered a well-informed man, one possessed of an unusual amount of good judgment. He was united in marriage with a Miss Hess, of Amity, this county, and the following named children blessed their union: John, born 1810; George, 1812; Mary, 1814;

Henry, 1816; Andrew J., 1818; Susanna, 1820; Jacob, 1822; Catherine 1825; Sarah, 1827; and Elizabeth, 1832; one child died in infancy. The children of his second marriage, with Miss Sarah Hughes, of Washington county, were Robert M., born in 1844, died young; James A., in 1848, and Emma C., in 1850. One child died in infancy unnamed. Mr. Moninger was engaged in buying and selling land, farming and stock droving. He was remarkably energetic and persevering, as was evinced in the fact that when seventy-five years of age he moved with his family to Brooke county, W. Va., and there purchased 600 acres of land, upon which he died in 1861. He was originally a Whig, and afterward a Republican, and though always willing to give any possible aid to his party, was no office seeker. In religious connection he was an honored member of the Disciple Church at Lone Pine.

Mrs. Emma C. (Moninger) Engle was born in Chartiers township, and remained with the family in West Virginia and Washington county, Penn. She attended school at Washington, Lone Pine and at Pleasant Hill Seminary. She prepared for the vocation of a teacher, but having met with an accident in 1868 was compelled to abandon that profession. Like her sister, Elizabeth, who was a graduate of Olome Institute, Canonsburg, Mrs. Engle was a close student and is an excellent scholar. In April, 1891, she became the wife of Wilbert Engle, a prominent young citizen of Lone Pine, Anwell township. Wilbert Engle was born in Washington county, where he has always resided. He is a son of William and Catherine Engle, and was educated in the common schools. Mrs. Engle is an eager reader of current literature, for from 1868 to 1888, during the period of her lameness, she read many of the standard works and much of all that was good in modern publications. Mr. Engle farms during the summer and mines coal during the winter. Both are devout members of the Church of Christ at Lone Pine. Mrs. Engle and her brother James are the only representatives of this large family, who have resided at home within the period covered by her memory, and both are living at Lone Pine.

WILLIAM M. PHILIPS is a son of Josiah, whose father, David, was the leading pioneer preacher of Peters township. Rev. David Philips was born in 1742, in Wales, and emigrating many years ago, first settled in Chester county, Penn., where he was married to Miss Mary Thomas. The young couple then came to Washington county and took up 100 acres of land on the boundary line of Washington and Allegheny counties, for which a patent was secured March 4, 1786. Prior to locating in Peters township David Philips had been a captain in the Revolutionary war, and in religious connection was a member of the Great Valley Baptist Church. After settling in Washington county he served forty years as pastor of the Peters Creek Baptist Church, the land upon which the church is now standing having formerly been a portion of his property. The following children were born to this couple: Mary, Benjamin, John, Joseph, Joseph 2d, Thomas, Josiah, David, David 2d, Martha and Rachel (twins), Sarah and Isaac. During the Civil war a full company of the descendants of Rev. David Philips took an active part in the contest, and nearly one thousand of his descendants are yet living.

Josiah Philips, son of David and Mary (Thomas) Philips, was born April 14, 1776, in Chester county, Penn., and in 1779 came with his parents to the old homestead near Library, Washington county. He grew to manhood on the old place, and was wedded to Sarah Bell, who bore him the following children: David, Mary, John, Joseph, Isaac, Robert, Elizabeth, Sarah, Nancy and Josiah. The mother died, and for his second wife Josiah Philips married Mary, daughter of John and Jane Boyer, and widow of Richard Blackmore. They had four children, namely: Margaret, Richard (deceased), William M. and James B.

William M. Philips, whose name introduces this biography, was born April 11, 1826, on the homestead in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. He remained on the farm during boyhood, and in early life learned the cabinetmaker's trade, following that business for the five years following 1853. On August 18, 1853, he married Miss Mary E. Riggs, of Peters township, who was born June 3, 1835. To them were born the following children: Edward B., Lloyd S., Hettie L., Anna C., Norman W., Roland J. and Harry W. The farm, which he has occupied since 1858, contains sixty-five well-cultivated acres, all improvements having been made by the present owner. He has always voted with the Republican or Prohibition party, and in religious faith is a member (with all his family) of and deacon in the Christian Church. Mrs. Mary E. Philips died July 17, 1892.

Edward Riggs was a man "ever foremost of his comrades" in all matters of social, religious, educational and political reform. A staunch advocate of Abolition in its most unpopular days, with Edward Campbell and Edward Anderson—the "Three Edwards"—comprised for many years the whole of the Abolition party in Peters township. He was one of the leading spirits in forming the Peters Creek Christian Church. He was born July 2, 1802, married Hettie Newmeyer, of Fayette county, Penn., January 1, 1826, and to them eleven children were born, of whom the late Mrs. Philips was one.

JAMES THEODORE DAY. Among the early settlers of Washington county, who helped to reclaim its fertile lands from the dense primeval forests, was Luther Day. He was descended from a hardy English family, who, in early colonial days had settled in New Jersey. Locating in Morris township about 1787, he married Mary Van Kirk, and reared a family of seven children, as follows: William V., Daniel, Priscilla, Lavina, Arvida, Maria and Artemus; of whom Daniel, Priscilla and Arvida are still living, being residents of Morris township. Luther Day devoted his whole life to farming and was successful. He died in 1874. His eldest son, William V. Day, was born July 12, 1812, and on December 5, 1834, was married to Sarah Patterson, a native of Morris township, born November 17, 1812. To them were born seven children: Alanson R., born October, 1835, married Lydia M. Cort, and at present resides in Carroll township, Washington county; James Theodore, whose sketch follows; Ahmus L., born May 2, 1840, and died February 28, 1845; Sarah L., born December 9, 1842, married Joseph Andrew, and resides in Boulder county, Colo.; Mary E., born August 1, 1845, was married September 21, 1873, to Oresta Vail, and died April 2, 1880; William Howard, born February 19, 1848, was married September 10, 1876, to Mary E. Rowley, of Texas, where they now reside; Ida P., born February 28, 1854, married October 13, 1875, to W. J. Fleniken, now deceased. The father died May 2, 1883, and the mother in 1887. Luther Day was a great reader—possessed a wonderful memory, and was a ready speaker. His height was five feet and ten inches, and his weight 170 pounds.

James Theodore Day, born March 7, 1837, was reared on his father's farm, and trained to a good practical knowledge of farm work. His early mental training was received in the neighborhood schools, from which he obtained an ordinary business education. In beginning business life, he started as a farmer, in which he has since successfully continued. He entered the Federal army August 12, 1861, as a member of the Twenty-Second Cavalry Regiment, of Pennsylvania Volunteers. He rendered gallant service until September, 1863, when he was honorably discharged on account of disability, resulting from a serious wound received in making a charge near Moorefield, W. Va. One year later he returned to his home in Washington county, and on May 24, 1866, was married to Elizabeth Horton, a daughter of Thomas Horton, of East Bethlehem township. To them five children have been born, viz.: Maria S., born July 9, 1869; Annie M., born October 19, 1871; Lizzie Bell, born June 15, 1874; Margaret Elнора, born May 2, 1880, and died January 9, 1882; Mabel Ida, born November 17, 1881. The daughters that have attained a requisite age are teaching school, and preparing themselves for a high class of educational work. Mr. Day gives his exclusive attention to the management of his excellent farm, located at the west end of Sparta, and which has in turn been owned by grandfather, father and son. In politics Mr. Day is a Republican. Both he and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Old Concord.

MRS. MARTHA STILLWAGEN is a daughter of Joseph Miller, whose father, Christopher Miller, emigrated from Germany to this country and settled on Dutch Fork creek, Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., where his son Joseph was born (supposed in 1804) and reared. Joseph Miller passed his early years on the home farm, and was afterward united in marriage with Miss Sally Cellars, of Washington county, Penn. He settled on a farm near Claysville, this county, and followed agricultural pursuits all his life. The following children were born to them: Valentine, John, Thomas, Mary, Martha, Joseph, Cellars, James, and an unnamed infant. Mr. Miller was a generous, kind-hearted man, and enjoyed a deserved popularity among his neighbors. He was a staunch member of the Whig party, but not an active politician.

Martha Miller was born April 19, 1830, and was the fifth child in the order of birth. She was reared on the home farm, and assisted with the household duties until her marriage to Charles Stillwagen (who was born January 19, 1819), which event occurred on February 11, 1850. The young couple began their married life in Donegal township, Washington county, and afterward removed to the present home of the family in West Finley township. Fifteen children have been born to them (but ten of whom are now living), viz.: George J., Andrew J., Charles, Mary E., Martha J., Annie, Vanissie, Joseph, Michael, Clarissa, Caroline, Eliza B., Thomas, John and William. Mr. Stillwagen was a staunch Democrat, and held several important offices. He was always industrious, and owned over two hundred acres of fine land at the time of his death, which occurred December 4, 1886. In religion he was a member of the Catholic Church.

ISAAC HODGENS, a progressive and popular young farmer citizen of Buffalo township, is a native of the same, born March 27, 1858, on the farm where he yet resides. He is a son of Thomas and Margaret (Wilson) Hodgens, the latter of whom was a daughter of William Wilson, late of Buffalo township.

Thomas Hodgens was a native of the same township, whither his parents had come in an early day, and here he was born June 29, 1826, and reared to the many and varied arduous duties of farm life. His winter months were to a considerable extent devoted to attending the neighboring subscription schools, and improving what he may there have learned by study at home, acquiring in course of time, by earnest application to his books, a good, useful education. While yet a young man, Mr. Hodgens was married to Margaret Wilson, who was born in Taylorstown, January 5, 1829, and the young couple then took up their residence on the farm now occupied by R. W. Crothers, from which, after a few years, they moved to the place that is at present the home of our subject and his brother. This farm was totally unimproved, and was brought to its present state of cultivation by the assiduous labor, industry and perseverance of Thomas Hodgens, the buildings thereon having been erected by him and his family. The children born to Thomas and Margaret (Wilson) Hodgens were: William and Ella (both deceased), James W., Isaac and Clara. On May 8, 1862, the father passed from earth, and was followed to the grave by the mother April 13, 1869. They were constant attendants and liberal supporters of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, and enterprising citizens, earning a reputation of which the family are justly proud. Mr. Hodgens was a staunch and loyal Democrat, and, although rarely accepting political preferment, was ever a zealous worker for the party's cause.

Isaac Hodgens received his education at the common schools of the district, and was reared in the practical lessons of farm life—lessons more valuable to him in his sphere of life than all the classic lore of Athens and Rome. On October 27, 1881, he was married to Caroline V., daughter of Abraham and Margaret (Wright) Hair, of Donegal township, and the children born to this union are Harry and William. The family attend the services of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville; in politics Mr. Hodgens is an active Democrat, and has served his township in various positions of trust and responsibility, now holding the office of school director. He is a well-known and valuable citizen, prominent in all undertakings conducive to the prosperity of the township and county.

WILLIAM A. GABBY, an enterprising citizen of Washington borough, comes of Scottish ancestry. His grandfather, James Gabby, emigrated from Scotland with two brothers, John and William, to Maryland, thence moving to Washington county in the year 1787, and locating on the farm in Franklin township which is now the home of his heirs, became one of the pioneer settlers of this county. He was united in marriage with Miss Jean Gabby, who bore him children as follows: William, Joseph, Mary, Ann, Jane, Margaret and Emma.

Washington county was then almost an unbroken wilderness, inhabited principally by fierce savages, who often wreaked their fury on the daring pioneers who presumed to invade their domain. One night they attacked the house of Mr. Gabby and burned it to the ground, the family, who had barely time to escape with their lives, saving nothing but a Bible and a rifle. James Gabby was originally a Federalist, and then a Whig. In religious faith he was a member of the Covenanter Church.

William Gabby (father of subject) was born September 14, 1803, on the home farm in Franklin township, this county, and in 1829 was married to Margaret, daughter of John and Mary McClellan. The following children were born to this union: Mary (Mrs. James G. Allison), James F., Margaret A. (Mrs. Jonathan Allison) and Jane (Mrs. Ezra Cavey) (twins), William A., Frank M. and Ellen (twins), Hugh A., Robert R., John and Joseph. After his marriage Mr. Gabby settled on the farm where his son (William A.) now resides, and remained there thirty-three years; then removed to another part of the farm, now owned by J. P. Sayers, where he died May 21, 1883. He was an ardent member of the early Republican party. In religious faith he united in youth with the U. P. Church, and formerly attended the churches both at North and South Buffalo. He was one of the organizers of that denomination at Washington borough, and served as one of the first elders in the church, filling that position until his death.

William A. Gabby was born January 8, 1840, on the old home farm in Franklin township, and there passed his early life, attending school and Washington College. He then entered the war of the Rebellion, enlisting August 28, 1861, in Company A, One Hundredth P. V. I., and was sent to South Carolina under T. W. Sherman, against Beaufort Island, and under Burnside to Kentucky and Tennessee; thence marching under Grant he took part in the siege of Knoxville. Mr. Gabby then re-enlisted December 28, 1863, for three years more, and was sent to the army of the Potomac. During the war he took part in the following engagements: Fort Wagner, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Vicksburg, evacuation of Jackson, siege of Knoxville, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Cold Harbor, Petersburg and the mine explosion which occurred there. During one battle a bullet struck Mr. Gabby's canteen, but he escaped any injury, and was one of the participants in the grand review at Washington. He was discharged from the service July 26, 1865.

On November 22, 1870, Mr. Gabby was united in marriage with Edith, daughter of Henry H. and Phcebe (Mintor) Wilson, of Washington county, Penn., and, locating on the farm which is yet his home, reared the following named children: Harry W., John, Helen, Mary and Margaret. Mr. Gabby is a leading citizen, noted for his industry and enterprise. In politics he is a Republican; in religion he has been a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Washington for many years.

WILSON and JOSEPH ARNOLD, members of the prosperous and well-known firm of Arnold Bros., stock dealers in Chartiers township, are sons of John and Elizabeth (McMillen) Arnold, and are representatives of one of the earliest and most prominent pioneer families of Washington county.

Henry Arnold, a native of Germany, immigrated to America prior to the Revolution, and settled in eastern Pennsylvania, taking an active part in the conflict. After the close of the war he was married to Sarah Taylor, and moved upon a farm in Washington county, Penn., where his life was passed. He died at the age of ninety-nine years, and was buried with the honors of war, his aged wife surviving him about two years.

John Arnold, son of the pioneer Henry Arnold, was born, in 1790, in Washington county, Penn., and received his education at the so-called subscription schools of the day, in the meantime being reared to agricultural pursuits. In 1815 he married Elizabeth McMillen, who was born September 15, 1797, in eastern Pennsylvania. She was a daughter of Robert and Sarah McMillen, who were of Scotch-Irish descent and settled in Chartiers township in 1803. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold settled on a farm in Chartiers township, where he died in 1842. He was a member of the Associate Reformed Church at Cross Roads, and in politics affiliated with the Whig party. Mrs. Arnold passed away in May, 1879, leaving a large family of children, of whom the following is a brief record: Levi, born in 1816, was married in 1837 to Miss Jane Donaldson, of Canonsburg, this county, and ten children were born to them, five of whom are yet living, namely: Mary (wife of Dr. Clark, of Pittsburgh, Penn.), John (married to a Miss Smith, of Canonsburg), Ettie, Simon and Sadie, the latter four living in Canonsburg (the father died in 1880, and his widow is yet living). Simon, born in September, 1817, was married in 1861, to Josephine McMillen, of Cambridge, Ohio (he entered the service in 1862 in the One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and was killed July 2, 1863, at the battle of Gettysburg; his wife died a few weeks before). Robert, born April 21, 1820, was married, about 1845, to Rachel Morrow, a native of this county (he was a blacksmith, also conducted a grocery in Washington and Pittsburgh; he died in this county, April 26, 1886, leaving a widow and five sons, namely: Henry H., living in Chartiers township; J. M., Robert and James S., all three married and residents of Pittsburgh; and William Simon, a widower, in Pittsburgh). Henry, born on February 22, 1822, died in 1844. Nancy Jane, born April 17, 1824, was married to Thomas Wallace, and settled in Knox county, Ohio, where two daughters were born to her: Elizabeth (Mrs. Dr. Hanna) and Jennie (wife of James L. Lindsey, living in Columbiana county, Ohio, but born in Washington county), the mother died in October, 1883. John, born March 14, 1826, was married to Mary Ann Anderson, a native of Virginia, who came to Washington county, Penn., in an early day (after his marriage John settled in Chartiers township, but in 1862 left home and enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I.; he fought in the army of the Potomac, taking part in all the engagements of that division, and after the close of the war returned home to find that his wife had passed away in 1864, while he was in the service; he was accidentally killed in 1869, in Washington; he left five children, viz.: John Logan, born October 4, 1853, died December 25, 1881; Anna (wife of William White, of Chartiers township), born in 1855; George, living in Chartiers township, born December 28, 1857; William, living in Chartiers township, born in 1859, and Elizabeth, born April 26, 1861, her home being with Arnold Bros., Chartiers). Sarah, born in March, 1828, married to William Harsha, who first settled in Ohio, then in McLean county, Ill., where he died in 1872, leaving a widow and the following children: William H. (married and living in Missouri), Maggie, Lizzie, Jennie, Hattie, Simon, Samuel Farley, Wilson, Joseph and James. Elizabeth, born February 12, 1831, wife of Samuel Farley (she died in February, 1864, leaving three children: James, living at Boston, Penn.; Samuel, married to Anna Manifodd, and Elizabeth, deceased June 14, 1890, wife of John Manifodd). Esther Ann, born January 20, 1833, wife of D. M. Stewart, of Cross Creek township. Wilson and Joseph.

WILSON ARNOLD was born July 27, 1836, on the home farm in Chartiers township, and received his education at the common schools of the neighborhood. After leaving school he began business as a farmer and stock raiser, which he and his brother Joseph have followed with signal success. The home farm consists of 240 acres of well-cultivated land, upon which they raise large numbers of sheep and cattle. Politically Mr. Arnold is an active Democrat, and he is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Houstonville.

JOSEPH ARNOLD was born March 28, 1838, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., on the home place, where he grew to manhood. On June 1, 1864, he was married to Maria Stewart, of Cross Creek township, this county, who bore him three children, namely: J. F. (living in Chartiers township), born April 6, 1866; Sadie, born November 29, 1867, drowned February 10, 1880; and Simon, born July 29, 1870. The mother of these children died December 26, 1872, and on April 29, 1875, Mr. Arnold married Miss Mary L. Black, of Canonsburg, this county, born October 2, 1847. She is a daughter of John E. Black, who was born, in 1814, in Allegheny county, Penn., and in 1840 was united in marriage with Alice Hanson, a native of Cecil township, this county, born in 1818. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Black settled in Canonsburg, this county, where he became a prominent and successful merchant. He was treasurer of Washington and Jefferson College for some time, and during his later years carried on a banking business at Canonsburg. He voted with the Republican party, and in religious faith was a member and ruling elder of the Associate Reformed Church in Canonsburg. He died in December 1868; his widow is yet living in the town.

Joseph and Mary (Black) Arnold began married life on the farm where he is yet living, which he and his brother, Wilson, had conducted for several years prior to the marriage of Joseph, doing a profitable business in sheep raising. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold have had the following children: Kate, born June 11, 1878; Joseph, born August 21, 1882, died at the age of three weeks; one deceased in infancy; James, born July 24, 1884, and Joseph J., born December 9, 1885. In politics Mr. Arnold is an active member of the Democratic party. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Houstonville.

JOHAN K. McMILLAN was born December 10, 1852, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Robert McMillan, a native of this county, whose father was a farmer by occupation. Robert was married to Elizabeth Bennett, and nine children were born to them, of whom the following is a brief record: Leander is deceased; Harvey lives in Pittsburgh; Mary is the wife of Jacob Gibson, of Fallowfield township; Amanda is the deceased wife of Smith Carson, who also lives in Fallowfield; Anna Louisa died in infancy; Cynthia, Robert, Jr., and Jennie H. reside at home; John K. is the subject of this memoir. The mother died in 1867.

John K. McMillan was reared on his father's farm, and received his elementary education in the common schools of his native township, which was supplemented with a course at the Southwestern State Normal School, California, Penn., and at Duff's Business College, Pittsburgh, class of 1877-78. He then came to Washington, and for a time carried on an insurance business. In 1881 he purchased first the half and later the entire interest in his present drug store in the borough. Mr. McMillan is a registered pharmacist (1887), and his store is equipped with everything essential to a first-class prescription establishment and general drug business. In 1879 our subject was united in marriage with Miss Kate E. Jones, daughter of William McK. Jones, a farmer of the county, of Somerset township, now of Monongahela City. Three children have blessed this union, viz.: Bessie Ula, Ariel Vivene and John Adrian, all at home. The family are members of the M. E. Church. Mr. McMillan is a member of the F. & A. M.; in politics he is a Democrat.

JOHAN MEHAFFEY, the largest landholder in Donegal township, and one of the most extensive in Washington county, is descended from a vigorous Scotch-Irish race, noted for their honesty, industry, energy and loyalty.

Robert Mehaffey, a native of Ireland, born in 1772 in County Tyrone, set sail about the year 1800 for the Western Hemisphere, landing at New York after a lengthy voyage. From "Gotham" he proceeded to Lancaster county, Penn., where for some time he rented and worked a farm. Here in 1801 he married Eleanor Mitchell, who bore him the following named eight children: James, Joseph, Robert, Mitchell, Jane, John, Ellen and Lizzie, all of whom lived to an adult age except Lizzie, who died in infancy, and two are yet living, viz.: Jane (wife of Patrick Rodgers, of Donegal township) and John. About the year 1816 Robert Mehaffey moved from Lancaster to this county, where he leased the McDowell farm in Buffalo township, along the National pike, and here remained some years, after which he came to Donegal township, settling on a farm about four miles northwest of Claysville. Here he followed agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his busy life, dying July 22, 1824, aged fifty-two years; his widow continued to live on this farm (it being operated by her sons) until her death, which occurred September 9, 1846, when she was sixty-six years old.

John Mehaffey is a native of the county, as has already been intimated, having been born January 11, 1821, in Donegal township, his education, which owing to circumstances was very limited, being obtained at the public schools of his locality. He was but three years old when his father died, so, his widowed mother requiring all the assistance on the farm she could muster, he began very early in life to work about the place, "doing chores," etc. But it was a sound, practical training that proved of invaluable service to him in after life—an education that brought him wealth that no classic lore of ancient Rome or Athens could ever help him to, as a tiller of the soil. Farming has been his life-work from boyhood, and fortune has smiled upon his labors. By good management, sound judgment, indefatigable perseverance and wonderful sagacity he has accumulated possessions, until he is now the owner of over 1,000 acres of prime farm land, on which he has many tenants, and whereon browse his sheep, numbering in the hundreds, for Mr. Mehaffey, in addition to general farming, is extensively engaged in wool growing. He himself now does little or no real active farm work, as the management of his vast estate, together with his other business affairs, occupies about all his time.

On March 31, 1859, Mr. Mehaffey was married to Sarah Jane Barr, who was born in Buffalo township, this county, March 6, 1834, a daughter of Robert Barr; she died September 4, 1864, leaving one child, Eleanor, an accomplished and refined young lady, still living with her father. His second wife, whom he wedded November 22, 1866, was Elizabeth Sawhill, also a native of Buffalo township, born November 29, 1830, who bore him one son, William J., a promising young man. Mr. Mehaffey, after his marriage with Miss Barr, lived in various parts of his native township up to 1870, in which year he located on his present piece of well-improved land lying four miles northwest of Claysville, and here he has since made his home. His residence, which he erected himself, stands on an elevated part of the grounds, and commands a fine view of the surrounding country. Prior to his first marriage he had followed farming on the old homestead, the place of his birth.

Mr. and Mrs. Mehaffey are consistent members of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, and they are known and respected, far and wide, for their philanthropy and many charitable acts. In his political associations our subject was first a Whig, and since the organization of the party has been an equally zealous Republican. He believes in protection for American industries and workmen. Much of his attention has been devoted to the wool industry, which he believes to be dependent upon a protective tariff. Mr. Mehaffey is a man of pronounced views, genial and quiet and pleasant in his manner; and though now somewhat advanced in years, he is still hale and active. He and his family enjoy the respect and esteem of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

WO. STEVENSON. The first ancestor of this gentleman, of whom we have authentic record, was Richard Stevenson, of Berkeley county, Va. (now W. Va.), where he was born and reared.

Richard Stevenson was married in early manhood to Mrs. Onora Crawford (widow of Hugh Crawford, an old Indian trader, by whom she had two sons, William and Valentine). William Crawford was colonel of the Fifth Virginia Regulars, commissioned in 1781. The circumstances of his death, which occurred June 11, 1782, in Sandusky, Ohio, are recorded in nearly every U. S. history. He was burned at the stake by Indians (who had captured him) for the evident purpose of wreaking vengeance on their victim in return for the historic massacre at Gnadenhutzen, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, many Indians having been there slaughtered by the whites. At the time of his capture Col. Crawford was conducting a campaign against the Wyandotts and Moravian tribes. To the union of Richard and Onora (Crawford) Stevenson children were born as follows: John, Hugh, Richard, James, Marcus and one daughter. Mrs. Stevenson possessed great physical strength, and was a kind and affectionate mother; she died in 1776. Gen. George Washington was a frequent visitor at this home, often taking part in athletic contests with the sons. The early friendship ripened with the passing years, and when Gen. Washington rose to prominence in military life, James Stevenson was yet his dearest friend and constant companion.

James Stevenson, son of Richard, was born and reared on his father's farm in Berkeley county (W. Va.), where he was united in marriage with Rachel McKeever; their children were Moses, William, Mary, Theodosia, James and Sarah. In 1781 Mr. Stevenson concluded to take advantage of the cheap lands then open in western Pennsylvania. He was then in the prime of life, and a splendid specimen of physical manhood. In company with a negro slave named Fortune (who had been the property of George Washington, from whom Mr. Stevenson purchased him), he started on foot on a journey of exploration, leaving his family at home, not wishing them to undergo the perils of such a hazardous expedition. The two men arrived safely in Washington county, Penn., and Mr. Stevenson took up a "tomahawk claim" of 500 acres of choice land, four miles southeast of Burgetts-town, Smith township. A humble cabin was soon erected, some rude improvements made, and a crop of corn planted. The negro previously mentioned was then left to manage the place, and Mr. Stevenson then returned to West Virginia, the negro subsisting on game and roots during his absence. The entire family were located in their pioneer home, which was afterward supplanted by a larger log cabin. Mrs. Stevenson died December 14, 1789, and for his second wife Mr. Stevenson married Martha Barr, the following children being born to their union: Benjamin, Richard, Joseph, Achsah and John. The land increased in value as civilization progressed, and at the time of his death Mr. Stevenson was a wealthy man. He died in 1813, being followed by his wife in 1816.

William Stevenson, born January 24, 1771, was a son of James and Rachel (McKeevers) Stevenson, and the grandfather of W. O. Stevenson. He was married to Margaret Crawford, and they reared a family of ten children. Their father died March 1, 1851, their mother May 11, 1819. Oliver Stevenson, their son, was born in 1801 in Smith township, on his father's farm, and received his elementary education at the country schools. On January 12, 1826, he was united in marriage with Sarah Curry, who was born in 1803, daughter of Robert Curry, a cooper by trade, and a native of Scotland. He immigrated to Pennsylvania, locating in Allegheny county, near the present site of Allegheny, and was often obliged to flee to a neighboring blockhouse from the Indians. The children of Oliver and Sarah Stevenson were as follows: Margaret A., born January 15, 1827 (wife of J. B. Haines, a prominent wholesale merchant of Pittsburgh, Penn.); Isabel M., born June 5, 1829 (died at the age of twenty-one years); W. O., born May 5, 1832; R. T. C., born August 15, 1839, a citizen of Burgettstown, Penn.; Sarah Juliet, born August 15, 1843 (died in youth); and Oliver M., born December 5, 1848, died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson first settled on a farm in Smith township, and afterward moved to the farm where the remainder of their lives was passed. At the time of his death Oliver Stevenson was quite an extensive landowner. In politics he was much interested in the success of the Democratic party, with which he was connected. He died in 1854, his widow on June 18, 1885, aged eighty-three years.

W. O. Stevenson was born on the home farm in Smith township, where he is now living. On March 2, 1869, he was married to Ophelia Ann Walker, who was born September 21, 1847, in Jefferson township, this county, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Jerome) Walker. They have had three children, namely: Sarah L. (deceased in infancy), Maggie B. (at home), and Nellie Ophelia. Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson have always lived on the home farm, which consists of 160 acres of valuable land, lying four miles south of Burgettstown. He has successfully followed agricultural pursuits; in politics he is a lifelong Democrat.

JOHAN B. WEIR. In the galaxy of names of the influential citizens of Washington borough, that of John B. Weir ranks with the first. He is a descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestors, to which two races many of the most intelligent and enterprising citizens are proud to trace their lineage. In the latter part of the eighteenth century three brothers first landed on American soil, whose descendants are numbered among the leading families of the Eastern States: Adam, William and Samuel Weir (with his wife) crossed the ocean together, and soon after their arrival in the United States settled near the head of Chartiers creek. The families of Adam and William in after years pushed farther westward, their descendants being scattered throughout Iowa and the neighboring States.

Samuel Weir, the grandfather of John B., made a permanent settlement on a farm in Washington county, Penn., where he followed agricultural pursuits and distilling, the latter industry being then a common occupation; and not many years ago one could count, from a neighboring hill on his pioneer farm, the smoke from fifteen distilleries, all in operation. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Weir were the parents of the following children: Joseph, Adam, Thomas, Polly (married to Thomas Axtell, of this county, and leaving descendants in Solsberry, Ind.), Jane (deceased wife of John Buck, a stage driver on the National road, who settled in Ohio, where her descendants are living), Rachel (deceased), Sarah (widow of Charles Rettig, in Amwell township) and Mrs. Deaver (of Hillsborough, this county). Samuel Weir was a Democrat in politics. He died many years ago, and his widow afterward married George Ringland. She died in the year 1847, at an advanced age.

Joseph Weir, a son of Samuel, was born in Franklin township, on the farm now owned by Stephen Post. He was married to Jemima Squires, a native of Morris township. (The Squireses were among the pioneer settlers of Franklin township, now scattered, some of the members having moved to Ohio). The young couple settled on the farm in Franklin township which is still in the possession of their descendants. Their children were as follows: Samuel C. (died at the age of sixty-one years, leaving two sons, who are residents of this county), William L. (died at the age of thirty-three), Elizabeth (Mrs. Post), Jane, George and Joseph (all three died in infancy) and John B. (subject of this sketch). The mother of these children died in 1842, at the age of forty-two years, and in 1844 Mr. Weir married Mrs. Phoebe Hanna, of Carrollton, Ohio, to whom two children were born, namely: Morris (living near Washington) and Margaret (wife of John M. Day, of Franklin township). Mr. Weir was an active member of the Democratic party. He served one term as director of the poor, and filled various township offices. He was school director for many years, also supervisor, and was twice elected justice of the peace. He was familiarly known as "Uncle Joe" among his friends, being a genial and popular man. He followed farming, but devoted his attention to raising sheep, being so fond of these animals that he would neither kill one nor eat its flesh. He shipped the wool one year to Lowell, Mass., and received the highest price paid for fleeces in the entire county. Joseph Weir was a regular attendant and supporter of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He was a man of strong convictions, one who never swerved from any duty which lay before him, and a perfect specimen of physical manhood. Though far advanced in years, his death was an unexpected blow to all. He was salting the sheep one morning, and, failing to return to the house, was found dead in the pasture. The medical authorities gave a verdict of heart failure, but his son John is of the opinion that the old gentleman, being crippled by sciatica, tripped in the deep grass over the salt pile, and could not regain his breath. Joseph Weir died in 1867, at the age of seventy-one years, being followed by his widow in 1881.

John B. Weir was born in 1837, in Franklin (then Morris) township, and received his early education in the common schools. He attended Waynesburg College, and finally graduated at Duff's Business College, at Pittsburgh. He afterward taught a term of school, later going to Van-Buren, where he sold goods for his uncle (Adam Weir), and in the summer of 1865 began business for himself. In this he continued three years, then finding his health failing, retired to a farm in Morris township, this county, where he remained fifteen years. In 1864 he married Miss Julia Bane, granddaughter of Benjamin Lindley, a pioneer settler of Washington county. To them four children were born: Mary J. (wife of W. E. Baldwin, of Franklin township), Ida M. (studying for a professional nurse, at the Homoeopathic Hospital, Pittsburgh, Penn.), Chester and Annie (living with their parents). The mother died in January, 1886, and in 1887 Mr. Weir married Mrs. Mattie Borgan, daughter of Jacob Braden, of Edgar county, Ill., and widow of Langdon Borgan, by whom she had two children: James (a telegraph operator at Terre Haute, Ind.) and Mollie (wife of Rev. W. F. Schrontz, of New York). No children have been born to Mr. Weir's last marriage. Fifteen years after settling on the farm in Morris township, the house of John B. Weir was burned. He then sold the farm, and moved to his present home in Washington borough, where he is living a retired life. His early years were actively employed, as a general farmer, giving attention to the breeding of heavy draft horses, having been the first to introduce the registered heavy draft horse brought into Washington county in the year 1879. In politics he is a Democrat. The position of road commissioner in Morris township was filled by him for nine years, and he served as a constable and assessor several years. His business career has been most successful, and during the period of active life he settled many estates, and collected the county school and road taxes. He has been a member of the Church for twenty-five years, and is now a member of the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington. Mr. Weir is one of the most honored citizens of Washington.

WILLIAM ARMSTRONG, one of the oldest native-born, prosperous agriculturists of the county, is a grandson of the veteran pioneer, James Armstrong.

James Armstrong came from eastern Pennsylvania, the locality of his birth, to Washington county, Penn., several years prior to the close of the last century. He served as a soldier in the Revolution. Some time before coming here he had married Margaret Martin, and they with some of their children made the trip westward over the mountains, experiencing in their long and hazardous journey not a few hardships. They settled in Donegal township about one and one-half miles south of West Alexander, and erected a log cabin and set to work to make a clearing in the then unbroken forest, converting it into what is now a fertile and beautiful farm. Here they toiled from year to year, surrounded by the innumerable dangers incident to pioneer days, until finally called to their long home, the grandmother dying in 1838, the grandfather in 1849. The children born to them were as follows: Hugh (of whom special mention will presently be made), Mary (who died at the age of seventy-five years), John (who died in Darke county, Ohio, where he was an early settler), James and Joseph (both of whom died in Donegal township), David (who was a miller and farmer, at Triadelphia, W. Va., and who died at the age of seventy-three years), Margaret (married to Robert Stewart, and now deceased), Martin (a farmer of West Finley township, now deceased), Samuel (who died in Donegal township, leaving several children), and William (who died in childhood).

Hugh Armstrong was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and came with his parents to Washington county as above stated. He learned blacksmithing, a trade he followed for some time, and then began farming, which he carried on during the rest of his life. In 1816 he was married to Jane McCoy, a native of Finley township (since divided into East and West Finley townships), and to this union were born children as follows: Margaret, William, James (who moved to Missouri and there died), Isabella (Mrs. John M. Oldham, now living in Jefferson City, Mo.), John (who died in West Union, Marshall Co., W. Va.), Thomas, Martin and Jane (all three deceased when aged thirteen, four and three years, respectively), and David (who was a farmer in West Finley township, and died in February, 1892). The mother of this family dying in 1847, Mr. Armstrong married, for his second wife, Elizabeth McCoy, who died in 1850, without issue. After his first marriage Mr. Armstrong made a settlement in the northwest corner of West Finley township, near the West Virginia line, where he carried on farming. He was called from earth in 1854, having lived a life of honest industry which brought him well-merited success. He was an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and, in politics, was first a Whig, afterward a Republican, and served for many years as a justice of the peace.

William Armstrong, whose name appears at the opening of this sketch, was born December 9, 1819, in what is now West Finley township, Washington Co., Penn., where he was reared to agricultural pursuits on his father's farm, his education being received at the subscription schools of the locality. In 1851 he was married to Mary M. Oldham, who was born in 1828, in Ohio county, W. Va., a daughter of Samuel and Rebecca (Wylie) Oldham, of that county, and to this union the following named children were born: Jennie (now wife of John C. Hamilton, of Donegal township), a son that died in infancy (unnamed), Lina (Mrs. W. F. Whitam), Milton B. (a farmer in Donegal township), Lizzie B. and William W. (both at home), Frank E. (who graduated from Washington and Jefferson College, and afterward attended the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, and the Union Seminary at New York; he is now a Presbyterian minister at Evanston, Wyo.), Celestine (a school teacher, living at home), Samuel O. (a farmer in West Finley township) and Irene M. (a college graduate, now teaching school, her home being with her parents). Mr. Armstrong in his younger days taught school, and after his marriage commenced agricultural pursuits on the old home farm in West Finley township, remaining there until 1866, in which year he came to Donegal township, settling on his present farm, situated about one and one-half miles south of West Alexander, and on which he has erected a neat and commodious residence. He and his wife are devout members of the Presbyterian Church at West Alexander; in his political preferences he is a lifelong Republican, and has served his township as school director for several years. The family are highly respected in the community, and are all well-to-do, Mr. Armstrong himself having made his life-work an eminent success.

THOMAS H. BRUCE, an enterprising citizen of Buffalo township is a son of Henry, and grandson of George Bruce, who was born in Scone, Perthshire, Scotland, and never left the country of his birth. George Bruce followed the vocation of a weaver, and during the latter part of his life had charge of the Forestry in his native beath. His wife was formerly Helen Norwell, who bore him the following children, all of whom are now deceased: Robert, Agnes, Janet, Lillie, David, Margaret and Henry. Of these children, Robert and Henry immigrated to America. Robert located in Pittsburgh, Penn., and subsequently became president of the Western University of Pennsylvania. His descendants are now living in Pittsburgh.

Henry Bruce was born in 1788, in the parish of Scone, Scotland, and there grew to manhood, receiving a common-school education, and learning the weaver's trade. He (as previously stated) afterward sailed to America, and first landed in New York, but immediately pushed westward, making a permanent location near Taylorstown, Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn. He was then married to Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Brownlee, and to them were born children as follows: Henry (deceased in youth), Lizzie and Helen (both of whom grew to womanhood, but are now deceased), and Thomas H. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Bruce located on the farm now owned by his son, which is situated in Buffalo township, on the National pike, cultivated the land and also conducted a store. On his arrival in Washington county, Henry Bruce had scarcely any capital, and his later success was due wholly to his own efforts. He was an active and consistent member of the U. P. Church, to which he gave a liberal support. In political life he was a follower of the Free-Soil party while it existed, and afterward became a Republican. He departed this life in 1862, his remains being interred in Washington cemetery. His widow followed him in 1887.

JOHAN R. LEONARD, one of the best known and most prominent citizens of the borough of Washington, is a native of the county, having been born in Morris township, December 7, 1821. He is of Teutonic descent, his great-grandfather, John Leonard, having come from Germany to America many years ago. John Leonard, grandfather of John R., was born in Ohio, where he married Nancy Huffman, of Washington county, Penn., and one of their sons, John, became the father of John R. Leonard, the subject of this sketch. Grandfather Leonard died in Ohio.

John Leonard, son of John and Nancy (Huffman) Leonard, was born in Washington county, Penn., where he was reared and educated. He settled in Morris township, and here married Rebecca, a daughter of John Robertson, of same township, and ten children were born to them, as follows: Jesse, killed at Chattanooga, Tenn., during the war of the Rebellion; John R.; Ann, deceased wife of Jackson DeLong; Abigail, married to Jesse DeLong, and died in Ohio; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Conrad Maloy; Emeline, who died at the age of four years; Benjamin F. and James W., both in Noble county, Ohio; Sarah, wife of Aaron Delong, in Portage county, Ohio; and Margaret, widow of James E. Ray, of Greene county, Penn. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Leonard remained in Morris township a year or two, and then moved to Ohio, where they died, the mother in 1871, at the age of seventy-three years, and the father in 1872, aged seventy-seven years; he had been a soldier in the war of 1812.

John R. Leonard, whose name opens this memoir, was but an infant when his parents moved to Ohio, where, in Warren and Trumbull counties he learned the trade of a carpenter, at which he worked some forty-six years. On July 5, 1845, he returned to Washington county, Penn., and settled on a farm in Morris township, which he operated, at the same time carrying on his trade. He built many of the best houses in that and East Finley townships, besides some in Greene county, on the boundary line. On January 22, 1846, Mr. Leonard married Miss Matilda, daughter of Stacy Farabee, of Morris township, and two children were born to them, both of whom died in childhood, the one at the age of five years, and the other at the age of six months. Mrs. Leonard was called from earth June 3, 1891, and March 16, 1892, Mr. Leonard was united in wedlock with Mrs. Henrietta Farabee, widow of Benjamin Farabee (deceased in November, 1884), by whom she had three children, as follows: Laura Belle, who was twice married, first to Simeon Clarke, and after his death to William Chambers; John Franklin and Homer. Mrs. Leonard was born in Allegany county, Md., a daughter of Aaron and Rachel (Coleman) Hixenbaugh. She is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church.

On September 22, 1869, Mr. Leonard came to Washington borough, taking up his residence in the house where he is yet living, and which he had built. Here he continued at his trade until his final retirement, doing a great deal of contract work, besides building some eight houses for himself in various parts of the borough. In 1847 he joined the M. E. Church, Mt. Zion, but a few years ago he identified himself with the Methodist Protestant Church, of which he is now trustee, class-leader, assistant superintendent of Sunday-school, and a teacher of the Bible class. At the time of his joining Mt. Zion Church, there were forty-five members, and when he visited it last winter he found he was the only one living of those forty-five. Politically he is a lifelong Democrat. Mr. Leonard is a typical self-made man, having risen by sheer industry, perseverance and economy, from comparative poverty to a condition of enviable affluence, and is highly respected in the community in which he lives, now enjoying the income of his hard-earned competence.

WILLIAM ALLISON CONKLIN. The history of the development of any new country affords interesting illustrations of zeal and rigid determination, so essential to the successful prosecution of a difficult undertaking.

Of this Captain John Conklin, one of the old pioneers of Washington county, presents a striking example, and his numerous descendants of the present day possess the same characteristics in no small degree. Capt. John Conklin was born in Morris county, N. J., September 30, 1763. In 1784 he married Elizabeth Mills, a native of the same county, who was born March 29, 1766. In November, 1790, with his wife and three daughters, he started for Washington county. It is hard to realize the difficulties of that journey by wagon. The route was a very hilly one, the grading steep, rendering it necessary to make frequent stops in ascending a hill, in order that the team might rest. These rests necessitated the services of "a blocker" to follow the wagon, and place a block behind a wheel when a stop was made. This duty devolved upon Mrs. Conklin. In many instances, to render this assistance she left the youngest child at the foot of the hill, and the wagon having reached the summit, she would return and carry the child. Arriving at the glades in the mountains, they were compelled to stop three or four months on account of Mrs. Conklin's illness. Then, renewing their journey, with their four children, on horseback, and leaving all behind except what clothing they could carry on two horses, they arrived in Washington county in May or June, 1791. Capt. Conklin purchased 440 acres of land, near Sparta, on the south fork of the north branch of Ten-Mile creek, the present property of W. A. Conklin. Here he devoted his energy to the improvement of the place, which was made to yield a good income. Capt. Conklin died July 12, 1824, having given to the country a family of twelve children—eight daughters and four sons—all of whom married, forming twelve families of eighty-four children; sixty-six of the grandchildren married, all but about seven having families, some very large ones.

The eldest son, John, grew up, always having close friends. He married, in 1820, Jane Andrew, a quiet, kind and loving wife and mother. Two years after he moved west to a quarter section of land, given to him by his mother, on the west bank of Little Darby creek, now opposite West Jefferson, Madison Co., Ohio. Here he lived until his death, October 26, 1873. He reared a family, and lived to see four out of seven children married well. John was a great hunter, and was soon known for hundreds of miles around by that class of people through the wilderness of central Ohio. All strangers or friends were so cordially welcomed by him that they soon were his loving friends. As soon as his visitors rested, John would order his best team and rig, suitable for the occasion, and rations for each, and off they would go, until all parties were satisfied.

Two years after her husband's death, Mrs. Conklin married Caleb Lindley. Mr. Lindley lived about ten years, and the widow returned to the old homestead, and lived with her son William, hardly knowing what sickness was, until she died suddenly August 16, 1852.

William Conklin, born July 4, 1810, was the youngest of this family of twelve children. He remained with his father until the latter's death. Then, being fourteen years of age, he was bound to John Griffith to learn the shoemaker's trade. Having served his term, he worked as a journeyman shoemaker at different places in Ohio, until 1835, when he returned and settled on his farm in Washington county, where he dwelt until his death, June 25, 1880 (he died within a few feet of the log cabin where he was born), in a brick mansion, built in 1862. He was a farmer. As a justice of the peace, for ten years he filled the office with credit to himself and satisfaction to the people. On March 2, 1838, he married Catherine, born May 16, 1818, a daughter of Jacob and Abigail Ross, of Greene county. Jacob was one of the prominent drovers of the time and section. Jacob Ross' parents, John and Elizabeth Ross, were the first owners of the tract of land on Ruff's creek, near Jefferson, Greene county. John died in 1813, and was buried on the farm, there being no graveyard. He owned slaves, and frequently had serious trouble with the Indians. Jacob Ross, her father, donated the land for the first graveyard, and lot for the first church (Baptist) that was built in that section of the country. It still stands, enclosed with the old stone wall. Timothy and Rachel Ross settled on a tract four miles west. (John and Timothy were no relation, but of the same name). On this farm the Indians found a man and his two sons clearing a lot for corn. They shot and scalped two of them, one son escaping to the fort. This was the last murder by the Indians in that section. Timothy Ross died on one of his farms, near Shinstown, Monongalia Co., W. Va., aged eighty five years. Mr. Ross was one of the first Campbellites in this part of the country. He often rode his big sorrel horse, "Mose," to Bethany, Brooke Co., W. Va., to hear Elder Alexander Campbell preach. Elizabeth Ross died at the home of her son William, in Ohio, in 1834, aged almost one hundred years. Jacob Ross died in 1856. Abigail Ross, Catharine's mother, died July 2, 1881. With remarkable eyesight and strength, she was out overseeing her farms in Richhill township, Greene Co., up to a few days before her death.

To William and Catharine Conklin nine children were born: Phebe Jane, born December 2, 1838, married, April 2, 1868, to Cephas Meek (he died on his farm on Ruff's creek in Greene Co., leaving a widow and one son); William Allison is the subject proper of this sketch; Benjamin Franklin, born September 12, 1841, taught school for several terms, read medicine, attended Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and the following winter graduated from the Western Reserve Medical College, Cleveland (he settled in Fayette City, Penn., and in 1871 married Millie J. Kelley, of Salem, Ohio. He was the father of one child, now the wife of Guy W. Boudinot, of Cleveland, Ohio. He practiced medicine until his death, January 18, 1873. He was one of the most prominent and successful physicians in the Monongahela Valley). Thomas H. Benton, born May 25, 1844, died June 1, 1845; Cinderella, born March 27, 1847, married Noah D. Sowers, February 17, 1881, and resides in Vermilion county, Ill.; Gleason P., born March 29, 1849, married, January 1, 1879, to Victorine Wilson, daughter of James Wilson, of Franklin township (they reside near West Union, Greene Co., and are the parents of six children); one who died in infancy; Ophelia Belle, born February 6, 1853, married, in 1875, to Ross McClain (they reside in Greene county. She is the mother of seven children, all living); Catharine Ivagenia, born July 4, 1856, married March 7, 1888, to George E. Mann (they reside in Vermilion county, Ill. She is the mother of one child, Chloe); Ross M., born August 4, 1861, received a common-school education, attended college a number of terms, and graduated at Duff's Commercial College, Pittsburgh (he went to McPherson, Kans., in 1884, where he taught school four years, and married Madeline Burwell, of McPherson, May 28, 1888. Shortly after they moved to Oregon, where he has been principal of the Roseburg College ever since, and in which his wife is an instructor).

William Allison Conklin, born March 28, 1840, received a common-school education, and taught a number of terms. He attended a commercial college, and then chose a farmer's life. He has always been a hard worker, and is possessed of more than ordinary intellect and culture. A genial disposition, which is only found in those who are temperate, characterizes him. He never uses strong drinks or tobacco; never has been known to swear an oath under the most trying circumstances; has always been kind to the poor, true to his word and firm for his rights. His widowed mother, kind, gentle and affectionate, lives with him on the old place, which has been handed down from father to son for three generations. He has been a member of the M. E. Church for over twenty years, and has served as superintendent of Sunday-school, steward and trustee. He is a Democrat, who seeks not office, but is always found working for the man best fitted for the office. No one rejoiced more heartily than he did over the results of the elections of November 8, 1892.

WILLIAM W. JACKMAN, one of the oldest citizens of East Pike Run township, is a native of the same, having been born December 10, 1814. He is a son of William Jackman, whose father was Robert Jackman, a native of Ireland.

Robert Jackman came, when a young man, to America with three brothers, and located in Washington county. In March, 1784, he obtained from the Pennsylvania land office a warrant for the land now the sites of the towns of California and Coal Centre, on the waters of Pike run. These tracts were surveyed and enrolled in Patent Book No. 15, page 255. The tract on the east side of the creek was called "Allybar," and that on the west side, "Ararat." Robert married Sarah Whittiker, and afterward Ann Dixon. Of his nine children, two were born to the first wife and seven to the last wife. They are named as follows: Robert (born May 16, 1772), Henry (born August 7, 1774, married Sarah Sphar), Ruth (born May 7, 1779, married William Gregg), Sarah (born May 15, 1781, married Joseph Nealan), Samuel (born February 8, 1784), William (born January 4, 1786, married Nancy Steele), Dixon (born April 5, 1789, married Elizabeth Phillips), John (born January 5, 1792, married Miss Stockdale), James A. (born September 1, 1794). Many members of this family finally settled in Indiana, Illinois and Iowa. The father died in Washington county, and was buried in the cemetery at California.

William Jackman was married to a daughter of William Steele, and she bore him one son, William. For his second wife Mr. Jackman selected Ann Wilkins, a native of Washington county, and they had two children: Ann (wife of William Reeder) and William W. The father followed farming all his life until drowned in the Monongahela river.

William W. Jackman received a limited education in the subscription schools of the home neighborhood, then at the juvenile age of twelve years began life for himself. He worked at various occupations, and at the age of eighteen took a boatload of coal down the river to Maysville, Ky.; continued in that business for several years, also acting as pilot for boats to Louisville, Ky. In 1839 he was married to Ruth, daughter of William Morgan, one child having been born to their union, Louisa, wife of Alexander Carlisle. The mother died a short time after the birth of this daughter. For his second wife William W. Jackman married Eliza Jane, daughter of William Miller, a resident of Greene county. To this union nine children were born as follows: Leroy, Dora, Arabella, Lena (deceased wife of Charles Minehart), Albert, William E., Calvin, Sanford and Louis S. Of these, Leroy, William E. and Louis S. are living. After laying out the town of California, and before the lots were sold, William W. Jackman joined the advance army of "Argonauts" from "the States" in "'49" for the Sacramento Valley, Cal., for which the Pennsylvania town was named. In 1849 Mr. Jackman, in company with Job Johnson, Abram Fry, George Hornbaek, Samuel Ashmade and John Woods, purchased 311 acres in East Pike Run township, laid out the town of California, and divided the upland tract among themselves, the share of Mr. Jackman being fifty acres. He has been a Whig and Abolitionist in politics, and is deeply interested in educational progress, having been a prime mover in the Southwestern State Normal School at California, to which he has contributed largely.

SAMUEL GEORGE is descended from an early pioneer family of Hibernian ancestry. Robert and Christiana George were natives of Ireland, where they were married, and soon afterward immigrated to America. In 1772 they settled on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where he died many years ago. His widow survived him twenty years, making her home with her son John George, of Washington county, Penn.

David George was born on the home place in Mt. Pleasant township. In early life he was married to Nancy Scott, who bore him children as follows: Betsey (deceased), Christy (deceased), Margaret (wife of John Roney), Nancy (deceased in 1888, wife of William Connor), Robert and Mary (twins), the former living in Allegheny, Penn., and Samuel (of whom a sketch follows). Mr. and Mrs. George were members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in Chartiers township for many years. He died February 7, 1856, and his wife in 1857.

Samuel George was born September 19, 1828, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, receiving his education in the district schools of the neighborhood. On December 24, 1866, he was united in marriage with Christiana, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, daughter of John and Jane (Slater) George, who were of Irish descent, and natives of Allegheny county, Penn., moving to Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, in an early day. Her father died in Beaver Falls some years ago; her mother is yet living in Beaver Falls.

Samuel and Christiana George settled on the farm where they now reside, containing 190 acres of excellent land. Their children are Jennie Slater, Annette Mary, John D., Harrison, Lizzie, Emma, Maggie M. and Willie L. In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. George are members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church.

JAMES M. CHANEY, a prosperous and well-known farmer, is a native of Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and a son of James Chaney, whose father Abraham was born in Maryland, and married in his native State. The last named came to Washington county in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and located in Donegal township, where his family was reared.

James Chaney was born on his father's farm in 1806, and passed his boyhood in the usual farm duties, receiving a very meager education. He began life at an early age, and had many hardships to contend with. He made rails for George Wilson, of West Alexander, receiving for his work 25 cents per hundred, which he was expected to spend at the store of his employer. He could get a yard of muslin for 25 cents, or was obliged to make 300 rails to buy goods enough for one shirt. On March 25, 1831, Mr. Chaney was married to Susanna McMillan, who was born in 1805, daughter of John McMillan. They had the following family: Thornton, born December 20, 1831 (deceased August 1, 1880); Mary, born August 9, 1833; George W., born November 15, 1835 (living in West Alexander, Penn.); James M., born November 6, 1837; Sarah, born October 12, 1839 (deceased in 1879); John, born January 18, 1842 (deceased in youth); and Barnet B., born March 1, 1844 (a farmer of Donegal township). For some time after his marriage Mr. Chaney resided on a farm about two miles south of West Alexander, Donegal township. He afterward moved to Coon Island, same township, where he resided several years, and in 1853 purchased and moved to a farm about two miles north of West Alexander, where he lived and worked on the farm until his death. Mr. Chaney's success in life was wholly due to his own efforts. In politics he was formerly a Whig, and afterward a Republican. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at West Alexander. He died in February, 1879, having been preceded by his wife in 1874.

James M. Chaney was born in Coon Island, this county, and passed his early years on the home farm, receiving a common-school education. On October 13, 1862, he enlisted in Company H, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and served till the close of the war. He took part in the engagements at White Sulphur Springs, Va., Beverly, W. Va., Droop Mountain, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, and numerous other minor conflicts. On June 5, 1865, he was honorably discharged, and coming home worked on his father's farm.

On February 6, 1868, he was united in marriage with Pamela, daughter of Andrew and Pamela (Gilfillan) Alexander, also of Donegal township, and seven children were born to them: Fannie (wife of John Gibson, a wholesale grocer of Wheeling, W. Va.), Jennie (wife of Prof. John M. Oliver), Andrew M., James, Susanna, John H. and Maggie Grace, all living at home. After his marriage Mr. Chaney first located a quarter of a mile east of West Alexander. In 1874 he purchased the "Joseph Alexander" farm, situated about three and a half miles north of West Alexander, in Donegal township. He is engaged in farming on this place, and deals largely in stock. Politically he is a Republican, and though he has been elected to numerous township offices, he is not a politician. Mr. Chaney is an enterprising and progressive farmer. In religious connection he and his wife are both members of the Presbyterian Church.

NATHANIEL NEELY. In the first rank of the intelligent and prominent farmer citizens of Washington county stands the subject of this sketch.

His grandfather, Robert Neely, was born in Ireland, where he learned the trade of weaver. He married Susan Rutherford, a native of his own county, and together they immigrated to the United States, coming to Lancaster county, Penn., where he engaged at farming and worked at his trade. Here for some years they remained, and then, in 1800, removed to this county, taking up their residence in Canton township, on the farm now occupied by the David McClay family, whence after a time they moved to Buffalo township, and finally settled on a farm, their first home being a log cabin, where they passed the rest of their busy and honorable lives. The children born to them were: Elizabeth (Mrs. Andrew Herron), Samuel, Mary (Mrs. John Jamison), and John. The father died in 1804, the mother ten years later. They were members of the North Buffalo Church (Seceders), of which Mr. Neely was one of the organizers, and in politics he was a Federalist.

Samuel Neely, father of subject, was born in Lancaster county, Penn., in 1793, where his early boyhood was passed, and when seven years old he was brought by his parents to this county, where he received his school training. At the age of twenty-three he married Sarah, daughter of Nathaniel McDowell, and the young couple resided on the Neely homestead, in Buffalo township, until 1843, in which year our subject purchased the farm now occupied by James Noble, and moved thereon. Here he died in 1862, the father of nine children: Susanna (Mrs. Robert Wright), Nathaniel (our subject), Robert, John, Samuel, James and

Nathaniel Keely

David, all of whom are deceased, the latter dying of measles; Sarah J. (Mrs. David McConeahey), and Leman. Politically Samuel Neely was a Whig, taking an active interest in the party's affairs. At an early age he united with the North Buffalo (Seceders) Church, of which he was an elder for years, and assisted materially in the erection of the present church building.

Nathaniel Neely, whose name opens this sketch, was born in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., July 16, 1822, and being the eldest boy in his father's family had a large share of farm work to perform. His education was received at the subscription schools of the locality, but being quick and apt he learned more in the practical school of life, and to-day he is recognized as one of the best-informed men in the township. On December 5, 1850, Mr. Neely was united in marriage with Mary C., daughter of James Irwin, of Canton township, this county, and their children are Susan (wife of James McCabe), James L., and Nannie (wife of Martin Rolston). The mother of these children dying September 7, 1862, in her thirty-sixth year, Mr. Neely, for his second wife, married, October 4, 1864, Rose W., daughter of Samuel and Hannah (Way) Graham, of Buffalo township, by which union there is one child, Vena M. Samuel Graham was an early pioneer of Buffalo township, coming there from Ireland about the year 1800. He died March 23, 1850, in his eightieth year; his wife passing from earth November 17, 1869, in her seventy-fifth year.

The family are members of the U. P. Church at Taylorstown. Mr. Neely having been one of the members that helped to organize the church; he was elected one of the elders, in which he served for some time and then resigned. He has given liberally of his means toward the support of churches. Politically he was originally a Whig, and since the formation of the party he has been a solid Republican. He has served as assessor of his township with marked ability and characteristic prudence. Mr. Neely is a typical self-made man, enterprising and prosperous, and a leading, upright citizen, descended from an old honored family. His highly improved and well-kept farm now comprises 200 acres of prime land.

DONALDSON, JACOB M. and ROBERT S. Among the leading families of Washington county, none are more worthy of prominent mention in the pages of this Biographical Record than that of the gentlemen whose names open this sketch.

Jacob Donaldson, their grandfather, was born in 1763, in Ireland, and came to America in early manhood, locating in Washington county, Penn. He married a Miss McKinney, and first settled on a farm in Hopewell township, thence moving to the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, which is yet owned by his descendants. He was a member of the Seceder Church at Hickory, this county, afterward uniting with the U. P. Society. In April, 1850, he moved to the village of Hickory, where he died in August of the same year, having been long preceded by his wife, who had borne him the following children: William (who settled in Somerset township, this county, where he died), James (who settled in Hopewell township, and died in Claysville), Richard (a tailor, of Hickory, who afterward bought a farm and was killed by a falling limb while on his way home from Noblestown), Andrew (who resided in Mt. Pleasant township, where he died), Isaac (of whom further mention is made), Margaret (who died in Hickory), and Mary (deceased wife of James Ackleson, of Hanover township).

Isaac Donaldson was born July 4, 1805, in Hopewell township, this county, where his boyhood was passed. On January 31, 1828, he was united in marriage with Sarah Maxwell, who was born February 18, 1808, in Hopewell township. The young couple resided on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township several years (the farm where William Donaldson now lives), and about 1838 moved to the farm now owned by their son Jacob M., where the remainder of their lives was passed. The father was a prominent farmer, and in politics voted the Democratic ticket, giving that party his cordial and hearty support. In church relations he was formerly a member of the Seceder Church at North Buffalo, later transferred his membership to the United Presbyterian Church, of West Middletown, and afterward united with the Associate Reformed Church at Patterson's Mills. He died November 13, 1882, and was followed by his wife August 19, 1883, in her seventy-fifth year. They were buried in the cemetery at North Buffalo, and left three children, all now living, to mourn their loss, viz.: Jacob M., Robert S. and Hannah J. (wife of David Davidson, Hopewell township).

JACOB M. DONALDSON was born June 5, 1829, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and was reared and educated on the farm adjoining his present home. In 1862 he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Elizabeth Pry, a native of Cross Creek township, who was reared in Hopewell township, a daughter of John and Hester Ann (Forester) Pry. Mr. Pry was born August 10, 1811, in the "Old Dominion," and in early manhood came to Washington county, Penn., and settled in Hopewell township, where, in June, 1838, he married Hester Ann Forester, born June 2, 1817, in Maryland. She was a daughter of George William and Elizabeth (Clark) Forester, natives of Maryland, of English descent, who moved to Washington county, Penn., about 1817, settling in Buffalo village, Hopewell township. Mr. Forester was a school teacher, which profession he followed for many years, and in religion was a member of the Old Presbyterian Church. He died in Mt. Pleasant township, having been preceded by his wife many years.

Mr. and Mrs. Pry located on a farm in Cross Creek township, and in 1853 moved to Hopewell township, thence to Canton township, and finally settled in Burgettstown, Smith township. He died April 12, 1882, his wife having died October 7, 1868. Their children were as follows: J. Conrad (a soldier in the Civil war, who afterward married Minnie Aiken, at Prairie du Sac, Wis., and lives in Montecito, Cal.), Mary Elizabeth (Mrs. Donaldson), George William (deceased in infancy), James D. (enlisted at Washington and served till the close of the war; he married Mary Bigelow, and lives in Minnesota), John Henry (who died May 8, 1885, was married to Mary Boley, of Allegheny), Samuel Clark (married to Emma Root, of Minnesota, lives in Prairie du Sac, Wis.) and Catherine Rowena (deceased December 11, 1885, in Burgettstown, Penn., wife of Edward B. Evans).

Nine children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob M. Donaldson, viz.: Ina Hester (who was married in 1880 to Dr. McClure, of Alpha, Greene Co., Ohio, and has five children: Roy Donaldson, Robert Templeton, Carl Ralston, James Albert and Mary Etta); Willard Brady (who was married September 11, 1888, to Jennie F. Jackson, a native of Mt. Pleasant township; he graduated from the Western Pennsylvania Medical College with the class of '89, and located at Midway, this county, where he is now successfully following his profession as physician and surgeon. They have had two children: one deceased at the age of six months, and Mary L.); Leoline (who was married June 5, 1890, to Rev. D. T. McCalmont, a U. P. minister of Butler county, Penn., and has one child, Howard Donaldson); Minnie Etta; Edmund I.; John P.; James C.; Robert Lester and Percy J. M.

Mr. and Mrs. Donaldson since their marriage have lived on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, containing 230 acres of good land, a portion of the old homestead. Politically he is an enthusiastic Democrat; is actively interested in educational matters, and has been a member of the school board. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect.

ROBERT S. DONALDSON was born June 16, 1831, on the home place in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where he was reared to manhood, and received an education in the district schools. On May 11, 1857, he was united in marriage with Rachel V. Walker, daughter of John Norris and Ann (Vance) Walker, of Cross Creek township, and natives of Jefferson and Smith townships, respectively. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Walker settled in Cross Creek township, this county, where he died in February, 1882, aged seventy-six, having been preceded by his wife in 1870. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church at Cross Creek village.

Mr. and Mrs. Donaldson began wedded life on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where he is yet living. Mrs. Donaldson died May 26, 1871. She was the mother of six children, viz.: Frank W., who was married November 8, 1883, to Annie, daughter of James Taggart, and has three children: Earl, Mabel V. and James T.; Flora M., who was married in November, 1880, to James M. Dinsmore, and has four children: Grace W., Mary J., Robert Edwin and William Lloyd; Anna V., who was married December 25, 1884, to Dr. Hugh Hanna, a graduate of Jefferson Medical Institute, class of '92, and has two children: Eva and Hugh; Sarah M., who was married in October, 1887, to John M. Thompson, a farmer of Buffalo township, this county; Charley I. (at home); and Harry N., a dentist of Bellevue, Ohio.

After the death of his first wife, Mr. Donaldson was married June 25, 1873, to Hettie J. Byers, a native of Donegal township, this county, and daughter of Thomas Byers. Her grandfather, Thomas Byers, was born September 7, 1757, in Ireland, and came to this country in early life. On September 18, 1783, he was united in marriage with Margaret Shannon, of Scotch descent, and settled on a farm in Finley township. The children of this couple were as follows: Samuel, born July 10, 1784 (lived in Ohio); John, born July 22, 1786 (a physician of Piqua, Ohio); Sarah, born March 25, 1788 (wife of Dr. Wiley, of Ripley, Ohio); Thomas, who enlisted in the war of 1812; Jane, born April 3, 1792 (wife of David Stewart, of Ohio county, W. Va.); Margaret, born February 7, 1794 (Mrs. John McDonald, of Donegal township); Ann, born June 20, 1797 (wife of Andrew Yates, of Ohio county, W. Va.); James, born June 20, 1799 (lived in Noble county, Ohio); Nancy, born February 21, 1802 (married to John Brice, of Belmont county, Ohio); Rachel, born June 22, 1804 (Mrs. Hugh Wilson, of Ohio); and William, born March 13, 1809 (resided in Butler county, Penn.).

Thomas Byers, father of Mrs. Donaldson, was born April 22, 1790, in East Finley township, this county, where his boyhood was passed. On April 12, 1813, he was married to Margaret Hamilton, who was born May 9, 1794, in Canton township, this county. After marriage the young people resided in Donegal township till 1851, when they moved to Washington, where Mr. Byers died September 8, 1863. He lost a limb in early life, but the sad accident made him none the less a useful and energetic citizen. He was an ardent advocate of temperance, and held many township offices. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, and he was superintendent of the Sabbath-school for years. They were the parents of the following children: R. H. (a Presbyterian minister of Houston, Tex.), Thomas (who died December 25, 1870, an attorney of Fairfield, Iowa), Mary R. (wife of James Todd, of Ohio county, W. Va.), Margaret S. (deceased October 11, 1887, married to Benjamin Oldham, of Dallas, W. Va.), John C. (an attorney of Stockton, Cal.), Samuel (deceased February 22, 1872, in Marshall county, Ill.), Alexander R. (a physician and surgeon of Pike county, Ind.), Hettie J. (Mrs. Robert S. Donaldson) and Sarah J. (deceased April 11, 1852).

Mr. and Mrs. Donaldson have continued to reside on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township, upon which he has made many improvements; in 1860 he erected a comfortable brick residence, and has also put up other buildings. The farm contains 235 acres of good land, which is cultivated to the highest degree. Mr. Donaldson votes the Democratic ticket, and in religious faith he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Buffalo, of which he is a trustee.

CALVIN L. MILLER, a prominent and successful farmer of Donegal township, is of Irish descent. The first member of the family to locate in Washington county was Christopher Miller, who was born and married east of the Alleghany mountains. In 1782 he and his family made the perilous journey across the mountains, and entered Washington county, locating about three miles north of Claysville, near the headwaters of Buck run. Here he secured a "tomahawk claim" of 400 acres, upon which he erected his cabin home, and began to clear the forest. The Indians were still troublesome, and made frequent raids through that part of the country, and for defense against their common foe, Christopher Miller, together with his few and distant neighbors, erected a blockhouse, to which they were several times compelled to flee for safety. Mr. Miller was a pioneer of Donegal township, and passed the remainder of his life in that neighborhood. He was twice married, but the names of his wives are unknown. His children were William, John, Christopher, Jacob, Sarah, Mary and Margaret, all of whom passed their lives in Washington county. The four sons located on portions of the 400 acre tract, which land was equally divided among them.

John Miller was born in 1780, east of the Alleghany mountains, and when yet a child came with his parents to Washington county. In 1802 he was married to Margaret Guy, who was born March 15, 1776, near Fredericktown, Md., and afterward came to Washington county with her parents, John and Elizabeth Guy. To the union of John and Margaret (Guy) Miller were born the following children: William, born July 17, 1803 (lived and died in Washington county); John, born January 1, 1805 (deceased in Washington county); Elizabeth, born January 11, 1807 (died unmarried in Washington county); Susanna, born February 23, 1809 (deceased wife of William McKay, of Washington, Penn.); Christopher (father of our subject), and George B., born December 10, 1812 (deceased in Washington county). Mr. Miller's share of the original 400 acres which his father had owned was 100 acres. He lived and farmed upon this tract until his death, which occurred July 8, 1814. His sons then carried on the farm, upon which his widow continued to reside until her death, which took place May 26, 1847.

Christopher Miller, now a hale and hearty old gentleman, of Donegal township, was born February 14, 1811, and passed his boyhood days on the home farm with his widowed mother. He was obliged to assist with the farm work, and was thus deprived of a good education, but managed by close application to make the most of his meager opportunities. On May 21, 1840, he was united in marriage with Sarah J. Knight (who was born November 21, 1823), daughter of Charles Knight, of Washington county, and their children were as follows: Leamon (deceased), born February 16, 1841; Calvin L. (subject of this sketch); Mary J., born July 19, 1844 (unmarried, and living at home); George H., born April 23, 1846 (a physician at McDonald, Penn.); Charles W., born March 15, 1848 (living near Coon Island, Penn.); Margaret C., born September 12, 1849 (Mrs. John Holmes, of Donegal township); Frances E., born February 18, 1851 (widow of Bruce Ramage, residing with her father); William B. (deceased), born August 28, 1854; and John B. (deceased), born September 1, 1857. After his marriage Mr. Miller located on a part of the "tomahawk claim," which was first secured by his grandfather, and is his present home. He has always been a farmer, and although now well advanced in years has never been sick but once in his life, and that was in early youth. In political life he was formerly a Whig, and when the party was formed, became a Republican. His wife died in 1884, and his daughter has lived with him since that time.

Calvin L. Miller was born August 18, 1843, in Donegal township, this county, on the headwaters of Buck run. He attended the common schools, and worked on his father's farm until twenty years of age, when he worked one season for Adam Carson, and having pleased his employer by his energy and steady habits, he remained with Mr. Carson eight years. In 1873 he was married to Margaret Taylor (who was born December 29, 1853), daughter ter of Thomas and Susan (Darlington) Taylor, of West Finley township, this county, and they had five children: Christopher W., Carrie E., Jessie Belle, John L. and George Lawrence. For some time after his marriage Mr. Miller resided on the "Graham Farm," located about two miles north of Claysville, this county. He then moved to West Finley township, and in 1886 located on his present home, situated about one mile north of Claysville, in Donegal township, on a part of the old Gourley farm. He has erected a fine house, barn and out-buildings, which have greatly enhanced the value of his property. Politically he has always been a Republican. Mrs. Miller is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Windy Gap.

JOSEPH PATTERSON is a son of Richard Patterson, whose father, John Patterson, came in 1806 with his parents from Ireland and first settled in Delaware. Eight years later John Patterson came to Allegheny county, Penn. He was married to Miss Mary Miller, also a native of the Emerald Isle, who bore him eight children, viz.: Robert, James, Moses, Richard, three that died in infancy, and John, all now dead.

Richard Patterson was born March 2, 1800, in Ireland, and came to Allegheny county with his father. On June 21, 1832, he was married to Miss Mary Moss, who was born February 28, 1800, a daughter of John Moss, of Washington county, Penn. In 1834 Richard Patterson came to the home farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. He was a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church until 1854, when he joined the United Presbyterian Church, in which he shortly afterward served as elder. Four children were born to his first marriage: Elizabeth J., Joseph, John and James R. The mother of this family died in 1847, and in 1849 the father was married to Miss Margaret Ross, a daughter of George Ross, and she died in 1854. In 1857 he was united in marriage with Miss Jane McMurray, a daughter of James McMurray, of Allegheny county, Penn., and to this union were born two children, viz.: Mary B. (who was married to R. M. Patterson, a prominent minister of Armstrong county, Penn.), and Richard M., who died in infancy. Richard Patterson died April 17, 1891, having been preceded by his wife, Jane (McMurray) Patterson, September 9, 1888.

Joseph Patterson, son of Richard and Mary (Moss) Patterson, was born September 28, 1835, on the farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., where he is now living. He was there reared to manhood and on May 15, 1862, was married to Miss Jane W. Douglass, daughter of Thomas Douglass, of Allegheny county, Penn.

To them have been born seven children, namely: Thomas J., Mary J., Alice M., Richard M., Caroline, Edwin (deceased in infancy) and James W. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Patterson came immediately to the home place, where they have since resided. He has been a staunch Republican, and has held the office of school director. He is a member and has been a trustee of the United Presbyterian Church of Peters Creek. The Patterson family have 14 acres of excellent land in their possession.

SALEM FLACK. Among the early pioneers of Washington county was John Flack, who came from Lancaster, Penn., to Washington, where, in 1784, he purchased a town lot, being one of the first lot owners in the town. In 1788 he removed to Buffalo township, and here he purchased a farm on which he erected the first frame house in that section of the county. He married Jane Gault, a native of Canonsburg, Washington county, and to them were born children as follows: James, John, Samuel, David, and Mary. The mother of these children died on the homestead in Buffalo township December 14, 1823, in her sixty-third year.

John Flack was known among the early pioneers of Buffalo township, and after his location there, continued to reside on his farm until his death, which occurred in 1832. The homestead has ever since remained in the possession of the family, and there may be found members of the fifth generation.

Samuel Flack, third child of John and Jane (Gault) Flack, was born April 12, 1791, on the old homestead in Buffalo township. During his early manhood he went to Ohio, and there married Sarah Brown, by which union there were four children, viz.: Salem, Mary Jane, Elizabeth A., and Luther B. (who graduated at Washington College, and died soon after graduating). They resided in Wayne county, Ohio, until 1827, in which year they removed to Washington county, Penn., settling on a farm in Buffalo township, where they resided during the remainder of their lives. Samuel Flack was a man of much force of character, and determination, and was prominent among his fellows in the pioneer days. During the Black Hawk war, in response to a call for troops, he volunteered his services, enlisting with a company at Taylorstown. They proceeded to Weirich's tavern, a well-known landmark of the early days, and there went into camp for the night. The following morning they received notice that they were not required, whereupon they reluctantly returned to their homes. Samuel Flack was a quiet, unassuming man in his way, and while never seeking public position was always conspicuous by reason of the active part he took in all public movements. He died in Buffalo township in 1856 in his sixty-sixth year, honored and respected by all. His widow survived him until 1873, when she, too, was called to a higher and better home.

Salem Flack, the immediate subject of this sketch, was born May 19, 1824, in Wayne county, Ohio, by the historic waters of the Killbuck. He was but three years of age when his parents removed to Buffalo township, this county, and settled near Taylorstown. Here our subject was reared to manhood, a part of his literary education being secured at the old log schoolhouse and part at the brick one, of the neighborhood, while his more practical training was received under the able preceptorship of his father, on the home farm, lessons being there given that have been invaluable to him in his life work. On the death of his father Mr. Flack purchased the interests of the other heirs, and has since remained on the home farm, where he has continued to follow agricultural pursuits, including stock raising and other kindred interests.

In February, 1864, he was united in marriage with Margaret A., daughter of Aaron Farrar, and to them have been born the following named children: Samuel L. (assisting his father in the management of the farm), Sarah Virginia (who died at the age of eighteen), John A. (married to Elizabeth Ashbrook), and Jennie A., both living at home with and assisting their parents. The entire family are members of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. Flack is a staunch though not active Republican. His farm, which is one of the finest in the county, and is situated about four miles from the borough of Washington, contains 290 acres of choice land, whereon stand a handsome pleasant residence and commodious out-houses, all of which, together with the general surroundings, bespeak enterprise, judicious management, prosperity and contentment.

The Farrar family in Washington county are descended from James Farrar, who resided, at the beginning of the Revolutionary war, in Hunterdon county, N. J., where he and his eldest son, James, worked as blacksmiths for the American army during its operations in that State. Two sons, John and Peter, were soldiers in Washington's army, and were both killed at the battle of Long Island. In the year 1785 Andrew Farrar, with his wife Margaret (Moore), a lady of Scotch-Irish parentage, crossed the mountains to western Pennsylvania, and settled in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, where he died November 5, 1832. He reared a family of seven sons and three daughters, the ninth child in the family being a son, Aaron, who became the father of Mrs. Flack. He married Jane Griffith, a native of Washington county, Penn., born in 1812. They purchased a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and resided thereon until 1845, when they came to Buffalo township, and purchased a farm from Robert Dinsmore, near Taylorstown, now owned by David Haggerty. They had resided there but a year, when death entered the home, calling the father and husband to his long home. He passed away January 6, 1846, in his thirty-sixth year, at peace with all the world, a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church. Their union had been blessed with five children, as follows: Margaret A. (Mrs. Salem Flack); Jennie M., married, November 1, 1860, to Milton B. Curry, of Amwell township, Washington county; John G., married to Caroline Kerr, and resided in West Virginia until his death (he served in the war of the Rebellion, was with Sherman on his march to the sea, was taken prisoner, and paroled and exchanged); Mary E. (Mrs. James Hodgens), and Harriet N. (who died at the age of two years). In 1848 Mrs. Jane Griffith Farrar was united in marriage with David Haggerty, and to them were born three daughters: Sarah Josephine (now Mrs. Samuel Thompson), Lettitia M. (married to Frank Moore), and Annie V. (at home with her father). The mother passed away July 4, 1872.

THE FULTON FAMILY. John Fulton was born in May, 1810, in Philadelphia, Penn., and after receiving a limited education, learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in Washington county, Penn. On January 12, 1832, he was married to Miss Hannah McMillan, who was born March 3, 1815, in this county, in the dwelling now occupied by James C. Fulton. Miss McMillan was a granddaughter of John McMillan, D. D., who settled on the same farm in 1775. Although beginning life as a poor boy, John Fulton, by dint of honest effort and careful economy, became a prosperous citizen. He purchased 160 acres in North Strabane township, this county, to which many improvements have since been made. He and his wife were devoted members of the United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg. He died October 18, 1869, followed September 14, 1891, by his wife who had borne him nine children, viz.: Samuel (deceased) Joseph R., William, Mary Elizabeth (Mrs. Pry, now living in Brooke county, W. Va.), Thomas K., Robert D., John, Catherine Isabel (residing on the old home-stead with her brother R. D. Fulton) and James C.

Robert D. Fulton, son of John and Hannah Fulton, was born April 8, 1846, and reared on the old place in North Strabane township, this county, receiving a common-school education. On November 23, 1881, he was married to Aggie M., daughter of James and Rachel (Hamilton) Rath, and to this union were born a son and a daughter, namely: James R. and Maggie J. The mother died May 7, 1886. She was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, with which the father is also identified. He is a member of the Democratic party, and is now serving as supervisor of roads in his district.

John Fulton, seventh child of John and Hannah Fulton, was born April 29, 1849, on the old homestead in North Strabane township. On October 11, 1876, he was united in marriage with Miss Sallie C. Crawford, who has borne him four children, namely: Chatham Crawford, Dora Martha, Samuel Reed and Alexander Clyde. Mr. Fulton is actively interested in the educational interests of the community, and is now serving as school trustee. In politics he is a Democrat, and in religion he and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg.

James C. Fulton, youngest son of John and Hannah Fulton, was born February 8, 1857, on the old homestead in North Strabane township. He attended the country schools of the neighborhood, and has since remained upon his birthplace. On October 28, 1886, he was united in marriage with Etta V., daughter of Isaac and Isabel (Lewis) Walker. Three children have blessed this union, namely: Thomas C., Mabel H. and Elsie Anetta. Both parents are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg, and in political opinion the father is a Democrat. The old homestead contains 295 acres in North Strabane township; since the death of John Fulton it has been under the management of the three sons above mentioned, Robert D., John and James C.

CLINTON L. MILLER, a progressive citizen of Donegal township, is a son of William and a grandson of Frederick Miller. Little is known of the latter's parents save that they were of German birth, and among the earliest settlers of Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn. Their son Frederick was born in an old blockhouse where the parents resided for safety from the Indians. Frederick Miller grew to manhood amid the surroundings of pioneer life, and was married to Elizabeth Miller, also a member of an old family, but no relation to her husband's people. Among the children born to their union was the father of our subject.

William Miller was born March 4, 1809, on the farm in Donegal township, this county, and passed his boyhood days on the home place, attending the rude schools of the period. On January 1, 1852, he was united in marriage with Catherine Clemens, who was born November 19, 1824, daughter of Nicholas Clemens, of Donegal township, and to their union were born the following children: Lehman (deceased in infancy), Clinton L., Luther G. (deceased in infancy), Ermina L. (Mrs. Joseph Miller, of Donegal township) and Florence V. (Mrs. James Castner, of Independence township). After his marriage Mr. Miller located on the Dutch fork of Buffalo creek, about two and a half miles north of Coon Island, where he made a permanent home. He was a successful farmer, and in politics was a member of the Democratic party. He died in 1880, since which time his widow has resided on the home farm, now managed by her son, Clinton L.

Clinton L. Miller was born December 16, 1854, on the home farm near Coon Island, where he is now living, which has remained in the possession of the Miller family since it was first patented. Clinton L. received a common-school education, and has always been a farmer, in which vocation he is very successful. He is in a fair way to become one of the wealthiest men of Donegal township. Politically he is a member of the Democratic party.

CHARLES H. BURIG, a prosperous and highly respected agriculturist of Donegal township, is a native of Germany. His father, Charles W. Burig, was born in July, 1797, in the town of Brunswick, Germany, and attended the public schools of the place until fourteen years of age. He then learned the trade of miller, which he followed for forty years. In 1827 he was married to Fredericka Ide, who was born in 1807, also in Germany, and to their union were born four children: Sophia (widow of Frederick Miller, living in Triadelphia, Ohio Co., W. Va.), Caroline (deceased wife of August Miller), Amelia (Mrs. Henry Snyder, of Moundsville, W. Va.) and Charles H. In 1848 Mr. Burig set sail from Bremen for America, but as war was then raging between Prussia and Denmark, but few vessels were sailing from German ports, and the emigrants were obliged to come over in an English packet. They were sixty days on the ocean, but finally landed safely in New York. Thence they went by boat up the Hudson river to Albany; by railroad to Buffalo, N. Y.; by Lake Erie steamer to Erie, Penn.; from Erie to Beaver by canal, from Beaver down the Ohio river to Wheeling. Mr. Burig located on Peters run, in Ohio county, W. Va., where he followed milling and farming until 1860, when, on account of age and failing health, he retired. During the last years of his life Mr. Burig lived at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Miller, in Wheeling, W. Va., and there died in 1875, having been preceded by his wife in 1866.

Charles H. Burig was born December 21, 1838, at Furstenberg, Duchy of Brunswick, Germany, and came to America with his parents. He received his education at the common schools, at the same time, in his boyhood and early youth, assisting his father in the mill work, and the duties of the farm.

On September 4, 1862, he was united in marriage with Catherine Helfenbien, who was born February 27, 1843, in Marburg, Hessen Cassel, Germany, and was but six years of age when her parents immigrated to America, settling in Ohio county, W. Va. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Burig had the following children: William (a farmer of West Finley township), Amelia (Mrs. Armour J. Roney, of West Finley township), George (also of West Finley township), A. Elmer (living with his parents), Gertrude (Mrs. Albert Morrow, of Donegal township) and Charlton L. (living at home). After his marriage Mr. Burig farmed for some time in Ohio county, W. Va., and in 1865 settled in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., locating on the old "De France farm," lying a short distance from the mouth of Dutch fork of Buffalo creek. He was engaged in milling for twenty years; but in 1885 he abandoned this business to devote his entire attention to farming. In political life Mr. Burig was a Democrat until 1880, when he united with the Republican party. He has recently erected an elegant residence which is equal to any in the vicinity.

JAMES H. SUPLER. The Supler family are identified with the early settlement and improvement of Washington county, and the first pioneer of that name, of whom there is any authentic record, was John Supler, the great-grandfather of our subject. He was born about 1757, in eastern Pennsylvania, and was there married to Rachel Kirk, who was born August 13, 1767. In company with his wife and a sister of Mr. Supler's, the young couple made the rough and tedious journey over the mountains. They finally located in Donegal township, about three miles southeast of West Alexander, where in the midst of an unbroken wilderness they erected their log cabin home. The following children were born to them: Susanna, born December 21, 1783; Rachel, born February 18, 1785; Margaret, born March 17, 1787; John, born January 25, 1790; Sarah, born May 6, 1792; Ann, born January 30, 1795; and Edward, born February 18, 1804; all of whom lived to an adult age, and are now deceased. The father of this family died June 14, 1835, after many years of toil and care, and the mother followed him August 28, 1850.

John Supler was born on the pioneer farm in Donegal township, this county, and shared all the hardships incident to pioneer life. In later years he was united in marriage with Margaret Sargent, a member of an old family of Washington county, and the children born to them were as follows: Thomas, John, Isaac, William, Henry, Elizabeth, Sarah Ann, Margaret, Rachel, Mary and Jane. Of this family those now living are Rachel, Elizabeth, Sarah Ann and Isaac. Mr. Supler passed his life farming on the old home place, and died April 28, 1871. His widow died in 1881.

Thomas Supler was born February 23, 1814, on the farm in Donegal township, this county, and was the eldest son of his parents. He received a common-school education, and was trained to agricultural pursuits by his father. In 1838 he was married to Margaret Hill, who was born August 19, 1813, and their children were: Nancy Jane, born January 8, 1840; John H., born January 6, 1842; Joseph G., born November 4, 1843; Alexander D., born March 21, 1847; Henry H., born January 26, 1849; and James H., the only child now living. After his marriage Thomas Supler located in Greene county, Penn., where he remained some time, then moved near Beallsville, West Bethlehem township, Washington county. He afterward purchased and moved upon the old home farm of the Suplers in Donegal township, this county. In 1876 he moved to West Alexander, same township, where his wife died May 5, 1883, and October 20, 1884, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Caroline (Rogers) Mounts, widow of James Mounts. After his marriage to Caroline Mounts, Thomas Supler located in Claysville, April 1, 1885, where he died February 15, 1886. Politically he was a Republican, and in religion was a member of the M. E. Church. His widow is still living.

James H. Supler was born March 18, 1850, near Beallsville, West Bethlehem township, this county, and came with his parents to Donegal township. He received a common-school education, and assisted his father in the farm work. On December 29, 1875, he was married to Elizabeth Bryans, who was born April 3, 1855, at Port Stanley, Ontario, Canada, daughter of William and Margaret (Bamford) Bryans. They have four children, namely: William H., Bessie M., Minnie M. and James W., all of whom are living with their parents. Mr. Supler located on the home farm, where he is now living, and which has been in the possession of the family four generations. He is engaged in general farming, and also operates a threshing machine in the summer season. Politically he is a Republican, and he is an energetic and prosperous young man.

GEORGE W. RITCHEY, a skillful black smith and well-known citizen of West Alexander, was born December 10, 1827, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of John and grandson of George Ritchey, who was born and grew to manhood in Ireland. George Ritchey was married in his native country, and some time afterward came to America, locating in Buffalo township, Washington county, near Taylorstown. They remained there several years, and then came to Donegal township, where Mr. Ritchey purchased the home farm. He had a family of twenty-one children. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religious connection a member of the U. B. Church of Donegal township.

John Ritchey was born in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and there received his early education at the primitive subscription schools. He was united in marriage with Elizabeth Fowler, a resident of Washington county, and their children were: Margaret J. (deceased wife of George Karnes), Elizabeth M. (first married to John Miller, now the wife of Thomas Phillips), George W. (our subject), David, William T. (deceased minister of the U. B. Church) and John. After his marriage Mr. Ritchey made his permanent home in Donegal township. He was a public-spirited man, interested in all progressive movements, and an active worker in the Democratic party; in religion he was a member of the U. B. Church of Donegal township. He died in 1861, and was followed by his widow in 1866. The remains of both rest in the U. B. Church cemetery.

George W. Ritchey received his early education and passed his boyhood in Donegal township. At the age of eighteen years he was apprenticed to Lewis Hallom, of Washington borough, to learn the blacksmith's trade. He remained there two years, and then entered the employ of John Morrow, with whom he worked four years, when he established a shop at Taylorstown. Mr. Ritchey conducted the blacksmith business at that place for eight and a half years, and then entered the employ of William McCoy, in West Alexander, remaining with him until 1862, when he enlisted in Company C. "Ringgold Cavalry," serving until the close of the struggle. After the war he worked at his trade in West Alexander until 1871, when he settled in Buffalo village, which was his home thirteen years, but finally came to West Alexander where he has since remained. On April 5, 1848, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of James Mitchell, of Bentleyville, Washington county, and their union has been blessed with the following children: Winfield S., Lena (Mrs. Robert Martin), Thomas, A. E., Mary (Mrs. George Timmons), William and Lester G. Of this family, Thomas, A. E. and William are deceased. Mr. Ritchey has always been a progressive man, and has taken an active part in the development of the community. Politically he is an earnest Republican, and while residing in Hopewell township, served three terms as justice of the peace. He is a substantial member of the Presbyterian Church at West Alexander.

GEORGE BLACK. Chief among the well-known farmers and breeders of fine Black-Top Merino sheep ranks George Black, who resides on his farm adjoining Canonsburg. James and Elizabeth (Horner) Black, grandparents of our subject, came from the Cumberland Valley in company with William Horner, making the trip across the mountains in a wagon drawn by four horses. James Black owned a farm in Cumberland county, but was not satisfied with the settlement of his father's estate, and after selling his farm moved to the wilds of Washington county, known at that time as "the backwoods." He first settled on the land in North Strabane township now owned by the Samuel McNary heirs: from there moved to Peters township, and for a time lived near Bethany Church on Miners run, Allegheny county, Penn. His wife died in Peters township, April 10, 1834, at the age of sixty years, and he passed away at the residence of his son-in-law, Daniel Hickman, in Peters township, November 6, 1842, aged seventy-two. Both are buried in the Chartiers cemetery, North Strabane township. The children born of their union were: Margaret S., born July 22, 1796 (she was married, in 1818, to James Hare, who bought a farm near Claysville, where they both died); Nancy, born March 1, 1798, and married, in 1825, to James Lyons (she and her husband died on their farm near Industry, Beaver Co., Penn.); Elizabeth, born May 31, 1800 (she married Thomas Cotner in 1826, and moved to Carroll county, Ohio); William, born June 22, 1802 (married Eleanor Manifold); Sallie, born in October, 1801 (married Daniel Hickman, and settled in Stark county, Ohio); Richard, born in December, 1806 (he married Jane Speer; he was a carpenter and resided in Allegheny City, where he died); Robert, born January 9, 1809 (first married Sadie Rankin, and afterward Elizabeth Manifold; he made his home on a farm near Beck's Mills, North Strabane township); James, born May 25, 1812 (married Nancy Gilmore, on March 27, 1841; he settled in Bridgeville, Allegheny Co., Penn.); and Rebecca, born February 11, 1816 (married March 2, 1843, to Robert Johnston). To each of these marriages were born children. William Horner, brother-in-law of James Black, owned three farms near Beck's Mills, in North Strabane township. He was a member of Chartiers Presbyterian Church, and died February 23, 1860, aged eighty-two.

William Black, father of subject, was born June 22, 1802, in Washington county, a son of James and Elizabeth (Horner) Black. He married Miss Eleanor Manifold, a native of York county, Penn., who came with her parents across the mountains when twelve years of age. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Black settled on the farm in North Strabane township now owned by our subject, where they both died. William Black was a man of pure principle and of more than ordinary intelligence. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, and he was an elder in the Chartiers Church for a number of years. Six sons and four daughters were born of their union, viz.: Margaret (wife of Rev. William Grimes, of Belmont county, Ohio), Ann (who died at the age of twelve years), Mary (wife of Rev. James S. Barr, of Sealkote, northern India, where he is a missionary of the United Presbyterian Church), Elizabeth (who married Joseph Willison of this county, now deceased), William (who married Mary Bebout, and resides in North Strabane township), Benjamin (who enlisted in the Fortieth Regiment, P. V. I., as a sergeant, and was killed at Gettysburg; he was unmarried), James L. (who enlisted in the Tenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers; he was admitted to the bar, located in Pittsburgh, and at present is an attorney at law in Lumpkin county, Ga.), George (our subject), Richard (who married Flora White, and lives on a farm in North Strabane township), and Robert (who married Margaret White, and owns a marble and granite yard in Canonsburg).

George Black was born December 3, 1843, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of William and Eleanor (Manifold) Black. He attended the common schools of Canonsburg, learned farming with his father, and upon the latter's death came into possession of the old homestead farm. This land was purchased of James Murray, who had bought it from the old Jefferson College trustees. On January 26, 1871, Mr. Black was married to Miss Jane E., a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Templeton) McNary, born on her father's farm. Mr. and Mrs. Black are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Canonsburg, of which they are liberal supporters. Two sons and one daughter have blessed their marriage, viz.: Samuel O., Benjamin M. and Jeanette. In September, 1862, Mr. Black enlisted in the Eighteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was stationed at Hagerstown, Md., but after a few weeks his services were no longer needed, and he was sent home. Our subject is a representative and progressive farmer, unassuming, but practical and reliable. He is one of the few agriculturists who realize that successful farming requires more study, concentration of mind and executive ability than any profession. Mr. Black is one of the organizers of the Black-Top Merino Sheep Breeders Association of Washington county, and was treasurer of this association two years. Politically, he works with the Republican party. He enjoys the confidence and respect of all who know him, and is universally considered an upright and honorable gentleman.

JAMES C. MATTHEWS, farmer and undertaker, is a resident of North Strabane township, of which he is a native, born July 20, 1843. James Matthews, his grandfather, was born February 17, 1785, in Ireland, and in a very early day immigrated to America, settling in Washington county, Penn., where he followed farming the rest of his life, dying February 18, 1853; in politics he was a typical old-school Democrat.

James Matthews, father of James C., was also a prominent agriculturist of Washington county, where he was born. He was here married, in 1836, to Sarah Crawford, who was born February 6, 1815, by whom he had a family of ten children, all of whom grew to maturity, viz.: Nancy J., wife of Matthew Ross, a farmer of Washington county; Tamar M., wife of John B. Millholland, of Pittsburgh, Penn.; James C., subject of sketch; Elizabeth, wife of William Caldwell, a farmer in Allegheny county, Penn.; Leonard, a farmer of Columbiana county, Ohio; Andrew, proprietor of grocery store, Canonsburg, Penn.; Levi, proprietor of a furniture store at Beaver Falls, Penn.; Sarah M., wife of J. H. McMurray, a farmer in Peters township, this county; Chatham G., a grocery merchant in Allegheny county, Penn.; and Martha A., now deceased. The father died December 30, 1855, the mother having some years preceded him to the grave. They were both active members of the United Presbyterian Church.

James C. Matthews was educated at the district schools of his native township, and was reared from boyhood to the Arcadian pursuits of the farm. On November 4, 1869, he was married to Miss Belle M. Thomas, a native of North Strabane township, born May 17, 1848, a daughter of Liverton and Mary A. (Glandon) Thomas, the former of whom was born in North Strabane township, May 12, 1808, the latter in Maryland, October 2, 1813, and moved with her parents to Harrison county, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Liverton Thomas were married in 1834, in Ohio, and shortly afterward settled in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. They reared a family of nine children, eight of whom are yet living, viz.: Edmund, a farmer in Saline county, Neb.; William, a farmer in Chase county, Neb.; James M., a merchant in the village of Thomas, Washington Co., Penn.; Rhoda L., wife of John Hodgens, in Des Moines county, Iowa; Liverton G., a physician in Philadelphia, Penn.; Belle M., wife of James C. Matthews; A. J., a farmer of North Strabane township, and Ida M., wife of William Kittle, of Rush county, Kans. (Caleb F. died in infancy). The father of this family is at present living with his daughter, Mrs. John Hodgens, at Middletown, Des Moines Co., Iowa; he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics a staunch Democrat; his wife passed away December 10, 1873.

To Mr. and Mrs. James C. Matthews have been born six children—three sons and three daughters—as follows: Thomas C., born August 12, 1870 (he is a mechanical draughtsman in Barberton, Ohio); James F., born September 10, 1873 (engaged in the photography business); Ernest W., born November 17, 1875; Sarah E. and Mary A. (twins), born July 27, 1880, and Lena M., born May 16, 1883. Mr. and Mrs. Matthews are members of the U. P. Church, in which he has been an elder for the past fifteen years, and is superintendent of the Sabbath-school of Mount Prospect Church. He is a solid Democrat in his political preferences, and February 15, 1892, was elected township assessor. In his farming operations he has been eminently successful, and since 1875 has conducted an undertaking establishment in the village of Thomas.

IRA M. BUTLER is of Welsh descent, his grandfather, Benjamin Butler, having been a native of Wales. The latter ancestor, a Quaker in religious faith, in 1776 accompanied his parents to America. The Butler family settled in Lancaster county, Penn., and there secured 1,000 acres of land, part of which was in Chester county. Benjamin Butler was married in this country, and reared his family on the farm, but finally deciding to move to Ohio, sold the place, and purchased farms for the children. In 1805 sixteen persons began the journey to Ohio, with a two-horse team and carriage, arriving at Monongahela City on the evening of October 7, 1805. The following morning Mr. Butler was suddenly stricken with apoplexy and died that day. The other members of the family fell sick with malaria, which a quack doctor of the neighborhood pronounced yellow fever. These misfortunes compelled the family to remain in Washington county for some time, and they finally abandoned the idea of proceeding farther. The mother resided with her son Ira R. until her death. She left the following children: Jonathan, a wagon and plow maker; Abner, a cabinet maker; Noble; Eunice; Isaac; Benjamin; Joel; Joseph and Ira R., of whom the younger sons were carpenters with the exception of Ira R.

Ira R. Butler was born November 15, 1792, in Lancaster county, Penn., and in 1805 came with the family to Washington county. After his arrival in this county he attended school for two years, then learned the saddlery business. His health failing, he abandoned this pursuit by the advice of a physician, and in 1814 engaged as captain of a freight vessel on Lake Erie. He followed this vocation three years, then returned to Monongahela City and became captain of "The Eagle," a passenger boat on the river, remaining in that position two years, at the end of which time he bought a farm near Monongahela City, meanwhile working in the boatyard for Robert Beebe. On June 4, 1822, Ira R. Butler was married to Mary A. Boyd, a resident of Washington county, and their children were as follows: Benjamin, William, Samuel M., Ira R., Eunice J. (wife of C. Z. Kœchlin), Mary E. (married to Richard Pratt), Elizabeth (wife of James Blythe), Emmeline (wife of Dr. R. S. H. Keys; she was the widow of Maj. S. B. Howe, of the First W. Va. Cavalry, who had served during the entire Civil war without receiving a wound. On April 8, 1865, the night before the surrender of Lee, he was shot and killed by a rebel sharpshooter at Appomattox), Sarah (married to Charles Fry), and Ira M. In 1839 Mr. Butler sold his property, and in 1840 purchased the "John Stockdale farm," where he died July 18, 1884, his wife having gone before September 7, 1874. He was a leading member of both the Whig and Republican parties, and served for twenty-five years as justice of the peace. In religion he was actively identified with the M. E. Church.

Ira M. Butler was born January 22, 1843, on the home farm in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a common-school education, and on May 17, 1874, brought his bride, Nancy J. Frederick, to the home place. She is a native of West Pike Run township, this county, and daughter of Joseph Frederick. In 1880 the young couple moved to Elizabeth, Penn., where they resided until 1883, then returned to the home place and managed the farm until 1885. He afterward engaged in the livery business at Monongahela City, which he continued to follow two and a half years, then worked on the railroad for two years. In 1889 he opened a feed store which he has since conducted. Politically he is a Republican, but votes independently in local matters. He is a member of the M. E. Church.

ADAM AUGHENDOBLER was born August 14, 1823, near the city of Nuremberg, Bavaria, Germany, where his parents passed their lives. His mother died when he was eleven years old, leaving one child. Adam Aughendobler remained at the home of his uncle after the death of his parents, and there learned the weaver's trade, also assisting on the farm. In 1852 he embarked on a vessel bound for America, and after a voyage of seven weeks landed at Baltimore, Md. He then came to Washington county, Penn., and worked on a farm for Major Millinger, also for James Stockdale. On May 4, 1853, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Lizzie Zeh, a lady of German parentage, and the widow of J. B. Zeh, by whom she had one child—John B. Zeh, born in Germany. She was married to Mr. Zeh in the Fatherland, where he died. She came to America in the same vessel as Adam Aughendobler, to whom she was married, as just related, and in 1865 they came to Monongahela, where the family have since resided. Mr. Aughendobler is an active member of the Republican party, has served as councilman, and for twenty-eight years has been superintendent of the cemetery, which position he now holds. In religious faith he is identified with the Lutheran Church, which he has served as elder. To Mr. and Mrs. Aughendobler have been born the following children: Maria (Mrs. Levi Friend) and Bessie (Mrs. William Woodward), (twins), Jane (wife of James Dickey), Maggie (Mrs. Hoffman), Anna (wife of John Staib), George (deceased) and John L.

JOHN A. FRAZEE, who belongs to one of the oldest and most prominent families of Amwell township, is a native of the same, born May 28, 1834. His grandfather, Col. David Frazee, was the son of David Frazee, who moved from New Jersey in about 1780, locating in Amwell township, this county, where he died in June, 1789.

Col. David Frazee was born about 1782 in Amwell township, and afterward removed to West Bethlehem township. The father dying when David was a boy of seven years, the family were soon separated, and his early life was passed in West Bethlehem, where he purchased what was afterward known as the "Frazee Homestead," on Brush run, a tributary of North Ten-Mile creek. He was married to Catherine Sutton, daughter of Andrew Sutton, and their children were David, Andrew and Sallie (who married Peter Miller), all now deceased. The father passed from earth in 1850. Col. Frazee was one of the leading men of the time, and was often asked to decide matters of difference by arbitration. At one time he and his son David owned 1,000 acres in the two townships—Amwell and West Bethlehem. In politics he was a Whig, and though by no means an office seeker, he worked earnestly for the interests of his party. He was a member and one of the founders of the Disciple Church at Lone Pine.

David Frazee, son of Col. David Frazee, was born in 1812, and came with his parents to West Bethlehem township. He received a limited education in the common schools, but became a well-read, intelligent man. He was united in marriage with Amy Cooper, of Amwell township, daughter of Moses and Christine Cooper, and to this union were born two children: Mrs. Sarah Curry and John A. Politically Mr. Frazee was first a Whig and afterward a Republican; in religious faith he was an earnest member of the Disciple Church at Lone Pine, in which he was an elder for many years. Mrs. Frazee died in 1884, and was followed by her husband March 29, 1888, when in his seventy-sixth year.

John A. Frazee received his primary education at the common schools, attended Pleasant Valley Academy for two years, and also spent one term at Washington and Jefferson College. He remained at home until October 23, 1859, when he was united in marriage with Maria Woodruff, daughter of Joshua and Priscilla Woodruff, of Knox county, Ohio. Mrs. Frazee has the following brothers and sisters all living in Ohio: Mrs. Benjamin Bell, residing near Martinsburgh; Morgan, a resident of Licking county; Mrs. Amanda Murdick, living in Newark, and L. M. Woodruff, a resident of Utica. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Frazee were Calvin, born August 25, 1860; John Hamlin, born March 21, 1862 (died February 25, 1864); Mrs. Priscilla Paul, born January 20, 1864, residing in Washington; Allison J., born January 14, 1866; William W., born January 15, 1868; Eddie, born November 19, 1870 (deceased December 26, 1884); Ida M., born September 19, 1872; Olive, born August 17, 1874; Isa, born November 4, 1876; Odessa, born November 22, 1878; and Angeline, born September 21, 1880, deceased January 11, 1885. Mr. Frazee has been a very successful farmer, and now owns 473 acres of as good land as can be found in his township. In politics he has always been a Republican, and he is much interested in public matters. In religious faith he is a member of the Disciple Church at Lone Pine.

JOHN W. FERGUSON, one of the wide-awake, enterprising and prosperous merchants of Smith township, is a representative of an old pioneer family who trace their genealogy from one John Ferguson, who was born July 5, 1766, in County Down, Ireland, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. In 1793 the good ship "Wilmington" (commanded by Capt. James Jeffries, with John Magee as first mate) sailed for America. Among the passengers bound for the New World were John Ferguson and a neighbor family by the name of Warnock. They landed at Philadelphia, where the friends parted, the Warnocks remaining in that city, while young Ferguson went further west. He invested his small savings in a peddler's pack, and with this meager provision for the future started on his lonely journey of exploration. But among the members of the Warnock family was a daughter Jane, born October 23, 1772, in County Down, Ireland, to whom he had plighted his troth, promising to return and claim his bride when success should reward his efforts. He journeyed along the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, trading on the way. From Pittsburgh, Penn., he made a trip to New Orleans, walking the entire distance on the return journey. He made various other expeditions, finally realizing enough money to enable him to fulfill his long-cherished plans, and return to his love in Philadelphia, who was patiently awaiting his arrival. In 1795 they were made one, and immediately went to Washington county, Penn., locating as tenants on part of a tract of 1,000 acres in Smith township, near the Hanover township line, which had been patented by Capt. Daniel Bavington. The young couple began life in their frontier home, enduring many inconveniences and dangers, and, as was then necessary, he was often obliged to cross the mountains to get salt and provisions. On one of these occasions the young wife was left alone in the cabin, and the wolves (which were at that time very numerous) surrounded it. Unable to keep them outside, the helpless woman fled to the garret, leaving the lower room to the mercy of the brutes, thus escaping with her life. Some years after this, John Ferguson purchased the land on which he resided, and later an adjoining tract, where the rest of his life was passed. He was a representative citizen, possessing good judgment; in politics he was a Democrat, and was often sought for advice on questions of moment, while his wife was no less a valued member of the community. She was a famous nurse, being more successful with her patients than the majority of physicians, and both Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson were members of the old Seceder Church. Their children were Elizabeth (wife of James Smith), born July 7, 1798, who died in 1871, in Beaver county, Penn.; Anne, born December 17, 1801 (deceased in 1819); Mary, born September 5, 1805 (was fatally burned in an accident, dying November 4, 1887, unmarried); and John, born December 14, 1807. The father died February 22, 1842, and November 24, 1850, the wife and mother passed away.

John Ferguson was born on the home farm in Smith township, near Bavington, being reared to agricultural pursuits, and receiving a country-school education. On October 23, 1851, he was married to Martha C. Kryster, who was born January 25, 1825, in Stark county, Ohio, the ceremony taking place at North Springfield, Summit Co., Ohio. She was a daughter of Isaac and Frances (Fraker) Kryster, the former a member of an aristocratic family of Philadelphia, Penn., the latter born near Greensburgh, Westmoreland Co., Penn. They were early settlers of Stark county, Ohio, and parents of seven sons and six daughters.

John and Martha C. (Kryster) Ferguson settled on the home farm in Smith township, and four children were born to them, viz.: Jennie A. (wife of William Beal, a farmer of Beaver county, Penn.), Isaac C. (an agriculturist of Smith township),

John W. (whose name opens this sketch) and May F. (wife of F. B. Stewart). Mr. Ferguson was an eager reader, a practical scholar, and one of the most influential citizens of the community. In early life he gave some attention to dentistry, but never learned it as a profession. In politics he was a Democrat, and served as justice of the peace under the old constitution (which elected for life or good behavior), also serving two terms after the present laws were introduced, filling the position in all for twenty one years. Being a very careful business man, he was often called on to transact important affairs for others, and among the estates which he settled were the Garrett Van Emman, the Calvert, the Free Crafford, the Samuel Clokey, the James Brimmer, the Samuel Neil and the James Stephenson estates, and was also associated with Squire Pollock in settling up the extensive Bavington estate. He held various township offices, was school director for eighteen years, serving as president of the board, and acted as guardian for many children and minors. In religion Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson were members of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown, of which he was an elder over thirty years, and was also a member of the building committee when the second building was erected. His useful life closed January 31, 1882, and Mrs. Ferguson resided on the farm some time after his death, but afterward removed to Bavington, this county, where she is now living with her children, May and John W., enjoying the affection and respect of all who know her.

John W. Ferguson was born January 1, 1858, on the old place in Smith township, where he passed his youth working on the farm and attending the schools of the vicinity. He resided with his parents until twenty-eight years of age, then began clerking for John McBride, a merchant of Bavington, and two years later became a partner. In 1892 he purchased the entire business, which has virtually been under his control for several years, Mr. McBride having devoted his attention principally to other interests. Mr. Ferguson is a progressive and thoroughly competent merchant, and enjoys a large custom. In politics he has for several years been a leading figure in the Democratic party, and has held various township offices with credit to himself. Of late he has been obliged to partially retire from political life, to meet the increasing pressure of his growing business. In religion he is a member of the U. P. Church at Robinson.

Thomas Hodgens, grandfather of the subject proper of this biographical memoir, was a native of County Armagh, Ireland, whence, in the spring of 1807, he emigrated with his family to America. After a brief sojourn in Philadelphia they came to Washington, this county, and in the spring of 1808 Mr. Hodgens purchased a farm in Buffalo township, near the village of Taylorstown, on which they settled. Here Grandfather Hodgens ended his pioneer life, dying in 1821, at the age of sixty-five years, his wife following him to the grave several years later. In his native land Thomas Hodgens has been, in religious faith, a strict Seceder, but after coming to this county, for reasons sound and just, no doubt, he associated himself with the Christian (or Disciple) Church, dying an earnest and devout member thereof, after having taken an active interest in the establishment and welfare of that Society in his township.

Of the four children comprising the family of Thomas Hodgens, a son, by name Isaac, was born in 1794, in County Armagh, Ireland, where he received an excellent educational training under the preceptorship of Alexander Campbell, who afterward came to this country, and established, at Bethany, W. Va., an academy, now known as Bethany College, where Isaac Hodgens (who had immigrated with his parents) completed his education. During their voyage across the Atlantic, the vessel on which were the Hodgens family was boarded by a British man-of-war (probably for the purpose of impressing some of the able-bodied sailors of the merchant ship into the regular navy, as was the custom in those days in time of war—for Great Britain was then at war with France), and by some means Isaac became separated from the rest of the family, and was carried off by the warship. Later, however, he was placed on board the American ship "Martha," and ultimately restored to his parents. In Buffalo township he passed the rest of his active life, engaged in agricultural pursuits, and distinguished himself among his fellows as a man of unimpeachable character, a great reader, deep thinker and possessed of much knowledge. He was a zealous Democrat, and a personal friend of Andrew Jackson. So popular was he, and in such high esteem was he held by the community in which he lived, that he held every position of honor and trust in his township that could be conferred upon him by the people. He served as associate judge of the courts, also as county commissioner, and in the militia of his early times he took an active and conspicuous part, rising to the exalted rank of major-general.

In 1822 Isaac Hodgens married Isabella McCarrell, daughter of Ludawick and Martha (Lemon) McCarrell, the former of whom came from Ireland to Washington county, Penn., in 1790, the latter being a native of the county; they were the parents of a large family. After marriage Mr. and Mrs.

Hodgens resided on the old homestead in Buffalo township till 1835, when they moved into Taylorstown; but after one year's residence there they purchased a farm (now occupied by R. W. Crothers) adjoining the village, and here they passed their declining years, the father dying February 24, 1860, the mother in June, 1872. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom five yet survive, viz.: James, Martha (Mrs. Vance), Isaac (in Kansas City), William L. (a farmer in Iowa) and Robert A. (in Washington county, Pennsylvania).

James Hodgens, whose name opens this sketch, is the fourth child of Isaac and Isabella (McCarrell) Hodgens, and was born September 19, 1829, on the old original homestead in Buffalo township. His rudimentary education he received at the public schools of the neighborhood of his boyhood home, afterward completing his literary training at Jefferson College; and in all his studies, from the child's primer up, he proved an apt and diligent scholar, remarkably quick and intelligent—such a one as the philosopher might have had in his mind's eye when he penned the immortal axiom: "The boy is father to the man." At college he found a favorite study in mathematics, in connection with which he learned civil engineering, of which science he made himself master; and in after life he practiced surveying, in connection with farming and stock raising, for forty years. Mr. Hodgens remained on the old homestead up to the time of his father's death, and then took charge of his present farm in the same township, comprising 250 acres of prime land. In addition to his home interests he owns property in Iowa and elsewhere. He is a prominent member and supporter of the U. P. Church at Taylorstown, and in his political preferences is an active and influential Democrat. He has served as justice of the peace and in other township offices of trust.

On December 24, 1863, James Hodgens was united in marriage with Mary E. Farrar, a native of Washington county, Penn., and a member of an old representative family, of whom special mention will presently be made. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hodgens, and of them six are yet living, viz.: Thomas Milton (cashier of the State Savings Bank, in Butte City, Mont.), Ella Maude, Isaac Walter, James Oscar, Albert McClees and Ralph Morrow.

The FARRAR family in Washington county are descended from James Farrar, who at the commencement of the Revolutionary war resided in Hunterdon county, N. J., where he and his eldest son, James, did blacksmith's work for the American army during its operations in that State. Two other sons—John and Peter—were soldiers in Washington's army, and were both killed at the battle of Long Island. In 1775 Andrew Farrar (another son of the original James Farrar), together with his wife, Margaret (Moore) Farrar, a lady of Irish parentage, crossed the Alleghany mountains into western Pennsylvania and settled in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where he died November 5, 1832, the father of a large family—seven of them being sons, all of whom he reared to maturity.

Aaron Farrar, who was the eighth child, married Jane Griffith, a native of Washington county, born in 1812, and five children came by this union, to wit: Margaret A., Jennie M., John G. (deceased), Mary E. (Mrs. James Hodgens) and Harriet N. (deceased at the age of two years). Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Farrar resided in Mt. Pleasant township until 1815, and then moved to Buffalo township, where he purchased a farm near Taylorstown. A year after settling on this farm Mr. Farrar was summoned to his long home January 6, 1845, passing away in the thirty-sixth year of his age, at peace with all the world. For years he had been a constant and earnest member of the Presbyterian Church, and his life was one of exemplary piety.

WILLIAM S. LEE is a great-grandson of Robert Lee, a native of Ireland, who immigrated to America, and settled in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn. His son Hugh was the grandfather of our subject.

John Lee, father of William S., was born on the home farm in Cross Creek township, this county, and in early life was united in marriage with Mary Ann Walker, who bore him two daughters. He afterward married Jane Ann Scott, who was born October 3, 1817, near Washington, Penn. She was a daughter of Samuel Scott, whose father, Josiah Scott, a native of Scotland, came to this country, where he ended his days. He was married to Jane Noble, who bore him eight children: four sons—Samuel, John, Hugh and Alexander—and four daughters. Samuel Scott was born about 1779, near Washington borough, and remained on the home farm during his boyhood. He was married to Miss Mary Ann, daughter of William Wiley, of this county, and the following children were born to them: William W., Josiah N., Jane Ann and Samuel G. (a prominent farmer of this county).

After his marriage to Jane Ann Scott, John Lee settled on the home farm in Cross Creek township, this county, where the following children were born, the names and dates of birth being given: William S., October 18, 1838; Eliza A., June 13, 1841; Mary M., March 25, 1843; Hannah J., March 20, 1846; John O., August 2, 1847; Samuel W., January 14, 1850; Hugh, December 25, 1851; Alice, January 26, 1853; Lucy, July 19, 1856. The father died April 23, 1856. He was a successful business man, and owned 310 acres of land at the time of his death, which property is now in the possession of his heirs, who occupy it. He was one of the most active politicians in the Whig party; in religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, holding the office of trustee, and working for the Master in many ways.

William S. Lee passed his early life on the home place. On December 31, 1863, he was united in marriage with Mary E., daughter of Thomas P. Vance, whose father, William Vance, born in 1776, was reared in Washington county, where he received a necessarily limited education, as schools were few, and at best afforded but meager opportunities. He was first married to Rachel Patterson, a resident of Cross Creek township, who bore him six children. She died, and a few years afterward he selected a second wife in the person of Hannah Patterson, a member of an old family of Cross Creek township, and to this union, also, there were born six children. William Vance always lived in Cross Creek township, and was one of the representative men of the day. He died in 1856. He was a Whig in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Thomas P. Vance, son of William and Hannah (Patterson) Vance, was born July 15, 1819. He was reared on the pioneer farm, experiencing the privations of early frontiersmen, and received his education at the subscription schools. In early manhood Thomas P. Vance was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of George and Mary (Marquis) Newell, of Ohio, whose children were Hugh, Jane, Marquis, Margaret, David, Mary W., Ann, Sarah, Elanore, Joseph, Bentley, and Elzania. Mr. Newell was a Democrat, and in Church connection was a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas P. Vance settled on a farm in Cross Creek township, this county, where he passed his life in agricultural pursuits. He paid much attention to stock raising, making a specialty of blooded stock. He was formerly a Whig, and upon the organization of the party, became a Republican. In religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Cross Creek. On May 31, 1891, he was laid to rest in Cross Creek cemetery, leaving his wife and two children, W. W. (who married Miss J. A. Porter, of Cross Creek, and is now a successful merchant of Burgettstown), and Mary E. (Mrs. W. S. Lee).

William S. and Mary E. (Vance) Lee began married life on the home farm in Jefferson township, this county, and six years afterward moved to Burgettstown, where they have since resided. They have two children: H. May (wife of W. F. Scott) and Thomas V. (who was married June 3, 1891, to Miss Willa Carnahan, of Burgettstown). William S. Lee carried on a livery business for five years after removing to Burgettstown, but has since been giving his exclusive attention to undertaking. He is now identified with the U. P. Church. He is a leading citizen and an active member of the Republican party, and has been a councilman of Burgettstown for three years.

JL. AUGHENDOBLE, proprietor of meat market, Monongahela, is a native of the county, born in Carroll township, July 17, 1856, a son of Adam Aughendobler. He had very early in life to commence working for a living, and as a consequence had but little opportunity to attend school. He was first employed by Robert Van Voorhis, a farmer of Monongahela, with whom he remained one year; then entered the employ of W. C. Shaw, a gardener who resided at Pine Creek, Allegheny county, and, after three years' engagement with him, clerked for William Kennan, of Monongahela, some years. He also worked for George Kern, in Monongahela, in meat shop twelve years. In 1885 Mr. Aughendobler opened his present meat market and butchering business, in which, by close attention to the wants of his customers, by care in furnishing the choicest meats, and by his well-known urbanity of manner and honorable dealing, he has earned a well-merited success.

On June 8, 1878, our subject was married to Margaret E., daughter of William Brooks, of Monongahela, and the children born to this union are Maude, Adam, Bessie, Leonard and Donald, all living. Mr. Aughendobler is a straight Democrat, and has held the office of councilman in Monongahela two years; he has also served on the school board, having been recently reelected for his second term. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MRS. MARY KEYS. John Keys (deceased) was one of the most respected citizens and prominent business men of Smith township. He was a son of James and a grandson of James Keys, who was born and reared in Cumberland county, Penn., and was there married to a native of the same county, who bore him one son James. Soon after the birth of this son, the father died (about 1777), and his widow was then married to Robert Watson. Her son James lived with them, and in 1794 accompanied the family to Washington county, where they located on Chartiers creek.

In 1800 James Keys was united in marriage with Jane McClelland, who was born in 1779, a daughter of James McClelland, a native of Ireland, who, in an early day settled in the locality of Miller's Run. To the union of James and Jane Keys children were born as follows: Martha (married to William McBride, of Robinson township, this county), Jane (wife of John McBurney, of Mt. Pleasant township), John, James (a retired farmer of Steubenville, Ohio), William (a farmer of Kansas, deceased), Joseph (residing in Smith township) and Ezra (a grocer of Leavenworth, Kans.). After his marriage to Jane McClelland, James Keys moved to Trumbull county, Ohio (then a vast wilderness), remaining there but a short time, and then coming to Smith township, this county, located on a farm in Cherry Valley. In 1822 he represented Washington county in the Legislature, serving five years, and then returned to his farm. He was a brilliant and intellectual man, a leader in every undertaking for the public good. He was a Whig in politics, and in religious connection he and his wife were members of the Seceder Church, in which he was an elder. His wife died in 1838, and, after a useful and successful life, he was laid by her side in 1854.

John Keys was born June 18, 1808, in Smith township, this county, his boyhood being passed on his father's farm. The children of those days had but limited educational advantages, but John Keys eagerly availed himself of such as were within his reach. In 1832 he was united in marriage with Ann May, who was born in 1808, daughter of John May, of Cecil township, this county. To this union were born the following children: Jane, James M. (a farmer who lives in Jefferson county, Ohio), and Phebe (wife of Matthew Galbraith) and Annie B. (wife of John McCalmont), both deceased. The mother died in 1846, and January 23, 1849, he was married to Mary Shillito, who was born January 6, 1822, in Harrison county, Ohio, daughter of John Shillito, the latter a native of Beaver county, Penn. He was married to Jane Biggert, afterward moved to Harrison county, Ohio, and finally located in Washington county, Penn. John and Mary Keys had the following children: Agnes E., Maggie M., Albert M. (an energetic young farmer of Smith township), and Clara (widow of T. P. Weaver) and John (deceased at the age of nineteen years) (twins). Mr. and Mrs. Keys began wedded life on a place in Smith township, and in 1869 settled on the farm where his widow is now living, situated about one mile south of Raccoon Station. In politics Mr. Keys was originally an Old-line Whig, and afterward became a Republican. He was connected with the U. P. Church, being an elder therein for several years, and contributing liberally to its support. He died in May, 1883. His widow is also a member of the U. P. Church, and enjoys the respect of all who know her. She is living on the farm, which is managed by her son, A. M.

JOHAN G. McCORMICK, a progressive agriculturist of Somerset township, is the eldest child of John McCormick, and a grandson of John McCormick, who was born in 1762, in Ireland, and came to America in 1783.

He located in Washington county, Penn., where, in 1812, he was married to Elizabeth Figley, who was born in 1772, and she bore him three children: Margaret, Jacob and John. The father followed farming all his life, and died in his adopted country July 17, 1828, his wife passing away in 1863.

John McCormick, a son of John and Elizabeth (Figley) McCormick, was born June 1, 1815, and received his education in the schools of the period. In 1838 he was married to Juliana Grable, who was born August 15, 1815, and they had five children, namely: John G., Mary (wife of H. B. Leyda, a farmer of Somerset township), Salome, Albert J. (living in Bentleyville), and Elizabeth (deceased). The father of this family was a Democrat in politics. He died May 8, 1887, having been preceded to the grave by his wife May 19, 1845.

John G. McCormick was born June 11, 1839, on the home farm in Somerset township, this county, receiving a common-school education. On December 21, 1869, he was united in marriage with Susan Dickerson, who was born November 19, 1847, in Harrison county, Ohio. She is a daughter of Joshua Dickerson, who was born in 1804, in Pennsylvania, and in 1828 was married to Belijah Lafferty, who bore him nine children, namely: Samuel, Edward, Margaret (wife of David B. Wallace, a farmer of Harrison county, Ohio), Jane (married to Robert Moore, also farming in Harrison county, Ohio), Susan (wife of John G. McCormick), Mary, Louisa, Joshua and Sarah (the four last named being deceased). Joshua Dickerson followed farming, and in politics was a Democrat. He died October 6, 1872, and the mother was laid by his side August 11, 1887. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. and Mrs. McCormick have had one daughter, Juliana, born June 16, 1871. Mr. McCormick is a practical farmer, and deals extensively in stock, which he ships from Chicago. He votes with the Democratic party, but takes little part in active politics, preferring to spend his time in the cultivation of his well-improved farm. He is one of the most enterprising citizens of Somerset township, ever ready to aid all progressive movements.

SAMUEL ALEXANDER MARKS was born October 10, 1849, in Wellsburg, W. Va., and attended the schools of that city during his boyhood. He learned furniture finishing and undertaking, a business he followed in his native town until 1886. He then removed to West Middletown, where he has since been engaged in an undertaking and house furnishing establishment. On March 25, 1886, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Caroline, only daughter of John Sampson. Mr. Sampson was born in 1811, in Pennsylvania, and when a child came with his parents to Cannonsburg, Washington county, where his boyhood was passed. He received a good education as was obtainable, and then learned cabinet making. In 1834 he was married to Sarah McCauley, of Washington county, and removed from Canonsburg to West Middletown. He immediately opened a modest establishment in undertaking and cabinet making, and by upright dealing combined with perseverance, his trade soon increased. He enlarged his factory, employing a number of young men, many of whom there learned the trade. John Sampson acquired a wide reputation as a manufacturer and undertaker, his custom in the latter department extending many miles in all directions. During his active business career of over fifty years, Mr. Sampson carried over five thousand persons to their last resting place, and in all that time he was never late at a funeral. He was a man of unusual intelligence and rare judgment, always interested in the welfare of the community, in which he was an unassuming but earnest worker. Politically he was a firm believer in the principles of the Democratic party, but was never a politician; however, he served three years as director of the poor. In religious connection he was a consistent member of the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church, in which he served many years as a member of the board of trust. Although his home was four miles from church, his pew was never vacant on the Sabbath day, unless he was called upon to perform the necessary duties of his vocation. His wife was laid to rest February 20, 1881, and to her memory no fitter or more tender tribute can be given than the testimony of her relatives and friends: "She was a true Christian wife and mother." Mr. Sampson died February 3, 1886, and was laid to rest by the side of his wife. The life of this well-known and valued citizen is comprised in the simple sentence: "He was a good man and a just," and such lives, we can not doubt, reap their merited reward.

JAMES M. K. REED. Among the leading citizens of Cross Creek township none are more prominently identified with the interests of the community than the above-named gentleman.

Joseph Reed, the first of the family of whom mention is made, was born November 27, 1733, in Ireland, whence he emigrated to America prior to the year 1763. He first located in Lancaster county, Penn., and in 1763 moved to York county, same State. On January 23, 1765, he was united in marriage with Jeanette Brotherton, who was born December 3, 1745, in Ireland, and when two years of age was brought by her parents to America. To this marriage children were born as follows: James, June 7, 1766; Nicholas, April 17, 1768; Agnes, May 8, 1770; Margaret, October 8, 1772; Jeanette, May 1, 1776; Esther, December 24, 1780; Joseph, May 6, 1784; Ann, December 16, 1787; and William, April 18, 1790. Of these, Agnes married her relative, Joseph Reed (who had been in the Continental army during the Revolution), and they came in 1789 to Washington county, where they continued to reside; they are buried in Cross Creek graveyard; their children afterward removed to Armstrong county, Penn. James married his second cousin, Elizabeth Reed, removed to Washington county about 1798, and settled on 200 acres of Col. Reed's 359-acre tract; they reared a family of six children: Joseph, married to Jane Beatty, settled in Richland county, Ohio, and raised a family; William, married to Rosanah, daughter of Robert and Sarah (Rea) Lyle, settled in Ashland county, Ohio (they are the parents of Hon. Joseph R. Reed, now chief justice of U. S. Court of Land Claims); James, married to Margaret Glass, died near Washington, Penn., leaving children; John, married, and moved to Hardin county, Ky., and has three daughters; Jane died unmarried; Mary married Joseph Lyle (now deceased), and resides with her son, James Reed Lyle, near Hickory, Washington Co., Penn. Margaret married James McNary, came to Washington county and settled on part of Col. Reed's 359-acre tract. She raised a family of three sons and three daughters, all of whom married and left descendants. Many of her descendants still live in this county. She died May 25, 1866, and is buried in Hickory graveyard. The other sons and daughters of Col. Reed remained in York county, where many of their descendants still reside.

In 1780 Joseph Reed received of Col. Marshall a farm consisting of 190 acres seventy-five perches and allowances, making over 200 acres, patented as "Pensacola," in Cross Creek township, Washington county. This was given in payment for moving the household effects of Rev. Joseph Smith from York county to Washington county, Penn., and the wagon used is said to have been the first driven west of Washington. He then bought 359 additional acres of Col. Marshall, which is now a part of the McNary tract, owned by John L. Thompson & Bro., but did not move from his old home. Mr. Reed was a miller and farmer. He was a member of the Legislature of Pennsylvania in 1780, having presented the Act leading to the liberation of the slaves in Pennsylvania, and was a member of the Continental Congress in 1787 and 1788. He held the commission of colonel in the American army during the war of the Revolution, and acted for some time in the capacity of quartermaster. He died October 19, 1804, at the age of seventy-one, and is buried in Chanceford graveyard, York county, Penn. His widow came to Washington county after his death, and died January 27, 1838; she is buried in Cross Creek graveyard. She and her young sons, James and Nicholas, operated the mill during the absence of her husband in the army.

Nicholas Reed was born at Reed's Mill, in York county, Penn., and in early life was married to Elizabeth, daughter of James Fulton, of same county. In 1797 the young people settled on the farm in Cross Creek township, Washington county, which had been bought of Col. James Marshall. It was then all heavily timbered woods. Nicholas erected a log cabin where the house of J. C. Reed is now standing, which in 1867 replaced the first. Nicholas Reed passed away in 1854, leaving the following children: Joseph, who settled in Richland county, Ohio; James, who died September 22, 1823, in Huron county, Ohio; William; Hugh, who settled in Richland county, Ohio; Samuel, in Marion county, Ohio; John, in Wabash county, Ind.; Robert, who died unmarried; Jane, who died unmarried; and Eliza, married to James Wilson, and has one daughter, Mrs. Eliza J. Burns, near Claysville, Penn.

William Reed was born February 10, 1801, in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., and in early life learned the trade of a cabinet maker. In 1828 he was united in marriage with Isabella, daughter of Robert and Isabella (McKenzie) Curry, and they then made their first home in Cross Creek village. In 1836 they came to his father's farm in this county, whence in 1840 they went to Allegheny county, finally returning to Washington county in 1844. In 1855, by purchase, he became owner of his father's farm in "Pensacola." In 1859 he deeded 103 acres of his farm to his son, James M. K. Reed, in consideration of $4,000, and the remainder was left to John C. Reed, who is residing on the old homestead. To William and Isabella (Curry) Reed were born children as follows: Eliza J., June 14, 1829, died October 25, 1890, unmarried; James M. K., September 5, 1831; Isabella M., January 16, 1836, married Eli Marquis, and died December 28, 1865, leaving one daughter, Flora M. Pyles, of Orange county, Cal.; and John C., March 6, 1838, residing on the old homestead. The father of these children died in February, 1877, the mother October 1, 1849. William Reed was much honored in his community, taking an active interest in the general welfare of the county, and holding various positions of trust and honor in his township. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a trustee of the same.

J. M. K. Reed received a liberal common school education, and at the age of twenty years began teaching a district school. In the spring of 1852 he entered Pittsburgh Commercial College, from which he graduated. During the following summer he studied privately under the instruction of Robert Curry, Ph. D., principal of Canonsburg union schools, and then again taught school, continuing until 1860, during the winter months. One summer he taught with Dr. Curry in West Manchester (now a part of Allegheny), and one summer was professor of penmanship in the New Brighton Female Seminary, established by Dr. Curry.

On October 28, 1858, Mr. Reed married Miss Mary P. Tucker, who was born in Merrimack county, N. H., a daughter of David and Clarissa Tucker, who in 1849 removed to Richland county, Ohio. John Tucker, grandfather of Mrs. Reed, came from Scotland to New Hampshire, and he was a son of Ezra, who was a son of Jacob. David Tucker was a prominent man in New Hampshire, was a justice of the peace, and prior to his marriage he went to Ohio, where he entered land, to which he afterward finally moved. Mrs. Reed, before marriage, taught several terms in common schools of Ohio. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Reed settled on their present farm in Cross Creek township, their first residence thereon being a log house built in 1826 by an uncle, Hugh Reed, and which is still standing. In 1879 our subject erected the present fine house, and in 1889 his commodious barn. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. J. M. K. Reed were as follows: Clara Bell, born August 29, 1859 (a teacher in the public schools of Imperial, Allegheny Co., Penn.); Irene Jane, born January 24, 1861 (married June 2, 1887, to John H. Chapman, and they now reside in Hanover township, Washington county); Clinton May, born May 1, 1864, died June 1, 1866; Alice Mary, born May 14, 1867 (a teacher); Mabel Blanche, born November 30, 1870; Alma Livonia, born June 12, 1874; and James Winfield, born January 30, 1878. The parents are members of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church (in which Mr. Reed has been trustee several years; he was formerly member of the U. P. Church at Patterson's Mills). Politically he is a Democrat, and has served as school director, auditor, supervisor, and he is now serving his fourth term (of five years each) as justice of the peace. He is one of the original incorporators, stockholders and directors of the Cross Creek Cemetery Association, and, being their secretary, largely assisted in laying out and starting their beautiful cemetery at Cross Creek village.

ROBERT GILLIS TAYLOR. Among the prominent agriculturists of East Bethlehem township, the above named gentleman occupies a leading place. He traces his lineage back through the years to one Beriah Taylor, who was born in England, and, emigrating to America, settled in New Jersey. He was there married to Keziah Gaskill, who bore him eleven children, of whom Beriah is named; the parents died at a good old age.

Beriah Taylor, son of Beriah and Keziah Taylor, was born June 18, 1785, and served in the war of 1812. He learned the blacksmith's trade, and was married to Elizabeth Short, who was born February 8, 1786, in Virginia. She was a daughter of John Short, a native of Scotland, who, having been forbidden to leave his native land, concealed himself in the hull of an American-bound vessel until well out at sea. He settled in Virginia, and there was united in marriage with Alsie Craven, a native of Germany, who was then residing in Loudoun county, Va. John and Alsie Short reared a family of ten children, and died at an advanced age. To the marriage of Beriah and Elizabeth (Short) Taylor twelve children were born. The father died at the age of eighty-eight years.

Caleb Taylor, son of Beriah and Elizabeth Taylor, was born April 15, 1811, and learned the wagon-maker's trade. He was married to Mary Gillis, daughter of Robert, and granddaughter of John Gillis, who was a native of Ireland. The grandfather was married in Old Erin to Mary Martin, and she bore him two sons, viz.: Robert and Samuel. These children came to America, locating in Huntingdon county, Penn., where Robert Gillis was married, in October, 1814, to Agnes Porter, who was born June 20, 1787, and was a daughter of James and Sarah Porter. Robert and Agnes Gillis settled in Washington county, Penn., where their daughter Mary (who became the wife of Caleb Taylor) was born. Caleb and Mary Taylor were the parents of thirteen children, four of whom are yet living. The parents passed their lives in Washington county, where their father died August 3, 1870, followed by the mother July 30, 1880.

Robert Gillis Taylor was born December 13, 1834, in Washington county, Penn., and attended the country schools of the locality of his birth. On September 30, 1861, he answered the call of his troubled country, and served thirteen months under Col. Joshua B. Howell, of Uniontown, Penn., as second lieutenant, in Company E, Eighty-Fifth P. V. I., but being attacked with partial paralysis he was obliged to resign his commission. After regaining his health Mr. Taylor was for two years receiving clerk for the A. V. R. R. at Pittsburgh, Penn., then became first clerk on one of the packets belonging to the Pittsburgh, Brownsville & Geneva Packet Company. In 1886 Gov. Pattison appointed him to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Moses McKeag, late commissioner of the Cumberland Road. Mr. Taylor is now engaged in agricultural pursuits on his farm, which is located four miles from West Brownsville, in East Bethlehem township. He is a loyal member of the Democratic party, and in 1887 was elected county commissioner of Washington county, having received 5,705 votes, which was next to the highest number on his ticket. Our subject was twice married: first, November 7, 1867, to Mary Ann, daughter of Nathan and Jane Taunehill, and three sons were born of this union: John William, August 28, 1869; Nathan T., April 4, 1872, died February 23, 1876, and James Robert, November 29, 1875. The mother of these children dying August 21, 1876, Mr. Taylor married, on October 27, 1878, Ellen W., daughter of Zephaniah and Ann W. Crawford. The sons of Mr. Taylor are attending school, John William studying for the ministry.

WILLIAM DENNISTON sailed from Ireland in 1774, and a short time after landing in America he enlisted as a soldier in the war of the Revolution. After peace was declared he settled in Chester county, Penn., and afterward married Elizabeth Wilson, daughter of an early pioneer. A few years later they moved to Allegheny county, same State, and settled on Chartiers creek, on the old Neville farm, so famous as the scene of the Whisky Insurrection. Their family consisted of the following children: Nancy Abbie, Mary, Thomas, Sarah, Samuel, Joseph and William. In the year 1827 three of the sons—Samuel, Joseph and William—purchased the Jacob Long farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., whither they moved with their parents. The father died in 1842, the mother in 1846, and both are buried in the cemetery at Centre Church.

Samuel Denniston was born February 27, 1796, in Allegheny county, and April 21, 1836, was married to Elizabeth, daughter of William Caldwell. They lived on the farm near Thompsonville until April 1, 1839, when they bought the William James farm in Union township, same county. Here he conducted an extensive farming business, giving his attention chiefly to that of sheep and cattle raising. In 1850 he erected all necessary buildings. In 1851 the mother died leaving the following children: William, John W. (deceased), Mary J., Elizabeth, Thomas and Sarah A. (deceased). On March 17, 1853, Mr. Denniston married Elizabeth Applegate, and two children were the result of this marriage: James A. and Rachel N. (both deceased). In politics he was a strong advocate of the principles embodied in the Republican party. In religion he held to the faith of his father who was a rigid Presbyterian. He died September 7, 1879, and was buried in Mingo cemetery, Union township.

William Denniston, son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Caldwell) Denniston, was born February 11, 1838, near Thompsonville, Peters township. On August 19, 1861, he, with many other brave boys of Union township, in answer to their country's call, enlisted in Company I, First Pennsylvania Reserve Cavalry, under Col. George D. Bayard. After returning home he remained on the farm until 1870, when he spent a year in the West. The father died in 1879. William and his brother Thomas have managed the farm, giving their attention principally to stock raising.

Thomas Denniston was born May, 19, 1847. On August 14, 1884, he was married to Marian V., daughter of Isaac Lytle, Esq., of Gastonville. They, with their two children, Lawrence and Helen, live at the old home.

WILLIAM COULTER, a wealthy and leading citizen of Monongahela, was born November 11, 1817, in western Pennsylvania. His father, James Coulter, was born in Ireland, and when but six years of age came with his parents to America. They first located in western Pennsylvania, then came to Williamsport (now Monongahela), Washington Co., Penn. When a young man James Coulter was married to a Miss Blakney, who lived but a short time, and his second choice was Nancy Nichols, who resided near Pittsburgh, Penn. She bore him children as follows: Raphael B. (deceased), William, James (deceased), and Robert. The father was a Whig and Republican in politics, and in religious faith a member of the Presbyterian Church. He passed the remainder of his life in Monongahela, and was killed while hauling a load of fodder, having been thrown from a wagon, whereby his leg was broken above the ankle. He died in 1823, from the effects of the injury, at the age of sixty-nine years, and was followed to the grave by his wife in 1843.

William Coulter came to Monongahela in 1817, and received his education in one of the earliest subscription schools, which he attended during the winter season only. At the age of fourteen years he began working in a brickyard, where he remained three years. He then learned and completed the carpenter and millwright trades, to which most of his time has since been devoted, having taken contracts in different portions of Washington county. In February, 1840, he married Rebecca, daughter of James Collins, of Monongahela. She died in 1856, leaving eight children, all now deceased. For his second wife William Coulter was married June 25, 1857, to Forbes, a daughter of William Stockdale, of Carroll township, this county. Her father was born in County Down, Ireland, where he grew to manhood and was married to Jane Manown; they came to America in 1811, and first settled on a farm in Allegheny county, Penn., afterward locating in Washington county, same State. He followed farming all his life, and in politics he was a Whig. William Stockdale died in 1851, in Washington county, Penn., having been preceded by his wife in 1834, who had borne him children as follows: Sarah, John, Rachel, Richard, Margaret, James, William, Eliza J., Forbes (Mrs. Coulter) and Robert. To the union of William and Forbes (Stockdale) Coulter the following children have been born: Sarah, William, Ella, Carrie, P. Sheridan and Robert, all living except William and Robert. Mr. William Coulter has been the architect of his own fortune, and has ever made the interests of the community identical with his own. In politics he was originally a Whig, and now votes with the Republican party, and he has served as a member of the council and school board.

THE SAMPSON FAMILY, who are among the most influential and wealthy citizens of Carroll township, were originally natives of Westmoreland county, Penn., where William Sampson was born in 1765. He was married in that State to Mary Nill (who bore him four children), and some time after his marriage the family came to Washington county, where the father died in 1815.

James Sampson, son of William and Mary Sampson, was born February 5, 1806, just above Webster, on the Monongahela river, in Westmoreland county, Penn. He came with his parents to Washington county in 1810, and in 1840 was married to Mary Grant, a native of the last named county. She bore him seven children, of whom are named William T., Harvey J. and John G. The mother died in 1888. James Sampson has carried on a distillery for twenty years in connection with farming, and now owns 1,250 acres of land. He was president of the People's Bank of Monongahela City for twenty-two years, and is one of the leading citizens of Washington county.

HARVEY J. SAMPSON was born April 21, 1850, in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., and was reared to agricultural pursuits. On February 17, 1876, he married Miss Jennie B. Yorty, a native of Westmoreland county, Penn., and daughter of John and Nancy (Brewer) Yorty, prominent citizens of Carroll township, now deceased. Harvey J. and Jennie B. Sampson are the parents of the following children: Bertie O., born June 17, 1877; Grace L., born September 19, 1879; James E., born April 11, 1881; Ada E., born August 4, 1885; Frank H., born February 20, 1888, and Ethel J., born September 8, 1890. Mr. Sampson is a very progressive and enterprising citizen, and, politically, affiliates with the Republican party. He owns 276 acres of land in Carroll township, and breeds some of the best trotting horses in Washington county.

REV. WILLIAM R. M'KEE, the earnest and well-known pastor of the United Presbyterian Congregation of Robinson, traces his lineage back to one Joseph M'Kee, a native of the North of Ireland, who immigrated to this country near the close of the last century, and located on a farm in Jefferson county, Ohio. His wife was a Miss Ramsey, of that county, and to them were born nine sons and two daughters. Two of their sons are still living: Joseph (a minister in Los Angeles, Cal.), and Ralston (a farmer near Mansfield, Ohio). Mr. M'Kee was a prominent citizen of eastern Ohio, being called to serve as a member of the first Legislature of the State of Ohio, and as associate judge of Jefferson county for a number of years. He was also a ruling elder in the Associate Presbyterian Congregation of Mount Pleasant, Ohio, for many years. He died at the advanced age of ninety-five.

James M'Kee, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born February 6, 1800, and reared on the home farm in Jefferson county. When a young man he followed the profession of teaching for some time. He was able to take a class in arithmetic as far as through the "Single rule of three," corresponding to the first case of proportion in modern text books. This was as far as classes in common schools were usually taken in arithmetic in those days. On February 27, 1821, he was married to Miss Susanna Ramsey, who bore him one daughter, Jane. The mother died April 18, 1822, and for his second wife Mr. M'Kee married Miss Martha Humphry, who was born November 3, 1791, in Ohio county, W. Va. She was a daughter of Robert Humphry, a soldier of the Revolutionary war, and among the many engagements in which he participated are mentioned: Bunker Hill, Brandywine and Germantown. Shortly after the close of the war he was married, and the young couple settled in what was then the wilds of Virginia, within the bounds of what is now known as Ohio county, W. Va., but near to the Pennsylvania line. They were many times compelled to flee from their home to the fort, for safety from the Indians, the last time when the infant daughter Martha was three weeks old. Mr. Humphry laid out the village of West Alexander, Penn., on one of his farms, calling it for his wife, whose maiden name was Jane Alexander. Five children were born to the union of James and Martha M'Kee, viz.: Robert and John (who both died in boyhood), Joseph (a physician of Denver, Colo.), James A. (for twenty-seven years pastor of the U. P. Congregation of Wheeling, five miles south of Claysville in this county, now of Emporia, Kans.) and William R. The father and mother both died in Washington, Iowa, the former August 1, 1873, the latter March 17, 1866.

Yours Very Truly,

W R M & Co.

William R. M'Kee was born in Ohio county, W. Va., September 13, 1832. His father's family removed to Ohio, settling when he was seven years old on a farm near Wooster, Wayne county. Here they lived until he was sixteen, and then removed to Harrison county, Ohio, near to New Athens, the seat of Franklin College, from which institution he graduated September 8, 1854. After spending one year in teaching he commenced the study of medicine, but, before completing the course, abandoned it, and entered the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Xenia, Ohio, where he graduated in the spring of 1859, and was licensed to preach the Gospel April 19, 1859, by the U. P. Presbytery of Wheeling, in the city of Wheeling, W. Va. During his ministry of thirty-three years he has had but two charges, both substantial country congregations. His first settlement was in the congregation of West Hebron, Washington Co., N. Y., where he was ordained and installed, September 19, 1860. Here he remained until the fall of 1867. On April 30, 1863, he was united in marriage with Miss Frances Lytle, of Xenia, Ohio. Her father was born and reared in Mitlin, Penn. On April 15, 1821, he married Miss Fannie Smart, of Huntington, Penn., a granddaughter of Rev. John Smart, who came to this country from Scotland in 1761, and a sister of Revs. J. P. and John G. Smart, well-known ministers of the U. P. Church. To them were born John S. (long a wholesale dry-goods merchant of Dayton, Ohio), David and James P. (boot and shoe merchants of Cincinnati, Ohio), Robert (of the Second National Bank, Xenia, Ohio), Rachel Mary, J. Smith, Margaret Jane (deceased), and Frances. When Frances was six years old the family removed to Ohio, settling on a farm in Greene county; afterward they located in Xenia, where she graduated from the Union Female Seminary, an institution conducted for several years under the superintendence of Mrs. Hannah, of Washington, Penn. To Mr. and Mrs. M'Kee have been born three daughters: Martha Luella, Etta Lytle (Mrs. D. J. McCabe, Coraopolis, Penn.) and Emma Jane (deceased).

On October 18, 1869, Mr. M'Kee was installed pastor of Robinson Congregation, by the Presbytery of Frankfort. Here he has remained to the present time, February, 1893, a period of twenty-three and one-half years, being, we believe, the longest present existing pastorate, with one exception, in all those parts of Pennsylvania and West Virginia bounded by the Pan Handle Railroad and the Ohio river. This charge has been no sinecure. Being almost ten miles long from north to south and seven miles wide from east to west it has given him almost incessant labor, and yet he believes that few pastors have found fields of labor affording them a higher degree of pleasure than has he. In this field he has met with a good degree of success. While no great revivals have marked their career, yet there has been a steady growth in numbers and efficiency. Although situated entirely in the country, and in a community where almost all the families are in connection with some church, with but little emigration into it, but subject to the usual depletion by death, emigration from it, and especially that drain of our young men to the cities, which is telling so fearfully on all of our country churches, it has increased in membership from 110 to 200. Never in all these years has there been a deeper sympathy or more cordial feeling than exists between this pastor and his people to-day, and never has his work, and theirs with him, been more efficient for good than it is to-day. It is pleasant to close this sketch with such a record, and we but echo the wish of especially the Christian people of this county, that the days of one so long and favorably known among us may yet be many, and that his last days may be his best days, both in usefulness and in happiness.

MRS. JOANNA BOONE is a daughter of Samuel K. Weirich, now a resident of Washington borough, and the widow of James M. Boone, to whom she was united in marriage April 23, 1863.

James M. Boone (deceased) was born March 29, 1829, in Washington county, Penn., a son of James M. and Margaret (Miller) Boone, who were of Irish descent. He passed his youth on the farm, where he received a good education. He inherited and also acquired habits of sobriety and industry, to which much of his success in life was due. After his marriage to Miss Weirich, he lived in Canton township, Washington county, until 1871, when he removed to the place in Buffalo township, which is situated on the line of the B. & O. R. R., Chartiers Station. Mr. and Mrs. Boone had the following children: Mattie, Edwin, Susie, Anna, Emma (wife of David Moore) and Maggie (who is married to Robert W. Davis, of Canton township, Washington county, son of Dr. R. W. Davis). The unmarried children are living on the home farm with their mother. James M. Boone was esteemed by all who knew him, being a devout Christian man, benevolent, almost to a fault. He believed that an abundance of worldly goods is intrusted to some men by the Creator for the purpose of doing good, and that "he that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord"—a Bible precept to which he strictly adhered. The truth of a companion saying: "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and after many days it shall return to thee," was forcibly illustrated in the life of Mr. Boone. He had an abundance of property which was acquired by industry and enterprise, and the advancement of the Master's cause was ever uppermost in his mind. His earnest efforts in the church will long be remembered. Some men are practically dead even while existing, and others, though their "tenement of clay" has crumbled to its primitive dust, yet live in the lives and hearts of others, exerting a powerful influence for good. We do not exaggerate the simple truth when we affirm that James M. Boone was a good example of the latter class, and none can estimate the good inculcated by his life on both the present and future of Washington county. He passed away December 23, 1891, after a protracted illness of three months.

WS. THOMPSON, a prominent farmer of Mt. Pleasant township, is a son of Allen Thompson, who was a son of Allen Thompson, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, who, when a young man, came to Washington county. About the year 1812 Allen Thompson (1) was married to Martha Lindsay, and, settling on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township adjoining the present home of W. S. Thompson, passed his life in the county. His wife died in 1871.

Allen Thompson, son of the pioneer Allen, was born in February, 1824, on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where he remained during his boyhood. In 1848 he was united in marriage with Mary Jane Griffith, who was born in June, 1827, in Chartiers township, a daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Boone) Griffith. Samuel Griffith was born in Maryland, and when a boy came with his parents to Buffalo township, this county. He was married in Chartiers township to Elizabeth Boone, a native of Delaware, and settled in Chartiers township, this county, where he died in 1869 at the age of seventy years. In 1888 his wife was laid to rest by his side. They were both members of Miller's Run Presbyterian Church. In 1849 Allen Thompson and his young wife came to Mt. Pleasant township, settling in 1852 on the home farm, which was then owned by one Guthrie. Three children were born to this couple: Nancy M. (married to James Kerr, of Chartiers township, this county), W. S. (subject of this sketch) and Martha Elizabeth (wife of Hamilton Crawford, of North Strabane township). The father followed carpentering and farming in Mt. Pleasant township, afterward moving to Cecil township, this county, where he died in 1853. He was a member of Miller's Run Presbyterian Church. In 1872 his widow (who is yet living) was married to William Hays (a native of Chartiers township), who died in April, 1881.

W. S. Thompson was born February 22, 1851, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and was educated in the McNary's district school in Chartiers township. In 1878 he was married to Mattie Henry, a native of Cecil township, and daughter of Samuel and Martha (McConnell) Henry, also natives of Cecil township, this county, who died many years ago. After his marriage W. S. Thompson remained in Chartiers township until 1880, when he bought eighty-two acres of land in Mt. Pleasant township, where he has since resided; he has made many improvements, and erected a good house and barn upon the farm. His wife died in 1883, leaving two children to mourn her death: Lizzie M. and Mattie Henry. In 1885 Mr. Thompson was united in marriage with Belle Barnett, a native of Chartiers township, daughter of Ephraim Barnett. The latter was born and reared in Chartiers township, this county, and was married to Sarah Willard, a native of Cecil township, this county. They lived in Chartiers township, where Ephraim Barnett died in 1876; his widow is yet living on the homestead.

W. S. and Belle (Barnett) Thompson have had one child, Boyd Barnett. Mr. Thompson is a Republican, but casts his ballot for the best man, regardless of party preferences. In religious connection he and his wife are members of Miller's Run Presbyterian Church, in which he is a ruling elder.

STEPHEN D. MILLER, a well-known citizen of Amwell township, is a son of Joseph Miller, whose father emigrated from Ireland, and located in Greene county, Penn., where Joseph was born February 1, 1791.

Joseph Miller learned the carpenter's trade, cabinet making and undertaking, and in the course of his wide experience in the latter vocation was called on to bury the remains of Rev. Solomon Spaulding, who wrote the romance entitled "Manuscript Found," on which, it is claimed, the "Book of Mormon" was founded. In the war of 1812 Joseph Miller became a member of Capt. William Patterson's military company, and was sent to Black Rock, on the Niagara river. He saw no active service, but remained there with his company until they were ordered into winter quarters, when the volunteers returned home on furlough, and Mr. Miller's company traveled on foot through southern New York to Amwell township, Washington county. It was a toilsome and adventurous journey, over several feet of crusted snow, at times guided only by a narrow Indian trail, traveling twenty-eight miles, one day, with no human habitation in sight. Joseph and a comrade were obliged to carry, besides their own burdens, another brother who was sick; but they finally arrived home the day before Christmas, after having been thirteen days on the route. On March 4, 1813, Joseph Miller was married to Parmelia Harris, of Anwell township, Washington county, and then began work on the farm in the same township, which is now owned by George Swart, in 1816 moving to the farm now owned by A. J. Swart. Joseph and Parmelia Miller had the following named children: Nehemiah, Mulvina (deceased), William (deceased), John F., Benjamin (deceased), Tunis and Stephen D. Mr. Miller owned a farm of forty-two acres near the village of Ten-Mile, in Anwell township, and was considered a good business man. In politics he was formerly an Old-line Whig, afterward becoming a Republican. He was an elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which he and his wife were members for many years. Mrs. Miller died in 1862, and Mr. Miller followed her, April 12, 1885, in his ninety-fifth year.

Stephen D. Miller was born August 29, 1833, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., and acquired but a meager education in the public schools of the neighborhood, which, however, he made a good practical use of. On August 11, 1853, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Baldwin, of Anwell township, and their children were as follows: John F., born December 11, 1854, died January 11, 1855; William, born March 28, 1860, was killed June 29, 1870; Emma Frances, born March 20, 1864; Phebe Jane, born December 25, 1865; John B., born January 1, 1870; and Thomas and Elizabeth (twins), born October 10, 1872. The mother of this family dying October 22, 1872, Mr. Miller married, April 30, 1873, Sarah McCracken, who bore him the following children: Herbert McCracken, born February 18, 1874; Clark H., born November 16, 1875; Effie Z., born December 20, 1877; Myrtie Iona, born April 24, 1879, and Melville D., born March 2, 1882.

After his first marriage Mr. Miller began work in a sawmill, disposing of which he worked the Evans farm three years, and in 1867 purchased the farm of eighty-five acres where he has since resided, engaged in general agriculture, and also following the undertaking business; by industry and good management he has been most successful. In politics he has been a Republican ever since the formation of the party, having voted for John C. Fremont, the first candidate in that party for President. He has been treasurer of the school board twelve years, and is now road commissioner. Mr. Miller and the greater part of the family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

SAMUEL C. IMHOFF, one of the young and energetic farmers of Canton township, was born August 16, 1863, upon the farm where he still resides, and which was also the birthplace of his father. Very little is known of the grandfather of our subject, except that he was a native of eastern Pennsylvania, and died in middle life, leaving the following children: George, William, Henry, Samuel and two daughters. Samuel Imhoff was born December 30, 1816, and although receiving but a limited education, he possessed a strong mind which easily grasped the knotty problems of life, and came from each contest fresh and vigorous, ready for another battle. In early manhood he went to California, and remained there six years. He was married to Mary J. Stewart, a resident of Canton township, and she bore him only one child, Samuel C. Mr. Imhoff was originally a Whig, later becoming an active worker in the Republican ranks; in religious faith he was a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died in December, 1874, and was followed by his wife March 22, 1881. They both rest in the Upper Buffalo cemetery.

Samuel C. Imhoff attended the common schools of the neighborhood during his minority, and when old enough assumed the management of the farm, upon which he has always lived. On January 28, 1886, he married Emma J., daughter of James Smiley, of Cross Creek township, and they have two children: Mary S., born November 21, 1886, and James C., born May 19, 1889. He is an energetic supporter of the Republican party, and, with his family, is a member of the United Presbyterian Church of North Buffalo.

BH. WINGET (deceased) was a native of Washington, Washington Co., Penn., born November 24, 1818. His father, Moses Winget, removed in an early day from New Jersey to Washington county, Penn., where he purchased land and reared a large family, giving them such educational advantages as the neighboring schools afforded. Reared under these auspices, young Mr. Winget began life as a farmer, which vocation he followed during the whole of his life. By dint of energy and economy he had amassed a comfortable fortune at the time of his death.

He was married February 28, 1838, to Miss Matilda, a daughter of William Garrett, who moved from Maryland in the early days to Harrison county, Ohio, and thence to Lancaster, Ohio.

where Mrs. Winget was born. To the union of B. H. and Matilda Winget were born twelve children, seven of whom are living, as follows: Caroline M., Theodore, Mary E., Osborne, Florella A., Steven and Clara. Mr. Winget died in 1878, and Mrs. Winget and the family still reside on the farm, which is located just outside of Sparta, in Morris township.

A W. MILLER. Among the representative and prosperous agriculturists of Chartiers township, A. W. Miller is prominently identified. His grandfather, Andrew Miller, was born and reared in Ireland, where he was married to Sarah Steele, and came to America about 1800. He first located on the road from Hickory to Canonsburg, on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and then moved to a place one mile and a half northwest of Hickory, this county, afterward settling on the farm on the north fork of Chartiers creek, which is now occupied by our subject. Their children were James, Thomas, Andrew and Jane.

James Miller was born in 1812, in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, and was reared on the home farm. He attended Jefferson College, and after graduating read law in Washington with Hon. Isaac Leet, being admitted to the bar in 1840. In the same year he was united in marriage with Mary Watson, who was born in 1820, in Canonsburg, daughter of John Watson, a native of Pennsylvania. After his marriage Mr. Miller moved to Wooster, Ohio, there following his profession, and taking an active part in the politics of Wayne county, Ohio. He was a member of the Seceder Church, afterward uniting with the United Presbyterian Church. After his death, which occurred in 1844, Mrs. Miller returned to Mt. Pleasant township, this county, then moved to Houstonville, where she is now residing. She is the mother of two children: A. W., and Mary E. (wife of A. T. Haft, of Houstonville).

A. W. Miller was born September 27, 1841, in Wooster, Wayne Co., Ohio, and was the eldest of his father's family. He was brought to this county when but a child, reared in Mt. Pleasant and Chartiers townships, and received a subscription school education. On November 25, 1861, he was united in marriage with Allie A., daughter of Levi and Margaret (McClellan) Griffith. Mr. Griffith was a carpenter and builder, who located near Canonsburg after his marriage, and there followed his trade for many years. He died in 1886 in Canonsburg, where his widow is yet living.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller settled on the old farm where his grandfather located in 1848, and the following children have blessed their union: George B. (married, and in the boot and shoe business at Mansfield, Allegheny Co., Penn.), Ida (wife of Samuel Morgan, of Chartiers township), Minnie, Andrew (a merchant of Pittsburgh, Penn.), James (a boot and shoe merchant at Kensington, Allegheny Co., Penn.), Edward, Clarence and Alvin, the last three named living at home. The home farm consists of 177 acres of good land, which is well improved, and is adorned with a fine brick residence and good out-buildings. Mr. Miller devotes a considerable portion of his time to raising a fine grade of stock. He is actively interested in politics, voting with the Democratic party, as did his fathers before him. He has served as supervisor of Chartiers township, as a member of the school board, and has always been interested in school matters. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Houstonville, of which he is a trustee.

SAMUEL SMITH, one of the leading citizens of Canonsburg, is a son of Christopher Smith, who was born, reared and educated in Washington county. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of Reuben Hull, a native of this county. The following children were born to this marriage: Andrew, William, Robert, John, Richard, Samuel, Maybury, J. P., Elizabeth (wife of George Shields) and Lydia (Mrs. George Buchanan). The father of this family was a farmer and stock raiser; he had purchased an unimproved farm in Smith township, where he always resided. He was a Whig, and in religious faith was connected with the Raccoon Presbyterian Church from the time of its first organization. He died in 1814, and was buried by the side of his wife in the Raccoon cemetery.

Samuel Smith was born in March, 1812, on the home farm in Smith township, this county, and attended the log cabin subscription school of the vicinity. In 1828 he went to Guernsey county, Ohio, becoming the apprentice of Samuel Lawrence, a tanner, with whom he remained four and one half years. At the expiration of that time he returned to Pennsylvania, and opened a tannery in Canonsburg, which he has since conducted. In 1835 he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of John McCoy, North Strabane township, this county, and she dying July 20, 1855, he was married October 3, 1856, to Mary, daughter of Stewart Goshorn, and she bore him children as follows: Tryphenia (Mrs. B. C. Arnold), Samuel C., Mrs. Joseph Carter, Mary (wife of Alvin Forsythe), George V. and Sadie. The mother of these children died February 4, 1865, and on December 10, 1873, Mr. Smith was married to Ella Hanna, and after her death to Sarah J., daughter of Daniel Gault.

Politically Mr. Smith was a Whig, and has been a Republican since the organization of the latter party, and has taken an active part in local offices, especially those pertaining to school and borough interests. In religion he has for many years been a member of the U. P. Church at Canonsburg, and was also a member of the Session. He is a successful business man and prominent citizen.

WILLIAM LOUGEAY GASTON. Among the citizens of Union township, whose names are indissolubly associated with its history and general progress, is this well-known gentleman. His early ancestors were natives of France, whence one Samuel Gaston emigrated to this country many years ago. He located in Washington county, Penn., on a tract of 350 acres, where his life was passed, he dying at about eighty years of age; he was buried in Mingo cemetery. He was twice married, and reared a large family of children. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

William Gaston, son of Samuel Gaston, was born in 1808, in Gastonville, Union township, Washington county, and attended school in the log school-house of the period. He was married to a Miss Morrison, who bore him two children, and died in 1834. Mr. Gaston was a member of the I. O. O. F., and in politics voted with the Democratic party; in religious faith he was a Presbyterian. He gave his children a good education. He was a generous, kind-hearted, fine-looking man, and a friend to every one alike. He died in 1884.

Maj. James M. Gaston, son of William Gaston, was born in 1832, in Gastonville, Washington county. He attended the common schools, and then entered Washington and Jefferson College. In early life he married Matilda Ensell, of Pittsburgh, Penn., a daughter of Edward Ensell, who was of English descent. Mr. and Mrs. Gaston resided in Lawrence county, Penn., for a short time after their marriage. He was a farmer by occupation, and during the latter part of his life was a sawyer and lumberman. Their children were as follows: Mary P., living in Gastonville; Ida S., wife of John McChain; Hattie B.; Edward, deceased in infancy, and William Lougeay. The father entered the Civil war as a volunteer, and served three years in the First Pennsylvania Cavalry; he was wounded three times, once at the battle of Gettysburg, and being taken sick while in the service, returned home to Washington county. Politically he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Methodist Church. He died September 8, 1885, in his fifty-sixth year.

William Lougeay Gaston was born April 15, 1861, in Gastonville, Penn. He received his education in the common schools of his native village, and attended Duff's Commercial College, Pittsburgh. Beginning life without capital, Mr. Gaston has secured a snug property, having successfully engaged in the lumber, sawmill and farming businesses, and is now conducting a butchery. In political opinion he is a Democrat. On September 16, 1885, he was united in marriage with Emma, daughter of Frank P. Scott, M. D., of Monongahela, and she has borne him two children: Myrna and Scott. Mr. and Mrs. Gaston are members of the Presbyterian Church. For ten years he resided at Gastonville. At present he is a resident of Finleyville.

SAMUEL PROVINES was born in 1803, in County Tyrone, Ireland. In about 1812 his parents, William and Rebecca (Hemp-hill) Provines, came to America with their family of five children—Mary, Samuel, Andrew, John and Robert—landed at Philadelphia, where they remained some time, and then came farther west. Having but a limited supply of money, their manner of traveling was in the most economical fashion, several members of the family walking a considerable part of the distance. In about 1813 they came to Washington county, Penn., first locating in Cherry Valley, where other children were born, viz.: Margaret, James, Sarah, Jane and Rebecca; later they removed to Jefferson township.

Samuel Provines was reared to manhood on the farm of his father, receiving but limited opportunities for an education. In 1836 he was married to Isabella Gracey, a native of Cross Creek township, this county, and daughter of John Gracey. To the union of Samuel and Isabella Provines children were born as follows: John (who now has charge of the home farm, together with his brother Andrew), William (a carpenter, of Dennison, Ohio), James (a carpenter), Rebecca (living at home), Andrew (also at home), Margaret (living on the old place), Samuel (a carpenter, of Wellsburg, W. Va.), Henry (deceased in early manhood) and Harper H. (a carpenter, of Wilmerding, Allegheny county). After his marriage, Samuel Provines settled in Hanover township, on the farm which he had purchased before his marriage, and at the time it was nearly all covered with woods, which he cleared away. Although beginning life with comparatively nothing, he accumulated a good property. In politics he was a lifelong Democrat, and an ardent supporter of that party. He was called from the scene of his labors in 1877, and was followed to the grave by his wife in 1885; their remains rest in Burgettstown United Presbyterian Cemetery. They were both consistent members of the United Presbyterian Church.

MORGAN L. DUNN, farmer, was born on Ruff creek, Morgan township, Greene Co., Penn., a son of Joseph and Jane Dunn. His paternal grandfather, Isaac Dunn, was born in eastern Virginia, and his boyhood days were passed in the place of his birth; but in early manhood he removed to Washington county, Penn., which then included the territory that is now Greene county. He settled on Castile run, near the dividing line between Washington and Greene counties, and here he lived and died. When he first came to Washington county he was offered land, now one of the finest farms in Greene county, in exchange for a horse. He was one of the pioneers of Washington county, and was respected and esteemed by all who knew him, for his integrity, enterprise and thrift. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and his gallantry and bravery are already historical. Mr. Dunn's long life was one of hardship and toil. Labor was to him more a pleasure than a necessity, so accustomed had he become to it. He made many trips to Winchester, Va., trading farm produce for salt, which was "racked" across the mountains in pack saddles, made of crooked roots and limbs of trees. His method of life, however, did not seem to affect his health, for he was one of the best preserved men recorded within these pages. At the age of ninety-two years he bound wheat, and kept up with two cradles. He died at the advanced age of ninety-seven.

Joseph Dunn, the father of subject, was born in Greene county, Penn. In his early days he attended the subscription schools, but the principal part of his education was received under his father's personal supervision in learning the successful management of a farm. He married Jane, a daughter of James Martin, who emigrated from New Jersey to Washington county in its early days, the trip being made overland and in wagons. During the journey they passed many great tracts of beautiful land, which might have become theirs for the asking; but they continued their journey toward the glorious West, the land of which they had heard so much, but had never seen. According to rumor, this land, which was called "Red Stone," was a veritable paradise; and they were immeasurably disappointed and disheartened to find, instead of this imaginary "Eden," nothing but dense woods. Reluctantly they went to work, clearing off the land on which they had located. As there was no clearance in which to place the timber and underbrush cut down, they were obliged to burn great stretches of giant oaks. During the closing part of Mr. Martin's life he was obliged, for several years, to sleep in his chair, being unable to rest in the natural position. The family of Joseph and Jane Dunn consisted of the following children: Washington, James M. (he went to California during the first gold excitement, and is living in that State to-day with his family), Morgan L., Joseph (a prominent merchant of Millsborough, East Bethlehem township), William (who, after serving in the Civil war under Capt. Crea, died soon after his return home, of disease contracted in the service; his widow, who survives him, receives a pension secured her by the mitring efforts of our subject), John and Ann, both of whom were never married (they live in Washington township, Greene Co., Penn., John being there engaged in the nursery business).

Morgan L. Dunn was born in 1824, and his boyhood was spent in much the same manner as that of his father. The little education he received was obtained at the subscription schools, almost the only kind the period afforded. At the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion Mr. Dunn raised over $3,000 by subscription for substitutes in Washington and Greene counties. He has been married three times: his first wife was Phoebe Ann, a daughter of Mr. Taylor, whose father was a drummer in the Revolutionary war; to this union were born five children: Jane, Mary, George W., Dorcas and Phoebe A. Jane is the wife of Milton Bigler, a Baptist minister, and resides in West Bethlehem township, this county; George W. lives in West Bethlehem township (he was married to Maria Hoover June 15, 1876, and three children have been born to them, viz.: Winston, Sherman and Elsie); Mary is the wife of George Hufford, and resides in Ten Mile, Washington county. Phoebe A. married Addison Swihart, and they reside in Washington township, Greene Co., Penn. (none of the three married daughters had any children born to them). Mr. Dunn's second wife was Eliza Corwin, a daughter of William Corwin and a granddaughter of Stephen Corwin, prominent residents of Washington county. This wife bore him the following children: William, a resident of Lone Pine, Amwell township, married Cora Gray, and two children have been born to them: Rerie and Murrel; Flora, the wife of James Huffman, residing in Washington (they have three children: Frank, Willie and Lulu); Walter, a prominent farmer of West Bethlehem township, married Maggie Yoders, and they had two children: one that died in infancy, and Myrtle, still living; Richard, who lives in East Liberty, married Nannie Huffman, daughter of George Huffman, and Loualin, who resides at home with his father. The departure of Mrs. Dunn from this life was mourned not only by her husband and children, but by her numerous friends. Mr. Dunn married for his third wife Emma Curry, a daughter of Philip Curry, and to this union have been born two children: Arthur Extoll and Earl Gay.

Mr. Dunn is one of the best-known and most successful agriculturists in West Bethlehem township. He is also extensively engaged in stock raising—coach and Clydesdale horses and Merino sheep being his specialties. Politically he is a staunch Democrat. When a young man he was possessed of a splendid physique. He thought nothing of making 200 rails in one day, mowing three acres with a scythe or cradling 200 dozen of wheat.

JOHAN F. NICHOLSON, a leading jeweler of Monongahela, is descended from Irish ancestry. His grandfather, James Nicholson, was born in Ireland, and, immigrating to America in about 1790, settled in Union township, Washington Co., Penn., locating in 1795 on his farm on Mingo creek. The land in that region was wild and covered with forests, but the hardy pioneer persevered until the dreary wilderness was transformed into a comfortable homestead. The children of this family were as follows: John, William McKendrie, James, Asa, Sarah (wife of Andrew Pierce), Mary, Jennie (wife of Matthew Murdy), Nancy (wife of James McAllister) and Elizabeth (wife of William Tidball). The father was a member of the M. E. Church, and in politics voted with the Whig party. For many years in those early days his home was the Methodist preaching place, services being held there every two weeks, on Saturdays, by Rev. Asa Shinn, who was succeeded in that work by Rev. George S. Holmes.

William McKendrie Nicholson was born April 21, 1820, on the home farm in Union township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the subscription and public schools, proved an eager reader and close student, and was trained from boyhood to agricultural pursuits, which he followed throughout life. He was married to Rachel, daughter of Samuel Morrison, of Nottingham township, and their children were: William Alvin, Arilinda J. (wife of E. J. McClure), John Fletcher, Violet A. (wife of Samuel McMillan), Flora B. (deceased), Sarah Adalaide, Clara Lucina (wife of George Kahl) and Laura Pricilla. Mr. Nicholson conducted a general store at Ginger Hill from 1844 to 1846; then followed farming, but in 1887 retired from active life. He has been an enthusiastic leader in politics, has voted with the Whig and Republican parties, and has taken a special interest in school matters. In religion he is a member of the M. E. Church. Mrs. Rachel Nicholson died in 1880.

John Fletcher Nicholson was born April 21, 1851, in Union township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a common-school education. In 1872 he came to Monongahela, and opened the jewelry and music store, which he has since conducted. In 1877 he was united in marriage with Miss Sue E. Wilson, and their children are:

Alverda, Jessie Rebecca, John Fletcher, James Bloomfield, Marjorie Ann and Louis McKeudrie. Mr. Nicholson is a shrewd, honest business man, and enjoys a large and constantly increasing custom. He is an active member of the Republican party, and has served two terms as treasurer of Monongahela, also as Congressional and Senatorial conferee, as well as in various other offices. He was elected mayor at the February election and was duly sworn in to serve as mayor for one year from April 3, 1893. Mr. Nicholson shows his identification with the people of the city in their social and moral interests, by his church and society relations. He has been secretary of the Royal Arcanum Council for twelve years, is past master by service in the Masonic Lodge of this city, and is also a Royal Arch Mason. He is past grand in Nucleus Lodge of Odd Fellows, and was D. D. G. M. for Washington county for three years. He is an Encampment member, and was D. G. P. for three years; he is a member of the American Mechanics, is deputy State councillor now, and a past chief in the order of the Golden Eagle. In this way he contributes largely to the social Orders, giving them part of his time and ability, and always for good. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is at present secretary of the Sabbath-school, which position he has acceptably filled for some time.

SH. HOUSTON, a leading dentist of Monongahela, is a grandson of Isaac Houston, who was a son of James Houston, who was born in this country of Scotch-Irish parents. He came with his family to Washington county, Penn., many years ago, and located in Buffalo township, where he died.

Isaac Houston was born and reared on the home place in Buffalo township. He learned the trade of bricklayer and mason, which he followed most of his life. Politically he voted with the Democratic party, and in religion he was a zealous member of the Presbyterian Church at East Buffalo. He was married to Nancy Ashbrook, who bore him ten children, among whom was a son James; the father died at the age of sixty-two years.

James Houston, son of Isaac, was born November 11, 1825, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., where he learned his father's trade, and followed same for several years. In 1860 he moved to Washington borough, Penn., and is now doing a prosperous business. He erected the First Presbyterian and United Presbyterian churches in that city, also built the brick work for the town hall. By unremitting effort he has achieved success. He has served the Democratic party as a member of the council, and in other offices. In religion he is a member of the Third Presbyterian Church. On March 22, 1855, James Houston was united in marriage with Martha, daughter of John Ramsey, and she has borne him four children: S. H., Flora M., and two who died when young.

S. H. Houston was born May 3, 1860, in Washington, Penn., and graduated from the high school of his native city. In 1877 he entered Washington and Jefferson College, graduating in 1882 with the degree of A. B. In 1884 he attended the dental department of the University of Michigan, and the following year went to the Baltimore Dental College, from which he graduated in 1886. He then settled in Monongahela, where he has since practiced his profession. On September 29, 1887, S. H. Houston was united in marriage with Margaret G., daughter of William Power. They have three children: James Power, Rebecca Ramsey and Ada Florence. In 1890 Dr. Houston was elected mayor of Monongahela City, and was re-elected in 1892. He is an ardent and valued member of the Republican party.

W J. ANDERSON, a prosperous farmer of Union township, is a grandson of John Anderson, who came from Ireland in 1771, and first settled in Beaver county, Penn.

He was compelled to leave that section on account of the Indians, and prior to 1788, he having paid tax in that year, came to the place in Washington county, Penn., where his descendants are yet living. While living in Ireland he was married to Miss Elizabeth Bigger, who came with them to America. The descendants of Thomas Bigger, brother of Miss Elizabeth Bigger, now reside in Robinson township, Washington county. To John and Elizabeth Anderson five children were born, viz.: James, Benjamin, Matthew, Martha and John, all born in Pennsylvania, except James, who was born in Ireland. In September, 1786, he bought the farm on which the subject of this sketch now resides.

John Anderson, the youngest son of John and Elizabeth, was born June 5, 1789, on the farm in Union township, Washington county, in a cabin which stood on the site now occupied by the house of W. J. Anderson. John Anderson was reared to farm life, and remained at home until 1813, when he was married to Miss Elizabeth Scott, a native of West Virginia, residing near East Liverpool, Ohio, and they then settled on the home farm in Washington county, Penn., where he died June 3, 1868, followed by his wife, April 20, 1873. The father was a staunch, "High-Tariff" Republican. They had six children, viz.: W. J., two died in infancy, James G. (dead), Martha E. (married to J. C. Borland, of Peters township, now a grocer in Sewickley, Penn.), and Ada V., who is living with her brother, W. J.

W. J. Anderson was born January 22, 1811, on the farm in Union township, Washington county. On December 21, 1876, he was married to Agnes, daughter of Thomas Kiddoo, and granddaughter of James Kiddoo, a native of England. The family are now residents of Allegheny county, Penn. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Anderson came to their present home, where he has been successfully engaged in general farming. In politics he is a Republican, having held a number of township offices, and in religion is a member of the Peters Creek United Presbyterian Church, in which he is also trustee. They conduct a small dairy in connection with the farm, and for twenty years have sold butter to W. J. Caskey & Co., Pittsburgh. The home place contains eighty-four acres of excellent land. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson had one child that died in infancy.

THOMAS F. HILTON, a prominent and wealthy resident of Claysville, was born September 26, 1835, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., and is descended of rugged ancestry, of the "Land of the mountain and the flood," that "Caledonia, stern and wild," immortalized so beautifully in verse and song by Scott and Burns. His grandfather, a native of Scotland, had four sons and one daughter—William, Robert, Thomas, George and Margaret—all born in Scotland, and with his family immigrated to the United States, making a settlement in Chartiers and Buffalo townships, this county.

George Hilton, father of Thomas F., was married in Scotland to a native of the same part, and they had children as follows: John, Robert, Mary, Jane, Sarah A., Isabelle, George James and Thomas F., all natives of Washington county. Mr. Hilton came with his father's family to this county, and here followed the trade of miller, which he had learned in his native land. He died in 1837, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in politics a Whig; his wife was called to her long home in 1835.

The early life of Thomas F. Hilton was passed at the home of Joseph Donahey, a resident of Buffalo township, and his education was received at the common schools of the district. On May 21, 1874, he was married to Serena, a daughter of Benjamin Bartilson, of Hopewell township, and the results of this union were five children: Sadie, George, Mary, Benjamin and Roland (the latter being deceased). After marriage Mr. Hilton settled on a farm in Buffalo township, and here remained until 1889, when he moved into Claysville, and built his present residence, one of the finest in the borough. The family are all members of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville; in politics Mr. Hilton is a staunch Republican, and an active worker in the party.

ELLA M. GREGG. The Gregg family were among the earliest settlers of East Pike Run township. Henry Gregg, Sr., came from Ireland to Pennsylvania, took up between 300 and 400 acres of public land, and also purchased a tract from the Indians. He then sent for his brothers, John and William, and sister, Peggy. He was a bachelor, but raised many children to manhood and womanhood; he served as justice of the peace for many years. Margaret Gregg married Jacob Springer, who also came from Ireland, and her brother Henry gave her the farm on which Eli Williams now lives. The same Henry Gregg gave the farm (on which Mrs. Ann Hugans now lives) to his brother William, and a farm to his brother John, on the State Road between Pittsburgh and Brownsville, where the "Black Horse" tavern stood, now owned by E. Richard.

Ella M. Gregg's paternal great-grandfather, William Gregg, had five sons and one daughter, namely: Margaret, who married William Crow; Henry, who married Jane Dowler; John, who married Nancy Gregg; Andrew, who married Doreas Nichols; William, who married Ruth Jackman, and Robert, who married Ann Robison; they were all born in Ireland. Henry and Jane Dowler's children were: Henry, Thomas, John, Robert, Seth, Israel and Edward. William Gregg had three sons—Robert (who married Mary West), Henry (who died in manhood) and Andrew (married to Mary Ann Hugans—and four daughters—Mary Ann (married to Jonathan West), Jemima (married to Robert Jackman), Sarah (married to Col. Frie) and Peggy (married to Henry Sphar). Henry Gregg has two sons living: William and John. John Gregg married Sadie Price. His brothers were: William and Henry (deceased). Henry and Nellie Gregg's children were: Jane, Ala, Nancy, Sarah and Emily. Andrew Gregg had three daughters and one son. Polly, when thirteen years old, married Andrew Moore, and gave birth to a son in her fourteenth year. She subsequently married John Reeves, and by him had three children, Katy, Dacious and Jesse. Old Henry Gregg died on the farm now owned by Alexander Devant. It was left to our subject's mother, but some one stole the will. The children of Robert and Ann (Robison) Gregg (grandparents of Ella M. Gregg) were: John R., William, Mary, Jane, Andrew, Ann, Harriet Matilda, all now deceased except Jane, Andrew and Ann. John R. married Sarah G. Wallace; William never married, and died ten years ago; Andrew married Mary Ann Ailes, and had no issue; Jane married Daniel Williams, and had eight children (she resides in Ohio, and has ten great-grandchildren; of her children—John R. married Mary Peppers (he is a merchant in Coal Centre); Robert (unmarried) resides in Coal Centre; Amanda married Caspar Williams, who resides on his farm near Brownsville; Ann married a farmer and lives in Ohio; Elizabeth married a Mr. Millhorn; Eliza married an Ohio merchant; Keziah is unmarried); Ann married Thomas Hugans, a farmer, and had two children: Sarah Jane (deceased), and Will (a bachelor, living on the old Hugans farm); Sarah Jane, married to Jehu West, and had one daughter, Deborah West. Mrs. Ann (Robison) Gregg's father settled in East Pike Run township in 1793, and was there married. He kept a tavern on the National pike for many years. Robert Gregg was actively identified with the Democratic party, and his wife was a member of the M. E. Church. He died May 19, 1872, aged ninety-two years, having been preceded by Mrs. Gregg in 1870.

John R. Gregg, son of Robert and Ann (Robison) Gregg, was born April 5, 1810, in East Pike Run township, where he was reared and educated, then taught several terms of school in his native township; at one time he taught thirteen months without any vacation. On November 29, 1832, he married Sarah G. Wallace, a native of this county, born May 1, 1812, and the young couple resided in East Pike Run township for a short time after their marriage. They then conducted a hotel for several years at Coal Centre, and Mr. Gregg afterward engaged in mercantile business; he also served many years as postmaster. Politically he was identified with the Democratic party. He died April 17, 1885, in his seventy-fifth year. Mrs. Gregg was a member of the M. E. Church at Coal Centre. She died June 5, 1871, aged fifty-nine years, and left four children, namely: Ella M.; Ann Jane, wife of L. W. Morgan, merchant, of California, Penn.; William Henry, living in Coal Centre, and married to Mary Lambert, and Mary E., a member of the M. E. Church in Coal Centre, who died January 11, 1875. William Henry Gregg served four years during the Civil war as sergeant in Company I, First West Virginia Cavalry. Of his five children, John R., Lusetta Jane and Elizabeth M. are living. Ann Jane Gregg married L. W. Morgan, and of their seven children, Peto W. is cashier of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Erwin depot; Albert T. is principal of the Derry schools; Elizabeth is teacher in the Normal School at California, Penn. Ella M. Gregg, daughter of John R. and Sarah Gregg, represents five generations of her family who have resided in the Monongahela Valley. In 1886 she bought a lot in Stockdale, and having erected a pleasant residence, has since made her home in the village. She owns a farm of 133 acres in Allen township, which was the Crow farm bought by her father. She has in her possession a thimble that was used by "old Uncle Henry," who did his own sewing, patching and knitting.

John Gregg, brother of Henry, and son of one of the immigrants from Ireland, had three daughters—Nancy, Sarah and Eleanor—and two sons, who died of consumption. Eleanor (who died in 1813) married William Wallace, who served with the Maryland troops in the war of 1812, and at its close settled in Washington county. (Sarah G. Wallace, who married John R. Gregg, a son of Robert, was a daughter of William and Eleanor Wallace). John Gregg, Sr., married after the death of his first wife, and to this second marriage three sons—Andrew, Robert and Jacob—and four daughters were born. One daughter married Richard Hugans, and has one son, Jacob Hugans, living in California, Penn.; another daughter married William Haumon. Robert married Ala Hugans; Andrew married Peggy Hugans; Jacob married Nannie Hanna. Jacob Gregg has three daughters living—Jemima, Jane and Elizabeth—and one son, Henry Gregg, of Greene county, Penn. Nancy, Sarah and Eleanor were children to John, by first wife. Nancy married John Gregg, Sr.; Sarah married John Greer, and Eleanor (as told above) married William Wallace. John and Nancy Gregg had four sons. James, Andrew, Henry, John, Mary, Nela, Sarah, Nancy and Elizabeth are all dead. John's daughter, Lila, lives on the old home that came from the old Henry estate. She is the widow of Luther Axtell. Edward Gregg has two daughters living: Malinda West, of California, and Mary J. Baker, of Centreville. Malinda West had five daughters: Emma, married to H. Louis; Myrtle, married to Frank Craven; Dora, married to John Beazell; Mary, married to Emberson Reade, and Kate, unmarried. John Gregg's widow is living. Edith (Woodward) Gregg has one son, William H., a merchant in Coal Centre (married to Jane Forsythe, and has one son, Edgar, living in Pittsburgh), and another son, Thomas (married to a Miss Cooper, and living in West Virginia).

JOSEPH MOORE CURRY, one of the leading business men of Union township, is a native of Allegheny county, Penn. He is a grandson of Moses Curry, who was born in eastern Maryland, and was there married to Miss Sarah Moore. Their children were Samuel, David, Moses, Robert, John, Ezekiel, Joseph and Hiram.

Joseph Curry was born in 1778, in Chester county, Penn., and was educated as a physician. In 1801, in company with the progenitors of many of the old families of Washington and Allegheny counties, such as the Finleys, Campbells, Hindmans, McClellans, etc., he came to western Pennsylvania, and purchased a large tract of land near Pittsburgh, at what is now Curry Station, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Here for a period of sixty years Dr. Curry carried on an extensive medical practice, covering a circuit of many miles. He also conducted large farming operations, together with other industries, such as gristmills, sawmills, distilleries, etc., located on his property. Soon after coming to this place he was married to Jane, daughter of John Finley. She bore him the following children: John F., Joseph M. (mentioned below), Sarah (wife of Samuel Happer), Margaret (Mrs. Richard Storer), Mary J. (wife of Dr. Johnson), Susau (married to Robert Foster), Isabelle (Mrs. Robert Hutchinson), and William E. The father voted with the Democratic party, and in religious faith was a member and elder of the Associate Reformed Church. Dr. Curry died in 1862. His wife survived him fifteen years, dying in 1875 at the age of eighty-four years.

Joseph Moore Curry, whose name introduces this biography, was born July 24, 1813, on the place in Allegheny county, Penn. He, also, was educated for the medical profession, but abandoned that career for a mercantile life. He embarked in the dry-goods business in Pittsburgh, in 1834, in company with H. B. Green, forming the house of Curry & Green, situated on Market street. In 1841 this became Chadwick & Curry, and continued for a number of years. In 1839 he established a general store and supply depot at the sign of the "Roe-Galley" (now the town of Finleyville), a post station, fourteen miles out from Pittsburgh, on the Pittsburgh and Brownsville stage road. The goods with which this famous old establishment was stocked, comprising every known commodity, were transported by canal boat and conestoga wagon direct from the East, in immense cargoes four times a year. Great quantities of country produce of every kind—butter, eggs, lard, tallow, wool, fruit, vegetables, grain, cheese, beeswax, vinegar, etc., were taken in exchange for supplies, and shipped to Pittsburgh every morning by wagon. A glance over the books and records of this old establishment is a revelation of the wonderful variety and immense quantity of merchandise carried by these old country stores.

In 1845 the subject of this sketch was married to Mary J., daughter of Robert Campbell. In 1852 he purchased a tract of land one mile below Finleyville, from J. S. Gaston, and there built a large store, mansion house, a number of tenant houses and shops, thus founding the town of Curryville, which he afterward had changed to Gastonville, in honor of the original landholder. He removed to his new place in 1854, where he has since resided, continuing in active business until five years ago, when he retired from active business, being succeeded by his son George A., in 1889. He was bereaved of his beloved wife, December 14, 1870, who left the following children: Joseph Roland, William Hindman, Edward Campbell, George A., Frank Morgan, Mary J., Lilly B. and Robert Charles.

Politically Mr. Carry has always supported the Democratic party, and in religion is a member of the Presbyterian church at Mingo. He has always been a public-spirited citizen, contributing liberally toward all worthy objects.

JOHAN A. MCKEAN, M. D., a physician of Washington, Washington county, of which he is a native, was born July 14, 1846, in the borough of Washington, a son of Thomas and Fannie J. (Snodgrass) McKean, of whom special mention will be found elsewhere. Dr. McKean is, to a great extent, a self-made man, having learned the trade of tobacconist in his early years, and at which he continued to work during his spare time while attending college and also while pursuing his professional studies. His education was received at the public schools of the place, and Washington and Jefferson College. In 1867 he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Thomas McKean; then during the winter of 1868-69 he attended lectures at the University of Ann Arbor, Mich., and, in the winter of 1869-70, lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, graduating in the spring of 1870. In the fall of that year he moved to Independence, a village in the western part of Washington county, where he commenced the practice of his profession, and here continued until June, 1871, when he returned to Washington, and has ever since been in successful practice in the borough and surrounding country.

In October, 1876, Dr. McKean was united in marriage with Jennie B., daughter of Capt. John C. McCoy, now residing in Allegheny county. Three children came of this union, viz.: Fannie S. and John C., both at home with their father, and Harry M., who died at the age of nine years. The mother of these children was called from earth in 1882, and in 1886 Dr. McKean married Mrs. Sarah J. Zedeker, widow of B. B. Zedeker, formerly of South Strabane township; she had one daughter by her first husband. The Doctor is a member of and elder in the Third Presbyterian Church of Washington. In his political preferences he is a Republican, and serves as a member of the school board of South Strabane township. His home in South Strabane township is situated on East Maiden street, with his office at No. 162 South Main street. Dr. McKean has made a fair success of his chosen profession. For four years he was the physician attending the County Farm and the Jail.

WJ. McNARY is the representative of one of the oldest pioneer families of Washington county, whose descendants are very numerous, and are numbered among the most energetic and prominent citizens of the county. James McNary, the earliest ancestor of whom we have a record, was a native of the Highlands of Scotland, born about the year 1711. It is supposed that he went to Ireland, and before 1760 emigrated thence to America with his family, consisting of a wife, four sons and one daughter. During 1760 he bought a tract of land in York county, Penn. He died at the home of his son, David, in Hanover township, Washington county, same State, in 1796.

John McNary, great-grandfather of our subject, was born and reared in Scotland. He married Esther Boyle, a native of Ireland, who bore him children as follows: Elizabeth, wife of William Douglass; Mary, wife of James McCoy; James; Margaret, wife of James Martin; Malcom; Esther, wife of Thomas Irving; Agnes, wife of William Pollock; John; Thomas; Alexander; Margaret; Jane, married to James Marshall; and Janet, wife of Robert McKibben. The parents of this family came, with such children as had been born to them, to York county, Penn., some time prior to the Revolutionary war, and in 1801 the father visited North Strabane township, this county, where he purchased the farm now in the possession of his grandson, James S. After returning to his home in York county, he died in 1802, and the family subsequently removed to the farm he had purchased. Of these children, James McNary was the grandfather of W. J. He married and reared a family of children, of whom Joseph McNary was one.

Joseph McNary was born in 1802, in Cross Creek township, this county, and received a meager education in the country schools of the period. He learned and followed the carpentry trade. He was married to Jane, daughter of William Rea, of Cross Creek township, this county, and the children born to this union were Margaret (deceased), Esther I. (unmarried, living in Burgettstown, Penn.), Jane R. (first married to James McNary, now the wife of Samuel Cowen, of Elizabethtown, Ky.), Rhoda (Mrs. Robert Witherow, of Murdocksville, Penn.), Nancy A. (deceased wife of Eli Marquis), Sarah A. (deceased), Mary E. (Mrs. J. W. Bailey), Harriet A. (wife of John Witherow, of Beaver county, Penn.), Julia (strangled with a grain of corn), Joseph R. (a farmer of Smith township), W. J. (whose name opens these lines) and an infant daughter (deceased). Mr. and Mrs. McNary lived in Cross Creek township one year after their marriage, then located one mile west of Burgettstown, Smith township, where the remainder of his life was passed. Beginning life with no capital, he managed his affairs so successfully that at the time of his death his personal property was valued at over $20,000. He and his wife were members of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown, in which he served as an elder a long time. In politics he was always a Democrat, and had been chosen to fill many township offices. He died in 1874.

W. J. McNary was born December 1, 1850, on the farm adjoining his present home in Smith township, this county, where his early life was passed. On December 25, 1879, he was married to Maggie E. Proudfit, who was born August 15, 1855, daughter of R. F. and Sarah E. (Porter) Proudfit, of Smith township, and two daughters have been born to their union: Sarah J. and Esther R., both yet living at home. Mr. and Mrs. McNary began wedded life half a mile west of Burgettstown, this county, on a part of the old home place, where he has since resided and made many improvements. He is a very energetic and "hustling" young farmer, always ready to assist any worthy enterprise. Politically he is an active worker in the Democratic party, and has held various township offices with satisfaction to his constituents. He and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown.

SAMUEL T. MARTIN, a representative citizen and practical farmer of North Strabane township, was born in Washington county on the home farm. His ancestors were natives of York county, Penn. Toward the beginning of the eighteenth century, Peter Martin moved with his wife and family to Washington county, Penn., settling on the farm which is now occupied by his descendants. He died at the age of eighty years, having reared a family of seven children.

James Martin, a son of this early settler, was born in 1792, in York county, Penn., and came with his parents to this county when a boy. In 1821 he was married to Mary White, who bore him children as follows: Peter B., born February 4, 1822 (deceased); Samuel T., born January 24, 1824; James, born December 12, 1826; John White (a merchant of Canonsburg, this county), born January 11, 1828; Matthew, born December 7, 1829; Mary Jane (deceased), born September 21, 1832; Ebenezer Henderson (drowned in the Potomac river), born June 21, 1834; Ann Elizabeth (deceased), born November 2, 1837; Elizabeth Margaret, born October 10, 1839; William Henry, born September 4, 1842, and Thomas Jefferson, born August 28, 1847. Mr. Martin continued to improve his farm in connection with managing a sawmill, during his active business life. He was formerly a Whig, then a Republican, and held several political offices. In religion he first united with the Seceder Church, then joined the United Presbyterians. He died in 1887, having been preceded by his wife in 1878.

Samuel T. Martin received a subscription and district-school education, and November 6, 1856, was united in marriage with Sarah Herron, who was born in 1827, in this county, daughter of James Herron, a pioneer settler of Washington county. Mrs. Martin died July 17, 1885, leaving the following children to mourn her death: Lizzie M. (wife of William S. Whiteley), William, Sarah and Charles E. The mother was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, with which Mr. Martin is also connected. He is a liberal contributor to all public enterprises of the county, and a most successful agriculturist. He has an excellent dairy, milking fourteen Holstein cows, and shipping daily an average of twenty-five gallons of milk to Pittsburgh, Penn. His farm consists of 120 acres of fertile, well-cultivated land.

JD. McNARY. Among the representatives of old families in Washington county the subject of this memoir stands prominent. He is a son of David McNary, who in 1782 came from York county, Penn., to Washington county, making a settlement in North Strabane township.

Thomas McNary, grandfather of subject, was a son of James McNary, who, some time prior to 1760, emigrated from Scotland to this country, and located in York county, Penn., afterward, in 1787, settling in Hanover township, Washington county. Thomas McNary was elected elder in the Chartiers Church in about the year 1799, and continued to serve in that capacity until his death in 1820.

David McNary, father of subject, was born in 1771, in (it is believed) York county, Penn., and about the year 1795 located in North Strabane township, where he purchased a farm of 320 acres, on which he continued to reside until his death. In 1816 he was married to Jane Edgar, daughter of Samuel Edgar, and born in County Down, Ireland, coming to this country with her father in 1794; for six years they lived in New York City, and then came to Washington county, Penn. To David and Jane McNary were born children as follows: Phebe, born in 1818, married James Beal, of West Virginia, and removed to Licking county, Ohio, where she died, leaving six children—two sons and four daughters; Thomas, born in 1820, died in early manhood; Samuel, born in 1822, died in 1892, leaving eleven children—five sons and six daughters (for fifteen years he was an elder in Chartiers U. P. Church); Jeanetta, born in 1824, died in early womanhood; Mary, born in 1826, married John Templeton, and has four sons, living in North Strabane township; David

J. D. McHenry

E., born in 1828, is living in Cross Creek township, and has three sons and three daughters (for twelve years he was an elder in West Middletown United Presbyterian Church); Matthew, born in 1830, died in the State of California in 1852; James R., born in 1833, died in 1891, leaving four daughters (for ten years he was an elder in Chartiers U. P. Church), and Joseph D., subject of sketch. The father of this family died in 1847, the mother in 1868.

J. D. McNary was born January 25, 1836, on the home place in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., where he was reared to agricultural pursuits, attending, during a few weeks in winter time, the common schools in the neighborhood. After this primary instruction, he entered Jefferson College, at Canonsburg, where he remained until his sophomore year. On April 1, 1857, he removed to South Strabane township, since when he has successfully followed agricultural pursuits on the farm on which he now resides. On February 5, 1857, Mr. McNary was united in marriage with Mary W., daughter of John Caldwell, of West Virginia, and the children born to this union were Lizzie J. (deceased), Lou J., Mattie E., Clara V. (Mrs. Rowley Cook), John R., Thomas H. and Mary J. The family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Washington, of which Mr. McNary has been an elder since 1864. In politics he has always been a Republican, an active worker in the party, and an influential counselor. For the past eighteen years he has served as school director, and in all things he has proven himself a progressive and loyal citizen.

TEMPLETON BROTHERS. David Templeton was born in 1800, in Washington county, Penn., where his life was passed in agricultural pursuits. On February 20, 1823, he was married to Miss Margaret Martin, who bore him the following named children: Margaret, John, Samuel and James, the two latter being deceased. The mother died May 25, 1833, and on February 20, 1834, David Templeton was again married, his second choice being Jane McNary, and their children were born as follows: Matthew, born January 27, 1836; Thomas, born March 21, 1838; David, born June 6, 1840; Ann (deceased wife of John White Anderson), born January 26, 1844; Joseph, born April 26, 1846, and William H. (deceased), born December 7, 1851. The father of this family was a devoted Christian, and both he and his wife were untiring Bible students. With but one exception the family worship at the U. P. Church. He died June 28, 1867, and the old homestead is now owned by his sons, Matthew, David and Joseph Templeton. Of these three sons David Templeton is married to Nannie C. Horner, who has borne him four children.

Joseph Templeton wedded Miss Katie Spear, and they have two children.

Matthew Templeton has never married. On September 16, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Eighty-Fifth Pennsylvania Regiment, commanded by Capt. H. J. Van Kirk. He served three years and two months, was in the Peninsular Campaign, and fought at the battle of Fair Oaks. Immediately after the engagement at Fair Oaks, Matthew Templeton was seized with a fever, and was sent for treatment to the hospital at Philadelphia. On recovering he joined his regiment in North Carolina, taking part in the engagements of Yorktown, Williamsburg and Fort Wagner. At the last-mentioned place he was slightly wounded in the hip by a ball which killed a comrade at his side. He received an honorable discharge November 22, 1864, and returned to the old home where he is yet living.

GEORGE VALENTINE, who in his lifetime was one of the representative, well-to-do citizens of Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., was a native of the county, born in Washington, November 22, 1822.

His father, John Valentine, was born in June, 1794, also in Washington. On May 11, 1818, he married Catherine May, daughter of George May (she was born March 20, 1800, in Bedford county, Penn., and died August 21, 1831), and she bore him the following named children: Julia A. (wife of Templeton Lucas, of West Alexander), George, John, Elizabeth M. (deceased wife of Joel Truesdell, of West Alexander), Daniel and Charles. Mr. Valentine, Sr., continued to live in Washington, Penn., for some time after his marriage, but afterward kept hotel in Claysville, and subsequently bought a farm and public house one-half mile east of West Alexander, on the "National pike," where the family were noted for their hospitality and good entertainment, and where he lived until his death May 14, 1868. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church of West Alexander, and in political persuasion was an Old-line Whig. His second marriage, to Mrs. Elizabeth Melhalley, of Somerset county, Penn., was on December 28, 1839; she died July 14, 1867.

George Valentine received his primary education in the common school, which was supplemented with a course of study at Dr. McClusky's academy, in West Alexander, and an attendance for a short time at Washington College, Penn. He was a skillful and prosperous farmer, in addition to which he dealt in wool, grain and many kinds of produce as well as stock. In politics he was a Republican, a prominent leader in the party; was a member of the Presbyterian Church of West Alexander for many years. He was a liberal man, and a progressive citizen, a warm-hearted friend of education, and for years was a trustee of West Alexander Academy. He passed most of his life on the farm owned formerly by his father, afterward by himself, dying November 5, 1881. As husband, father, friend, he was one of the most genial, loving and kind, always cheerful, with a smile for all; in tenderness almost feminine, but firm and unwavering in principle and convictions of duty. On October 7, 1852, Mr. Valentine married Louise Bayha, of Wheeling, W. Va., who bore him one son, Louis B., who still lives in the old homestead, and is in the mercantile business in West Alexander. On September 27, 1883, he married Laura B. Anderson, of West Alexander, and they are the parents of three bright boys: George A., John B. and Charles T. The death of his first wife occurred on February 19, 1854, and March 16, 1859, Mr. Valentine married Anna B., daughter of Andrew Yates, a native of Ohio county, W. Va., a lifelong farmer. Mr. Yates married May 25, 1820, Anne Byers, of near Claysville, Penn., by whom he had the following children: Mary F. (wife of Thomas Ralston), Thomas, Byers T., William, Margaret S., one daughter deceased in infancy, Andrew and Anna B. (twins), and Jane S. These parents were of Scotch-Irish descent, and could trace their ancestry back for many generations as a strictly religious people, many of them office bearers in the Church. Mr. Yates held the office of ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church for the space of half a century, and was for years justice of the peace, under the old constitution of Virginia. He was born July 16, 1795, and died on the farm, where he had lived over fifty years, December 19, 1876, in the eighty-second year of his age; his widow was born June 25, 1797, and died August 27, 1887, in the ninety-first year of her age. The children all died young and unmarried, except the two daughters already named, and Byers T., who married Margaret Purcell, of West Liberty, W. Va. (she died March, 1889, and her husband February 16, 1892).

ANNA B., widow of George Valentine, was married February 18, 1892, to Rev. J. S. Gilmor, of Congers, N. Y., also a native of West Virginia, his childhood's home, and that of many of his relatives, being in the immediate vicinity of West Alexander, Pennsylvania.

JOHAN FLACK. The Flack family have for many years been identified with the interests of Washington county. About 1800 one Robert Flack sailed from County Monaghan, Ireland, and on arriving in America first located in Chester county, Penn. He then moved to Westmoreland county, same State, but in 1820 made a permanent location on the forks of Chartiers creek, Peters township, Washington county. He was married in his native land to a native of County Monaghan, Ireland, Miss Mary Douglass, who bore him the following children: James, Alexander, Mary, John, Nancy, Robert, Jane, Margaret, Eliza and Sarah, all of whom are now deceased.

Alexander Flack, son of Robert Flack, was born about 1794, in County Monaghan, Ireland, and coming with his parents to America, was reared in Chester and Westmoreland counties. He began life as a teamster, and in 1835 opened a store at Bower Hill, Washington county. He conducted this business ten years, then bought the home farm in Peters township. When a young man he was married to Mary Porter, a native of this county, who died not long after their marriage. For his second wife Alexander Flack was married to Lillie Ann McAlister, of Peters township, a daughter of John McAlister, who, with his father, Archibald McAlister, emigrated from County Antrim, Ireland, about 1800, and settled first in Chester county, Penn., and in 1802 removed with his parents to Washington county. John McAlister was married to Isabelle McAllister, a resident of County Antrim, Ireland, who bore him seven children, namely: Archie, Nancy, Mary, Lillie Ann, John, Hannah, and James, all of whom are now deceased. Lillie Ann McAlister was reared to womanhood in Peters township. To the union of Alexander and Lillie Flack one son was born, John. The father was an active member of the Democratic party, and held nearly every office in Peters township. He died in 1857.

John Flack was born May 27, 1839, in Bower Hill, Washington county, Penn. He began a course at Jefferson College, but, being called home by the death of his father, took charge of the old place. On November 20, 1865, he was united in marriage with Hester B., daughter of Albert Holbert, a native of Franklin township, Washington county. She died in 1882, leaving the following children: Bertha A., John A., Florence W., William L., Minnie B., and Bessie L., the last-named of whom is now attending school at Bower Hill. On March 3, 1885, John Flack was united in marriage with Virginia M. Ruth, whose father, John Ruth, was a native of New Jersey, and learned the carpenter's trade. He was married to Miss Margaret Barr, of Washington county, Penn., who bore him one daughter, Virginia M. (Mrs. Flack). Mr. and Mrs. Ruth died at Bethany, W. Va., of cholera, and were buried in the same grave. The orphan daughter was reared to womanhood by Miss Jane Hardy, of Bower Hill, where she resided until her marriage to John Flack.

To the union of John and Virginia M. Flack four children have been born, namely: Walter H.,

Wallace R., Allan M., and Margaret Lillian. After his first marriage Mr. Flack resided on a farm in this county until 1869, when he moved to Iowa. In 1871 he returned to the home farm, and in 1884 opened a store at Bower Hill, this county. Since 1886 he has lived on the farm which is now his home. He is a Democrat in politics, and has held various local offices. In religious faith he is a member of the United Presbyterian Church.

WC. GRIMES is a son of William Grimes, whose father was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and on attaining majority settled in Donegal township, Washington county, where he married Miss Mary Gregg, and reared a family of nine children. William Grimes was born in 1818, on the home farm in Donegal township, this county, and afterward moved to Ohio, where he lived twenty years. He then returned to Pennsylvania, and settled on the farm in Buffalo township, which is now the home of his son Andrew. In 1843 William Grimes was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Charles McCroberts, of Washington county, Penn. They reared a family of nine children, as follows: William C., Mary (wife of Samuel Woodburn), J. Thomas, Lawson, Lizzie M., David A., Sallie J., Andrew J., and Nannie B. (wife of J. A. Lindsay), all living but Lizzie M. Mr. Grimes died in 1881.

W. C. Grimes was born February 22, 1844, on his father's farm in Ohio. He attended the common schools, and when fourteen years of age returned to Pennsylvania with his father. In 1867 he was united in marriage with Sarah E., daughter of James Allison, of Irish descent. They have had the following children: Andrew J., Lizzie M., Nannie B., William C., Lena B., Sadie L., Ollie L., Alice H., an infant, and Birdella (the latter two of whom, with Nannie, are deceased). Mr. Grimes farms extensively, and is also engaged in stock raising. His farm consists of 165 acres of good land, lying on Buffalo creek, in the northern part of Buffalo township, this county. In politics he is a staunch Democrat, but not a politician. His wife is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Taylorstown, Washington county.

LEMAN CARSON, a prominent stock raiser and agriculturist of Buffalo township, of which he is a native, was born March 26, 1849, on the farm where he now resides, which is one of the most productive in the township. Isaac Carson, his grandfather, was born and married in eastern Pennsylvania, whence he came to this county. He was one of the earliest settlers of Buffalo township, and a prosperous farmer. His children were as follows: James, born April 17, 1798; Thomas, born September 30, 1800; Adam, born June 20, 1803; Mary (Mrs. William Bell), born February 14, 1806; Rebecca (Mrs. William Ely), born May 18, 1808; Ann (Mrs. William Wright), born April 15, 1810; Margaret (Mrs. Albough), born May 27, 1812; Isaac, born July 22, 1815; Samuel, born January 25, 1819, and Jane, born May 2, 1821. The parents of this family lie buried side by side in North Buffalo cemetery; they were members of the Seceder Church, and in politics he was a Democrat.

Thomas Carson, father of subject, was married in 1829 to Mary Wright, daughter of Samuel Wright. The children by this union are Leman (Mrs. H. C. Noble), Isaac, Samuel W. and Leman. After his marriage Mr. Carson continued to reside on the home place, where he carried on farming and stock raising, and where he and his wife passed the remainder of their busy lives, the father dying January 15, 1865, and the mother January 5, 1886; they were consistent members of the United Presbyterian Church, and in politics Mr. Carson was an ardent Democrat.

Leman Carson received his education at the schools of his native township, and was reared to agricultural pursuits under the preceptorship of his father. On August 3, 1887, he was married to Maggie Gillespie, of Buffalo township, and one child, Willie, has blessed their union. Mr. Carson is successfully engaged in general farming, including stock raising, and is well and favorably known in the community in which he lives. His political preferences are Democratic, and he is an active party man.

ROBERT E. WEIR was born May 10, 1850, in West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., a grandson of James Weir, who located in Somerset township, this county, at an early day, and engaged in agriculture. He had the following family of children: Samuel, Joseph, Thomas (who died in 1863), Rebecca (Mrs. Robinson), Mary (Mrs. Roberts) and Lavina (Mrs. Marshall). In politics he was a Republican, and in religious belief he was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Col. Samuel Weir, son of James, was born April 3, 1800, in West Bethlehem township, Washington county, and made his home there many years, receiving a common-school education. In 1825 he was united in marriage with Ellen Weir, of Somerset township, a daughter of Thomas and Nancy Weir, and the children born to this union were James, Thomas, Samuel, Joseph, Robert E., Nancy (deceased), Mary, Sarah Ellen, Martha and Susan. Mr. Weir carried on farming several years, and also operated the gristmill known as "Weir's Mills." He was a colonel in the militia for several years. Mr. Weir was a Republican since the formation of the party, and with his family was for many years a faithful and earnest member of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Weir died in 1885, and on June 5, 1892, he too passed away, aged ninety-two years. He was buried in the cemetery of the Baptist Church at Pigeon Creek.

Robert E. Weir has passed his whole life on the old farm in West Bethlehem township, and in his boyhood received a limited education in the common schools. On July 3, 1879, he was married to Elnora Kahl, daughter of Jonathan and Sarah Kahl, of Amwell township, Washington county, whose children were George, Eliza (Mrs. Arnold), Catherine (Mrs. Simpson), Clara (Mrs. Bedillion), Flora (Mrs. Post), Sadie (Mrs. Horn), Ida (Mrs. Snee) and Elnora (Mrs. Weir). Immediately after his marriage Mr. Weir began business for himself, and first located on the Hazlett farm near "Pancake" or "Laboratory," in Amwell township, Washington county, where he remained three years, afterward residing on the National Pike thirteen years. Since that time he has resided at his present home, which is brightened by a son and daughter—Ellsworth, born October 13, 1881, and Pearl, born November 23, 1883. Mr. Weir is one of the thrifty farmers and good business men of Amwell township, his well-cultivated farm comprising 103 acres of excellent land. In politics he has always been a staunch Republican. Mrs. Weir is a member of the Christian Church at Lone Pine.

EB. BOYLE. Prominently identified with the enterprising and successful citizens of North Strabane township is the gentleman above named. He is a son of William Boyle, who was born in 1794, in Allegheny county, Penn., and there learned the carpenter's trade. In 1823 he came to Washington county, and purchased the farm in North Strabane township now occupied by his son. When a young man William Boyle was united in marriage with Elizabeth Weller, a native of Washington county, Penn., born in 1800, and eight sons were born to their union, namely: Daniel (deceased), Hugh (residing in Washington, Penn.), J. W. (living in Oklahoma), William (a citizen of Iowa), E. B. (whose name introduces this biography), Andrew Jackson (residence unknown), Benjamin Franklin (of Lawrence county, Penn.), and James G. (living in Pittsburgh). The mother of this family died in 1861, followed by the father in 1865, and they were buried in the private cemetery on the old Weller homestead. Both were earnest members of the Presbyterian Church.

E. B. Boyle was born October 22, 1826, on the old farm in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., and received all the literary training which could be imparted by the pedagogue of the country school. On October 28, 1852, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Col. Moses and Nancy Linn. To the union of E. B. and Elizabeth Boyle the following children have been born: Agnes J., Lizzie W., Clara B. (Mrs. R. J. Wallace, has one son, E. B. F.), Nettie G. (wife of Charles Wilkinson, Lawrence county, Penn., has two sons, Lawrence B. and Earnest), Anna (Mrs. E. G. Walker, has one son, Fred), William F., Blanche L., John Grant, H. A. and Mamie. Of this family the three eldest daughters have taught school, and all are regular attendants and ardent supporters of the Presbyterian Church. In political opinion Mr. Boyle votes according to the ability of the candidate, regardless of party preferences. During his father's lifetime, our subject purchased one-half of the home farm, which contains 175 acres, and after the death of his father he purchased the remainder from his brothers, B. F. and A. J. Boyle. His principal attention is devoted to the general care of his farm and the breeding of Jersey cattle. The home place, on which he resides, is improved to the highest point of cultivation.

WORK, MAJ. GEORGE T. and SAMUEL C. History may be properly regarded as the biography of a few earnest, toiling, self-reliant men, who were courageous enough to stand by their convictions, possessing the requisite patience and energy to reach the goal for which they were striving. The lives of such men are worthy of record, and the name of Work is justly numbered among the progressive citizens of Washington county, who, overcoming all obstacles, have achieved a deserved success.

George Work was born and reared in County Londonderry, Ireland. He followed the occupation of a weaver. On March 3, 1780, he was united in wedlock with Martha Dunlap, also a native of "Old Erin," and two children came to their union: Alexander, born February 11, 1781; and Jane, born May 9, 1783. A few years after their birth the father decided to seek a home in the New World, and on July 24, 1789, he and his family boarded the brig "Keziah," at Londonderry, Ireland. After a stormy voyage of eight weeks, they landed at Wilmington, Del. (one child, a son, was born and died at sea). In 1795 they pushed farther westward in search of a cheap home, the long, tedious journey being made by wagon, the family finally arriving in Hopewell township, Washington Co., Penn. They located first on the Sam Davis farm, but soon afterward moved to the log cabin near Buffalo, and on May 24, 1802, they purchased the farm now known as the Work farm. He became a successful farmer. Three children were born after they arrived in America: Mary, November 8, 1790; James, September 12, 1792, and John D., November 14, 1794. The parents both died in this county, and their remains are lying in the Buffalo cemetery.

James Work was born in Wilmington, Del., and when three years old was brought by his parents to the farm in Hopewell township, this county, it being then a dense forest. He received a meager education in the subscription schools, and followed agricultural pursuits during his early youth. On February 7, 1822, he married Grizzilla, daughter of Robert Tweed, by his first wife, Elizabeth Wylie, daughter of Adam Wylie, and sister of Adam Wylie, M. D., and Andrew Wylie, D. D. By this union were born two children: Elizabeth Grizzilla, December 20, 1823 (who became the wife of Robert Denny, and died in Morrow county, Ohio), and George Tweed, born April 7, 1825. The mother of these children was called to her rest January 27, 1827, and July 3, 1828, James Work was married to Margaret Caldwell, a lady of Scotch descent, and the following children were the result of their union: Martha L., born June 1, 1829, died August 19, 1832; Agnes A., born November 17, 1831, wife of Robert S. Caldwell; Sarah J., born October 14, 1832, wife of William Denny, of Hervey county, Kans.; Mary B., born May 8, 1834, died August 14, 1834; Clarissa E., born November 8, 1835, died August 29, 1840; Samuel C., born July 16, 1838, married to Anna Donahy; Maria I., born August 11, 1840, married to William Morrow, October 1, 1839, and died January 8, 1892; Margaret Emma, born October 26, 1842, wife of Joseph Rankin; Sophia M. A., born March 6, 1846, wife of William Smiley. James Work, the father, died September 26, 1868; his second wife, Margaret (Caldwell), died in December, 1885.

GEORGE TWEED WORK received a common-school education, and assisted his father on the farm until he was twenty-six years of age, excepting two winters in which he taught school in Harrison county, Ohio, and also occasionally working at the carpenter's trade. He then engaged in the lumber business, putting up the first steam sawmill in the vicinity. Excepting during the war he followed that business until 1889, since when he has given his time to farming. On September 19, 1850, he married Catharine Denny, daughter of Robert Denny, of Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., and their children were James Alexander, born August 1, 1851; Lydia Jane, born January 13, 1854, died by drowning June 29, 1854; Margaret Eliza, born February 15, 1856; John Dunlap, born August 17, 1858, died January 30, 1878; Grizzilla Mary, born February 13, 1861, became the wife of William Patterson May 11, 1882, and died December 28, 1886, leaving two sons, George W. and John Vance Patterson; Emma K., born October 8, 1867; George Rankin, born October 7, 1870. Of these, James A. married Laura B. Logan January 28, 1880, and is now (1893) engaged in a lumber business in Sussex county, Virginia.

When the Civil war began, and soon after the firing of Fort Sumter, George T. Work, acting for a number of volunteers, offered a company of cavalry to Gov. Curtin, but was refused for reason that no cavalry were needed at that time. Soon after the first battle of Bull Run the same company elected W. W. McNulty captain, and again offering their service were accepted and ordered into camp. On the way there Mr. Work was appointed orderly sergeant, and on the final organization of the company became second lieutenant; soon after, the captain having resigned to accept promotion, he became first lieutenant, and in November following became captain. The company meanwhile being attached to the First P. V. C., by order of Maj.-Gen. Stoneman, chief of cavalry, army of the Potomac, as captain of Company I, First P. V. C., he commanded a squadron at the battle of Drainesville, and participated in other minor engagements; was under Gen. McDowell in his movement to the Rappahannock, until his regiment was ordered to join Gen. Fremont in the Shenandoah Valley, and was with his column in advance at Mt. Jackson, having participated in all the marches and skirmishes of his regiment up to that time. Here he was prostrated by malarial fever, and sent by Surgeon D. Stanton to Douglass Hospital, Washington City, June 5, 1862. Having, by advice of the hospital surgeon, tendered his resignation, he was discharged for disability July 25, 1862. On his way home he called on Gov. Curtin, and received authority to recruit two companies of cavalry, or more if he could get the men. As soon as able to ride, he began recruiting, and uniting his efforts with Capt. John Keys succeeded in enlisting two cavalry companies, besides sending many men to infantry and artillery regiments, and was again mustered into the U. S. cavalry service as captain of Company C, Ringgold Battalion, September 6, 1862. By the addition of other companies this battalion was raised to a full regiment in February, 1863, and Capt. Work was commissioned first major Twenty-second P. V. C., in which rank he served till the close of the war, participating in all the marches, scouts, and battles of the Shenandoah Valley campaign, until he was wounded near Harrisonburg, September 27, 1863. His immediate command was the extreme right of the line in each of the general movements of the Union forces in 1864, in the Valley. At his own request he was mustered out in July, 1865, by reason of close of the war, and in August following took an agency as superintendent of an oil company operating in West Virginia. This enterprise proved disastrous to the company, and especially to their agent, whose sanguine temperament led him to rashly put all he was worth, and more, into it. Much broken in health, he returned home, and again took up the business of lumbering and milling, which he diligently followed when able until 1876, when he received the Republican nomination for sheriff, and was elected, his term commencing January 1, 1877, and ending January 1, 1880. This term was noted for the serious disturbances among the mines of the Monongahela river, and on the Panhandle Railroad. The sheriff's prompt action in arresting those charged with riot, and at the same time organizing such a posse comitatus as he thought necessary to preserve the peace and enforce his authority, had the desired effect; and what at times assumed most threatening proportions passed off without serious conflict, and the prompt (though mild) sentences imposed by the courts preserved Washington county from any serious trouble from that source since. For his conduct of this affair, the sheriff received the thanks of the best citizens regardless of party, also the compliments of Gov. Hoyt. But what gave him even more pleasure than this was the presentation to him by the miners and their friends of a very handsome cane, suitably inscribed, and presented at a public meeting of the citizens of California and vicinity. This cane is still one of his most cherished possessions. The history of this affair demonstrates the possibility of a sheriff effectually quelling riot and preserving the peace, by the prompt use of the power given him by the laws, without using any military force other than the "power of the county," at all times subject to his control for that purpose. Although retired from the more arduous duties of agricultural life, Maj. Work yet supervises the cultivation of his large farm. He possesses some literary gifts, which he sometimes exercises in correspondence for various papers.

Maj. Work, now nearing the close of life, desires us to conclude this sketch by tendering to his many comrades of the G. A. R. and all others, his most sincere thanks for the many words and acts of kindness received at their hands, and asks their kind remembrance in the future.

SAMUEL C. WORK was born in Hopewell township, on the same farm where he is now living, and received a common-school education. On August 13, 1861, he enlisted in Company I, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, and being assigned to the army of the Potomac took part in most of the engagements participated in by that division of the army; was wounded August 14, 1864, six days after the expiration of his term of service, while in command of a squadron, and he received an honorable discharge September 9, 1864. He then returned to Washington county, and on February 8, 1865, was united in marriage with Sarah A., daughter of W. R. Donahay, of Buffalo township, of whose family a sketch follows. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Work were as follows: James E., born June 16, 1866; William D., January 15, 1868; Loretta M., May 27, 1869; Harry A., March 16, 1871; Ora P., October 12, 1872; Nellie A., March 2, 1875; Harvey B. S. R., April 25, 1879; Samuel C., May 10, 1881; George R., November 11, 1884; and John Calvin, November 24, 1886. Of these children, Harry A. died May 16, 1872, and James E., June 19, 1892, leaving a daughter, Mary Elvalena (he was married November 20, 1890, to Miss Mattie Stewart, of Canton township, daughter of William Stewart).

Mr. and Mrs. Work have always resided on the home farm, a valuable and well-improved piece of property. He has followed farming and stock raising with marked success, and is one of the foremost breeders of Spanish Merino sheep of the Delaine type. He is an enterprising and progressive agriculturist, ever ready to adopt modern methods, provided they are conducive to the best results. Mr. Work is one of the most ardent supporters of education in both Church and State; and to his perseverance and energy there now stands the Buffalo Academy, it being the third academy erected in this part of Hopewell township. Politically he is an enthusiastic supporter of the doctrines embodied in the Republican platform, being a counselor of that party, and has held several township offices. He and his wife and five of the elder children are members of the Presbyterian Church at Buffalo village, under the pastorate of Rev. T. A. Anderson.

DONAHAY FAMILY. This is one of the first families to settle in Washington county. Joseph Donahay and Mary, his wife, with their children—Jane, William, Samuel and Mary—emigrated from Omagh, in County Tyrone, Ireland, May 23, 1790, arriving in America August 24, same year. They settled near Taylorstown, in Buffalo township, on the place now owned by Jacob White, which is known as one of the best oil farms in the Taylorstown oil field. Two other children were born to them in Washington county, named Joseph and Margaret.

Samuel Donahay was born in May, 1787, and emigrated with his parents from Ireland. He was married to Anna Reed, daughter of William Reed, and they located on what is now known as the James and Isaac Hodgens farm. In 1840 he was ordained as a ruling elder in Buffalo Presbyterian Church. He died suddenly in his own yard December 25, 1840. To them were born six children, viz.: Joseph, married to Mary A. Lowry, of Hopewell township (he resided near Buffalo, and was a leader of the music in the Buffalo Presbyterian Church. In April, 1879, he and his family moved to Adair, Iowa, where he served as a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church the rest of his life. He died August 27, 1890, a man of a quiet disposition, a kind husband and father and a devout Christian); William R., born January 14, 1816; Margaret, who married Rev. James Smith; Mary, widow of Vincent Blayney, still resides on the Blayney homestead near Taylorstown; Jane, married to Rev. Marshal, and Sarah A., married to Rev. James Shields, now a resident of Allegheny, William R. Donahey was married in December, 1843, to Mary Ely, daughter of Marten Ely, an elder in East Buffalo Church. He located on what is known as the William Donahey farm, two miles south of Taylorstown. Four children were born to them: Sarah A., born September 9, 1844, was married to S. C. Work; Samuel, born December 15, 1845, who now resides with his mother in Buffalo village; Martin L., born September 22, 1847, was married to Frances E. Fergus, of Canonsburg, Penn., November 2, 1872 (he was licensed by the Presbytery of Washington, and is now pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Napoleon, Ohio); Joseph A., born February 6, 1850, married Lizzie H. McCleese, of Taylorstown, July 13, 1876, and is now pastor of the Capitol Avenue Presbyterian Church of Denver, Colo. William Donahey was ordained an elder in Buffalo Presbyterian Church in 1853, and served until his death, August 14, 1884. Much of his time and means were spent in behalf of his fellow-men. In his youthful days he taught school, which he took great delight in, as it opened many ways for usefulness in after years. He took special delight in the Sabbath-school, and was for many years elected superintendent of Buffalo Sabbath-school. Mr. Donahey was a devout and earnest follower of Christ, honoring God in his household, and was extremely conscientious and faithful as a ruling elder.

MRS. ANN TAYLOR is the widow of Maxwell H. Taylor, who was a son of Joshua, and grandson of William and Phoebe (Heardman) Taylor. The latter couple emigrated from Ireland in 1788, and coming to America located in Washington county, Penn., near Taylor's church, where their last days were passed. The father died in 1841, followed by his widow in 1855. Joshua Taylor, son of William and Phoebe, was born in County Cavan, Ireland, where he married Jane Quinn, a country-woman, and immigrated to Pennsylvania. In 1829 they settled on a farm in Washington county, and five children were born to them, of whom but one is now living, Sophia, widow of William Stewart. The father died July 3, 1851, followed by his widow December 23, 1886.

Maxwell H. Taylor was born July 3, 1833, in Washington county, Penn., and passed his whole life on the home farm in East Bethlehem township. On June 28, 1866, he was united in marriage with Ann, daughter of William C., and granddaughter of Isaac C. Wolf. The latter was a native of Virginia, and there married Susanna Dehaven, who bore him four children, viz.: William C., Joseph, Elizabeth and Rachel A. The father voted with the Democratic party, and in religious faith was a member of the M. E. Church. Mrs. Wolf died January 19, 1846, and he was laid to rest July 27, 1870.

William C. Wolf was born July 22, 1820, in Virginia, and came with his parents to Washington county, Penn., in 1829, receiving his education in the subscription schools, and following agricultural pursuits. On July 1, 1841, he selected a life companion in the person of Melinda J. Smallwood, who was born June 2, 1823, in Washington county, where they settled, and he followed teaching and cabinet making. In political opinion he was a Democrat, and in religious connection a member of the M. E. Church. His children were Alfred D., who enlisted in Company I, Second Regiment, Virginia Infantry, and served three years; Susanna, wife of James K. Ward; Joseph, who enlisted in Company D, Seventy-ninth Regiment P. V. I.; Ann, wife of Maxwell Taylor; Henry W.; Sarah N.; Abram, and Isaac C. Mr. Wolf died March 4, 1855, and was followed to the grave by his wife April 9, 1874. The father was a Democrat.

Maxwell H. and Ann (Wolf) Taylor had four children, namely: Melinda J., wife of Lucian H. Patterson; Felicia H.; Phoebe A., and one who is deceased. Mr. Taylor was a successful farmer, and in politics was actively identified with the Republican party. He died September 25, 1876, and his widow is yet residing on the well-improved farm of seventy-three acres. She is a member of the Taylor M. E. Church.

ALLEXANDER S. HAYS is a cousin of the other representatives of that name who are mentioned in this volume as residents of Smith township, this county. His grandfather, Moses Hays, was the youngest son of a large family born to David Hays, of New Jersey, whose sons were Thomas, David, Joseph, William, James and Moses.

Moses Hays was born in the State of New Jersey, and after partially learning the blacksmith's trade, he was drafted at the age of nineteen into Continental army, together with five of his brothers. He followed his trade till the close of the war, and during the contest his brother John received a wound, which was the cause of his death. In 1783 Moses was married to Jemima Patterson, a native of New Jersey. Soon after the close of the Revolutionary war, Moses, with his wife and brothers, went west, settling on 1,000 acres of land about three miles southeast of Burgettstown, this county, on Raccoon creek. The brothers divided this land, and Moses made a permanent home upon his share, where the following children were born and reared: Thomas (moved to Jackson county, Ohio, where he died), born October 5, 1784; Edith (wife of David Hayes, of Ohio), born February 27, 1786; John (deceased, near Moorefield, Harrison Co., Ohio), born February 3, 1789; William (killed by accident), born April 7, 1791; James (deceased in Allegheny county, Penn.), born June 11, 1793; Alexander, born November 11, 1795; Mary (deceased in youth), born December 25, 1797; Eleanor (deceased wife of James Todd, of Allegheny county), born November 15, 1799; Joseph (deceased on the home farm), born February 15, 1801; David (deceased farmer of Smith township, married to Martha Fulton), born May 7, 1803; and Ann (deceased in youth), born June 23, 1805. Moses Hays possessed a remarkably retentive memory, easily recalling incidents of the war fifty years after the conflict. Anything once seen or heard he never forgot, and easily brought it to mind whenever the subject arose. He was a prominent and successful farmer, and in religion was a member of the Raccoon Church during the ministry of Rev. Moses Allen, who was a personal friend of Moses Hays. The latter passed away in 1836, being followed in a few days by his wife.

Joseph Hays was born February 15, 1801, on the old home place, situated on Raccoon creek, about two and a half miles east of Burgettstown, Smith township. He attended the county schools near the home farm, receiving but a meager education, then learned the blacksmith's trade of his father, which he followed until about twenty-five years of age. He then worked as a miller, and having a natural taste for mechanical work he easily learned different trades, also followed droving. In 1842 he was united in marriage with Eleanor Kerr, who was born about 1812, in Cross Creek township, this county, daughter of William and Eleanor (Lyle) Kerr. The children born to this union were: Elizabeth L. (living at home), Mary E. (deceased in early womanhood), Alexander S. (subject of our sketch), William Kerr (a farmer of Allegheny county, Penn.), and Eleanor J. (living with her brother Alexander on the home farm). Joseph and Eleanor (Kerr) Hays settled on the home farm after their marriage, where he followed farming and stock raising with marked success. He always voted with the Democratic party, and in religion he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Hays died February 6, 1882, having been preceded by his wife September 30, 1871.

Alexander S. Hays was born October 8, 1849, on the home farm, where he is now living, and received a common-school education, at the same time assisting his father to cultivate the soil. After the death of the latter, Alexander S. Hays purchased the "Old Home Farm," where his ancestors had located over one hundred years ago, and has since improved and cultivated the old place. He raises first-class stock, making a specialty of fine horses, for which he possesses a strong admiration. He is a very progressive farmer, constantly making some new improvement, or illustrating some new idea, and in 1891 he erected a handsome new residence. Politically he is a prominent member of the Democratic party, having frequently served in township offices and given valuable assistance to the party in various ways. In religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He has never married.

MRS. SARAH BELLE MORRIS was born in 1856, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of Joseph and Charlotte (Carson) Rider, both of whom were born in 1822, also in Fallowfield township. Her father was reared from boyhood to agricultural pursuits, and has been a practical, industrious farmer. Her parents are yet residing on the old homestead, at the age of seventy years, and two daughters have blessed their wedded life, viz.: Hannah E., wife of Lewis Carson, a farmer of West Pike Run township, and Sarah Belle, widow of Emery Morris.

Emery Morris was born in 1855, on the old home place in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Hill) Morris, both of whom are natives of Washington county, Penn. Elizabeth Morris is deceased; but Jonathan now resides on the farm in Fallowfield township, where the children were born, as follows: Isaac, living in Carroll township, Washington county; Emma J., wife of Henry Heanon, a farmer of West Pike Run township, and Emery, deceased. The last named attended the schools of the home neighborhood, and his life was passed in agricultural pursuits. He was married in 1876 to Sarah Belle Rider, and died March 15, 1890, deeply mourned by the many friends who knew and appreciated his worth. In politics he was actively identified with the Republican party, and was ever zealous in matters of public interest. Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Morris has continued to reside on the farm, consisting of 104 acres, on which are two good gas wells, each yielding an annual income of $500. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Morris, two of whom died in infancy; those now living are: Florence, born in 1879; Eugene, born in 1885, and Noretta, born in 1888.

SAMUEL CRESWELL, one of the oldest, most intelligent and highly respected farmers of Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn., is a grandson of James Creswell, who came from Fort Deposit, Md.; settled in Washington county about the year 1790; removed to Brooke county, W. Va., about 1800; was married to Miss Mary Johnston, a native of Lancaster county, Penn., and was engaged in agricultural pursuits. Their union was blessed with nine children, namely: Robert, John, Samuel, Margaret, Jane, Mary, Elizabeth, Catherine and James, all of whom died, leaving numerous descendants, who are scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans.

Robert, the eldest son of James and Mary (Johnston) Creswell, was born December 23, 1780, and came to Washington county with his father in early life. Robert was reared on the farm, but turned his attention to milling soon after becoming of age, and built for himself a mill, now known as Ryland's Mill, Brooke Co., W. Va., which he operated for many years. He was united in marriage about 1808, with Miss Mary McCarrell, whose father, Thomas McCarrell, came from Ireland at an early date, and took part in the Revolutionary war, serving until the close of the conflict. To this union were born seven children, viz.: James, Eleanor, Thomas, Samuel, Robert J., Mary and Jane, of whom but two are living: James and Samuel.

Samuel Creswell was born February 22, 1815, in Brooke county, Va., and attended the common schools of that section. He afterward became a millwright, in which business he was successful, having built his first sawmill when but fourteen years of age. This mill is still in operation, and is known as the "Ryland's Mill." Among the many witnesses to the skill and ingenuity of Mr. Creswell are the old Wilson Mill, near West Middletown; the McBain Mill in Columbiana county, Ohio, and the old mill now known as the "Kidd Mill," which Mr. Creswell built, and operated for a number of years. He afterward came to the farm where he has since continuously resided. He was married February 2, 1837, to Mary Cunningham, a native of Washington county, born April 25, 1820, a daughter of John Cunningham, who came from Ireland at an early date. She died August 9, 1890. She was the mother of four children, viz.: Susanna, married February 7, 1861, to William Hanlin (deceased) (she first settled in Washington county, but now resides at Richmond, Ohio. She has had eight children: Samuel (deceased), Rachel J., Grace M., M. D., George A., Marie E., John D., and William F., (deceased); Mary Eleanor (deceased), Rachel Jane and Emma F. Mr. Creswell has been a staunch Democrat, and one of the counselors of his party. He has 186 acres of fine land, and a comfortable home. In religion he has always been a consistent member of the Methodist Protestant Church. His daughter, Emma F., has been a photographer for several years, and has in her possession quite a number of historical photographs, the product of her own work.

XENOPHON COOKE is a representative farmer, and is a descendant of an old time-honored family of Smith township. He is a great-grandson of James Cooke. James (the great-grandfather) was a native of Lancaster county, Penn., where, in 1752, he was united in marriage with a native of the same county, who bore him the following children: James, born August 11, 1758; Dorcas, born October 12, 1764; John, born December 29, 1766; David, born August 16, 1769; and Margaret, born February 28, 1773. Little is known of this family, save that the father followed agricultural pursuits in Lancaster county, Penn., and the three sons moved to Washington county soon after the Revolutionary war. James Cooke was reared to manhood in his native county, and served as a commissioned officer in the Revolution, and about 1785 came to Washington county. He purchased a tract of 649 acres in Smith township, situated about three and one-half miles south of Burgettstown, where he erected a rude cabin, and began to cultivate the virgin soil. On April 17, 1788, he was married to Hetty Galbraith, of Lancaster county, Penn., where Mary A. was born May 20, 1793. In 1795 the mother died, and Mary A., the only child then living, was taken to Lancaster county, Penn., by her mother's relatives, and was married to a Mr. Carpenter, of Lancaster, where her descendants still reside. On May 10, 1797, Mr. Cooke made choice of a second wife in the person of Martha McCombs, of Washington county, and to this union were born the following children: David, born March 28, 1798; Julia A. (wife of James McDonald, a farmer of Washington county), born December 17, 1799; Samuel (deceased on the old homestead in 1879), born April 22, 1803; Jane (wife of Joseph Vance), born August 6, 1806; Dorcas (consort of Moses Lyle), born May 18, 1809; Oliver P. (a farmer of Smith township), born October 23, 1814; and Matilda (married to David Gault of Cross Creek township), born May, 1817, all now deceased. James Cooke passed all his married life on the farm in Smith township, which eventually became one of the most valuable places of the neighborhood.

David Cooke, the eldest son in the above named family, was born and reared on the home farm, and was united in marriage with Agnes B. Ritchey. She was born in 1808, in Harrison county, Ohio, afterward coming with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ritchey, to Washington county. Mrs. Ritchey was a member of the well-known McWilliams family of Washington county. To the union of David and Agnes (Ritchey) Cooke children were born as follows: John (a carpenter, of Paducah, Ky., afterward enlisting in Company A, One Hundredth Regiment, the "Round Heads," serving until honorably discharged on account of physical disability), Xenophon (of whom further mention is made), Jane A. (Mrs. W. K. Lyle, of Washington, Penn.), Martha J. (deceased wife of Rev. Alexander White, a U. P. minister, of Washington county), Silas (a Presbyterian minister, of Nebraska, also a member of Company K, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. L., wounded in the battle of the Wilderness), Marietta (wife of Prof. S. C. Farrar, of Allegheny, Penn.) and Oliver R. (a lawyer of the Pittsburgh bar). Although enjoying but meager educational advantages in early life, Mr. Cooke succeeded by close and earnest study in becoming a scholarly man, equal to many of his more favored neighbors. He read Greek and Latin, was a fine mathematician (becoming a prominent civil engineer), all of which he secured by close application after attaining the age of maturity. In his example the lesson is obvious to those yet in the prime of life who bemoan the lack or neglect of early education. "Never too late to learn" is a trite maxim, but one whose truth is evident in all cases where people have had the courage and perseverance to devote time (otherwise spent in a less profitable manner) to the acquirement of needed knowledge. Politically Mr. Cooke was formerly a Whig, afterward uniting with the Republican party, and served in several offices. He was a member and liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church in Cross Creek township. He died December 24, 1857; his widow is now residing in Allegheny, Penn.

Xenophon Cooke was born November 29, 1835, on the farm in Smith township where he is yet residing. On September 23, 1863, he was united in marriage with Jane Galbraith, who was born October 20, 1835, daughter of William and Isabella (Welch) Galbraith, of Smith township, and two children have blessed this union: David M. (deceased at the age of twenty-two years) and Bella (an accomplished young lady, living at home). After his marriage Xenophon Cooke settled on the home farm, and has since followed agricultural pursuits. He is a very influential man, and in politics votes the Republican ticket, having been elected to different offices, and was chosen a justice of the peace, but declined to serve. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown.

SAMUEL McCLAY, who is a son of David and Margaret (McElroy) McClay, was born February 25, 1853, upon the old farm in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., where he passed his boyhood days and received his first lessons in the fundamental principles of success. He received a common-school education, and was early inducted into the mysteries of agricultural life. On March 4, 1873, he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah, a daughter of Joseph Wolf, who was one of the pioneer settlers of the county. The young wife lived but a short time after marriage, dying July 28, 1879, and on November 30, 1882, Mr. McClay married Miss Isabella, a daughter of John Fergus, whose father, Hugh Fergus, was born in Chartiers township, where he passed his early years, and, on attaining the age of maturity, wedded Miss Nancy McClain. To them were born: Sarah (deceased wife of James Stewart), John (now living in Olathe, Kans.), Mary (deceased wife of William Boone), Thomas (deceased), Agnes (Mrs. Matthew Miller), Martha (Mrs. Reed Miller), and Hugh (deceased). Hugh Fergus was a self made man, and always followed agricultural pursuits. He was a Whig, but held no political offices, and in religious views was formerly a Seceder, but afterward united with the United Presbyterian Church, and was a ruling elder. His son, John Fergus, was born in May, 1822, and beginning life for himself at an early age, became a most progressive and energetic citizen. He was married in March, 1844, to Miss Ellen, daughter of Samuel Martin, and then settled on a farm where he remained many years. Like his father, he was a member of the U. P. Church, and in politics was a Whig.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. McClay settled upon the old home farm where they now reside. The children born to them are: Ora B., Eben M., Esther A. and Ellen Blanche. Mr. McClay is active in the ranks of the Republican party, and, like his ancestors, is a member of the Disciple Church.

NB. BUCKINGHAM was born August 3, 1845, in Somerset township, this county, where he is now known as a successful and industrious farmer. He is a son of Ignatius Buckingham, who was born in 1817, in East Bethlehem township, this county, and being reared to agriculture, followed that vocation all his life. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Martha Baker, who was born in 1820, in East Bethlehem township, this county. Five children were born to this union, of whom three are yet living: Susan I. (wife of Henry Reade), Phoebe E. (unmarried) and N. B. (subject of this sketch). The father was a public-spirited man, holding various township offices. He died in 1885, and the mother is now living with her daughter, Susan I.

N. B. Buckingham was reared on the home farm, receiving a district school education. In 1872 he was married to Miss Nancy B. Camp, who was born February 25, 1843, in Washington county, Penn. She is a daughter of Peter (who was born in 1804) and Rosanna (Smiley) Camp (who was born November 9, 1805). Their children were born as follows: Owen, Mary, Phoebe (who married William Martin, of Greene county, Penn.), Emma (unmarried), William H. (a farmer of Somerset township), Matilda (wife of David G. Bonner), Nancy B. (Mrs. N. B. Buckingham), David G., Maria (deceased) and Joseph (deceased). The father died in 1870, and in 1882 his wife was laid beside him. Both were members of the M. E. Church. To the union of N. B. and Nancy B. (Camp) Buckingham three children have been born: Walter H., born June 19, 1871; Frank R., born in 1875; and Edwin C., born in 1879. Mr. Buckingham is a practical agriculturist, owning 136 acres of fine, well-improved land. He is a public-spirited citizen, interested in all progressive movements. He and his wife are members of the M. E. Church, of which he is a steward.

E W. McCONNELL, a prosperous and intelligent young farmer of Independence township, is a son of William and grandson of George McConnell, a pioneer settler of Ashland county, Ohio. William McConnell received a limited common-school education, and then left home and ran on the Ohio river from Pittsburgh to New Orleans. While on a visit to relatives in West Middletown, Washington Co., Penn., he met the lady who afterward became his wife, Martha Ann Culbertson (who was born October 24, 1816, in Independence (then Hopewell) township, daughter of John Culbertson). Mr. Culbertson was born February 13, 1786, near Chambersburg, Penn., and was married to Martha Adams (who was born east of the mountains November 10, 1777), daughter of David Adams, who was among the early settlers of Washington county, and an old river man. He made the return trip from New Orleans on foot or horseback, subsisting meanwhile on corn dodgers. It was necessary to sleep out of doors, as the country was unsettled, and their dreams were often interrupted by the war-whoop of the savage or the scream of some wild animal. Mr. Culbertson was a resident of Independence township, where his daughter, Martha Ann, was born. Mr. and Mrs. William McConnell had the following children: Jane, John (both deceased in youth), E. W., Margaret (Mrs. Joseph Ralston, of Independence township), Annie

M. (deceased in youth) and William (a farmer). After his marriage Mr. McConnell located on the old Culbertson farm, lying about two miles southeast of Independence, where he resided until his death. He also owned the place now known as the "McConnell Homestead," and was a prosperous farmer. Politically he was a Democrat, and filled many offices of trust. His widow, a most estimable lady, is now living on the home farm, and is a consistent member of the Lower Buffalo Presbyterian Church, with which her deceased husband was also connected.

E. W. McConnell was born August 2, 1849, on the place in Independence township, which was made a part of the homestead before the death of his father. His boyhood was passed in farm work, and receiving a common-school education, which was in supplemented by a partial course at Mount Union College, in Stark county, Ohio. He then taught school for some time in Elizabethtown, Ky., and afterward returned to his birthplace, where he has since resided. On October 6, 1881, he was united in marriage with Annie Gourley (who was born in 1862, in Brooke county, W. Va.), daughter of James Gourley, a native of that place; and to their union have been born children as follows: James G., Annie M., Willard W., and William Culbertson, an infant son. Mr. McConnell erected a pleasant residence on the home farm adjoining the original tract owned by his father, and engaged in farming. He is one of the progressive men in his vocation; in politics he has been a Democrat, but at present is independent of any party connection. Both he and his wife are members of the Lower Buffalo Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM A. SMILEY. There are men in all communities whose influence is felt rather than seen; whose lives and characters, like the deep undercurrent of a mighty stream, have deeper, greater and weightier effects in moulding their surroundings and shaping the course of events, than others who in outward appearances may have an important showing in the affairs of the community. Among those quiet, earnest men, whose depth of character and firm uprightness of principles excite the admiration of those who know them, is William A. Smiley, who comes of a long line of honored ancestors.

William A. Smiley was born April 22, 1848, in Hopewell township, this county. His father, Caldwell Smiley, was a son of William Smiley, who was of Scotch ancestry, and came to America at a very early day. He was one of the first elders of Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church, and with Robert Caldwell, in 1779 selected the site for the church. Prior to coming to Washington county, he had lived in York county, Penn. The personal appearance of Mr. William Smiley is thus described in "Old Redstone": "He was a Scotchman of strong mind, very shrewd, and extremely pious. His manners were somewhat blunt, and he had an integrity and honesty about him which would not allow him to connive at anything he thought to be wrong. He disliked everything which in any way set aside the claims of religion, and did not give it its proper place in the business of life or the enjoyment of the social circle." It is related of Mr. Smiley that where at one time the church of Upper Buffalo had been unable for some years to pay the salary of Rev. James Smith, he volunteered to make the trip to New Orleans with a boat load of flour. Although sixty-four years of age, he made the trip successfully, and from the proceeds of the sale of the flour paid the church debt. He died November 21, 1813, aged eighty-two years. William Smiley was the father of seven children, their names and dates of births being as follows: Margaret, in January, 1796; William, October 30, 1797; John, November 22, 1799; Robert, October 10, 1801; James, November 11, 1803; Samuel, November 28, 1805, and Caldwell, August 5, 1807. After a long career of usefulness, Mr. Smiley passed away at the age of eighty-two years.

Caldwell Smiley, youngest son of William, was reared in Hopewell township, this county, and, after receiving a fair English education in the common schools, engaged in farming. He was first married to a Miss Tweed, and after her death was united in marriage with Martha Smiley, daughter of Samuel Smiley, who bore him one son, William A. Caldwell Smiley wielded a strong influence in the community in which he lived. In politics he was a Whig prior to the formation of the Republicans, after which he became a strict adherent of the principles of that party. He possessed great determination and industry, and accumulated a handsome competence, the result of his own efforts.

After the death of his mother, which occurred May 6, 1818, William A. Smiley was taken into the family of his uncle, where he remained, attending school, until eighteen years of age, when the failing health of his father obliged him to return and take charge of the home farm. On October 1, 1875, he was married to Miss Linnie A. Work, daughter of James and Margaret (Caldwell) Work, of Hopewell township, residing near Buffalo village. After his father's death, Mr. Smiley purchased the farm upon which he is now residing, containing 108 acres. He gives special attention to the raising of sheep, hogs, horses and cattle, and the usual farm products. The children born to William A. and Linnie A. (Work) Smiley are: James C., Austin Vincent, William A., Viola M., Harold H., Elsie Belle, and one child deceased in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Smiley are members and regular attendants of church and Sabbath-school of the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church.

LYSANDER PATTERSON, a well-known surveyor in Washington county, Penn., was born March 19, 1820, on the farm in Cross Creek township where he is yet living. He is a grandson of Thomas Patterson, and a son of William and Margaret (Lyle) Patterson, the latter of whom was a daughter of Hon. Aaron Lyle. Lysander Patterson attended the English Department of Washington College, under the tuition of Hon. John L. Gow, and also enjoyed the advantage of private lessons from the renowned mathematician, Prof. John Armstrong, who was then teaching in Franklin College, New Athens, Ohio. After leaving school he returned to farming and surveying.

On March 27, 1845, Mr. Patterson was united in marriage with Elizabeth M., daughter of David Wallace, of Allegheny county, Penn. Mr. Patterson owns ninety-four acres of the old homestead, where his father first made a settlement. He is a staunch Democrat, and has served for many years as township auditor and justice of the peace.

JOHN BAVINGTON McBRIDE was born on the farm on which he now resides in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., March 15, 1837.

He received a good primary and more advanced education at the common schools of his district, supplemented by an extended course of study at Jefferson College, then located at Canonsburg, this county. Indeed it may be truly said of him that he has been a life student, a diligent and thoughtful reader of selected books that furnished the best food for the mind, keeping himself posted in the current literature of the times, a close observer of men and things, and thus trained he has always been ready to take a leading part in all questions and enterprises of interest to the community. In his political predilections he is a leading Democrat and a strong advocate of "clean politics." He has held with characteristic ability various township offices. Without solicitation on his part he was nominated for the Legislature in 1869, and again in 1890. In both contests he led his colleagues, and although in a strongly Republican district, was defeated in both contests by less than 100 votes. He was one of the corporators of and is a stockholder in the "Oak Spring Cemetery Company," located near Canonsburg, Penn. Mr. McBride has been twice appointed, by Gov. Pattison, a member of the board of managers of Morganza Reform school, and takes a special interest in the common schools in his community, having been for many years identified with their management, believing this to be the children's golden opportunity. He is a zealous worker for their success, and in touch with such methods and appliances as will elevate and ennoble the schools.

Mr. McBride's ancestral history is an interesting one. The great-grandparents of the present generation of the most numerous family of Washington county McBrides were natives of near Belfast, County Antrim, Ireland, where they lived and died. The great grandfather's name was Nathaniel McBride and the great-grandmother's maiden name was Hamilton. The grandfather's name was James McBride, and the grandmother's maiden name was Sarah Sprowls; both were natives of Ireland but were married in this country. Nathaniel and some other brothers never came to this country. James McBride, when twenty-three years of age, came to America with his brothers, Isaac and Samuel, about 1772, and settled first on what was afterward taken up and known as the "Washington lands" on Miller's run, Washington Co., Penn. Soon after their settlement here, Gen. Washington, at the suggestion of his agent, Capt. William Crawford, had a survey made of these lands, and on July 5, 1775, a military patent was issued to Washington for 2,813 acres, from Lord Dunmore, Governor-general of Virginia. In the meantime they, with other settlers, made improvements on said lands, believing, as Col. George Croghan, an Indian agent, told them, that Washington had no right there and advised them to remain. Washington's journal shows that on September, 19, 1784, "he came to the settlement," but having learned that they were a religious people deferred his visit until "Monday, September 20, went early this morning to view the land and to receive the final determination of those who lived upon it." . . . "Having obtained a pilot near the land, I went first to the plantation of Samuel McBride, who has about five acres of meadow and thirty acres of arable land under good fencing, a logged dwelling house with a puncheon roof and stable or small barn of the same kind. The land rather hilly but good, chiefly white oak. . . . Next James McBride's three or four acres of meadow, twenty eight acres of arable land, pretty good fencing, land rather broken but good, white and black oak timber mixed, a dwelling house and barn—of middling size—with puncheon roofs." His journal further shows that they with Thomas Biggert and nine others were ejected from their improved lands in 1785. Samuel McBride and family, with his brother Isaac, a bachelor, went to Mahoning in eastern Ohio. James McBride, with Thomas Biggert and several others of those ejected, settled in what is now Robinson township, Washington Co., Penn. These sturdy pioneer settlers felt that they were not justly treated by Gen. Washington, believing that they were entitled to their lands by improvement of them according to the custom of the country. Ejected from these homes which they had literally hewed out of the forest, defeated but not disheartened, they again entered the forest to carve out for themselves new homes. James McBride selected 240 acres, and in 1785 secured a patent under the name of "Pump-ton" from the receiver-general's offices of Pennsylvania, which patent contained this unique clause: "Reserving only the fifth part of all gold and silver for the use of the commonwealth, to be delivered at the pit's mouth free of all charges." This tract was owned successively by his sons, William and Alexander, and is now owned by his grandson, John C. McBride. Another grandson, William, now owns and lives upon a part of the "Washington lands" in Mt. Pleasant township. It is said that the McBride settlements were on the land now owned by Luther Morgan in said township.

Mr. McBride's family was one of the three that first formed the organization of the Associate Presbyterian Church of Clinton, Rev. William Wilson, pastor. James McBride died October 6, 1827, aged eighty-four years, his wife died March 6, 1838, aged eighty-one years, and both are buried in the Clinton Church cemetery. They had an issue of ten sons, as follows: Nathaniel, died in 1860, aged eighty-two years; Francis, James and John were at their deaths aged fifty-nine, sixty-nine, and eighty-eight years, respectively; Matthew Hamilton, born in 1787, died March 12, 1871, aged eighty-four years; Samuel died in 1877, aged eighty-seven years; Isaac died aged eighty-three years; David died aged seventy-two years; William, born 1797, died October 22, 1878, aged eighty one years; Alex., born in 1800, died November 20, 1885, aged eighty-five years. By the help and industry of this large family of boys Mr. McBride accumulated a large estate, about eleven hundred acres of land, which he divided among his children.

Matthew H. McBride was born in Robinson township, Washington Co., Penn., and received as liberal an education as the schools of his day afforded. For a time he taught the district school, and worked on the farm. He was by his father's will made one of the executors of the estate. He was married March 12, 1834, to Mary Bavington, daughter of Capt. John and Ruth (McKinnon) Bavington, one of the pioneer families of Smith township.

CAPTAIN JOHN BAVINGTON was born February 2, 1750, and was married to Ruth McKinnon about the year 1785. On February 22, 1786, he took out a patent called "Mill Town," containing 404 acres near the east branch of Raccoon creek. Soon after this he built a grist and saw-mill, which did the grinding and sawing for many miles around. He built a cabin on the hillside about a quarter of a mile east of the village of Bavington. Later he built a house on the part of the farm near the village of Bavington, where he lived until his death, which occurred June 23, 1810, under the following sad circumstances: He was on his way to Steubenville with a four-horse load of flour, and when crossing the Ohio river at Kelly's Ferry, near the mouth of Harman's creek, the stamping of the horses loosened the planks of the bottom of the boat, letting in the water till it sank, and both Capt. Bavington and the ferryman were drowned. Capt. Bavington's body was recovered, brought home and buried in the Cross Roads (now Florence) cemetery. He left a widow and five sons: Daniel, Charles, Henry, John and Thomas.

His widow and eldest son, Daniel, were administrators of the estate, and the property was divided. Daniel obtained the homestead and mill property; later he sold the mill property to James Clark, Sr., and went to Illinois. Charles purchased mill property near Murdocksville, lived there for a time, and then migrated to Ohio. Henry lived and died comparatively young at the homestead. John received his portion of the estate in money, and went to Oregon. Thomas received the east portion of the farm now owned by D. Stewart McBride, and which was rated as one of the best farms in that part of the county. During the palmy days of the "Stenbenville Pike," Thomas kept a public house for many years, it being about midway between Pittsburgh and Steubenville; there being quite a traffic between these two places made it a good place for the accommodation of the public. He was a good and public-spirited citizen. In 1855, when the Pittsburgh & Steubenville Railroad was first projected, he took an active part in securing it, and was a liberal subscriber to its stock, although the road was not located near his farm. He lived upon this farm until his death, which occurred about the year 1863. His children nearly all died during their minority; only one daughter, Eliza, now is living.

Capt. Bavington had five daughters: Nancy married Matthew Hartford, a millwright who built the Bavington mill; Elizabeth married Charles B. Patterson, and they settled near Bavington, where both died; Sarah married a Mr. Backhouse, who owned a farm eight miles below Pittsburgh, now owned by the "Pennsylvania Insane Asylum" at Dixmont there she was killed August 27, 1851, by a passing train on the Pittsburgh & Ft. Wayne Railroad; Catherine married J. Burns, and lived and died near Clinton, Allegheny Co., Penn.; Mary married Matthew H. McBride, March 12, 1834, and settled in North Strabane township. The Bavington family is now entirely extinct in Smith township.

To Matthew H. and Mary (Bavington) McBride were born three children, viz.: James Hamilton (who died October 23, 1862, from wounds received while in the service of the State that year), John Bavington (our subject), and Samuel Bruce (who graduated at Jefferson College in 1861, and who at the call of his country then enlisted in Company G (Capt. Frazer), One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; he was severely wounded at Fredericksburg, and was subsequently discharged on account of this disability; as soon as his health permitted, he resumed his theological studies, and was licensed to preach by Chartiers U. P. Presbytery; he now resides near Sewickley, Allegheny Co., Penn.). In 1824 Mr. McBride and his brother, David, bought the homestead in North Strabane township, which they jointly held until November 3, 1835, when Matthew bought David's interest in the farm. This farm is located in what is known as the "Rich Hill section," three miles south of Canonsburg, and one mile from Johnson's Station, C. V. R. R. Immediately after buying David's interest, Mr. McBride with his wife permanently located on the farm, bringing up their children to manhood. Here the parents died, Matthew H. McBride, September 12, 1871, aged eighty-four years, his wife February 12, 1873, aged seventy-six years. They were members of the Associate (now United Presbyterian) Congregation of Chartiers, where the venerable Dr. James Ramsey, so long ministered. Mr. McBride was an old-school Democrat, but never made himself prominent in politics. In educational matters, however, and in every other question claiming the earnest consideration of thinking men, he took a deep interest, and he served as school trustee in his township for many years. He was a progressive farmer and successful stock raiser.

After his parents' death, J. B. McBride obtained full control of the farm, and on May 1, 1873, he was married to Alice, daughter of Maj. James S. Scott, of Washington county, Penn. An interesting family of six children have come to brighten their home, as follows: James Scott, John Bavington, Charles Cabbage, Samuel Bruce, Mary Alice and George Wallace. The mother of these children dying November 17, 1884, Mr. McBride wedded on June 28, 1887, Frances Emma Jones, of Canonsburg, Penn., whose parents were Ephraim Jones, of Jones Ferry, Pittsburgh, and Mary E. Rambo, of Covington, Ky. By this union there is no issue. The family are members of and liberal contributors toward the Chartiers U. P. congregation, Canonsburg, Penn., and enjoy the respect and esteem of the entire community. Mr. McBride is extensively engaged in general agriculture and stock raising. He is noted as a thorough and successful farmer in a region celebrated for its good farms and its model farmers. Like his father, he has devoted much of his income to the improvement and adornment of his farm, and as a result he has now one of the most desirable and best improved farms in this section of Washington county. In all his undertakings he has met with well-merited success, a success due to his perseverance, sound judgment and progressive enterprise.

JENNIE A. MORGAN. From time immemorial it has been the custom of all nations to extol, in story and in song, the valor of those who have performed gallant deeds in time of war, but it has been left to civilized nations to commemorate that truer manliness, that nobler courage, which enables men to live uprightly and deal justly, seeking no preferment or approval save that of God and their own consciences. In heat of battle, men long trained in the grim trade of war, without forethought oft achieved most daring deeds. Shall the soldier hero receive a greater tribute of respect than one who silently, uncomplainingly takes up his burden and fights back the thousand adverse fates that seek to block his pathway to success? Shall we wreath the laurel and rear the beautiful arch for the one, and bury the memories of the other in the tomb that enshrines his mortal dust? Civilized—Christianized humanity cries out against it. The deeds of a good man should live after him, and in these days of wide dissemination of thought, the transmission of the story from father to son is inadequate. Perpetuate his deeds, and thus perpetuate his influence. The pioneers of Washington county possessed such noble characteristics that not one whit of their lives' record should be lost. The old residents of Washington county look back over a long and uniformly prosperous period, which is attributed to the mode of life of the people. No county in the State has been more favored, and no county in the State can exhibit better public institutions than this; and this condition of affairs can be traced to the efforts of the people who first settled the county, founded and fostered its religious and educational institutions, and directed its political career. It has been said that the pioneers of Washington county were a God-loving people, whose first thought upon entering the wilderness was to erect an altar to His worship, and from whose cabins rose at morn and eve the voice of praise, thanksgiving and appeal. Such were the founders of Washington county, and such were the ancestors of the subject of this sketch.

Miss Jennie A. Morgan's (of West Middletown, Penn.) maternal grandfather, William Greer, came to America when western Pennsylvania was still a wilderness. William Greer was born and reared in Ireland. Emigrating about the time he became of age, he settled in Lancaster county, Penn., where he was afterward married to Jane Graham. About the year 1805, William Greer and family (a child having been born in Lancaster county) pushed westward into Washington county, locating near Noblestown, where they remained until 1836. They then removed to Hopewell township, and in 1845 settled in West Middletown, where he died in 1852. William Greer is described as a man of medium height, and of delicate rather than robust form. His constitution being shattered by the effects of fever and ague, he was an invalid for many years, but was cheerful and patient, having a kind disposition and a pleasant word for all. He was very modest in demeanor, and withheld himself from publicity, but was very active in promoting Church matters, holding membership in the Grove United Presbyterian Church. He was a man of unusual intelligence, and an insatiable searcher for information. Being for many years unable to work, he found his chief diversion in books, and his solace and comfort in his family and Church. Five children were born to William and Jane (Graham) Greer: Margaret (married James Maxwell, and resided in Hopewell township until her death in 1870); Jane (lived in West Middletown until her death, which occurred in 1890); Elizabeth (mentioned below); John (left home and died when a young man), and Mary (wife of James France, of West Middletown, where she died in 1866). Of these children, Elizabeth Greer was born February 5, 1810, on the home place, and in 1832 was married to Billingsley Morgan, a native of Allegheny county, Pennsylvania.

Billingsley Morgan was born in 1811. He was a son of Hugh Morgan, who came with his parents to western Pennsylvania, settling on the old Morgan tract about twelve miles below Pittsburgh, when the county was very new, and secured their land by "tomahawk right." The times were unsettled, and the Indians very hostile, the settlers having to take refuge in the forts and blockhouses to escape being massacred. Billingsley received a common-school education, and after his marriage, in 1833, opened a shoe store in West Middletown, Penn., where he remained until his death in March, 1836. He left two daughters—Jane A. (the subject of this sketch) and Margaret (deceased at the age of three years). At the time of his death Mr. Morgan was too young to have obtained great prominence in his community, yet he was regarded as a young man of extraordinary promise, and enjoyed the esteem of those with whom he was associated, possessing a bright, cheerful disposition, and fighting the adversities of life with smiles. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Morgan was a member of the United Presbyterian Church at West Middletown. She was left alone to care for and educate her children while yet very young, but she performed every duty toward them, and at the same time her influence was felt in every department of church work. Her devotion and piety were remarkable, and she was ever ready to assist in every plan for forwarding the course of morality. She passed away August 14, 1872, her death being a severe blow to the entire community, and it was said of her that "a true Christian woman had gone home."

The ladies of the Greer family have all been noted for their piety, and Miss Jane Greer (an aunt of our subject) was no exception to the rule. Having no family depending upon her she adopted the sick, suffering and distressed; wherever such were to be found, Miss Jane Greer appeared, nursing the sick, comforting the distressed and serving her Master as best she could. Her labors were not for glory or gain, but "she saw her duty and performed it and counted it naught." Miss Jennie A. Morgan, like the other members of her family, is a devoted member of the Church, and none of the precepts and examples of the others have been lost on her. Though frail in form and an invalid during much of the time, her influence is felt in the community, and while prevented by her infirmity from following the philanthropic example of other members of her family to the same extent, she "hath done what she could," and none could do more. She is a member of the Grove United Presbyterian Church, and, following the rule long established in her family, contributes the tenth part of her income to the support of church work, in addition thereto responding liberally to appeals for other worthy projects. Miss Morgan resides in West Middletown, Penn., where she has a pleasant home, and is much esteemed.

JOHAN SPHAR. The Sphar family have been identified with the history of Washington county for many years. Mattern Sphar was born in Switzerland, and, in company with two brothers and one sister, emigrated to America at the age of seventeen years, about the year 1760. He first settled in Williamsburgh, Va., and on April 21, 1767, took the oath of allegiance under Queen Anne. He was there married to Margaret Shively, and in 1780 came to Washington county, Penn., and purchased of one Colonel Cooke 200 acres, on the Monongahela river, in what is now Washington county. He took an active part in the Whiskey Insurrection, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He died about the year 1822, leaving three children: John, Mattern (who moved to Adams county, Ohio, thence to Indiana), and Henry (lived in this county).

John Sphar was born in 1777, in Loudoun county, Va., and when but three years of age came with his parents to Washington county, Penn. He received a subscription-school education in Allen township, and when a young man was married to Susanna Redd, a native of Washington county, and reared the following children: Mary, wife of John Shively, in Guernsey county, Ohio; Jacob, was first married to Susan Wood, who died, and he was then married to Charlotte Wilson; Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Dunlevy; Daniel, married to Mary Speer, and lived in Kentucky; Ann, wife of William Spah, of Indiana; Barbara, wife of William Hollingshead; Mattern, married to Margaret Coyle, of Ohio; Sarah, widow of Joseph Bezell, in Allen township; Rachel, married to Robert Gailey, of Clarion county, Penn.; John, married to Lucy Ann Scott, and Henry. Of this family three are living, Sarah, John and Henry. The father voted with the Whig and Republican parties, and served as supervisor of the township. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. He died in 1856, having been preceded by his wife in 1852.

John Sphar was born February 26, 1817, on the old place in Allen township, Washington county, Penn. In 1839 he was united in marriage with Lucy Ann Scott, a daughter of Parker and Sarah (Carson) Scott, all of whom were natives of Fallowfield township. Her parents had twelve daughters, of whom Mrs. Sphar is the only one yet living. Mr. Sphar owns seventy-five acres of the old homestead, where he has followed general farming. He cast a vote for William Henry Harrison, and since the organization of the Republican party has been an earnest supporter of that faction; he has served as a member of the school board and also as supervisor. He is no less interested in religious than in political movements, having been licensed as an exhorter and class leader in the Ebenezer M. E. Church, with which his wife is also identified. The children of this influential family are as follows: Sarah, wife of William Rogers, of Fallowfield township; Parker S.; Henry, married to a Miss McElhaney, of Armstrong county, Penn.; James, deceased in his twenty-sixth year; John E.; Ann, widow of Ephraim McKee; Gertrude, married to J. H. Redd, and Wesley, deceased at the age of nineteen years.

JOHAN M. BERRY, a leading and influential farmer and stock dealer of North Strabane township, is a native of Washington county, Penn., born January 14, 1839. He is a descendant of John Berry, a native of Ireland, who immigrated to America, settling in pioneer days in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, where in about the year 1796 he purchased 251 acres of land. Here he passed the remainder of his days. He left two sons—John and William Gilmore—of whom John remained on the original tract, and followed agricultural pursuits, in which he was remarkably successful.

John M Berry

William Gilmore Berry was born in Colerain township, Lancaster Co., Penn., December 2, 1781. In the spring of 1795 or 1796 he came with his father, John Berry, to Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., and when able to do for himself he moved to Venice, Cecil township, where he purchased a farm and mill property, afterward buying and settling on a farm in North Strabane township. In 1804 he married Jane, daughter of Matthew McConnell, and they had born to them eight children: John, Mary, Elizabeth, Jane, William, Prudence, Matthew and James. About 1850 Mr. Berry retired from active work and took up his residence in Canonsburg, where he died October 26, 1866; his wife died February 25, 1848, and they are both buried in the Canonsburg U. P. Church cemetery, they having been members of that church.

John Berry, son of William G. and Jane (McConnell) Berry, was born August 1, 1805, near Venice, Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn. On December 1, 1829, he married Jane, daughter of John Eagleton, a native of Ireland, and to them were born six children: Jane (married to Ebenezer Carson), Rachel (married to Robert Herron), William, John M., David W. and Carson M. After marriage Mr. Berry resided for seventeen years on the Watson farm in Cecil township; then moved to and lived in Canonsburg for three years, after which he returned to Cecil township, remaining three years. He then, in 1853, came to North Strabane township, having purchased the "Amsterdam" farm from the Pees brothers, where he passed the remainder of his life, with the exception of five years he lived in the borough of Washington. During the earlier period of his life he was a member of the Associate Reformed Church of Robinson's Run, then of Canonsburg, afterward joining the United Presbyterian Church, in which he was a member of the Session fifteen years, and after coming to North Strabane township he connected himself with the U. P. Church at Pigeon Creek. In his political preferences he was first a Whig, then a Republican with strong Abolition sentiments, and he held various offices of trust in his township. He died in June, 1881, and is interred in the U. P. cemetery of Pigeon Creek; his wife departed this life in January, 1844, and she is interred at Miller's Run.

John M. Berry, the subject proper of these lines, passed his youth in the township of his birth, attending the common schools of the district, and learning practical lessons in agriculture on the home farm. In 1853 he came to North Strabane township with his father where he has since resided, with the exception of the time he was serving his country in the Civil war. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and followed the fortunes of his regiment until the battle of Spottsylvania, where he was wounded in the left shoulder. They were fighting in what was called the "Bloody Angle," and our subject was one of the first, if not the first, to get inside the rebel redoubt; he was on the right of the foremost company which led that famous charge. The company numbered twenty-one men, and nearly half of them were killed or wounded. Mr. Berry, after spending, in all, six months in hospital, recovered from his wound and proceeded to Washington, D. C., where he remained on duty till the close of the war, being mustered out June 28, 1865. He then returned home and settled down to the vocation of peace on his farm in North Strabane township, where he carries on general agriculture and is extensively engaged in stock raising, but he is best known to the public as a successful breeder and exhibitor of "Black-Top Merino Sheep," for which he has a large sale all over the United States.

On December 22, 1870, Mr. Berry married Mary J., daughter of Samuel L. Weir, of Somerset township, this county, and the children born to this union were Samuel C. (deceased), Minnie J., John L. W. and William E. Mr. and Mrs. Berry are prominent members of the U. P. Church at Pigeon Creek, in which he is an elder. In politics he is a Republican, and has faithfully served his township in various official capacities. In 1885 he was elected justice of the peace, and again elected in 1890, which office he fills with eminent ability. Mr. Berry has been successful and prosperous in his many business interests, and is the owner of a highly improved farm of 178 acres, well adapted to stock raising. In 1890 he erected one of the handsomest and most commodious residences to be found in Washington county, finished throughout with natural woods, and equipped with all the latest improvements in plumbing, having hard and soft, hot and cold water in both first and second stories.

DAVID W. BERRY, son of John and Jane (Eagleton) Berry, and brother of John M., was born in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., in April 1841. He passed his youth in the township of his birth, and in 1853 moved with his father to North Strabane township. He attended the common schools of the district, and afterward entered Jefferson College, at Canonsburg, where he prosecuted his studies with success until the close of the sophomore year, when, along with his brother, John M., he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I. He followed the fortunes of his regiment, participating in all of its battles up to that of Cold Harbor, where, on June 2, 1864, he was mortally wounded, dying in the hospital at Alexandria, Va., on July 1, 1864; his remains are interred in the cemetery of the U. P. Church at Pigeon Creek, Washington county, he having been a member of that Church.

JOHN P. WOOD, in his lifetime one of the leading citizens of Burgettstown, came of English ancestry. His grandfather, Peter Wood, was born and reared in the mother country, where he married, and reared a large family. They crossed the ocean and settled in Philadelphia, Penn., where the grandfather engaged in the wholesale dry-goods business. Some time later the family moved to Bucks county, same State, where they resided several years. He was a Quaker prior to his marriage, but, having made choice of a Baptist wife, was on that account dismissed from the Society. He died in Philadelphia.

Ingham Wood was born on the home farm in Bucks county, Penn., where his boyhood was passed. In early life he spent three years as an apprentice in the pottery business, continuing in that vocation the rest of his life. He was married in Lancaster county, Penn., to Catherine Hoffman, who bore him the following children: Ingham R. (who was a graduate at West Point, and a lieutenant at Fort Snelling, dying at Baton Rouge), Ann E. (Mrs. William B. Whitehill, of Salt Lake City, Utah), Margaret (wife of James Phillips, of St. Louis, Mo.), John P. (of whom special mention is made further on), William, Benjamin F., Harriet (married to Dr. Donnan), and Jackson. In 1834 the father moved from Lancaster county, to Peoria, Ill., and thence proceeded to St. Louis, Mo.; but his wife dying, he afterward returned to Lancaster county. He died at Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

John P. Wood was born November 27, 1815, in Lancaster county, and passed his boyhood in the town of Lancaster. At the age of seventeen years he began to learn the pottery trade, serving a full apprenticeship with his father. When twenty-one years of age he came to Burgettstown, purchased a pottery establishment of Robert Brown, conducted that business for sixteen years, then sold out and bought the farm upon which he resided until March, 1877. On January 2, 1839, he was united in marriage with Esther M., daughter of Thomas Miller, and grandchild of Samuel Miller, the latter of whom was a native of Ireland, and was married in that country to Miss McNinch. They came to America, and resided in Cecil county, Md., until 1795, thence moving to Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., where he purchased a large tract of land. Both were members of the Seceder Church, and their children were Thomas, John, Samuel, Jane, Margaret, Mary and Sarah.

Thomas Miller was born July 15, 1788, in Cecil county, Md., where he grew to manhood, and on July 10, 1809, was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Simpson. The young couple immediately moved to Washington county, making their unique bridal trip on horseback, and resided in Mt. Pleasant township until 1810, when they purchased a hotel in Burgettstown, Penn. Five children were born to their marriage, viz.: Anna M., Elizabeth, Samuel, John and Esther M. Mr. Miller was a drover in early life, buying and selling cattle, and driving them over the mountains to the eastern markets. He was captain in the militia during the war of 1812, and assisted in the defense at Lake Erie. He kept the first postoffice in Burgettstown, Penn. He was a member of the Seceder Church, and in politics voted the Democratic ticket. He died September 3, 1819, his widow in 1871.

John P. Wood passed suddenly away, June 27, 1892, his death being unexpected to all. He was the architect of his own fortune, and was his own success. He took an active part in politics, voting the Democratic ticket, and at the time of his demise was serving his third term as justice of the peace. He was a member of the U. P. Church, and one of the building committee who superintended the erection of the present house of worship in Burgettstown.

ROBERT MEHAFFEY (deceased) was an example of the success which may be won by frugality and industry, coupled with business sagacity. His father, Robert MehaFFEY, was a native of Ireland, who emigrated, in early life, to America, where he was married to Eleanor Mitchell, of Scotch-Irish parentage. Their children were: James, Joseph, Robert (the subject of this sketch), Mitchell, Jane, John and Eleanor.

Robert MehaFFEY was born December 4, 1810, in Donegal township. His boyhood was passed near his birthplace. His education was limited to two or three months' attendance each year at a log schoolhouse provided with rude wooden benches, a puncheon floor, and in the absence of a door a sheet covered the vacancy. When Robert was thirteen years of age, their home was darkened by a sudden calamity. It was in the harvest field, and the father had just completed a stack of hay, and was sliding to the ground, when a wooden fork which had been placed, prongs upward, against its side, penetrated his bowels. He was carried to the shade of a tree, and in a few hours the strong man, in the prime of life, was dead. The mother, left with seven children, the youngest but a little over one year old, on a small farm, managed not only to exist, but to live well, and there her children acquired those sterling principles and practical knowledge which formed the basis of most successful business lives.

As the years rolled on the family dispersed. James purchased and removed to a farm a few miles distant, where he resided until his death, March 16, 1858. Joseph, being of a more roving disposition than his brothers, "pitched his tent" southward, making his home near Vicksburg, Miss. After an absence of twenty-one years he returned, purchased land near the old homestead, and continued to reside there until his death, May 22, 1891. Mitchell and Jane married. The mother died in 1846; the sister, Eleanor, a few years later; and Robert and John were left alone on the home farm. They needed not the admonition which Joseph gave his brethren, "See that ye fall not out by the way," for in all their daily intercourse and business transactions they never had a dispute as to "which should be the greater." On June 22, 1858, Robert married Mary McCoy, daughter of Kenneth and Jane (Brownlee) McCoy. To them three children were born: Jennie E. (wife of Rev. W. R. Jamison, a U. P. minister of Frankfort, Beaver county), Joseph B. (one of the leading and progressive farmers of Independence township, living on the home farm of which he has charge) and Lizzie M. (residing with her mother and brother). In 1864, Mr. Mehaffey removed to Independence township, having purchased the "Jackson Spriggs" farm, situated two miles northeast of Dunsfort, where he resided the remainder of his life. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and in religion a valued member of the U. P. Church of Mt. Hope. At the time of his death, August 17, 1890, Mr. Mehaffey owned 864 acres of unusually good farm land, besides a comfortable income. Though he almost reached four-score years, yet the infirmities of age sat lightly upon him. His cheerful disposition and equable temper made him seem younger than he was. Diffident and retiring in disposition, his many excellencies were more appreciated in the home circle, and by those who were his neighbors, than by the noisy world around.

JOHAN McCABE, who ranks among the oldest and most prosperous citizens of Peters township, is a son of Joseph E. McCabe, whose father, William McCabe, born and reared in Ireland, came to the United States about 1783 and settled in North Strabane township, Washington Co. He followed carpentry, and erected many of the buildings in that locality. His eight children were James, William, Samuel, John, Robert, Joseph E., a daughter (name unknown), and Martha, all of whom have passed away, leaving many descendants. He was an elder in the Hill Presbyterian Church.

Joseph E. McCabe, son of William, was born in February, 1790, in North Strabane township. His youth was passed in rural pursuits, and he then carried on a distillery for several years. When a young man, he married Margaret Fife, born in 1790, a daughter of John Fife, a resident of Allegheny county, Penn., and to them the following children were born: Eliza, John, William, Isabelle, Mary, Thompson and Lavinia. Of these Eliza and William are deceased, while the others are living in different parts of the United States. After his marriage he settled on a farm in Allegheny county, and carried on a distillery. After his children were born, the father abandoned the distillery business, and followed carpentry for some time. He finally settled on a farm, and in 1818 had one of the finest places in Allegheny county; but owing to a sudden financial depression, he was eventually compelled to give up his home. He was a colonel in the State militia, and for almost half a century commanded a battalion in the county as well as in Pittsburgh. He was possessed of excellent business qualifications, was one of the best educated agriculturists then living in that locality, an excellent justice of the peace and one of the most capable militia officers of the State. He died February 5, 1870, his wife having preceded him to the grave, July 29, 1831. In church connection they were members of the Presbyterian Church; in politics he was a Democrat.

John McCabe, the subject proper of this sketch, was born August 16, 1814, in Allegheny county, Penn., and at the age of seventeen years, began work by the month for neighboring farmers. On February 9, 1837, he married Sarah, daughter of Robert Thompson, of Peters township, and after their marriage the young couple remained in Allegheny county for two years, then removed to their present farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., containing 225 acres of good land. Their children are Robert (a farmer, now living in Canonsburg), Joseph (an agriculturist, of Peters township), and Catharine and John (both deceased). Mrs. McCabe was laid to rest September 14, 1879, and since then her husband has continued to reside on the old place, keeping a family in the house to care for the property. He has made a specialty of sheep raising, and given much attention to general farming. Politically, Mr. McCabe is an enthusiastic Democrat, and he served as supervisor of his township. In matters of religion he is a member of the Centre Presbyterian Church, which he has served as trustee. Though almost eighty years old, he retains much of the strength which marked his younger days, and can hitch up his horse and ride where he pleases, without the aid of hostler or driver.

THE HESLEP FAMILY. Robert B. Heslep (deceased) was a grandson of Thomas Heslep, who was a prominent farmer of Coatsville, Chester Co., Penn. Desiring to own more land, and knowing of the grand resources which the Monongahela Valley afforded, he concluded to locate there. He brought with him his two sons, and purchased a tract of land on the Monongahela river in 1792. Remaining with his two sons a short time, he returned to his home in Chester county, and there died at a ripe old age. He served through the Revolution, and had acquired a good estate.

John Heslep, a son of Thomas, was born at Coatsville, in Chester county, and was among the early settlers of Washington county. Arriving at manhood he married Miss Polly Grant, an accomplished and well to do farmer's daughter of New Jersey. The following children were born to this marriage: John D. Heslep, at one time a student of the Western University of Pittsburgh, afterward read law with Judge Hampden, of Pittsburgh, was admitted to the bar; he formed a law partnership with a Mr. Sliker, and the firm was known as "Sliker & Heslep," of Pittsburgh. He died, a bachelor, in 1878.

Thomas Heslep is a well known school teacher of Washington county, and a member of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church.

George T. Heslep is a popular major in the State militia. He raised two sons who served through the Civil war, fighting for the grand old flag of the Union.

Robert B. Heslep, the youngest son, was born April 19, 1819, in Carroll township, and there passed the days of his boyhood. At eighteen years of age he was commissioned captain of a company in the State militia, and held that position up to 1849. On November 29, 1849, he married Miss Margaret, a daughter of Ezekial Job, an early Jersey settler and well to do farmer of Elizabeth township, Allegheny Co., Penn., whose people were among the early explorers and active Revolutionary soldiers of this country. The children born to them are as follows: Thomas McK., a prominent member of the Good Templars, and among the leading workers for local option in Carroll township in 1872; James Heslep, a farmer; U. Grant Heslep (deceased); W. R. Heslep, who entered the Sr. Prop. class of Washington and Jefferson College in September, 1887, and remained in that college for four terms. Not satisfied with the system of teaching, he removed to Waynesburg College in January, 1889, and graduated in the classical course with the class of 1891. He was a member of the Philomathean Literary Society of the college, and is now an honorary member. He was twice chosen a candidate to represent the society as orator for the Inter-State Oratorical Contest, but never served. He decided upon the law for a profession, and registered with the well-known lawyer, John H. Murdoch, of Washington, Penn., and is there pursuing his studies. Noah John Heslep was the youngest son of Robert B. Heslep. He died in January, 1892. He was a fair scholar, a natural genius in the mechanical line, and was highly respected and loved by the people and family. He was noted for his veracity and business integrity, as well as for his high moral character, but a kinder Father took him to His everlasting home at the age of twenty-one years; Harriet P. Heslep, the only daughter, is a member of the Webster M. E. Church, and remains with her aged mother, leading a useful and happy life. The one hundredth anniversary of their location in Carroll township was celebrated by the Heslep family in June, 1892. Mr. Heslep was an industrious, economical man, and accumulated a good property. Politically he voted with the Republican party, also taking an active interest in all religious work. He died October 2, 1872, and his widow is now residing on the home place, in the old house which was erected in 1801. The farm, which is now carried on by the sons, consists of 130 acres, and includes a lovely grove often used for picnic purposes, and is known as Heslep's Grove.

SAXTON FAMILY. The beautiful "Emerald Isle" has contributed largely to the population of Hanover township, and among those of her sons who sought a home in America, many years ago, was David Saxton.

He was born about 1775, in Ireland, and when a young man came to America, remaining some years in eastern Pennsylvania, and in 1796 came to Washington county, Penn., locating in what is now Hanover township, about two and one-half miles northeast of Florence, near the old site of Fort Dillo. Here he purchased and moved upon forty acres of land, and in 1800 was married to Elizabeth Moore, widow of Samuel Moore (with whom he got forty acres more), an early settler and very extensive landholder of that locality. The children of David and Elizabeth Saxton were as follows: Samuel, James (who resided for some time on the old farm in Hanover township, finally disposing of it to his brother Samuel, then moved to Missouri, locating near California), Harriet (wife of William Burns, and a resident of Hanover township), Nancy (Mrs. John Saxton, living in Cumberland county, Penn.) and Mary (married to Collins Kimmell, of Hanover township). Of this family Nancy is the only one yet living. The parents passed their lives on the pioneer farm, in a rude log cabin, which stood for several years afterward. He was a farmer, also carrying on a distillery, a common practice among the early settlers. At that time wild animals were yet numerous in the country, and his son James once killed a deer not far from home. In politics the father was a Whig. He and his wife both died at an advanced age, and they were buried side by side in Frankfort cemetery. She was an exemplary Christian woman, and a member of the Frankfort Presbyterian Church.

Samuel Saxton, son of David and Elizabeth (Moore) Saxton, was born July 27, 1801, on the old farm, and, being the oldest son, a great deal of work fell to his share. He was thus deprived of even such meager educational facilities as were then afforded, having but little opportunity to attend school. When but eighteen years of age he and his father made an agreement by which he was to have the use of the home farm for ten years. He at once began to work at whatever would yield him an income, and, in addition to his farm interests, looked after the hauling of coal to certain sections where that article was scarce, realizing a considerable profit from this source. In the fruit season he carried the produce of vines and orchard to Ohio, Canton, New Philadelphia, and other places; then, on his return, bought oats and hauled them to Pittsburgh, where they were sold at a good price. He was an excellent judge of horses, which knowledge was instrumental in making some good purchases and excellent sales. He was equal to, if not the best reinsman in Hanover township at that time, and on several occasions accomplished feats with six-horse teams, pronounced impossible by other skilled drivers. He always possessed some good specimen of the equine variety, often keeping them for sale. By using economy, he continued to prosper, owning over 400 acres of land, paying $11 per acre for the first 100 acres, upon which he erected a substantial brick residence, where he resided during his natural life time. He was an Old-line Whig till 1864, then became a Democrat, supporting that party the rest of his life. When the law of Pennsylvania required the militia to muster, he was captain of a company. On October 15, 1833, he was married to Jane Dougherty, who was born August 3, 1801, a daughter of James Dougherty, a merchant of Washington, Penn., who was at one time elected recorder of Washington county, and whose children became illustrious citizens. To the union of Samuel and Jane Saxton children were born as follows: James D., Samuel S. and Margaret. The father died June 14, 1875, followed by his wife February 3, 1883, and they now lie side by side in the Florence cemetery. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church at Florence, this county.

SAMUEL S. SAXTON was born June 26, 1838, on the old farm in Hanover township, this county.

He first attended the common schools, supplementing this training by a course at the Paris Academy and then at Florence. After leaving school he taught in Beaver, Allegheny and Washington counties; then became a traveling representative (as a collector) of Hosteter & Smith, of Pittsburgh, Penn., the extensive manufacturers of patent medicines, his territory being through Illinois. On September 30, 1875, he married Maggie J. Melvin, who was born August 17, 1846, daughter of John and Mary (Moore) Melvin. The children of this marriage are: Samuel Lawrence and Silas Warren, both of whom are improving their educational advantages. Mr. Saxton has always lived on the place of his birth, and has given his attention principally to buying and selling stock, also supervising the farm work; being apt in driving successful bargains, and dealing honestly and fairly in all business transactions, he has been crowned with honor and financial success. He is a most interesting companion, a jovial and intelligent conversationalist.

In politics his sympathies are with the Democratic party, to which his support is usually given, but he always votes according to the ability of the candidates. Mrs. Saxton, a pleasant lady, is a member of Cross Roads Presbyterian Church. As a wife and mother she has no superior, always kind and generous to all with whom she comes in contact. Their beautiful home lacks no comfort, and is situated in a charming spot.

JAMES D. SAXTON was born January 21, 1835, in Hanover township, this county, on a farm adjoining his present home. He attended the country schools of his neighborhood, and passed his youth working on his father's farm. On August 22, 1861, he married Mary Applegate, a daughter of Isaac Applegate and Margaret Proudfit, the latter of whom was a daughter of James Proudfit, who was a justice of the peace thirty years, and a ruling elder in the Florence Presbyterian Church for nearly fifty years; he died over thirty-five years ago, at the age of ninety-six. James D. and Mary Saxton are the parents of the following children: George M. C., Florence P., Addie May, Samuel J. and Elmer Wylie, all yet living at home excepting George M. C., who is residing in Hanover township.

After his marriage Mr. Saxton resided with his parents for six years, then came to his present well-improved farm, where his grandfather had located nearly one hundred years ago. He followed general farming and stock raising until quite recently, and is now partially retired from active life, the sons performing the laborious part of the work under his direction. Mr. Saxton is one of the substantial Democrats of Hanover township, and has held several local offices.

AL. HENRY is a son of Joseph Henry. The latter was born in 1811, in Washington county, Penn., and attended school in the home neighborhood. In 1833 he was united in marriage with Margaret Orr, also a native of Washington county, Penn. They passed their lives on the home farm, where seven children were born to their marriage, of whom two are now deceased. He served the township in various ways, and died in 1889, his wife passing away in the same year. She was also born in 1811.

A. L. Henry was born in 1849, in Nottingham township, where his school days were passed. He spent one year in Allegheny county, Penn., and on October 28, 1891, was married to a Miss Crawford. She is a daughter of Benjamin Crawford, an old and prosperous farmer of this county, who died several years ago. Mr. Henry has been engaged in the piano and organ business for years, and is still in the same business. J. A. and M. W., and also a sister, M. A. Henry, reside on their fine farm of 165 acres.

ANDREW B. DONALDSON. No man has been more closely identified with the best interests of Hanover township than this well-known gentleman, who is a lineal descendant of William Donaldson.

William Donaldson was born in Ireland, where he was a farmer, and was married to Mary Mitchell. He emigrated to America, and located in Hanover township at a very early date, settling on the same farm where Andrew B. is now living, there passing the remainder of his life. He was among the leading pioneers of his time, respected by all who knew him. His death occurred February 17, 1843, aged eighty-three, and on June 30, 1855, in the eighty-third year of her age, his wife was laid by his side in the Robinson Church cemetery, they having been consistent members of that church, in which he was also a ruling elder. The children of his family were Richard, John (who followed the Ohio river, and passed his later years in the South), Margaret, Jane (who was first married to Thomas Gornley, then to Jacob George), Susan (wife of Robert McClarren, of Pinley township, Allegheny county), and Mary (who was never married).

Richard Donaldson was born in 1801, in Hanover township, where his life was passed. In 1842 he married Mary A. Bigger, who was born in 1822. She is a daughter of Andrew Bigger, an early settler in Robinson township. To the union of Richard and Mary Donaldson the following children were born: Sarah (deceased wife of J. S. Culley), born March 31, 1843; William, born May 8, 1845; Mary E. (Mrs. J. D. Scott, of Hanover township), born March 19, 1848, and Andrew B., born October 1, 1851. The parents always lived on the home farm, where his life was devoted to agriculture and stock raising. In politics he was a Whig and then a Republican. They were both members of the U. P. Church of Robinson, to which he was a liberal contributor. Richard Donaldson died November 4, 1867, having been preceded by his wife, who died March 11, 1859, aged thirty-seven years. Their remains were interred in the Robinson cemetery.

Andrew B. Donaldson, whose name opens this sketch, was born on the old home farm which has been in the possession of their family for nearly 100 years. After the death of his parents he assumed charge of the old place where he still resides, and upon which he has erected a new residence and barn, and made other improvements. Mr. Donaldson has been a prosperous agriculturist, but for several years has rented his place. Politically he has always been a Republican, taking an interest in the success of his party. In religion he is a member of Robinson U. P. Church. He has never married.

ROBERT COULTER, one of the representative farmers of Carroll township, is a son of James Coulter, who was born in Ireland. When but six years of age, James came with his parents to America, and they first located in eastern Pennsylvania, and then came to Williamsport (now Monongahela). When a young man he married Miss Blakney, who lived but a short time, and his second choice was Nancy Nichols, who resided near Pittsburgh, Penn. She bore him children as follows: Rachel B. (deceased), William (now living in Monongahela), James (deceased), and Robert. The father was a Whig and Republican in politics, and in religious faith a member of the Presbyterian Church. He passed the remainder of his life in Monongahela, and was injured while hauling a load of fodder, having been thrown from a wagon, and breaking his leg above the ankle. He died in 1823, from the effects of the injury, at the age of sixty-nine years, followed by his wife in 1843.

Robert Coulter was born February 18, 1822, in Monongahela, Penn., and there learned the carpenter's trade. He was a poor boy, but by constant industry succeeded in accumulating property in a few years. He followed his trade for eleven years, and during that time was married, in June, 1842, to Miss Eliza Keenan, who was a daughter of Samuel Keenan, and granddaughter of James Keenan. Mrs. Coulter died leaving the following children, none of whom are living: James, Samuel K., Raphael, Robert, and William K. Robert Coulter married Miss Mary Jane McCain, of Monongahela, January 4, 1855, and to them twelve children were born. Those yet living are named as follows: Edward R., Joseph H., Charles H., Rowland C., Eliza May, and Dora F., all of whom are residing with their parents.

After making several very profitable investments in coal land, Robert Coulter bought 202 acres of fine land in Carroll township, where he is now living. Many improvements have been made upon this farm since the present owner purchased it, and his eminent success is due to no other human aid than his own. He suffered a terrible misfortune in the loss of one limb and injury to the other. His right leg was amputated just below the knee to prevent mortification, and the left leg was broken. It is now as useful as before the accident, while an artificial limb takes the place of that which was amputated. He was formerly a Whig, and has been a Republican since the organization of that party. In religious faith he is a member of the M. E. Church.

JOHN H. STAIB. This gentleman, a prosperous grocer of Monongahela, comes of German parentage. His grandfather, J. Michael Staib, was born, reared, and married in Germany, where his three children were born as follows: Lewis, John and Fredericka. In 1847 the family emigrated to America, locating on a farm in Butler county, Penn., where the father continued to follow agricultural pursuits until his death. In political opinion he was a Democrat, and in religious faith a member of the Lutheran Church.

Lewis Staib was born in Germany, and there received a thorough education. He remained at home some years after his arrival in this country, and then entered the employ of Peter Graff, who was the proprietor of an extensive iron establishment. Lewis Staib remained in this business about ten years; then came to Mingo, Penn., and conducted a general store in company with William A. Rodgers. In 1864 he embarked in the coal producing business, and managed the Victory Coal Works until 1873, being also interested in the Harlem Works. He then opened the Rea Coal Works in Westmoreland county, and finally established the works at Catsburg, which he conducted until 1889, in which year he retired from active life. He was an ardent member of the Republican party, and in religion was associated with the Lutheran Church. When a young man Lewis Staib married Martha Jane, daughter of David Aultman, a resident of Armstrong county, Penn., and to them children were born as follows: Mary, wife of Adam Kiel; Josephine; Mattie, married to M. S. Warne; John H.; Alberta, wife of F. M. Warne; Anna B., married to R. M. Gee; Alice; Lewis, and Fred W.

John H. Staib was born October 3, 1862, in Carroll township, this county, receiving a common-school education. Some time after leaving school he clerked for John Van Voorhis; then worked for T. J. Wood, and on October 27, 1891, opened his present business in Monongahela. On June 28, 1885, he married Anna, a native of that city, and a daughter of Adam Aughendobler.

Adam Aughendobler was born August 14, 1823, near Nuremberg, Bavaria. His mother died there when he was eleven years of age, leaving but the one child. Adam Aughendobler remained at the home of his uncle in Bavaria after the death of his parents, and there learned the weaver's trade, and assisted on the farm. In 1852 he sailed for America, and after a voyage of seven weeks landed at Baltimore, Md. He then came to Washington, Penn., and worked on a farm for Major Millinger and James Stockdale. On May 4, 1853, he married Lizzie Zeh, who is of German parentage, and in 1865 they came to Monongahela, where the family have since resided. He is an active member of the Republican party, has served as councilman, and for twenty-eight years has been superintendent of the cemetery. He is identified with the Lutheran Church, which he has served as elder. Mr. and Mrs. Aughendobler are the parents of the following children: Maria (Mrs. Levi Friend) and Bessie (Mrs. William Woodward) (who are twins), Jane (wife of James Dickey), Maggie (Mrs. Hoffman), Anna (Mrs. Staib), George (deceased) and John L.

John H. and Anna (Aughendobler) Staib are the parents of two sons, Lewis and Harold. Mr. Staib carries a full line of groceries and produce, and is a very successful business man. In politics he is a supporter of the Republican party, and in religion a member of the Lutheran Church.

A C. McKEAN, one of the leading young business men of Charleroi, was born in Robinson township, Allegheny Co., Penn. He received a public-school education, then took a course at Duff's Business College, at Pittsburgh, Penn., and after graduating there, devoted his attention chiefly to agriculture and horticulture. When the town of Charleroi was organized in 1890, he opened a real estate and insurance office, in company with James K. Clarke. They conduct an extensive insurance business, and also deal largely in real estate, being the sole agents for the Charleroi Land Company. Mr. McKean owned about twenty acres of the original plat of Charleroi, and erected the first building in the town. The village has one of the largest and most complete glass factories in the county, besides other important industries. Mr. McKean is a pushing young business man, a thorough "hustler," allowing no favorable opportunity to pass for the advancement of Charleroi. He is a staunch advocate of the policy of the Republican party.

THOMAS ARMITAGE. England has given to this country a host of substantial, progressive and law-abiding citizens, and among the number is the gentleman whose name opens this biographical memoir.

He was born May 8, 1844, to George and Mary Armitage, who died in England, his brothers and sisters being William (deceased), Joseph (in Yorkshire, England), Sarah (deceased) and Hannah (wife of P. C. Reniers, of Pittsburgh).

In 1864 Thomas Armitage came to America, locating first in Pittsburgh, where he worked at the marble cutter's trade for ten years. In 1876 he came to Washington, this county, and opened out for himself a general marble, stone-cutting and mantel business; and notwithstanding that he had to compete with old-established firms, he succeeded, by close attention to business and upright dealings with his patrons, in gaining a well-earned popularity, and a large patronage. His workmanship is of the best, and his works find conspicuous place in the most prominent yards in the country within a radius of twenty-five miles. His place of business is at 305 South Main street. Mr. Armitage married Miss Margaret Shaffer, of Pittsburgh, July 7, 1870. Her parents, John and Louisa Shaffer, are residents of Ohio. No children have been born to this union.

Ever since coming to Washington Mr. Armitage has taken an active interest in the affairs of the borough, and his energy and enterprise have not been excelled by any of the older or wealthier men residents. He was among the first to assist in the development of the oil industry in and around Washington, and was interested in the pioneer well known as the "Gantz Well," situated near the Chartiers railroad depot, being one of the directors of same. His property on South Main street he bought and materially improved, and has done much toward beautifying that portion of the borough. He was one of the founders, and is at present one of the directors, of the Washington Glass Works. It may be said that no enterprise tending to the advancement of the city has been established or proposed without his prompt and willing assistance. Politically our subject is a Democrat, and he is a member of the borough council. Of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Washington, he and his wife have been members for sixteen years. He is now one of the school directors of the city.

NATHAN CLEAVER, born in York county, Penn., in 1801, was married, March 1, 1832, to Sarah Linton, a daughter of Mahlon Linton, who was born east of the mountains, in 1776. He married Ann Hilles in 1803, and after their marriage they came to Washington county, Penn., locating on a farm in East Bethlehem township, where he died in 1831, followed by his wife in 1838.

To the union of Nathan and Sarah (Linton) Cleaver one daughter was born, Martha, wife of William H. Mitchell. Mr. Cleaver was a prominent citizen and prosperous farmer. He voted with the Republican party, and served one term as county commissioner. He died June 22, 1887, at his home in Monongahela, to which city he removed from his farm after his second marriage, in 1888, with Mrs. E. C. Leonard. He was laid to rest in the old Friends' burying ground at Westland beside his first wife, who died in 1873, and near the site of the Friends' meeting-house where they were publicly united in marriage under the Friends' ceremonial, fifty-five years before. Both died in the Quaker faith.

JAMES A. STEPHENSON traces his ancestry to an old and prosperous family of Berkeley county, Va. (now W. Va.), where Richard Stephenson, the first of his ancestry of whom we have any authentic record, was born and reared.

Richard Stephenson married Mrs. Onora Crawford. She was the widow of Hugh Crawford (an old Indian trader), and bore him two sons, William and Valentine. William Crawford was colonel of the Fifth Virginia Regulars, having been commissioned in 1781. The circumstances of his death (which event occurred June 11, 1782, at Sandusky, Ohio), are recorded in nearly every U. S. history. He was burned at the stake by Indians who had captured him, for the evident purpose of wreaking vengeance on their victim, in return for the historic massacre at Gnadenhutzen, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, many Indians being there slaughtered by the whites. At the time of his capture Col. Crawford was conducting a campaign against the Wyandotts, and Senecas and other tribes who were associated with the British and Moravians. To the union of Richard and Onora (Crawford) Stephenson children were born as follows: John, Hugh, Richard, James, Marcus and one daughter. Mrs. Stephenson possessed great physical strength, and was a kind and affectionate mother. She died in 1776. Gen. George Washington was a frequent visitor in this home, often taking part in athletic contests with the sons. The early friendship ripened with the passing years, and when General Washington rose to prominence in military life, James Stephenson was yet his dearest friend and constant companion.

James Stephenson, son of Richard, was born in Berkeley county (W. Va.), where he married Rachel McKeever's. Their children were Moses, William, Mary, Theodosia, James and Sarah. In 1781 Mr. Stephenson concluded to take advantage of the cheap lands then open in western Pennsylvania. He was then in the prime of life, and a splendid specimen of physical manhood. In company with a negro slave, named Fortune, he started on foot on a journey of exploration, leaving his family at home, not wishing them to undergo the perils of such a hazardous expedition. The two men arrived safely in Washington county, Penn., and Mr. Stephenson took up a "tomahawk claim" of 500 acres of choiceland, four miles southeast of Burgettstown. A humble cabin was soon erected, some rude improvements made, and a crop of corn planted. The negro previously mentioned was then left to manage the place. He was originally the property of George Washington, from whom James Stephenson purchased him. The latter then returned to West Virginia, the negro subsisting on game and roots during his absence. The entire family were soon located in their pioneer home, which was afterward supplanted by a larger log cabin. The wife and mother died December 14, 1789, and for his second wife Mr. Stephenson was married to Martha Barr, the following children being born to their union: Benjamin, Richard, Joseph, Achsah and John. The land increased in value as civilization progressed, and at the time of his death Mr. Stephenson was a wealthy man. He died in 1813, being followed by his wife in 1816. The comforts and luxuries of our modern days are largely due to the patient effort and brave courage of these early pioneers.

James Stephenson, a son of James and Rachel Stephenson, was born August 5, 1784, passing his boyhood among the exciting and dangerous scenes of frontier life. He received a very limited education in the subscription schools, much of his time being employed in hunting, and the old "flint lock" which he used was instrumental in bringing down a large amount of game. He was a volunteer in the war of 1812, enlisting at Hickory, Penn., and serving until the close of the war. In 1827 he was united in marriage with Emeline Honeywell. She was born in 1808 in New York State, and at the age of fourteen years came to Washington county, Penn., with her parents, Israel and Judith (Spicer) Honeywell. James and Emeline Stephenson were the parents of Rachel (deceased wife of Christopher Matchett, of Robinson township), Sylvester (deceased when four years of age), Sylvester (deceased in infancy), Elmira (living on the home place), James A. (subject of this sketch) and Amanda (wife of J. J. Campbell, living in Hardin county, Ky.). Mr. and Mrs. Stephenson resided on the home farm some time after their marriage, then moved to the place now occupied by James A., where the father followed farming and stock raising with marked success. He died June 7, 1852, his wife passing away May 20, 1853, and was buried by the side of her husband in Prospect cemetery.

James A. Stephenson was born June 22, 1837, on the home farm in Smith township, which he now owns and occupies. He received a meager common-school education, afterward learning the carpenter's trade, which he followed some time, but has devoted the greater part of his life to agricultural pursuits with the exception of seven years passed at Candor, this county. He was formerly a well-known hunter, and to-day keeps, as a relic of the exciting adventures of boyhood, a riddle-ball, with which, when but ten years of age, he killed his first fox. He also retains in his possession the old hoe which was used by the negro slave Fortune over a hundred years ago, when working for James Stephenson, the grandfather. Mr. Stephenson takes great delight in the preservation of old relics and curiosities, being assisted in the gratification of this taste by many contributions from friends. Although owning and residing upon a valuable farm, he has never taken an active part in the agricultural work, which is done by his tenants or croppers or crofters. He invented a superior beehive, and can duplicate almost any article which he once examines. In politics his sympathy and influence are given to the Democratic party, although he is not a strict partisan.

JOHN WHERRY, JR., is one of the most widely-known and popular agriculturists of West Bethlehem township. His grandfather, John Wherry, was born in Somerset township, where his father had secured a patent for nearly 500 acres of land, in what was known as the "tomahawk improvement." Here his boyhood was spent, and his education, which was very good for the time, was received in the old subscription school, a considerable distance from his home. After a long and successful career, he died about the beginning of the present century.

John W. Wherry, the father of our subject, was born in Somerset township. His education was like that of his father, but the schools were then public or "common." He married Catherine, a daughter of George Weaver, of West Pike Run township, after which they remained upon the farm about twelve years, then removed to West Bethlehem township. To them were born the following named children: Amy, John, Jr., William, Elizabeth, Eleanor, George W., Eli, Mary and James; all of whom are living in Washington county, excepting Elizabeth, who died in 1887.

The subject of this sketch was born October 29, 1843, in Somerset township, and his boyhood was principally employed in assisting his father in the care of the farm. After the family removed to West Bethlehem township, he attended the school known as "Wherry's School-house," situated on his father's farm. In 1867 he married Elizabeth Bigler, daughter of Henry Bigler, of West Bethlehem township, after which he moved to the farm he now owns, and where the following children have been born to them: Elizabeth, Mary, William, Ida and Charles, all of whom, with the exception of Elizabeth, who died in 1877, are living at home with their parents. In 1890 Mr. Wherry built one of the finest houses in this section. When he took possession there was scarcely a building or fence upon the place, whereas it is now one of the best improved farms in West Bethlehem township. Its strong and neat board fences and elegant buildings bestow upon it an air of thrift and prosperity. Mr. Wherry is a Republican, and although he is no office seeker has been elected to many positions of trust. He was a soldier in Company G, One Hundred and Tenth P. V. I., but escaped in battle, only to meet with injury thirty years later. In November, 1892, while hauling logs, he got his arm broken, which left it crooked and helpless for a time. He is a member of the Ten Mile Baptist Church (of which he is deacon), as are also his wife and children. Mrs. Wherry is a lady commanding the esteem and regard of all who know her. The entire family are intelligent and industrious citizens.

CORNELIUS WEYGANDT was born in Germany, whence so many of our strong intellectual people trace their ancestry. Physical and mental development go hand in hand in the country of the Rhine, making some of the grandest specimens of symmetrical humanity the world has ever seen. In early manhood Cornelius Weygandt left his native land and came to America, locating in the then wilderness of Pennsylvania. Here was the pioneer cabin erected, the hardships of frontier life endured, and finally a little town arose destined to become a mighty city. Amid these early scenes Cornelius Weygandt passed the remainder of his life, becoming identified with the history of the country. He lived to an advanced age, and reared a large family of children, among whom was a son who bore his father's name.

Cornelius Weygandt (2) was born in Northampton county, Penn., and received a very limited education. During the earlier part of his life he learned and followed the cooper trade, afterward purchasing 300 acres of land in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn. One hundred years ago he erected buildings on that part of the land which is now owned by the subject of this sketch, and there passed the remainder of his life. He married Barbara Stacker, who bore him many children, and both parents died on the old home place many years ago.

Cornelius Weygandt (3) was born on the homestead in Carroll township, and received a subscription school education. He always followed agricultural pursuits on the old home place, and in early life was married to Rosanna Bonniwitz, a native of Fayette county, Penn. They had seven children, of whom but three are living. In politics he voted with the Democratic party, and served as school director and auditor of the township. In religion he was a member of the Lutheran Church. He died in 1858, being followed by his wife five years later.

Cornelius Weygandt (4), the subject proper of this sketch, was born May 5, 1832, in the house where he is yet living on the ancestral acres in Carroll township. He attended the log cabin school of the neighborhood, and has passed his life on the old place, now owning 115 acres of land. In political opinion he is a Democrat, and in religious faith a member of the Lutheran Church. He has never married, and though somewhat enfeebled by hard work, is yet a vigorous man for his age. His nephew Jesse has charge of the place.

ROBERT KNOX, who is prominently identified with the insurance business in the borough of Washington, is a native of the county, having been born in Buffalo township, February 19, 1858.

John Knox, his grandfather, came from Ireland to this county about the year 1808, bringing with him his young wife, and settled on a farm in Buffalo township, where they both died. Their eldest child was born on the Atlantic ocean while they were on their way to America, and is now living in Texas, at the age of nearly ninety years. The grandmother died some years before the grandfather, who passed away when eighty-four years old. They were the parents of eight children, five of whom are living, viz.: William, in Buffalo township; John, in Claysville; Margaret, wife of George Smith, in Buffalo township; Thomas, in Kansas; and Jenny, relict of Dr. Milliken.

Robert Knox, Sr., was born in Buffalo township, and for many years was a tailor in Taylorstown. He purchased a farm in the township, which he carried on in connection with his trade. In 1845 he married Anne, daughter of James Irwin, of Canton township, and three children came to bless their home, viz.: John, now in Taylorstown; J. Irwin, living on the old farm; and Robert, our subject. The father was called to his long home in July, 1889, when seventy years of age. He was a staunch Democrat. In religion he was a member of the U. P. Church of North Buffalo.

Robert Knox, whose name opens this sketch, received his education at the common schools of his native township, and when a young man taught school during the winter months while he worked on the farm in summer time. For ten years he taught in Chartiers, Canton and Buffalo townships, and four terms in Taylorstown. In April, 1886, he opened out a general store, in partnership with his brother John, at Taylorstown, but sold out in March, 1891. In November, 1890, he came to Washington borough, where he has since been successfully engaged in the insurance business. He and his brother, J. Irwin, still retain control of the old farm property in Buffalo township, on which are located twenty-four oil wells. He married, January 17, 1889, Miss Ella B., daughter of James Wilson, of Taylorstown, and two children, named Robert James and Russel W., have come to brighten their home. Politically, Mr. Knox is a Democrat, and has served as assessor of Buffalo township, also as clerk of elections several times. In his religious connections he is a member of the First United Presbyterian Church of Washington.

JOHN SLATER, manufacturer and wholesale dealer in cigars, is a prosperous and prominent citizen of Washington. He is a native of the borough, born June 11, 1858, a son of Theodore Slater, who was born January 22, 1821, in the city of Treves (Trier), Rhenish Prussia, and who, in the year 1846, came, in company with his brother, Matthias, to America, located at Pittsburgh, Penn., and thence, some time later, proceeded to Louisville, Ky. On July 19, 1847, the war with Mexico being in progress, he enlisted, although not yet an American citizen, in Company K (Capt. Gardner), First U. S. Infantry, and served under Gen. Winfield Scott during the remainder of the campaign, including the capture of the City of Mexico. On July 23, 1848, he was honorably discharged, and returned to Pittsburgh, whence, after a short time, he moved to Greene county, and embarked, in partnership with two of his brothers-in-law, in the manufacture of shoes, carrying on also a grocery and provision store.

Theodore Slater revisited his old home by the Rhine in 1851, where he married Miss Apolonia, daughter of Matthias Weis. Her father died in Germany in 1884, at the age of eighty-four years. In May, 1851, Mr. Slater returned with his bride, and finally settled in Washington, this county, where they made their first home on the corner of Main and Maiden streets, now the site of Acheson's grocery store. He commenced in the boot and shoe business on his own account. Later they lived where now stands G. W. Roberts' drug store. In 1866 they were burned out, losing everything, including their furniture and clothing. In the following year they moved to Main street, where

Mr. Slater established a trade in tobacco and the manufacture of cigars, etc., and here passed the remainder of his days, dying May 14, 1879, at the age of fifty-eight years. He was an ardent Democrat, but not ambitious for office, though he was nominated by his party for commissioner, and also assistant burgess, to which latter position he was duly elected. He was a member of the Catholic Church, and a strong supporter of educational measures. His widow is still living at the old home in Washington, the mother of four children: John, who died in childhood; Mary L., known as Sister Mary Xavier, of the Order of The Visitation in the convent at Mt. Chantel, near Wheeling, W. Va., of which she has been a member for some fourteen years; John, of whom special mention will be presently made; and Annie, who died at the age of nineteen years. Annie was an extensive reader, and possessed a fine intellect. Her power of memorizing was almost phenomenal. When in her eighteenth year, she participated in a prize literary contest in the East, the subject of her essay being: "What Catholics have done for America." She had the honor of carrying off the second prize, notwithstanding the fact that she had to contend against many older competitors; truly an honor of which the family feel justly proud.

John Slater received his rudimentary education at the common schools of Washington borough, which was supplemented by a two-year's course at St. Vincent College, Latrobe, Westmoreland county. Returning to his home, he worked at his trade of cigar making under his father, at whose death he succeeded to the business, and has since continued to carry it on. The industry includes the general manufacture of several brands of cigars, and jobbing in all kinds of plug and smoking tobacco. Under Mr. Slater's management the business has become the most extensive of the kind in the county. The factory, which is in size 100x22 feet, two and three stories in height, gives employment to a large number of hands. On August 25, 1886, Mr. Slater was married to Regina, daughter of Michael Stillwagen, of Claysville. This marriage was blessed by three children, viz.: John Joseph, Charles Francis and Edward Theodore. In politics Mr. Slater is an ardent Democrat, and in religion a consistent Catholic.

WILLIAM McCREERY is one of the most successful business men, and deservedly popular citizens of Buffalo township. He was born June 30, 1838, in Marshall county, W. Va., and passed his boyhood in the usual uneventful manner of farmer boys. He afterward worked at the carpenter's trade. On December 27, 1864, he was united in marriage with Kate, daughter of William Litle, of Buffalo township, and the following children were born to them: Virginia Lee, Alexander H., William Litle, Emily, Mary Ann and Bessie Bell, all of whom are living at home. Mr. McCreery began life with practically nothing, his success being due solely to his own energy and management. When his father died, he inherited a portion of the estate, but instead of using it himself, allowed a brother, Thomas (who had remained on the old homestead, and cared for the father in his declining years), to use and occupy the entire portion until sufficiently remunerated for his years of self-denial. When Mr. Litle (his father-in-law) died, William McCreery bought of the heirs the entire farm of 190 acres, which is now his home. It is a pleasant place, well-improved, and having an air of enterprise, thrift and comfort surrounding it. In politics he is a Democrat, and has served five consecutive terms as school director. In addition to general farming, Mr. McCreery is an extensive wool-grower, and breeder of Black-Top sheep, now owning nearly two hundred and fifty of that breed. He commands the respect and friendship of a large circle of acquaintances. His wife is a devoted member of the Methodist Church, and is widely known for her good deeds.

THOMAS B. CRAIG was born in Buffalo township, this county, June 6, 1840. He came of a talented Scotch-Irish family, one of the most influential and successful in the county—a parentage that exercised no little influence in laying the foundation of modern government and religion. This has made Washington county widely known, in State and Nation; has given her sons no little pride in saying “I hail from Washington county.” His parents were Hugh and Hannah (Henderson) Craig. His father, though a farmer, was needed in official position, and served his township and county, and finally the State Legislature, to the entire satisfaction of his constituents.

Thomas B. Craig is the youngest of eight children, among whom were Rev. Dr. Hugh K. Craig, who ranked high in the pulpit, and was president for a time of Monongahela College. Hon. John H. Craig, another brother, distinguished himself for his scholarly attainments at college, and is widely known in Iowa as a platform orator. Hon. A. K. Craig, who served his party in Congress, and a sketch of whose life is found in this volume, was also a brother. Thomas B. Craig was raised on the old Craig farm near Claysville, where he imbibed those principles that gave to his character the elements necessary for complete success. He always held his own with the brightest pupils at Science Hill School, among whom was the Hon.

S. J. McCarrel, now a member of the State Senate of Pennsylvania.

Scarcely having attained his majority, the Civil war broke out, and fired with zeal for the cause of right, as it appeared to him, enlisted in August, 1862, in Company B, “Ruggold Cavalry” Battalion, serving in it for some two years, at which time the battalion was reorganized into a regiment, known as the Twenty-second P. V. C. He served in Company C, of this regiment, until the close of the war. He was a member of the corps under General Sheridan in his “famous raid” in the Shenandoah Valley, and took part in the engagements, the most important of which were the battles of Winchester (the scene of “Sheridan’s Ride,” immortalized by Buchanan), Fisher’s Hill and Cedar Creek. After the war Mr. Craig entered into partnership with L. C. Truesdell in general mercantile business at Claysville, which continued for four years. He then embarked alone, conducting a general store in which he has since been very successful, and for many years has been recognized by the public as the leading merchant of Claysville. In 1871 Mr. Craig married Rachel, daughter of James Noble, of Buffalo township, one of the most successful farmers of the county. To them were born four children, James, who is assisting his father in the mercantile business; Homer, a student in Washington and Jefferson College, McWilliams and Clarence, who are attending the public schools at Claysville.

Mr. Craig has always been a strong Democrat, and has taken an active interest in politics; and the Democratic party owes a great deal to his zeal and fidelity for its success, and especially for its late success, in having a Democratic representation in the Twenty-fourth Congressional District of Pennsylvania, of which this county is a part. A late writer in speaking of Mr. Craig says: “Among the well-known and enterprising business men of Claysville, none occupy a more prominent position, or are more worthy of confidence and respect, than the subject of this sketch.” Mr. Craig has been and is at present a member of the City Council, and has been frequently a member of the school board, besides holding other offices of trust. He and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church, the church of his boyhood, to which he has given his liberal support and work.

JOSEPH REED. In the front ranks of prosperous agriculturists and prominent citizens of Cecil township, we find the name of this gentleman. His great-great grandparents were of Scotch-Irish parentage. His great-grandfather, David Reed, was born on the ocean when his parents and two brothers were coming to America in the early part of the eighteenth century, or about 1700 to 1715. One brother settled in Kentucky and one in Carolina. The father, mother and David settled in Lancaster county, Penn. David was married to Miss Caldwell, daughter of Capt. Caldwell, who commanded a company called "The Blue Hen's Chickens" during the Revolutionary war. Capt. Caldwell lived on an island in the Susquehanna river. The children of this union were, in the order of age: Mollie, married to Peter Clark; Nancy, married to James Clark (lived near Harrisburg, Penn. Peter and James Clark were not related); Jane, married to Matthew Atcheson, of Hickory, Penn.; Rebecca, married to Humphrey Atcheson, brother of Matthew; Lydia, married to Samuel McBride, of Mahoning county, Ohio; John, married to Anna Atcheson, sister of Matthew and Humphrey, and David, married to Margaret May.

Joseph Reed

(The grandparents of the subject of this sketch). Col. Crogan offered John and David very flattering inducements to come from Lancaster county and settle in what is now Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., which were accepted by the two young men, who came here in 1777, and settled on what afterward proved to be "The Washington Land," in Mt. Pleasant township. In the autumn of 1777 David returned to Lancaster county, and married Miss Margaret May, daughter of Alex May, in the spring of 1778. They soon came to their new farm, where they lived for several years. On September 20, 1784, Gen. George Washington, then traveling through this section, came and dined with Mr. David Reed. During the day Gen. Washington claimed that he owned the title to the land on which Mr. Reed lived, which he afterward proved, and that Col. Crogan did not have a title to the property, and had unlawfully placed the Messrs. Reed and others thereon. Gen. Washington would not allow the settlers any rights nor any compensation for the improvements. Finally he made the following offer, a transcript of which is taken from the journal of Gen. Washington, in Washington, D. C.:

September 20, 1784, dined at David Reed's, after which Mr. James Scott and Squire Reed began to enquire whether I would part with the land, and upon what terms; adding that, though they did not conceive they could be dispossessed, yet, to avoid contention, they would buy if my terms were moderate. I told them I had no inclination to sell; however, after hearing a great deal of their hardships, their religious principles which had brought them together as a society of Ceeders, and unwillingness to separate or remove, I told them I would make them a last offer, and this was—The whole tract at 25 shillings per acre. The money to be paid in three annual payments with interest—or to become tenants upon leases of 999 years, at the annual rental of 10 pounds per C per annum, etc.

The above goes on to say that the settlers decided to stand suit, and abide by the issue of the law. In the December term of court, 1784, ejectment suits were entered, and as the rights of Gen. Washington by the Virginia patents were well authenticated, the settlers did not make a claim of priority of title. The suit was decided against the settlers, who, of course, had to move elsewhere or become tenants of the land they had previously thought was their own. John Reed purchased another farm in Cecil township, now owned by Mrs. John Cabbage. He died there April 14, 1817, aged seventy-three years. David Reed, about the year 1788, also purchased 300 acres of land in Cecil township from Thomas Waller, which had been taken up by him previous to 1780, for which he gave one horse, one pair blankets and 13 pounds sterling. A warrant of acceptance was issued to David Reed by the board of Property, March 2, 1790, and patent granted April 21, 1813. He moved to this farm after the contest for the Washington lands was decided against him, and lived there until he died, September 30, 1824, aged seventy-seven years, leaving his wife, who died November 19, 1840, aged eighty-two years. David in his younger days underwent many hardships in clearing his property, and from the treachery of the Indians. He was a noted Indian fighter, and was at the Indian massacre at Yellow creek, Ohio. But brighter years were ahead of him, for financial prosperity finally crowned his efforts. He was one of the elders in Chartiers Associate Reformed (now U. P.) Church at Canonsburg, Penn. They had five sons and one daughter. The older son, Alexander, was married to Martha Anderson; the second son, David, married Euphemia Paxton; Mary ("Polly") became the wife of George Murray; John, the third son, married Jane May, and lived in Mt. Pleasant township; James, born April 10, 1793, married Jane Ann Allison (He was for many years a jeweler of Washington, Penn., but afterward moved to Pittsburgh, and founded the present jewelry house of J. R. Reed & Co. He died June 5, 1878); Joseph, the youngest son, was born April 30, 1796, and always lived on the homestead of his father.

On October 18, 1821, Joseph Reed (just mentioned) was married to Elizabeth Alexander, who died May 4, 1822, without issue. For his second wife Mr. Reed married Anna, daughter of Rev. Daniel McLean, of Jamestown, Penn. Of this union there were four children: (1) Margaret, born February 20, 1825, died August 29, 1882, was married to Robert Henderson (They had four children: Anna, deceased; Mary Martha, who is the wife of William Grounds; Joseph Reed Henderson, who married Elizabeth Martin, and Mina, who became the wife of Linus Welsh). (2) Mary, born November 13, 1826, died August 20, 1881, was the wife of John Nesbit, of Chartiers township. (3) David, born January 1, 1829, was twice married; his first wife was Vashti Elder (deceased), of West Virginia; to his second wife, Amelia Forbes, he had two children: Ernest and Ellis Anderson; David was a leading physician of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and died there March 21, 1869. (4) Jane Ann, born December 28, 1830, is the wife of John B. May, of Venice, Penn.; their two children died in infancy. Anna, the mother of these children, having died August 3, 1831, Mr. Reed was afterward married to Martha Anderson, who was born October 2, 1816, a daughter of Matthew Anderson, of Chartiers township; she died October 2, 1882, about three years before Mr. Reed's decease. Eight children were born to them, as follows: (1) Elizabeth, born August 1, 1833, is the wife of David White, of Canonsburg, Penn.; they had two children: Joseph Reed, and Elva (deceased). (2) John, born November 10, 1835; he was a minister in the U. P. Church, and died in Indiana, September 21, 1863. (3) Matthew Anderson, born January 26, 1838, resides in Allegheny, Penn.; he was married in 1862 to Anna Mary, daughter of Henry Donnell, of Cecil township; their three children are Harry French, Clara Mary and Anna Martha. (4) Thomas Alexander, born March 20, 1840, married Martha Gladden; they now live in Pasadena, Cal. (5) Joseph, born April 30, 1843, married Ella C. Cabbage, daughter of John and Mary (Hutchison) Cabbage, who were natives of Allegheny county, Penn., and Guernsey county, Ohio, respectively; three children brighten this home, Lottie Myrtle, Joseph Houston and Ethel. (6) George Murray, born July 22, 1848, is a minister in the U. P. Church of Newville, Cumberland Co., Penn.; he married Lizzie Kinner, of New Wilmington, Penn., and four children have blessed their union; George Kinner, Gertrude, Chloe and Paul Mehard. (7) Julia A., born June 9, 1850, wife of Alonzo Hemphill, of Honstonville, Penn.; they have two children: Helen and John. (8) Campbell Ledlie, born June 29, 1853, was married to Annie D. Cowden, deceased; they had two daughters, Margaret Alberta and Martha Maud, also one son, Ralph Rockwood, deceased. Mr. Reed afterward married Jennie M. Patterson. They have one daughter, Katharine Pauline. He resides in Cecil township.

Joseph Reed, the father of the above, was a gentleman of the old school. His fine personal appearance alone commanded respect everywhere. For honesty of principle, goodness and charity, Mr. Reed had no superiors, and his home was always characterized by generous hospitality. He always lived on the homestead of his father. He was for many years justice of the peace; and it can be said of him that during all these years he had only two hearings before him, as he always used his influence to get an amicable settlement between the parties, rather than have a trial. Many other important positions of local trust were held by him. In his younger days he was a noted violinist, which art he kept in practice until a short time before his death. Those who knew him placed a high estimate upon his judgment, and esteemed him for his uprightness, and the impress of his character was left upon all who met him. He was ordained an elder in Chartiers U. P. Church, February 15, 1854, but a few years later severed his connections with this church, and afterward attended the U. P. Church at Venice, which was much nearer his home. He retired from active business many years before his death. His memory never became impaired, and his faculties for conversing even during the latter years of his life were remarkably clear. He died October 4, 1885, in his ninetieth year.

Joseph Reed, the subject proper of this sketch, was born April 30, 1843, on the farm in Cecil township where he is still living. His education was received in the public schools of the neighborhood, and July 11, 1883, he was united in marriage with Ella C. Cabbage. Since their marriage our subject and wife have resided on the old homestead, which contains 206 acres of well cultivated land. Three children have blessed this home. Mr. Reed makes a specialty of raising a high grade of sheep. In politics he votes the Republican ticket, and he is serving his second term as justice of the peace.

JOHAN CUBBAGE was a native of Allegheny county, Penn., born January 12, 1812, in what is now the town of Mansfield. George Cabbage, his father, who was a native of Ireland, and a butcher by trade, came to America at an early day, settling in Allegheny county, Penn., on a farm on which the present town of Mansfield now stands. He married Nancy Caldwell, who bore him the following children: Hannah (Mrs. Henry Cowan), John, Abbie (Mrs. Hugh Graham), Martha, Sarah (Mrs. Jacob Doolittle), Nancy (Mrs. Robert Small) and William. The father died in 1853, the mother on May 2, 1883, in her ninety-fourth year; they were members of the Presbyterian Church.

John Cabbage was reared and educated in Mansfield, Allegheny county, and when of suitable age entered the employ of a Mr. Palmestock, a druggist, and also studied medicine for some years. In 18— he was united in marriage with Eliza J. Ewing, and they had two children: George A. and James S. This wife dying in 18—, Mr. Cabbage married, for his second, Mary Hutchison, by which union there were six children, viz.: Sarah M., Hannah P. (Mrs. Theodore McCloy), Nancy J., Sarah A., Ella C. (Mrs. Joseph Reed) and Lyda J. (Mrs. John Harper). The mother of this family departed this life December 16, 1863, and our subject afterward married Ann J. Holland, who bore him three children: Ann M. (Mrs. William Small), Martha J. (Mrs. George Lenning) and Euretia M. (Mrs. Harry McKeown). John Cabbage died August 4, 1880. Mr. Cabbage in religious faith was a Covenanter. He was a farmer by occupation after 1865, the year in which he came to Cecil township, this county.

WILLIAM H. MORRISON, a prosperous manufacturer of Monongahela, is descended from a well-known family who emigrated from Ireland. James Morrison, the earliest ancestor of our subject to settle in Pennsylvania, was born in County Londonderry, Ireland, and there grew to manhood. Some time after his marriage he came to America and located in Chester county, Penn. In 1773, accompanied by their two sons, John and Henry, Mr. and Mrs. Morrison moved to Nottingham township, Washington county, where both parents died.

Henry Morrison was born in 1752, in New London, Chester Co., Penn., and was there reared and educated. He then came with his parents to Nottingham township, where he was married to Patience Sayers, who bore him the following children: William, John, James, Henry, Elizabeth (wife of William Donaldson), Patience (married to John Gaston), Sarah (wife of William Gault), Susan (wife of William Gaston), and others who died in infancy. Mr. Morrison served as lieutenant in the Revolution, and passed his later years on the home farm, a tract of 400 acres in Nottingham township. He was an active member of the Democratic party, and in religion a member of Mingo Presbyterian Church. He died at the age of eighty-two years.

John Morrison, son of Henry and Patience (Sayers) Morrison, was born July 2, 1792, on the home place in Nottingham township, received a subscription-school education, and passed his entire life on the homestead, where he followed farming and stock raising. Politically he was a Whig and Republican, held various township offices, and was an ardent supporter of the school bill of 1837, doing all in his power to advance the interests of the public schools. He married Mary, daughter of Daniel Huston, a native of Nottingham township, November 27, 1817, and their children were William H., Joel, Daniel, John, Mary C. (wife of Dr. Barnett), Patience (married to John Giffin) and Elizabeth J. (wife of Robert McAllister). The mother was called home in 1845, and in 1870 the father was laid to rest by her side in Mingo cemetery.

William H. Morrison was born December 19, 1819, on the old homestead in Nottingham township, and attended the schools of the vicinity. On May 20, 1879, he married Susan B., daughter of Joseph B. Abell. Mr. Abell was a native of New Jersey, who settled in Philadelphia and there married Jane A. Lambert, whose children were: John L., Joseph Edward, Susan B. (Mrs. Morrison), Jane and Anna E. In 1870 Mr. Abell and his family came to Washington county, where they made a permanent home. He was a cooper by trade, and in politics voted with the Democratic party. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. W. H. Morrison came to Monongahela in 1876, where he has been engaged in manufacturing enterprises. He has for several years served a prosperous firm as secretary and treasurer, and the company, being largely interested in coal works, has some of the largest plants for coal hauling in the country. Mr. Morrison is actively identified with the interests of the Republican party, and in religious faith is a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church at Monongahela. He has one son, William A.

DAVID HAGERTY, a well-known agriculturist of the county, but now retired from active labor, having his residence in the borough of Washington, was born in 1822 in Canton township, three miles from Washington.

Joseph Hagerty, his father, came from Ireland and married Mrs. Hannah Blair Fleming, a widow, whose first husband, who was a merchant, died in New York State. Mr. and Mrs. Hagerty came to Washington county in 1812, just as the war of that period had broken out, and the Indians were very hostile. Some of them were encamped on the farm on which Mr. Hagerty had settled, and on which two former settlers had been taken prisoners. The nearest fort was at Taylorstown. Mr. and Mrs. Hagerty were the parents of children, as follows: John, Joseph, Robert, Blair and William, all deceased; Joseph and David (twins), of whom Joseph is living in Kansas, and David is our subject; Nancy, deceased wife of James Van Kirk; Mary, deceased wife of Samuel Wilkey; Betsey, deceased, unmarried; and one that died at the age of three years. The father died in 1825, at the age of sixty years; the mother passed away in 1850, at the home of her son, David, when aged ninety-three years.

David Hagerty, whose name opens this sketch, helped, when a boy, to clear the farm which he now owns. The subscription school which he attended, three miles from his home, was a primitive structure, 24x40 feet in area, made of cut logs, the windows being simply greased paper pasted over openings in the wall. The benches were made of split logs without backs. The only books then used were the United States Speller, the English Reader, the Western Calculator and the Bible. Our subject attended school three months in the year. Mr. Hagerty was married to Mrs. Jennie

Griffith Farrer, of Buffalo township, this county, who died in 1873, leaving daughters, viz.: Sarah Josephine (wife of Samuel Thompson, of Holton, Kans.), Letitia M. (wife of Francis Moore, of Buffalo township) and Anna Virginia (living with her father). The old home farm of Mr. Hagerty is where the sons of Joshua Russell were taken captive by the Indians. They were traced as far as the Ohio river, where their pursuers found that the boys had escaped while the Indians slept. On the farm there are nineteen oil-producing wells. In 1890 Mr. Hagerty came to Washington to live retired the rest of his days. Politically he is a Democrat, and has held several offices.

THE McCLURG FAMILY. This well-known family of Hanover township are of Irish ancestry, and trace their genealogy to one Robert McClurg, who was born about the middle of the eighteenth century in Comty Tyrone, Ireland. When a young man he was married in his native country, and in June, 1773, the young people came to America.

They made a temporary location in the eastern States, and some years later came to Hanover township, locating on King's creek. They occupied the primitive log cabin so common in those early days, and this one stood for many years afterward. Here Robert McClurg and his wife passed the remainder of their lives, and died at a ripe old age, having endured the hardships and struggles common to those perilous days, to which no pen can do full justice. Husband and wife were laid to rest in the Paris cemetery. Both were members of the Seceder Church. Their children were born as follows: Jane, Anna (wife of David Andrews, Jefferson county, Ohio) and John.

John McClurg was born January 3, 1774, on the home farm in Hanover township. He attended the rate schools of his time, receiving but a meager education, and, when a young man, learned the trade of a shoemaker. In August, 1823, he was married to Nancy Herron, who was born in 1800, a daughter of John and Nancy (Galliher) Herron. John Herron came from Ireland about the time that Robert McClurg left that country, first locating in Maryland, but later in Washington county. The following children were born to John and Nancy McClurg: Jane, Nancy, Anna, Sarah A., Mary J., Robert W., John J., William and David A., all of whom are living. The father was a prosperous man, and followed farming in connection with his trade. He remained on the old place all his life, and died there March 16, 1838, after two or three years' suffering from consumption. He was laid to rest in the Paris cemetery. His widow survived until January 10, 1883, when she was laid to rest by the side of her husband. He was a hearty supporter of the Democratic party, and both parents were zealous members of the Seceder Church, which eventually became the United Presbyterian Church. Of their children Jane, Anna, Sarah A. and Mary J. are yet unmarried, and live on the home farm with their brothers Robert W. and John J., who have been farming the place since the death of the father. William is a blacksmith, and is working at his trade on the home farm. David A. is a merchant of Beaver Falls, and Nancy is now Mrs. Joseph Lyons, of Hanover township.

REV. W. B. SMILEY. John Smiley was born in 1730, in Ireland, to which country his grandfather had fled from Scotland about 1612 for religious freedom. With his father John came to this country when quite young. About 1758 he married Ann Houton Stewart, and they lived in Dauphin county, Penn., where ten children—six sons and four daughters—were born to them. The family belonged to what is known as the "Seceder" Church, one of the "straitest sects;" and because Thomas, the eldest son, turned Baptist, he became as a stranger to the rest of the family, and so remained behind when the father and mother and other nine children crossed the mountains and located in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., in 1785. Thomas, however, became renowned as a Baptist missionary in the early history of Pennsylvania. He died in 1832 at the age of seventy-three, leaving a large posterity, and his monument stands in White Deer cemetery, in Lycoming county, Penn., where he had organized a church in 1808. John Smiley, the pioneer of the family, died in 1811 in the eighty-first year of his age, and Ann, his wife, passed away in 1814, aged seventy-five years. The sons who came west with them were: James (who died in 1844, aged eighty-two years), Robert (who died in 1853), John (who died in 1818, aged fifty-eight years, leaving no descendants), Samuel (who died in 1806, and whose family afterward moved west, and their descendants are now living in Illinois and Iowa) and William (who died in 1866, in the eighty-eighth year of his age). The only descendants of James Smiley now living are two grandsons, James A. and Leander, the former of whom now lives on his grandfather's farm in Mt. Pleasant township. Robert has one son living, James G., who is a farmer living on the "Middletown Road." Robert's other children were John, who died in 1877; Jane (Gabby by marriage), who died in 1812, leaving three children: Anne (Coulter by marriage), who died in 1882, leaving one son, Nathaniel; Thomas, who died in 1855, leaving two daughters and one son, who live on a part of their great-grandfather's farm; Margaret (Thompson by marriage), who died in 1890; Sarah (Thompson by marriage), who died in 1865, leaving descendants in northern Pennsylvania; Mary, who died in 1858, and three that died in infancy. John had no children, and Samuel's family moved to the West. When William married he located in Robinson township and raised eleven children—nine sons and two daughters. William and his wife on their wedding day weighed just 400 pounds, he weighing 198 pounds and she 202 pounds, and the aggregate height of the nine sons was fifty-five feet. "There were giants in those days." But these nine sons have only left four sons, now alive, to carry the name down to future generations. The older ones all left the county, and all but one the State, John, the oldest, locating in Beaver county, Penn. The one next the youngest died just after he had finished his education for the ministry. David, the youngest, inherited his father's farm, but afterward sold it and located near Burgettstown, where he lived until 1890, when he moved to Coraopolis, Penn. The farm is now occupied by two of his children, the oldest, Martha J. (now Mrs. W. F. Purdy), and the youngest, John N. Both these have families, the former a daughter and a son living, and a daughter and a son dead; the latter has two boys and two girls, all living.

Sincerely Yours,
W. B. Smiley

The second son, William Brownlee, very early in life manifested a strong inclination for study, and when six years of age memorized and recited without missing a single word the "shorter catechism of the Westminster divines." He received his English education in the public schools of Burgettstown, which he completed in the spring of 1873, at sixteen years of age. During the winter of 1874-75 he taught school in Robinson township, having spent eighteen months in the meantime on the farm with his father. In the fall of 1875 he commenced the study of the classics in Jefferson Academy, Canonsburg, Penn., and in the autumn of 1876 entered the sophomore class in Westminster College, from which he graduated in 1879 at the head of his class. Together with J. S. Garvin, his intimate friend and room mate at college, more than a year was spent as joint principal of McKeesport Academy and Normal School. He entered the Theological Seminary in September, 1880, having studied privately a year under Rev. James Kelso, of McKeesport, and graduated in 1882. The following is taken from the Burgettstown Call: "W. B. Smiley has just completed the course at U. P. Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, with the highest grade in a class of eleven. We believe he is the first young man that has been raised, educated and licensed to preach within the bounds of Burgettstown U. P. Congregation. The young gentleman has fine abilities, and is, no doubt, entering upon a career of great usefulness."

Rev. Smiley was married June 7, 1882, to Miss Maggie D. Fergus, a daughter of Thomas Fergus, of Elizabeth, Penn., and in publishing an account of the wedding, among other things the McKeesport Times said: "The bride-elect was most handsomely dressed, though richer than robes of silk is the tender grace of youth and maidenly worth with which she was adorned. The happy groom was our former fellow citizen, Prof. W. B. Smiley, who is held in such high esteem by all who know him here, for his Christian character and intellectual attainments." Three bright children have blessed this marriage—one daughter and two sons. Mr. Smiley was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Allegheny on April 1, 1882, and by the 1st of July had the opportunity of three settlements—West Newton (Penn.), Washington (Iowa) and Chartiers Congregation, Canonsburg (Penn.). The latter he decided to accept, and on August 1 entered upon his duties as pastor of one of the oldest and most substantial congregations in the Church. He preached his tenth anniversary sermon on the first Sabbath of August, 1892, in which it was stated that 384 persons had been received into membership in the congregation during the ten years of his pastorate, or an average of one for every two sermons preached. A large congregation of the most intelligent people wait regularly upon his ministry, and manifest in every way their loyalty and devotion to him as their pastor. He was recently urged to take charge of an important station in the West, but the ties by which he and his people were bound together were so strong that the thought of separation could not be entertained. Just recently the people have greatly beautified and enlarged the seating capacity of their church building, and they have now a very inviting place in which to worship.

DESCENDANTS OF JOHN AND ANN SMILEY: —THOMAS, a Baptist preacher who remained in the eastern part of the State. JAMES—descendants: James A. and Leander.

ROBERT—children: James G. (has four children—three living and one dead—all daughters); John, who died in 1877; Jane (Gabby, by marriage), who died in 1842, leaving three children; Anne (Coulter, by marriage), who died in 1882, leaving one son, Nathaniel; Thomas, who died in 1885, leaving two daughters and one son, who live on a part of their great-grandfather's farm; Margaret (Thompson, by marriage), who died in 1890; Sarah (Thompson, by marriage), who died in 1865, leaving descendants in northern Pennsylvania; Mary, who died in 1858, and three that died in infancy.

JOHN, who had no family.

SAMUEL, whose family moved west.

WILLIAM—children (1) John, who had no children, and died in Burgettstown, Penn., after spending most of his life in Beaver county, Penn.; (2) Margaret, who married John Witherspoon, and moved to West Virginia (she has two sons living); (3) Thomas, still living in Ohio (has no children); (4) Ann, who married Matthew Bailey, lived all her life near the old homestead in Robinson township, and left eight children; (5) William, who left one daughter, living in Ohio; (6) Robert, who left two sons and one daughter in Iowa; (7) Ebenezer, who lives in New Lisbon, Ohio (has no children, but one grandson); (8) James, who left one daughter; (9) Samuel, living in Bloomfield, Ohio (has no children); (10) Archibald, who died upon entering the ministry; (11) David, who had three children: (1) Martha J. Purdy (has two children living: Maggie Belle and Brownlee Smiley, and buried two: Lizzie Lena, and an infant unnamed); (2) John N., who has four children, all living: Eva Leona, Earl Brownlee, Leona Florence and Charles Raymond; (3) William Brownlee, who has three children, all living: Olive Bell, Thomas Fergus and Howard Brownlee.

The four daughters of John and Ann Smiley married, respectively, Robert Thome, Archibald Brownlee, — Atchison (who moved to Ohio), and — Stewart (who moved to the northern part of Pennsylvania).

Through all the different generations there has been manifest in the Smiley family that integrity of character and devotion to religious principles which characterized their forefathers. There has not been one of the descendants of John and Ann Smiley, so far as known, that has been a dishonor to the family name. When John Smiley first settled in Washington county, he became identified with what is now known as the North Buffalo U. P. Church, then known as the Associate (or Seceder) Church, and to this faith his descendants remained true, being characterized, with scarcely an exception, as faithful and earnest Christian men and women, and a great many of them holding office in the church. They have not aspired much after political honors, and not many of them have turned aside from the pursuits of their father-agriculture—but sterling worth of character has been a feature prominently marked in the family history. An ensign, in the form of a chevron, with an armed arm (on which is a wreath) as a crest, and bearing the motto: "VIRIUS VIRTUS" (meaning "valor in arms," or "virtue with power"), was conferred upon the ancestors of the Smiley family in Ireland, probably in the seventeenth century, and was confirmed by the Crown through Sir William Betham, Knight, Deputy of Ulster King of Arms, in 1815, and duly recorded. The occasion of its being confirmed was probably some special act of valor or bravery manifested in defense of the Crown.

CHARLTON M. LIGGETT is a prosperous young merchant of Independence, Penn., and a son of David A., whose father, Thomas Liggett, came from Scotland with a brother, and after landing in America, remained a short time in Baltimore, Md. They made a permanent settlement in Washington county, Penn., where Thomas was united in marriage with Parmelia Dempster. The young people settled in Independence township, where the following children were born and reared: Joshua, Elizabeth (deceased), James (deceased), Harriet (widow of Laban Headington), Robert, Mary Ann (deceased widow of John Hemphill), William, Thomas, David A., and Anderson. Mr. Liggett was a man of perfect physical proportions, and was noted for his firm character and strict integrity. He died January 29, 1861, his widow on September 17, 1882.

David A. Liggett was born September 1, 1831, on his father's farm in Independence township, and received his early education in the country schools, afterward taking a course at the West Alexander (Penn.) Academy, which is now abandoned, but at that time was a popular and flourishing institution. After leaving school he followed the mercantile business in Independence, this county, for thirty years; then became a traveling salesman, visiting the principal cities and towns of western Pennsylvania, eastern Ohio and West Virginia. This business afforded him an excellent knowledge of that portion of the country, with which he became very familiar during sixteen years of life as a commercial traveler. On August 10, 1852, he was united in marriage with Esther Armstrong, who was born January 15, 1832, daughter of James Armstrong, of Hopewell township. The children born to them are Charlton M., Emma J. (Mrs. J. T. Raybuck, of Omaha, Neb.), Ella L. (wife of Rev. John Buekey, an M. E. minister of Holbrook, Mass.), Annie F. (wife of Rev. A. H. McKee, an M. E. minister of Hamilton, Ind.), Nettie S. (married to Rev. J. C. Burnworth, an M. E. minister of Newton, Greene Co., Penn.), Carrie A. (Mrs. William Kinnaman, wife of a farmer of Cass county, Ind.), Lizzie Bertha (living at home), Orie W. (a traveling salesman) and Grace E. (living with her parents). This family are among the leaders of the community, as are the other representatives of the name. Politically Mr. Liggett has always been a Democrat.

Charlton M. Liggett was born May 18, 1853, at McConnell's Mill, near Canonsburg, Penn. During his boyhood his parents moved to the village of Independence, where he attended the common schools, and assisted his father as clerk in the store. He afterward took a position with the wholesale grocery house of J. A. Miller, of Wheeling, W. Va., with whom he remained two years.

He then accepted a similar situation at an increased salary with Nicholas Schultz, of the same city, where he remained about the same length of time. The experience thus gained had given him much valuable information concerning mercantile life, and also made him acquainted with the leading merchants of eastern Ohio, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, advantages which he was not slow to appreciate. After leaving the employ of Mr. Schultz, he engaged in the manufacture of cigars, being the proprietor of a factory in Steubenville, Ohio. In the year 1877 he sold this business, and returning to Washington county again entered mercantile life, in which he is now engaged. On May 6, 1880, he was married to Clara A., daughter of W. A. Smith, a resident of Brooke county, W. Va. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Liggett were Mabel C., Harry H., Sheldon S. (deceased), Merwyn, Roseoe, Esther and Paul W. "Charley," as Mr. Liggett is familiarly called by his many friends, is a very popular and prosperous merchant. Politically he is a Democrat, and although that party is in the minority in his neighborhood, he has held various offices of trust, to which he has been elected by admiring friends, regardless of party connection. The efficient manner in which he has discharged such duties is evidence of the good judgment of those who elected him to the positions.

WILLIAM B. WINTER, a young and prosperous farmer of Donegal township, is a native of the same, born February 1, 1854, on the farm of his father, David B. Winter. His great-grandfather, Christopher Winter, was born in Rhine Pfalz, Germany, and immigrated to America, locating in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn. A log cabin home was soon erected in the wilderness, and he was united in marriage with Catherine Schaeffer, living near Washington, Penn. The Indians were then numerous and very hostile, and oftentimes compelled the adventurous pioneer to flee for life, while the savages ruthlessly burned or plundered the desolated homes. But, nothing daunted, these "pale-faced" heroes of the forest struggled on, and established their home in the face of innumerable dangers and obstacles. Mr. and Mrs. Winter died on their pioneer farm, leaving their children to finish the work so bravely begun.

David Winter was born on the home farm in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and worked on his father's farm, attending the subscription schools during the winter months. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Perry McCoy, also of Donegal township, and the following children were born to them: David B., and Elizabeth Margaret (deceased wife of Alexander Wyeth).

After his marriage Mr. Winter built a residence near that of his father, and farmed successfully. In politics he was a Democrat. He and his wife were buried near the scene of their labors.

David B. Winter was born November 1, 1823, in the old house, which is but a short distance from his present comfortable home. He passed his youth attending the common schools and assisting in the farm duties. In 1846 he was united in marriage with Mary Jane, daughter of William Bryson, of Donegal township, this county, and to them were born children as follows: Elizabeth, Hannah (deceased), David A., William B., Joseph, Nancy, Alice, Mary (deceased), and John F. (deceased in infancy). Mrs. Winter died, and in the year 1866 Mr. Winter was married to Sarah, daughter of William Milligan, of East Finley township, this county, and they have two children: George K. and Eudora, both of whom are residing with their parents. Some years after his marriage Mr. Winter removed from the home farm, and erected a handsome residence on an adjoining piece of land, which is his present home. He has always been a successful farmer, and in political life was a Democrat until the year 1860, when he voted for Lincoln, and has since been an enthusiastic worker in the Republican party. He contributes regularly to the Dutch Fork Baptist Church, of which he and his wife are members.

William B. Winter worked on his father's farm and attended the common schools during his minority. On December 15, 1881, he was married to Barbara Clemens, who was born June 6, 1856, daughter of George and Margaret Jane (Crow) Clemens. They have had three children, namely: Elizabeth W. J., Selina C. and Ethel Mary W. During the first years of his married life Mr. Winter lived on some rented property, and followed farming. In 1886 he purchased a farm which adjoins that of the birthplace of himself, his father and grandfather. Mr. Winter is a modern scientific farmer, and also gives considerable attention to wool growing. Politically he is a Democrat, and well informed in the current questions of the day. He and his wife are members of the U. B. Church, in which he is both steward and trustee.

ALLEXANDER J. CULBERTSON, one of the leading dentists of Washington, was born in Westmoreland county, Penn., a son of Alexander and Amanda (Giffen) Culbertson, natives of the same county. The father died in Greensburg, Penn., in March, 1871; the mother is yet living. The family are of Scotch-Irish extraction, and the grandfather, Alexander Culbertson, came to this country from the North of Ireland at an early day.

Alexander J. Culbertson, the subject proper of these lines, passed his boyhood and youth in Greensburg, Penn., and there commenced the study of dentistry. In the spring of 1885 he came to Washington, this county, and having just graduated from Pennsylvania Dental College, in Philadelphia, he opened out for the practice of his profession in the building where he is now thoroughly established. In June, 1891, Dr. Culbertson married Etta M., daughter of Col. J. B. Ruple, and same year he finished his elegant home on Wade avenue, where they now reside. Dr. and Mrs. Culbertson are members of the first Presbyterian Church; in politics he is a Republican.

ROBERT C. OSBURN, a leading and eminently prosperous merchant of Eldersville, Penn., was born in 1812 in Robinson township, this county. The pioneers of the family resided in Westmoreland county, same State. His grandfather, James Osburn, was born in Ireland, and married to a Miss Cntcheon, of the same part of that country. Emigrating to America, they, settling in Washington county, Penn., reared a large family. Some of their numerous descendants remained in Westmoreland county, while others settled in Johnstown, Penn., and among those who perished in the dreadful flood were Squire Fisher, his wife (a cousin of Robert C. Osburn) and six children. James Osburn died in Westmoreland county.

James Osburn was born in Ireland, being nine years of age when his parents settled in Westmoreland county, Penn. He was reared on the farm, and continued to follow agriculture most of his life; also worked at the milling business for a time in Jefferson township, this county. In early manhood he was married to Martha McKennett, of Robinson township, this county. Her father, Adam McKennett, was born in Ireland, and, immigrating to America, first settled in Fayette county, Penn., thence coming to Cecil township, this county, locating on what is now called Miller's run. Remaining there but a short time, he finally bought a place in Robinson township, now known as the old Adam McKennett farm, occupied by his descendants. He was married to Rebecca Johnston. To James Osburn four children were born: One deceased in infancy, James J. (living in Robinson township), George W. (a resident of Burgettstown, Penn.), and Robert C. The father died in 1813, in his forty-second year, and his wife mourned her loss until the age of eighty-two years, when she was called to her rest, passing away in 1885.

Robert C. Osburn lived on the home place until eighteen years of age, and received a good common-school and academic education. He then taught five terms of school, afterward taking a course at Duff's Mercantile College, Pittsburgh, Penn. He graduated in 1864, after which he opened a general store in Eldersville, Penn. At that time goods were yet sold at war prices, and even a small store required a large amount of money. To illustrate the marked contrast between the prices then and those of the present day, we give a few examples: Prints now selling at 7 and 8 cents a yard, then brought from 45 to 50 cents; muslin now worth 8 or 9 cents a yard, then sold at 75 or 80 cents; all-wool flannel cost $1 per yard, which is now procured at about one third of that price; kerosene was 80 cents a gallon; sugar 25 cents a pound, and coffee so expensive that rye, chicory, burnt crusts, etc., were used by everyone as a substitute.

In 1868 Robert C. Osburn was married to Mary, daughter of James P. Robertson, of Eldersville, Penn. She died in 1877, and he was afterward married to Hannah M., daughter of W. W. Knight, of Jefferson township, this county. This wife died in 1882, and Mr. Osburn's third choice was made in the person of Hattie M., daughter of Cyrus McConnell, of Hanover township, this county. Mr. Osburn's business has steadily increased, and he is now the proprietor of a large store replete with a complete and varied stock of dry goods, groceries and hardware. When he began business at Eldersville he was obliged to haul goods eight miles from Steubenville to his store; but no obstacles daunted his energetic spirit, and his life success has been made in the town where he had made so humble a beginning twenty-eight years ago. In 1871 the large and comfortable dwelling was erected which is now his home and place of business. In politics Mr. Osburn is a Republican, an active worker in the party, and has filled various township offices.

PRESSLY LEECH. Men of business capacity and intellectual force need no formal introduction in a work of this character, for their names are indelibly printed in the minds and hearts of the surrounding community, whose interests they are continually planning to advance. In the foremost rank of the best citizens of this county, the name of Leech has ever been identified and interwoven with its earliest history.

James Leech (the grandfather of subject) was born in County Down, Ireland, and there married Jane Reynolds. Three children were born to them: John, Thomas and William. Having decided to try life in the New World, the grandfather, in company with his family and a brother named Robert, sailed from Ireland in 1774. They landed at Philadelphia, where the brothers separated, Robert going south, eventually settling in

Presly Leach

South Carolina, while James and his family pushed farther west, first locating in Northampton county, Penn. In August, 1775, they came to Smith township, Washington county, and in the unbroken wilderness erected their one-room log cabin home, which compared very favorably with the houses of the other early settlers. With his firearms as constant companions, James Leech began the herculean task of transforming the unsightly forest into a fertile farm. Eight years passed away before civilization had rendered the little home comparatively safe from attacks of the Indians, and in the meantime the settlers were often forced to flee to the neighboring blockhouse for protection, which blockhouse stood on the old Leech farm. Undaunted by the toil and privations of this life, James Leech found time and strength to take part in the national struggle of his adopted country. Her cause was his, her liberties dearer to his heart than life, and with the beginning of the Revolution he enlisted in a company organized by Capt. Joseph Erwin, afterward incorporated under Col. Samuel Miles' Pennsylvania Rifle Regiment. This division finally became a part of the Thirteenth Pennsylvania, then of the Second Pennsylvania, and on January 1, 1778, having served his time, he was discharged from the service at Valley Forge. He was paid in "Continental money," which was worthless, and part of it is still in the possession of the family. He then returned to the farm in Washington county, where he died in December, 1823, having been preceded by his wife in 1812. The children who were born after the family had settled in Pennsylvania were as follows: James, Robert, Samuel, Margaret (wife of John Cunningham) and Jane (unmarried), all of whom lived to an adult age.

James Leech, son of the old pioneer James, was born September 17, 1775, in Northampton county, Penn. His youth was passed on the home farm, and he received a subscription-school education. Early evincing a taste for mechanical work, he learned the trade of millwright. He bought a farm where the old fort stands, and had a saw and grist mill, to which latter wheat was brought on horseback. In 1803 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Wishart, who was born in 1782, in Franklin county, Penn., and came with her parents to Washington county when thirteen years of age. James and Elizabeth Leech were the parents of the following children: James, Jane (wife of James McKeen, of Greene county, Penn., both deceased), Nancy (Mrs. James McGhee, of Tama county, Iowa, both deceased), John, Robert, David, Thomas, Elizabeth (living with her brother Joseph), Joseph P., Mary (wife of A. Phillis, of Smith township) and Pressly. Of these children there are yet living: Elizabeth, Joseph P. and Pressly. After his marriage James Leech settled on a farm in Smith township. In 1812 he entered the war of that period, serving under Harrison throughout the campaign. In politics he was a Whig, first a Jackson man; but changed on the bank question, and took a very active part in the campaign preceding the election of President Harrison. He was an enthusiastic admirer of his older leader, and did all in his power to secure the election of the sturdy, fearless veteran. In 1818 Mr. Leech was appointed a justice of the peace, filling that office twenty-two years, during which time his rulings were invariably sustained by the higher courts. He and his wife were members of the Seceder Church and then of the Union Church, to which he contributed liberally, having given the land for a church at Mt. Vernon before the project was abandoned, owing to disorganization. He was a ruling elder in the Seceder Church and of the Associate Union Church during his life. The old church stands. He was called to his long home June 27, 1852, and June 1, 1867, his wife was laid to rest beside him.

Pressly Leech (son of James and Elizabeth Leech) was born October 20, 1832, on the home farm in Smith township, where his boyhood was passed. His early education was received at the country schools, after which he was a student at Washington and Jefferson College for one year, being then obliged to leave school on account of an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. Returning to the farm, and upon regaining his health, he taught from 1854 to 1857 in Smith township, also followed agricultural pursuits. On January 8, 1857, he was united in marriage with Susan R. Marshall, who was born in 1835, in Queen Anne's county, Md., daughter of Stewart and Maria (Tittle) Marshall. Stewart Marshall was born in Cross Creek township, a son of William Marshall, who came from Ireland to America when twelve years old, and died in Cross Creek township. Stewart Marshall, who was a stone mason, was married in Baltimore to Maria Little, and by her had four children: Elizabeth, in Midway; Lonisa, widow of John Robertson, of Cross Creek village; Susan R., Mrs. Pressly Leech, and Sarah, wife of John Barnes, living in Jefferson county, Iowa. Mr. Marshall died in Iowa, his wife in Maryland. Mrs. Leech spent her girlhood in Baltimore, and after coming to Pennsylvania taught school for a time in Cross Creek township prior to her marriage. The children of Pressly and Susan R. (Marshall) Leech are Lizzie Wishart (living at home), Susan L. (wife of William Melvaine, of Mount Pleasant township), James P. (a farmer of Smith township, living on the old Grandfather Leech farm), Robert V. (deceased in youth), John C. (residing with his parents), Linda E. (a graduate of California (Penn.) College, now teaching school in Mt. Pleasant township), J. Gibson and Ernest A. (living at home).

Mr. and Mrs. Leech began married life on the old Leech homestead, where they resided until 1867. He then purchased some land adjoining the old place, to which he has continued to add, now owning almost two hundred acres of choice land. A few years ago he erected one of the finest country residences in Smith township, including many conveniences which can be found in no other farm-house of the neighborhood. The dwelling is elegantly furnished and very commodious, while the barn—a substantial structure 10x60 feet, with wing 28x30 feet—was built in 1892, and is one of the finest in the township. In 1891 Mr. Leech erected an aermotor, which pumps water, shells corn, grinds chop feed for his own use, as well as thousands of bushels per annum for his neighbors. The first steam thresher used in the township was owned by a company of which Mr. Leech was a member. The first sewing machine (a "Wheeler & Wilson") in the vicinity was owned by the family, and was a curiosity in its day. His farm is situated about five miles from Burgettstown, on what is called the "Contention tract," the Vance, Campbell and Stevenson families all at one time advancing claims to it, but which finally became the "Campbell farm."

In politics he was formerly a Whig, and upon the organization of the party became a Republican, but has always limited his political interests to the ballot, preferring to spend his time in other ways. He and his wife are members of the Mt. Prospect Presbyterian Church, of which he is a deacon.

JOHNS GARDNER, Sr., one of the pioneer settlers of this county, was born in 1757, and died September 10, 1821. He came from Wales to America about the middle of the eighteenth century, settling on the banks of the Potomac river, near Mt. Vernon, the home of Washington, and was familiar with the patriot. In his early days he came to Washington county (between 1770 and 1771), married Elizabeth Clark (in 1783), daughter of James Clark, and moved to the farm, then known as Greathouse Castle, where they both died. They were buried in Cross Creek graveyard, where a marble monument, eight feet high, marks their resting place, and bears their names.

Elizabeth Clark, born in 1748, died October 1, 1853, was left by herself one day before her marriage, busy at her loom, while her father, James Clark, Alexander Leeper, a brother in law Samuel Leeper, and others went to the Leeper farm to build some fence; and John Yeaman went to a garden, about one and one half miles off, to get some parsnips for dinner. The latter, on his return, stopped at a spring to get a drink of water, and was sitting on a log resting, when the Indians rushed on him, and killed and scalped him. The same day, before they killed Yeaman, they came on James Robinson and his son, where they were fixing or preparing ground to plant potatoes. The boy got on the horse, but the father missed his jump and fell, and the Indians killed and scalped him. The boy made home in safety. The Indians came along where Miss Clark was weaving. She, seeing them, got up in the loft of the loom-shop, and covered herself with flax-tow. They came in and took some meat from the pot that was boiling on the fire, cut some of the web off the loom and left. She expected to be burnt alive, but they did not know she was there. When the men came for dinner, she told the tale, and they went to hunt up Yeaman, but found him as described. They started in pursuit of the Indians as soon as they could get help, and traced them to the Ohio river, near Mingo bottom, in time to see them climb the bank on the other side. Knowing there was a large force at Mingo, they returned home, and next day they buried Mr. Yeaman near where he was killed, under a gum tree on the farm now owned by George Criss' heirs, one and one-half miles west of Eldersville, where there were several persons buried from 1770 to 1775. Those were the last deaths at the hands of the Indians in these parts. The whites had a fort on the Richard Wells farm; but had not been troubled much with Indians for some time, so were not on the lookout, and they had just come from the fort a short time before. The grant of land to John Greathouse, made by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, comprised 289 acres on Harmon run. It was surveyed March 7, 1775, and September 15, 1784, and deeded to Greathouse July 7, 1786, with other lands amounting to 400 acres.

The children born to John and Elizabeth (Clark) Gardner were William, born August 7, 1784; Sarah, January 7, 1786; Margaret, July 26, 1785; Lydia, March 27, 1790; Rachel, November 25, 1792; John, October 2, 1791; James, May 29, 1796; David, March 23, 1798; Samuel, May 15, 1801. All have passed away except James, who is living with his son, Levi, in Hancock county, W. Va., where he has seventeen oil-producing wells on his farm of 300 acres in the Turkey Foot oil region. David Gardner, born March 23, 1798, married Nancy Donovan in 1819, and to this union the following named children were born: Eliza, born November 22, 1820 (married G. Swearingen); John, October 1, 1822 (married Parmelia Gardner, August 20, 1846); David (married Lizzie Merryman, of Brooke county); Thomas (died in youth); James (married Mary Sanders, of Brooke county, Va.); George (married Mrs. Lizzie Robinson, of Steubenville, Ohio); Rezin (died in early youth); William (married Carity Hendricks, of Brooke county, Va.); Rachel (married Reason Walker, of Washington county, Penn.); Anne (married W. B. Morrow, of Brooke county, Va., now of Selina, Kans.); Martin (married Lizzie Sanders, of this county); Mary (married D. F. Patterson, of Patterson's Mills, Penn., now a prominent lawyer of Pittsburgh, Penn.). Thomas Donovan, Sr., came from Baltimore, Md., with his family in 1812, and settled on the farm now occupied by his son, Thomas, now a man over ninety years old. The pioneer of the name in this county was born September 10, 17— . On August 3, 1787, he married Anne Cole, born November 7, 1765, and their children were Honor, born May 26, 1788, married Thomas Wheeler; John, born June 8, 1790, died January 5, 1834; Abram (1), born November 26, 1792, died November 26, 1795; Sarah, born March 11, 1795; Harriet, born March 17, 1797; Ellen, born March 11, 1799; Nancy, born December 16, 1800, married David Gardner in 1819; Thomas, born February 14, 1803; Abram (2), born May 3, 1805; Cornelius, born September 20, 1807; Ruth, born March 26, 1810; and Selina, born February 9, 1813. All are numbered with the dead, except Thomas Donovan, named above.

Samuel Gardner, born May 15, 1801, married Ruth Sharp, in 1826. Their children were Permelia, born November 8, 1827; Clarissa, November 17, 1829; Edward M., January 7, 1832; Jane, July 14, 1834; John F., December 27, 1836; Levi S., May 23, 1839; Samuel Scott, June 27, 1842; James H., April 13, 1845, and David Reeves, April 13, 1845. The father of this family died April 1, 1877, leaving to the heirs a tract of 600 acres connected with the home farm. John Gardner, born October 1, 1822, married Permelia Gardner, August 20, 1846. She is the eldest daughter of Samuel Gardner, named above. The children of this marriage are D. S. Gardner, born July 9, 1847; Edward Morgan, born June 16, 1849, died January 23, 1854; Thomas D., born October 14, 1850, died March 21, 1876; Marion F., born October 23, 1852; Emma, born April 29, 1855; Ruth Ella, born December 7, 1858; Reason Walker, born November 19, 1861; Freeman Sharp, born September 14, 1864; Lucy Ella, born July 3, 1866; Nancy Cora Austa, born January 21, 1869, and Robert C., born November 12, 1872.

John Gardner, Sr., was a Presbyterian; Elizabeth, his wife, united with the Disciple Church, founded by Alexander Campbell, of Bethany, Va., and commonly called Campbellites, now known as the Christian Church, and was a faithful member, and regular at all convenient meetings until she lost her sight. Being blind for many years, but very industrious, she was nearly always knitting, and could shape a very nice stocking, knowing when she would drop a stitch. Their son, William, married Patty Wilcoxon, and settled near Lisbon, Ohio; afterward settled on a farm near Holliday's Cove, Va. Their children were John, Samuel, Robert, William, Betsy, Verlinda and Margaret. Sarah married Arch Freshwater, their children being John, Arch, William, David, Fanny and Betsy. Margaret married John Hindman, of Brooke county, Va., settled on a farm on the road from Washington (Penn.) to Steubenville (Ohio), but exchanged that for other land and mill property at Holliday's Cove, where they ended their days. Their children were Betty, John (representative to Richmond, who was killed by the cars while walking on the track in sight of his house a few years ago), James, William, Samuel, Frank, Cyrus, Harriet, Margaret and Mary, nearly all devout Christians. Lydia married David Chambers, settled at Cadiz, Ohio, kept a hotel for many years, went on a farm and died, leaving John, David, Nancy and Rachel. Rachel married Robert Scott, settled and spent their days on a farm on the pike from Wellsburg, Va., to Washington, Penn., where they kept a tavern and store, and worked their large and fertile farm, which still belongs to their heirs, for many years. Both were very useful members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and were the means of building the Franklin meeting house. Their children were Eliza, married to Rezin Reeves, of Wellsburg, Va.; Permelia, married to Rev. James Hopkins, and located at Sewickley, Penn. (Mr. Hopkins died a few years ago; he was a ruling elder for many years; his widow is still living); Katharine, married to Rev. Crea, and they lived on part of the home farm until their death; Mary, married Edward Hunter, and took the home house to live in, which is now occupied by their two children, Robert and Ella; Rachel, married to Rev. George Hudson (he and family own part of her father's farm, she being dead for many years); David, who went West while young; McKendry, Fletcher and Ella, living at Washington, D. C.; John, married to Eliza Reeves, of Brooke county, Va., and lived at Wellsburg many years, where he kept a store and tavern, and had an interest in a steamboat called "The Swan" (he ran coaches, and was a very useful man; he moved to a point opposite East Liverpool, Ohio, where he had a large tract of land, built a large house, established a ferry, and left a considerable fortune to his three children; he was justice of the peace for many years); James, married to Mary Sharp, and settled near Paris, Penn., on a beautiful farm, raised a large family, became rich, and is yet living (his wife died many years ago; his sons were good workers, as were also his two daughters); Eliza, married to Rev. James Campbell, who preached in the Paris church for many years, moved to near Cincinnati, Ohio, and died leaving his family on a fine farm; Levi, who owns a large farm (on which there is much oil), and lives on it (his children are all married; he married Miss Hannah Vanordstrand); Samuel, a bachelor, lives a rather retired life, spending the summer on his farm near Paris, Penn., and at his fine residence near Natchez, Miss., where he went to live with an old aunt in his younger days (he saw pretty hard times during the war, and had a great amount of property taken); David, married to Miss Amanda Butterfoss, of Paris, Penn., settled near his old home, and raised a large family; James, the youngest son, married to Miss Mary McGuire, who had two daughters, and died on her way to Tennessee, where they were moving (he owns a small farm near Colliers, Va.; his daughters are both married, and he is alone).

David and Nancy, his wife, belonged to the M. P. Church until their death in 1815. In August David was a delegate to Conference, returned home, and but a few days after was taken ill with dysentery and died (he was a Jackson Democrat). Their children were Eliza, who married George Swearingen (they moved last to Ida county, Iowa, where he died and she is still living); John, married to Permelia Gardner, and living on the old Samuel Gardner home (their children are scattered, two being in Dakota, the rest near home; three are married, six single and two deceased); Samuel, married to Ruth Sharp (they belong to the Church of Christ); Edward is living on a part of the home farm, married to Rebecca Gardner (he has erected a fine house and other good buildings); S. S. has a part of the homestead, and resides on it; D. R. owns the farm of forty-seven acres, well improved land, where his father died.

MISS ANN C. MARSHALL. The Marshalls of Pennsylvania, Virginia and Ohio are descendants of the four brothers—John, William, Thomas and Robert Marshall—who accompanied their sister Mary from Ireland to America, early in the second half of the eighteenth century. They were natives of County Down. John Marshall was married in Ireland to Nancy Kyle. They settled in Cross Creek township, Washington Co., Penn., but removed to Wayne county, Ohio, where some of their descendants still reside, others being found in Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania.

William Marshall, the great grandfather of Miss Ann C. Marshall, married Mary Speers in Ireland, and to them five children were born: Thomas, William, James, Jane and Barbara. He came here before the Revolution to inquire into the condition of the country; but the war of the Revolution breaking out, he joined the patriots and fought for the right. After the close of the Revolution he sent for his wife and children, and in 1783 they arrived at Philadelphia. That year the reunited family proceeded to Washington county, where they found a temporary home in the house of Andrew Russell, of Chartiers township, until they settled on the farm in Cross Creek township, now owned by A. V. Reed, later in that year. In 1788 William purchased 101 acres from David Vance at 15 shillings (or $1.87½) per acre (the same now owned by David Gault), and on this tract the family resided until the death of the mother in 1817, when he and his son James removed to Wayne county, Ohio, where the soldier and pioneer shortly after died. Of his children, Thomas was grandfather of T. M. Berryhill, of Hickory, Penn., and was married to Katie Hamilton, and whose descendants now reside in Ohio. James married Jane McNary, of Wayne county, Ohio, removed to Iowa, founded Marshalltown, and died there. Jane married John Moore, and settled near Bulger, Penn. Their children were William, John, Mary, Elizabeth, Nancy, Jane and Ellen. Barbara married Robert Glass, and settled with him near Liverpool, Ohio. William, grandfather of Miss Ann C. Marshall, is referred to at greater length. Thomas Marshall, one of the immigrants, married Margaret Woodburn, settled for a time in Washington county, but removed to a point near New Athens, Ohio, where he died, and where many of his descendants now reside.

Robert Marshall, born in Ireland in 1760, died in 1833. Coming to America in his youth, he enlisted in the Continental line at the age of sixteen years, in opposition to the wish of his mother, who protested solely on account of his youth. He served in six general engagements. At the age of twenty-three years he began to study theology under Rev. Graham, continuing under Rev. McMillan, of Canonsburg, Penn., and was licensed to preach by the Redstone Presbytery. For some time he preached in what is now West Virginia; but in 1791 he removed to a point eight miles from Lexington, Ky., where he died. His first wife was a Miss McCandless. After her death he married Miss Glass. Descendants of Robert Marshall are found to day in Kentucky. Mary Marshall, who married Robert Walker, settled in Washington county, and thence removed to Mar. Lawrence county. They were the parents of six daughters and three sons.

William Marshall, grandfather of subject, married Ann Crawford, daughter of Thomas Crawford (who died in June, 1783) and Judith Crawford-Cassell-Adams, nee Jones (born in 1742, died October 5, 1839). Mrs. Crawford was married three times. From Thomas and Judith Crawford are descended the Stephensons, Marshalls, Creighs, Moores and many other extensive families settled in Washington county. Thomas was a son of Margaret Shearer, by her first husband — Crawford.

It is related that on the return home of some of her family from the interment of the first corpse in Cross Creek graveyard, Mrs. Margaret Shearer inquired where the grave was made, and on being informed, exclaimed, throwing up her hands: "There is now a graveyard started, and I know I will be the next;" which prediction came true.

William Marshall, born December 11, 1769, died October 1, 1860, married Ann Crawford, born February 19, 1774, died October 27, 1860. Their children were Crawford (born in 1795, died in 1857); William (1797-1874); Thomas (1799-1890); Stewart C. (1806-1871); Elizabeth (1794-1838); Judith (1802-1863); Margaret (1808-1867); Ann Jones (1810-1877); Mary (1801-1878); Ruth (1812-1846); Louisa (1815-1852) and Barbara Jane (1818-1870). Of these, Elizabeth married John Glass; to them one daughter was born, who married Douglass Geary, of Candor, Penn., where their son, Robert Geary, now resides. Judith married Ewell Canon; Margaret married William Aiken, who was born in 1799, died in 1868; Ann Jones married Thomas Wilson, who was born in 1806, and died in 1882; Louisa married John Dungan, while the other daughters never married. The father of this family, William Marshall, son of William, came from Ireland at the age of twelve years; was in the service against the Indians from March 1, 1792, to September 1, 1792, under Captains Samuel Smith and Robert Stephenson, stationed awhile at Yellow creek, and then at Coes. For this service he received a pension about 1837, and warrants for land. William, Jr., married Mary Linville, and died near Des Moines, Iowa, where his descendants still live. Stewart C. married Mrs. Ann M. Register (who had one son by first marriage, Wilson Register), and had four daughters: Elizabeth A., Louisa J. (married John M. Robertson), Susan Rebecca (married Pressly Leech), Sarah A. (married John C. Barnes, now of Fairfield, Iowa).

William and Margaret (Marshall) Aiken were married March 16, 1829, by Rev. Alex. Douman, settled near Candor, where they resided until their deaths, and were buried at Centre church. A memorial window was erected to his memory in Midway U. P. church. Their sons are William Marshall, born October 22, 1832 (married Lizzie Elder, and has two daughters); Joseph Wilson, born December 29, 1845, died in 1892 (he married Lulu Crawford; they resided at Burgettstown, and had two children); Nancy married Samuel Jones (now deceased), and they resided at the old Aiken homestead, near Candor, Penn. (had two children—Dellar and Frank); Ann married David Manson, of Burgettstown (their children are Fred, Robert, Mary, Ellen and Elizabeth, the latter of whom is a successful teacher of music and painting); Elizabeth married Benjamin R. McCarty, of Midway (her children are Edward and Joseph); Louisa married William H. McPeak, of Hickory (they are the parents of one son, Robert Wilson McPeak). Ann and Thomas Wilson had children as follows: William Marshall, married Phebe, daughter of Col. S. Magill, reside in northern Nebraska; Eleanor Ruth married A. W. Fry, near Hickory; Margaret Jane married Craig Tweed Bebout, removed to Caldwell county, Mo. (they have two sons and three daughters).

Thomas Marshall, father of subject, married Sibella Campbell, who was a daughter of Jesse Campbell (1779-1858), a son of William Campbell (1739-1801), who was a soldier in the Revolution. William Campbell had a sister who married Andrew Ritchie, and settled in Cross Creek township. Jesse Campbell's wife was Sibella McClure (1777-1840). They had sons: William (married Mary Welch), Jesse (married ——— Jones), Robert (married Mary McClure), John McC. (married Sarah A. Puder), Edward (married Rusina Rankin). Of the three daughters: Sibella, Elizabeth married Daniel McGugin, of Knox county, Ohio, and Rebecca married her cousin, George Campbell; Sibella McClure's brothers were Richard, Andrew, Robert (father of R. B. McClure, Benjamin F. and Alexander McClure) and John. Her sisters, Margaret (married ——— Galbraith), Rebecca (married James Ridgeway), Catherine (married ——— Sloan). The McClures came from Ireland.

Thomas Marshall (born November 25, 1799, died October 30, 1890) was married January 30, 1834, by Rev. David Hervey, of Mt. Prospect Church, to Miss Sibella Campbell, who was born March 15, 1806, and died September 14, 1867; their children were Ann Crawford, born October 18, 1836, unmarried; William, born January 16, 1839, married Harriet M. Noah (have one son, William); Hadassah Melissa, born March 2, 1840, married John Milton Rankin, March 3, 1864 (settled near Hickory; removed in 1872 to a point near Elizabethtown, Hardin Co., Ky., where Mr. Rankin died June 6, 1873; the widow and family returned to Washington county, and lived with her father, and at his death inherited part of the old homestead, where they still reside. Her children are John Taylor, Lincoln county, Neb.; Mary Sibella, a prominent teacher; Thomas Marshall, Dessa Elm Orlon, William Matthew Milton, who reside with their mother); Rosannah, born June 17, 1841, married February 9, 1860, to Hervey B. McHvaine, removed to a point near Fort Scott, Bourbon Co., Kans. (her children are Frank Marshall, Nina Hervey, Sibella J., Dessa A., Mary Ellen, Cora C. and Thomas Lawrence); Mary Ruth, born September 20, 1842, died March 18, 1892 (she married May 10, 1860, William Perry, resided on the old Crawford Marshall farm; they have two sons: Thomas Marshall, married to Anna Armstrong, and residing near Washington, Iowa, and have children; and William Campbell, who resides with his father at the old home).

Miss Ann C. Marshall, a daughter of Thomas Marshall and Sibella Campbell, is one of the highly esteemed and most successful school teachers of Cross Creek township. She was born on the farm in Cross Creek township, which is now occupied by William Perry, and began teaching school in her early girlhood. She taught several years, and achieved an enviable reputation in her chosen calling, but retired from the profession on the death of her mother in 1867, and kept house for her father.

JAMES B. BOYER was born February 25, 1822, in Butler county, Penn., and died July 9, 1889, in Monongahela City, respected by all.

His ancestors in this country were natives of New Jersey, in which State James Boyer (his grandfather) passed his early youth among the peaceful Society of Friends. When a young man he came to Pennsylvania, and purchasing a farm in Peters township, Washington county, was there married to Nancy, daughter of Col. William Blackmore. Five children were born to this marriage, namely: John, Amy, Samuel, Peter and Sarah (wife of Carvel Rigdon, brother of Rigdon, the Mormon preacher), none of whom are now living.

Samuel Boyer, son of James and Nancy Boyer, was born in 1791, in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. He attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood, then taught several terms in Beaver county, Penn. On February 8, 1821, he was united in marriage with Mary Boyer, who was born April 10, 1800, died November 16, 1853, a daughter of Leonard Boyer, of Bethel township, Allegheny Co., Penn. Samuel and Mary Boyer resided in Beaver county, Penn., for six years after their marriage; then returning to Washington county, lived on the old home place six years. They finally bought and moved upon what is now the Higbee farm, adjoining the old homestead, where they died, the father July 18, 1878, in the eighty-seventh year of his age, leaving children as follows: James B.; Peter, living near Library, Allegheny county; John W., a retired farmer of Union township; Elizabeth, deceased wife of David Higbee; Nancy, married to E. T. Townsend, of Peters township; Amy, deceased wife of D. Welch, of Limetown, and Lucinda, second wife of her brother-in-law, David Higbee.

James B. Boyer was reared to agricultural pursuits on the home farm, and received his education at the subscription schools of his native township. On August 24, 1853, he married Mary, daughter of Henry Pomerene, of Allegheny county, Penn., and to this union were born two children: Mary E., married to Samuel Cook, and Melinda. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Boyer took up their residence on a farm in Peters township, whereon they remained several years; then removed to Allegheny county, where they made their home until 1873, in which year they returned to Washington county, and in Monongahela City prepared to pass the remainder of their lives, where Mrs. Boyer is yet living. Mr. Boyer was a typical self-made man, one who by industry, prudence and judicious economy made a success, and when he died he was one of the largest property owners in the city. He was enterprising, and at all times strove to advance the interests of his locality. An ardent Republican, he for several years was a member of the Monongahela City Council. Consistent in his church connection, he was a prominent adherent of the Baptist faith. His wife is also a member of the Baptist Church.

DAVID M. BOYD, a well-known and popular citizen of West Middletown, is a grandson of David Boyd, whose father, John Boyd, was born in Ireland. This John Boyd came to America when but a lad, and settled in Cumberland county, Penn., where he was married to Mary Urie, who bore him four children: David, John, Sarah and Rhoda.

While John Boyd the pioneer was on a business trip to the house of Stewart, his children were all captured by the Indians, and his wife scalped and killed. The husband and father, on returning to his little home, found his cabin in flames, and the mutilated body of his wife lying upon the ground. The children were nowhere in sight, and the agonized father, after a frantic but almost hopeless search, gave up the quest and mourned them as dead. Meanwhile the little ones had been carried off by the Indians. The son John and the two daughters were never heard from afterward, but David was taken to Fort Du Quesne in 1758. He was then returned by the old Indian who adopted him, and remained with his father at Carlisle, Penn. As may be supposed, the young man had little love for the Redskins who had so wantonly destroyed the home of his boyhood, and he became an active soldier in the Indian war. He enlisted under Washington, and served through the entire contest, being present at the surrender of Burgoyne and, later, at that of Cornwallis at Yorktown in 1781.

After the close of the war David Boyd returned to Cumberland county, Penn., and was there married to Elizabeth Henderson, who bore him children as follows: James, John, Thomas, David, William, Nancy, Sarah, Elizabeth and Nellie. David Boyd and his family came to Washington county in 1787, and settled on the farm now occupied by W. W. Dinsmore. In politics Mr. Boyd was first a Jacksonian Democrat, afterward an ardent Whig. He was an active politician, and served as justice of the peace twenty-five years. He was for many years a member of the Buffalo Presbyterian Church of Hopewell township. He died in 1830.

John Boyd, father of subject, was born in 1784, in Cumberland county, Penn., but was reared and educated in Hopewell township, this county. In early life he was married to Asenath, daughter of Eleven Williams, of Buffalo township, and the following children were born to them: Hester (married to Ellis Jones, and moved to Missouri), David M., Christiana (married to Amos Clemens), Elizabeth (Mrs. Dr. McCabe), Sarah (Mrs. Cox, of Kansas City), Caroline (widow of John Dougherty), Parnelia (died in 1853, wife of Hugh Wilson), James (died in 1842), Nancy J. (wife of Hugh Clark, of Wheeling, W. Va.), John Q. A. (married to Eliza Black) and Asenath (Mrs. John Canon). Mr. Boyd served in the war of 1812. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed many years, and also kept an hotel eight years. He took an active part in public affairs, and was an ardent Republican, serving as justice of the peace twenty-five years. He died in 1866, his wife in 1868, and both lie buried in the Union Grove cemetery.

David M. Boyd, son of John and Asenath (Williams) Boyd, was born March 23, 1810, at West Middletown, Hopewell township, and there received his early education. On May 10, 1844, he was married to Eliza Boyd, who bore him three children: Cassius, Ruth and Thomas. The mother died in 1865, and on May 3, 1866, Mr. Boyd was united in marriage with Anna McNulty, of Columbus, Ohio, who died in 1887. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed twenty-five years, and was then (1853) appointed postmaster at West Middletown. He held that position eight years, and has since followed mercantile business. Politically he was a Democrat from 1845 to 1861, but upon the organization of the Republican party became a member of it. He has held all the political offices of the borough, has been a member of the school board for twenty years, and justice of the peace twenty-five years. In religion he was formerly a member of the M. E. Church, but is now connected with the Presbyterian Church of Buffalo.

SAMUEL S. ROTHWELL, one of the oldest residents of California, this county, was born February 21, 1815, in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn., and is descended from an English family who came to America at an early day. Peter Rothwell, his grandfather, was born, reared and educated in Delaware, and was there married to Hannah Gregg, who bore him the following children: Isaac G., born near Wilmington, Del., November 27, 1780; Jared, who married Sarah Jackman, of East Pike Run, Washington Co., Penn.; and Samuel. Peter Rothwell, who was a farmer in Delaware, came to Washington county about the year 1800, locating in Webster, where he remained some years, later removing to Columbiana, Ohio; after some years spent there he finally went to Adams county, Ohio, and settled on Brush creek, where he and his wife died of cholera.

Isaac G. Rothwell was reared in the State of Delaware and Washington county Penn., receiving a fair common-school education. While yet a boy he commenced an apprenticeship at the building trade with Daniel Johnson, at old Beason-town, now Uniontown, remaining with him until he had completed his apprenticeship. He then took up his residence in Centreville, building the first house there in 1820; he also erected the first tavern in the place. Here he followed his trade some ten years, and then removed to East Pike Run, where he purchased a farm, built a residence thereon and remained three years. His home was in Greenfield, Washington Co., Penn.; his wife died October 27, 1844, in Greenfield, Washington Co., Penn., and he then removed to Adams county, Ohio, whence, after a sojourn of about three years, he returned to his old home in Delaware, and there died, August 22, 1846, and was buried in the cemetery connected with the Presbyterian Church, in which the grandfather of Judge McKennan preached for over forty years. In 1813 he had married Mary, daughter of Benjamin Kenney, a native of Maryland, where he was married September 17, 1789, to Elizabeth Blair, who bore him the following named children: Margaret, Mary, John, James, Wesley, Rebecca and William. Mr. Kenney was in politics a Whig and Abolitionist, in religion a member of the M. E. Church, having been among the first to attend the Taylor church. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Isaac G. Rothwell were Samuel S.; Elizabeth, wife of Lemuel Beazell; Hannah, Mrs. George Hornbake; Sidney, Mrs. James Chapman; John, who served in the war of the Rebellion; Jared; and Margaret, wife of John R. Powell; all dead but Samuel S. The mother of this family died October 27, 1844. Isaac G. Rothwell was first a Whig, and afterward an outspoken Abolitionist; in his church preference he was a Methodist.

Samuel S. Rothwell attended the common schools, and so apt a scholar was he that he soon found himself capable of teaching school, a vocation he followed for many years. He learned the trades of cabinet maker and builder, and followed both in California for a period of about forty years, many of the first houses in the place having been erected by him. On December 22, 1835, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Adam Ashcroft, a native of England, who when about twenty-two years of age came to the United States, locating near Webster, in this county. By trade he was a machinist, and he made the cotton-carding machine used in Brownsville; after moving from place to place, in and around Washington county, Mr. Ashcroft proceeded to Ohio, and resided near the town of Crestline, until the death of his wife, when he returned to Washington, and for about ten years made his home with Mr. Rothwell (his son-in-law), after which he revisited Ohio, and there died at the age of ninety six years, and was buried. Mr. Ashcroft was a well-educated and enterprising man; politically he was a Whig originally, and then on the formation of the party became a Republican; in religion he was a prominent member of the M. E. Church, in which he was a local preacher. After his marriage, Samuel S. Rothwell made his home at what is now known as Coal Centre, in this county, until 1849, in which year he moved to the borough of California, where he now lives. His children are J. W. (a photographer, in Washington, Penn.), Mary E., Sidney, Sarah C., Andrew L. (who was a teacher in Coal Centre, but is now in West Brownsville), Isaac N. (an artist, in San Antonio, Tex.), Charles Sumner and E. J. LeMoynes, the last two named being deceased. Mr. Rothwell was originally a Whig, and afterward an Abolitionist; in 1854 he was a delegate to the first Republican convention held in Pittsburgh. He is a member of the M. E. Church, and in 1840 was licensed as a local preacher, in which capacity he still serves with encouraging success.

BENJAMIN F. GREENLEE, one of the prosperous agriculturists of West Bethlehem township, is a native of the same, born July 12, 1825, on the old homestead settled by his father. He is a son of Samuel Greenlee, who was born, about the year 1787, in Delaware, of German parentage.

Samuel Greenlee, father of Benjamin F., was born and reared in Maryland, his boyhood being passed in attending the schools of the neighborhood of his home, and helping on his father's farm. When yet a young man he moved with his parents to Fayette county, Penn., where he was further instructed in agricultural pursuits under the preceptorship of his father. He was married to Nancy Gantz, after which he removed to Washington county, buying here 120 acres of land, now owned and cultivated by his son, Benjamin F. This land, which was then a forest and thicket, has all been cleared, and is to-day one of the best farms in West Bethlehem township. To the union of Samuel and Nancy (Gantz) Greenlee were born children as follows: Elizabeth, George, Jacob, Lewis, John, James, Susanna, Mary, Margaret, Benjamin F., Daniel, Albert and Anna, six of whom are still enjoying the blessings of life, viz.: Lewis, a farmer, of East Bethlehem; Anna, now Mrs. Cooper, a widow, living in Ohio; John and James, residing in Morgan township, Greene county; Daniel and Benjamin F., both in West Bethlehem township.

Benjamin F. Greenlee received in his boyhood such education as was obtainable at the schools of those early days. He learned farming, which he has since followed on the homestead, where he still resides. In March, 1854, he married Rebecca Bigler, daughter of Michael Bigler, of German lineage, and their children are: Nancy, wife of James A. Gass, of Morgan township, Greene Co., Penn.; James, living at home with his father, married to Sadie Innes, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Johnson) Innes, old settlers of West Bethlehem; Henderson, a prominent business man of McKeesport, Penn., and Minnie, wife of William Woods, residing in Homestead, Penn. Mr. Greenlee built the residence in which he lives, making many improvements, and there prevails about the homelike place an air of thrift and enterprise. There are 140 acres of his farm, all fine land, upon which he raises various kinds of stock, besides cereals and root crops. Politically Mr. Greenlee is a solid Democrat, and one of the influential advisers of the party in his vicinity. He is respected and esteemed by all who enjoy his acquaintance.

ARNOLD LAWTON is the oldest living resident of Cross Creek township, and has the enviable and deserved reputation of being one of the most successful agriculturists of Washington county.

His father, John Lawton, was born in 1760, near Newport, R. I., of English parents. He remained on the home farm during his boyhood, and in early life was married to Hannah Manchester, also a native of Rhode Island. The young couple first settled on a farm in their native State, but in 1812 Mr. Lawton concluded to seek his fortune in the backwoods of Washington county, Penn. Being prudent, he did not endanger his family by bringing them with him on the first prospecting trip, but walked all the way from Portsmouth, R. I., to Washington county, viewing the land as he passed along. He finally decided to settle on a tract near West Middletown, in the fertile Cross Creek valley, and returned to Rhode Island for his family. In the spring of 1813 the journey to the new home in the wilderness was made with wagons drawn by oxen and one team of horses, and the party arrived safely at their destination after traveling some three months. To this pioneer couple the following children were born: Job T., Phoebe, Owen, Lucinda, Jessie Joanna, Arnold and Harvey.

Arnold Lawton was born April 9, 1804, near Portsmouth, R. I., and was ten years of age when brought by his parents to Washington county. On the last morning that Arnold spent in Portsmouth, his father bought a rosewood military fife, which had attracted the fancy of the eager lad, and the little instrument—purchased over seventy-eight years ago—is yet in his possession, seemingly uninjured by age. Another relic worthy of record is an old fashioned skillet, made of very highly-polished bell metal, and bearing the name of the manufacturer, also the date "1730." This article was in constant use by the family until 1887, when it was laid away as a relic, and the only evident signs of the many years of service is in the legs, which are worn short. Mr. Lawton has also in his possession a very handsome violin made by himself when a young man eighteen years of age. Since his father's family first settled in Washington county, Mr. Lawton has lived on his present farm in Cross Creek township, upon which he has made many improvements of a most substantial nature. In 1857 he erected a large, handsome and substantial barn, 60x80 feet, which was erected upon an original plan of Mr. Lawton's own, every part displaying the very best style of workmanship, and being executed under the direct supervision of the owner. When at last finished, this barn was universally conceded to be the finest structure of the kind within the limits of Washington county. It was pointed to with pride by the entire community, as an evidence of the mechanical skill and taste possessed by a leading citizen, but in the fall of 1887 it was burned with all its contents. This was a heavy blow to Mr. Lawton, who had taken so much pride and comfort in its erection.

In 1874 he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Andrews, who was born in 1842, in Belfast, Ireland, coming with her grandparents to America when but seven years of age. They first located in Steubenville, Ohio, but afterward settled in Patterson's Mills, this county, where they died. She then made her home with Mr. Lawton and his sister, who was then keeping house for him. After the death of this sister, Arnold Lawton felt the need of a companion, and Miss Andrews being in need of a home, the two (who had become very much attached to each other) decided to unite their lives. They have had four children, namely: Ida, Minnie, John, and one unnamed, all of whom died in infancy, and were buried in the family burying ground, excepting Ida, who was interred at West Middletown. At one time Arnold Lawton owned over 700 acres of fine land, but has disposed of all but 412 acres, which he keeps in an excellent state of cultivation; and he has given much attention to raising sheep, having had as many as 600 at one time. Politically he is a staunch member of the Democratic party. Now four-score and eight years of age, he is yet remarkably bright and energetic, although he has retired from active farm labor.

Cameron W. Lawton was born in 1874. He is an adopted son of Arnold Lawton, and evinces a strong inclination for the higher and more instructive class of literature.

JOHN A. FINLEY. The Finley family are numbered with the earliest pioneers of Washington county, and are of Scotch origin. John Finley was born in Scotland, whence he emigrated in an early day. Coming to America he first settled in Maryland, then moved to Pennsylvania, and took out a patent for 1,000 acres of land in Allegheny county. He was married in the State of Maryland to Margaret Rowland, who bore him the following children: William, John, Robert (a general in the militia), Jane (Mrs. Curry), Margaret (Mrs. Baldwin), Isabelle (Mrs. Cochran), Mary (Mrs. St. Clair), Susan (Mrs. Wilson), Levi, James and Sarah (Mrs. Neal), all of whom have passed away. The father of this family was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church, of which Dr. Marshall was then pastor; both parents died on the farm in Allegheny county.

Levi Finley, son of John and Margaret Finley, was born in 1798, on the home place in Allegheny county, Penn., and his youth was passed amid the scenes of pioneer life. He attended the subscription schools, and after graduating at Jefferson College, returned to the old place, remaining there until 1830. On January 31, 1822, he was married to Rachel Neal, youngest daughter of James and Rachel Neal, born October 19, 1795, seven miles above Pittsburgh, in the Monongahela Valley. When her parents settled on the Monongahela river, the surrounding country was inhabited by roving Indians, and even at the time of her birth it was necessary for the white settlers to protect their homes and families from the torch and scalping knife of the Redmen. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Levi Finley moved to Washington county, and commenced housekeeping in the same house in Finleyville in which she died, November 12, 1883, in the eighty-ninth year of her age. Hence, with the exception of a few years, her whole married and widowed life, extending over a period of sixty years, were passed in that same house. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church, where she listened to the preachings of Dr. Woods, Dr. Rolston and other good old divines that have all gone to their long homes many years since. The following children were born to Levi and Rachel (Neal) Finley: Margaret, Melissa (wife of H. Baldwin Wallace), Susan M. (wife of Rev. W. W. Laverty), John A., F. M., and Rachel N. (deceased wife of John S. Collins). In 1832 Mr. and Mrs. Finley moved to Greene county, Penn., where they resided two years on a farm at Rice's Landing, and he conducted a still-house. They then came to Union township, Washington county, and bought the Huston and Fawcett farms, where they remained eight years, selling a large quantity of coal. They finally bought the farm of 500 acres in Union township, adjoining Finleyville, and settled in Finleyville, then called "Row Galley," but nicknamed "Rogues' Alley." The name was then changed to Finleyville, and for thirteen years Mr. Finley managed a hotel in the old stone house which is yet standing. He was a Whig and Republican in politics, and was a member of the Mingo Presbyterian Church. He died June 21, 1861.

John A. Finley was born March 26, 1830, on the Huston farm in Union township, Washington Co., Penn. When a boy he came with his parents to Finleyville, where his youth was passed. In 1854 he was married to Miss Alice Campbell, who was born July 7, 1830, in Union township, this county, a granddaughter of John Campbell, a native of Ireland, who emigrated from Ireland to America and located near Finleyville, Washington Co., Penn.; he was married to Alice Huey, who bore him children as follows: Ed., Robert, George, John, Elizabeth, Mary, Eleanor, Sarah, Alice and Elizabeth, of whom none are now living. Robert Campbell, father of Mrs. Finley, was born, in 1790, on the Swagler farm in Washington county. He married Mary, daughter of John Hindman, and their children were Alice (1), John, Ed., William, Sarah, Mary J., Robert, and Alice (2) (Mrs. Finley). Of this family Alice (1) and John are deceased; Ed. was married to Miss E. Moore, and in 1860 was elected prothonotary of Allegheny county. He afterward moved to Fairfield, Iowa, where he owns 1,000 acres of land, and has been appointed United States marshal.

John A. and Alice (Campbell) Finley began wedded life on the farm in Union township, which they yet occupy. Four children have blessed their union, viz.: Mary (wife of William McChain; has four children: Ed., William, James and Mary), Levi Myra (deceased June 15, 1890, in his twenty-ninth year), Alice (wife of R. C. McChain, of Union township; has three children: Louis, Bessie and Bernice), and Susan M. Mr. Finley is a member of the Republican party. The home farm contains 163 acres, from which he has sold a large amount of coal.

WILLIAM BERRY, the subject of this sketch, was born February 23, 1837, in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a son of John and Jane (Eagleton) Berry, formerly residents of Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn. His mother died in January, 1844, and was interred in the Presbyterian cemetery near Venice. His father died in June, 1881, and was interred in the United Presbyterian cemetery at Pigeon Creek. William Berry had two sisters and four brothers: Jane, married to Ebenezer Carson, residing in Paxton, Ford Co., Ill.; Rachel, married to Robert Herron, residing in North Strabane township, this county; John M., residing in North Strabane township, this county; David W., who fell mortally wounded in the battle of Cold Harbor, June 2, 1864, and was interred in the United Presbyterian cemetery at Pigeon Creek; Carson M., residing in South Strabane township, this county; Joseph B., died in November, 1881, and was interred in the United Presbyterian cemetery at Pigeon Creek.

William Berry spent his youthful days on his father's farm in Cecil township, receiving a common school education at the Plum Run school in Chartiers township. When fifteen years of age he removed with his father to North Strabane township, where he resided until May 29, 1862, when he married Jane, daughter of William and Mary (Boyd) Barr, of Somerset township, this county; she died August 26, 1865, and was interred in the United Presbyterian cemetery at Pigeon Creek. On May 22, 1867, Mr. Berry married Martha Stewart, daughter of Robert and Margaret (Barr) Pattison, of White township, Indiana Co., Penn., and to them were born five children: Margaret J., David W., Robert P., Mary E. and Martha P., whose lives have all been spared by a kind Providence. William Berry has always been a liberal friend of education, giving his children the advantage of a college course. He connected, when young, with the United Presbyterian branch of the Church, of which he still remains a member. His political sentiments have always been Republican. After marriage he settled on a farm near Clokeyville, where he has since resided, making a specialty of breeding and caring for Black-Top Morino sheep, in which he has been very successful, having a large flock which he has a right to be proud of.

JOHAN POLLOCK. This gentleman has been a prominent figure in the political, business and religious circles of Washington county. His grandfather, John Pollock, was born near Gettysburg, Penn., and when a young man came to Washington county, locating on 133 acres of land in Union township, where his three children—James, Samuel and Mary—were reared.

James Pollock, son of John, was born about 1795, near Gettysburg, and came with his parents to Washington county. At an early day he evinced the unusual mechanical ability which is so characteristic of the entire family. He made all sorts of articles from wood or iron, and finally learned the cabinet maker's trade, which he carried on, and in later life he followed farming. When yet a young man he was married to Mary, daughter of William Patten, and the following children were born to them: Samuel, John, Martha (wife of Dr. J. B. Williams, of East End, Pittsburgh), Esther, William, Mary, James, Sarah, and David (who was a soldier in the Union army). Of these William, Mary and James are deceased. The father was a Whig, and a member of the Mingo Presbyterian Church. He died in 1844.

John Pollock, son of James and Mary (Patten) Pollock, was born December 18, 1818, on the old place in Union township, Washington county. On January 1, 1851, he was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of Isaac Van Voorhis, of Carroll township, Washington county. The young people then moved to Monongahela, where he was engaged in the lumber business for six years, after which they returned to their present farm of ninety-six acres in Union township, Washington county. To them were born children as follows: Mary, Coralinn, Sarah B., James K., Isaac V., William J., and one that died in infancy. Of these the only two living are Isaac V. and William J. The mother died July 9, 1884, since which time Mr. Pollock has resigned the management of the place to his two sons. He has always voted the Republican ticket, and has served in various township offices. In religious faith he is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Mingo, and has filled the office of trustee of same.

Isaac V. Pollock was born on the home place in Union township in 1860. He graduated at Duff's Commercial College, Pittsburgh, Penn. In 1888 he was married to Mary E., daughter of William B. Henry (deceased), an insurance agent of Greenville, Penn., and they have had one daughter, Mary. W. J. Pollock was born October 13, 1868, and is living on the old homestead in Union township with his father and brother.

JAMES P. CHAMBERS is one of the most prominent of the many successful farmers of Donegal township. The great-grandfather Chambers came from County Derry, Ireland, in 1790, and settled in Lancaster county, Penn. His wife died during the voyage, and was buried at sea. One of his sons, James Hamilton Chambers, who had settled in Virginia some time before, was the first representative of the family to land on American soil. Among the children of James Hamilton Chambers we find recorded Joseph H., a successful shoe merchant, who, in later years, turned his attention to farming, having purchased the home farm from the other heirs in Marshall county, W. Va. He was united in marriage with Rebecca Bell, a lady of American birth, and of the children born to this union our subject is the second in order of birth.

James P. Chambers was born September 30, 1825, in Marshall county, W. Va. He worked on his father's farm until the age of nineteen, and then began the carpentry business. On December 25, 1849, Mr. Chambers married Mary Porter, then purchased a valuable farm of 190 acres, one mile east of West Alexander, on which he has erected a fine dwelling and a commodious barn. To his marriage with Miss Porter seven children were born: Samantha J., the oldest daughter, became, at the age of fifteen years, a successful school teacher in the district school, and continued teaching for four years, or to the date of her marriage with William G. Lewis, October 27, 1870, he being a farmer of Ohio county, W. Va. Margaret N., second in order of birth, was also a noted instructor in music, and as a successful school teacher; she began her six years of successful teaching at the age of eighteen, and married John W. Murray, real estate agent of Washington, Penn., October 11, 1875. William P. died in infancy. Mary R. died at the age of sixteen years. Laura Bell, noted for her correct instructions and powerful voice in music, married Samuel Bushfield October 2, 1879 (Mr. Bushfield is a skilled and competent workman at the carpentry business in West Alexander). James A., sixth in order of birth, residing here, has become a successful grower of fine stock. Ada M. resides with her parents.

The great grandfather Porter was Scotch Irish, and came from Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1791, and settled in the East. One of the sons, William, came from the East and took up 225 acres of land in West Finley township, upon which he resided until his death June 4, 1818. He and his devoted wife were successful in their many efforts, although their crops were often destroyed by the Redmen, and they had often to flee to the blockhouse for safety, leaving all their possessions at the mercy of the Indians. They had seven children. Thomas, the eldest son, was our subject's father. Mr. Porter married Margaret Neal, of pure Scotch descent, who devoted her noble life to her husband and family. They resided at Pittsburgh, Penn., for a number of years, where he was foreman in a boiler foundry. As that occupation was not suited to his constitution, he left the city, came to the farm, purchased his brothers' and sisters' interests in the old homestead, and followed blacksmithing and farming. Of the seven children that blessed their union, our subject was fourth in order of birth, having been born April 14, 1825. Thomas Porter resided upon the farm until his death, March 22, 1819. Mary P., our subject, was noted as a school teacher, and was a devout and Christian woman, always the idol of her many Christian admirers.

JOSEPH BELL traces his ancestry to one George Bell, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, who was there married and reared a large family. In the latter part of the last century, George Bell, and a neighbor, Mr. McDonald, came with their families to Allegheny county, Penn. They had previously intended to locate on the present site of Pittsburgh, but being dissatisfied with the country in that vicinity came down the Monongahela river until they arrived at the first large branch, Chartiers creek, which they followed to Mansfield. The two families then separated, the McDonalds moving west and the Bells ascending the Chartiers. The latter pioneers finally located on a large tract in the vicinity of Canonsburg, this county, where George Bell passed his life in forming the foundation of a home for his descendants. He was one of the first members of the Seceder Church in Washington county.

Joseph Bell, a son of this hardy pioneer, was born in 1767, in eastern Pennsylvania, and passed his youth on the home place. In early life he was united in matrimony with Elizabeth Sharp, and the young couple soon afterward moved to Beaver county, where they purchased a farm, and reared the following children: John, Mary, Robert, James, Keziah and Joseph. The father was a Whig in politics, and in religion was formerly an active member of the Seceder Church, afterward uniting with the Associate Reformed. He passed the last years of his life at the home of his son in Columbiana county, Ohio.

Robert Bell, father of subject, was born May 5, 1801, in Beaver county, Penn., and remained on the home place during his boyhood. In early life he was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of James Tornes, and she bore him five children: James, Robert, Eliza, Jane and Joseph. Mr. Bell when a young man learned the cooper's trade, which he carried on in connection with farming. He was very well educated for those days, having had the advantage of an academic training, and was an energetic and progressive citizen. In politics he was originally a Whig, afterward uniting with the Republican party. He was a member and trustee of the U. P. Church. On September 26, 1870, Mr. Bell was accidentally killed.

Joseph Bell, the subject proper of this memoir, was born January 2, 1835, in Beaver county, Penn., and received his elementary instruction in the common schools, afterward attending the academy at Murdocksville and Paris, Penn. He commenced teaching at the age of seventeen years, a profession he followed with eminent success until he was thirty five years of age. In 1870 he began the practice of dentistry in Florence, this county, continuing in that profession there fifteen years; then opened an office in Pittsburgh, where he practices. After a time he moved to Burgettstown, this county, and here has his residence. On January 8, 1859, he was united in marriage with Agnes, daughter of Adam Reed, of Beaver county, Penn., who bore him two children: Annie and William. Mrs. Bell died January 10, 1870, and on March 14, 1871, Mr. Bell married Mary, daughter of Martin Tucker. They have had two children: Martin F. (deceased) and Mary A. Our subject has attained eminence in his chosen calling, and enjoys a large and lucrative clientage, his success being due entirely to his ability as a dentist and courtesy as a gentleman. He is a member of the U. P. Church, and has been trustee of his church several years. Politically he is an active Republican.

JAMES ACKELSON enjoys the distinction of being one of the oldest living representatives of the early settlers in Hanover township, having resided upon the farm where he is now living for more than four score years.

Samuel Ackelson, his father, was born about the year 1760, in County Down, Ireland, where he received a common-school education, and there learned the trade of weaver. In 1792 he married Margaret Donaldson, also a native of Ireland, born December 15, 1772, in County Down. The young couple sailed for America soon after their marriage, landing in New York at the close of a seventeen-weeks voyage. Their first permanent location was made near Canon-burg, Washington Co., Penn., where he purchased a small farm and followed the weaver's trade. He resided in Robinson township several years, and coming to Hanover township in 1814, located on the home farm where he died in 1832, followed by his wife in 1849. The following children were born to them: Mary (wife of Joseph Bailey, Robinson township), born November 12, 1793; Thomas (a farmer, living near Washington borough), born August 10, 1796; Margaret (Mrs. Samuel Lindsey, of Pittsburgh), born August 26, 1799; James, sketch of whom follows, and Samuel, born June 12, 1814. Of this family James is the only living member.

James Ackelson was born October 3, 1807, in Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., and during his boyhood attended the old log school house, furnished with slab seats, puncheon floors, and lighted by means of greased paper windows. In 1832 he was married to Mary Donaldson, who was born in 1813, a daughter of Jacob Donaldson, a resident of Hopewell township. Three children were born to this marriage, namely: Samuel (deceased), Thomas (living on the home farm) and Margaret (wife of William Frazier, of Frankfort, Beaver Co., Penn.). The mother died in 1863, and was laid to rest in the Robinson Church cemetery. On March 18, 1869, Mr. Ackelson made a second choice in the person of Rachel, daughter of Hugh and Rachel (Reed) Wilson, of Allegheny county, Penn. Mr. Ackelson has always been a prosperous farmer, and of late years has retired from active business, his son managing the place. Before the war he was a Democrat, but since then he has been an earnest advocate of the principles embodied in the Republican party. He is a vigorous man for one of his age. Mr. and Mrs. Ackelson are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Frankfort.

James Ackelson

JOHAN A. GAULT, fruit grower and agriculturist, is a grandson of David Gault, who was born of Scotch-Irish parents, and resided in Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn. He learned and followed the tanner's trade, and when a young man was married to Jane Russell, by whom he had the following children: Alexander, John, Mary, Ibbie, Margaret, William, David, Betsey, Sarah and Andrew Russell.

Andrew Russell Gault, father of John A., was born about the year 1800, in Canonsburg, Washington Co., Penn., where he learned the tanner's trade. After attaining his majority he removed to Jefferson township, Allegheny county, where for twenty-five years he followed the distilling business, also in Mifflin township, same county. He then moved to the adjoining township of Elizabeth, where he resided fifteen years, finally returning to Washington county. About the age of forty he was married to Miss Mary Ann Mowry, daughter of John Mowry, a prominent citizen of Allegheny county. Their children were: Christina J., John A., William (1) and William (2) (both of whom died in infancy), Sarah E. and Andrew R. M. Mr. Gault was possessed of decided opinions, but was unassuming in manner. Politically he voted with the Republican party, and in religion was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Mingo. He died in 1879, his wife in 1889.

John A. Gault was born August 23, 1846, in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his boyhood days in Elizabeth township, Allegheny county. He attended the common schools, and, afterward, Duff's Business College, Pittsburgh, Penn. On November 10, 1875, he was united in marriage with Mary Jane, daughter of William Pease, a prominent farmer of North Strabane township, Washington county. Mr. and Mrs. Gault began their married life on the farm which they now occupy in Union township, this county, and seven children complete their family circle, as follows: Mary E., Donald L., Emma C., Olive E., Nora V., Jennie M. and John A. The home place contains 108 acres of very fine land, a portion of which is used exclusively for the raising of fruit. Mr. Gault is a Democrat in politics, and has been elected to various offices of trust in his township. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

THE BENTLEY BROTHERS. These well known citizens and prosperous agriculturists of Union township are of English descent. During the Colonial period one George Bentley was drafted into the British service, and came to America as a member of the royal troops. After the war he located permanently in Chester county, Penn., where he was married to Jane Carson, a native of Ireland. Their son Joseph was born in Chester county, Penn., and for some time resided in Shireoaks, Washington Co., Penn. He was married to Mercy, daughter of Samuel Dailey, and then settled on a part of the Nathan Dailey tract. He afterward bought the Logan tract, and there built the stone house and distillery which is yet standing, the latter having been in operation until 1862. Children were born to these pioneers as follows: Benjamin, Levi, Eli, Jesse, Absalom, George, Mary (wife of Thomas Wilson) and Wilson, all of whom are now deceased.

Jesse Bentley, son of Joseph and Mercy Bentley, was born in 1797, in the old stone house at Shireoaks, Washington Co., Penn. In 1820 he was married to a cousin, Mercy Dailey, and moved to Wooster, Wayne Co., Ohio, where he followed the business of millwright. He remained in that place eight years, where four children were born to him, namely: Angeline, Caroline, Carrodan and David. The family then returned to the old home at Shireoaks, Washington Co., Penn., locating on the Taylor farm, where Benjamin, the fifth child, was born. The father followed the coal business here between the years 1828 and 1840. He died in 1842, and the family continued to reside on the farm until 1855, when they moved to Parkersburg, W. Va., and years later went to Sadorus, Champaign Co., Ill. The mother died in 1869, and in 1879 David and Benjamin returned to Pennsylvania, and took charge of the estate left by their uncle, George Bentley. They remained until June, 1892, when they sold the place for $350 per acre to a manufacturing company, since which time they have retired from active life. Samuel and Joseph are yet living in Illinois. David Bentley was born November 3, 1826 and Benjamin was born August 25, 1829. Both are members of the Republican party.

MRS. MARY D. BLAYNEY. The earliest representatives of the Blayney family in the United States, of whom there is any record, were Charles Blayney and his parents, who came from Ireland to America when Charles was seven years of age. Soon after landing they settled in what is now Ohio county, W. Va., and here the parents carried on farming during the remainder of their lives, and here Charles also passed the rest of his days. He acquired his education at the subscription schools of the period. He married Ann Potter, who bore him children as follows: William, Vincent M. and Josiah. The mother of these dying, Mr. Blayney for his second wife married Nancy Faris, and the children born to this union were John, Elizabeth (wife of William Reed), Susanna (wife of John Valentine), Charles, Martha (wife of Rev. George McDonald), James, David, Adam, Rev. Henry and Rev. J. McCluskey. The father of this family died June 11, 1860, the mother November 10, 1880.

Vincent M. Blayney, the second son of Charles and Ann (Potter) Blayney, was born in Ohio county, W. Va., January 12, 1815, and received a liberal education at the schools of his locality. On August 27, 1841, he was married to Mary D., daughter of Samuel Donahey, of Buffalo township. Joseph Donahey, father of Samuel, was a native of Ireland, whence he emigrated to this country with his wife Mary Alexander, and two children, becoming one of the earliest settlers of Washington county, Penn. His children were William and Jane, born in Ireland; and Samuel, Joseph, Mary and Margaret born here. The father of this family was a member and for years an elder of the Presbyterian Church at Upper Buffalo; in politics he was an Old-line Whig, and he was a successful and enterprising citizen. Samuel Donahey was born in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., about 1786, where he was reared to farm life, receiving his education at the schools of the neighborhood. In his early manhood he was married to Anna, daughter of William Reed, and to this union were born the following children: Joseph, William, Margaret (wife of Rev. J. M. Smith), Mary D. (Mrs. Vincent M. Blayney), Jane (wife of Rev. J. Marshall) and Anna (wife of Rev. J. M. Shields). Samuel Donahey was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church at Upper Buffalo, and at the time of his death, December 25, 1810, was an elder in the same. Politically he was originally a Whig, and afterward, on the formation of the party, a staunch Republican.

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent M. Blayney, after a residence of six years in Ohio county, W. Va., settled on the farm in Buffalo township (where the family continue to reside). Mr. Blayney had by his first marriage one child, John S., and by his second, five children: Anna J. (wife of Dr. D. S. Eagleson), Rev. Charles P., Samuel D. (ruling elder in the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church), William V. and Joseph C. Mr. Blayney was called from earth March 18, 1887. He was a warm supporter of the Presbyterian Church, and a devout member; politically he was a staunch Republican, and at various times held offices of trust in his township. His life vocation was general farming and stock raising, at which he made a well merited success through assiduous industry and perseverance. A progressive and loyal citizen, he gave liberally of his means to all public enterprises.

JOHAN BAILEY, one of the oldest living residents of Washington county, was born August 11, 1817, in Robinson township. He is a grandson of Alexander Bailey, who was born in Scotland, removed to Ireland when a small boy, and was there married to Jane Brown, a native of that country. Eight children were born to this union, viz.: Matthew and William, both born in Ireland, the former June 6, 1749, the latter May 2, 1752; Anna, born November 30, 1753; Mary, born July 14, 1755; Jane, born March 22, 1858; Alexander, born December 29, 1761; James, born September 27, 1763; and John, born September 24, 1765, all of whom were born in America. In an early day the parents, with their two eldest children, left their native shore, and coming to America first located in Maryland. In 1785 they moved to Pennsylvania and, purchasing 190 acres of land in Washington county, there made a permanent home. The wife of Alexander Bailey survived him many years, and died on the old homestead at the age of one hundred and seven years, when the home farm was bequeathed to John, her youngest son.

John Bailey was born in Maryland, and in 1799 was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Gailey, who bore him the following children: Jane (residing in Robinson township), born April 27, 1800; Matthew, born May 7, 1802 (deceased); Nancy (living in Indiana county, Penn.), born July 6, 1804; Alexander, born October 31, 1806 (deceased); Margaret, born April 7, 1809 (deceased); James, born October 7, 1811 (deceased); Mary (widow of S. Ewing, of this county), born February 6, 1814; John (subject of this sketch); Anna, born November 7, 1819; and William, born May 13, 1823. Mr. Bailey cast his first vote for George Washington; he afterward became an active worker in the Democratic party, and gave liberally to all public improvements, being especially interested in religious and educational enterprises. He died in 1851, having been preceded by his wife in 1845. Both were members of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church.

John Bailey (whose name opens this sketch) received his early education in the schools of Robinson township. In June, 1869, he was united in marriage with Margaret Stewart, who was born June 27, 1833, daughter of John and Harriet (White) Stewart, both of whom were natives of Washington county; they were the parents of three children: Margaret, Charles and David, of whom Margaret, the eldest, is the only one now living. Mr. Stewart died when Margaret was very young, and his wife (who was a member of the Presbyterian Church) died in 1887. Two children have come to the union of John and Margaret (Stewart) Bailey, viz.: Cora L., born March 8, 1870; and Harriet B., born October 25, 1874. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey are active members of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church, and he not only favors, but emphasizes his approval by giving financial assistance to all worthy enterprises of the neighborhood; he is an active worker in the Democratic party. His farm contains ninety-five acres of the old homestead, which is in an excellent state of cultivation. A brother, William, and sister, Anna, both of whom are unmarried, are also living on ninety-five acres of the old farm.

William Bailey (an uncle of subject), two Shearer boys, two McCandlasses and one McNely were captured by the Indians while working in the harvest field, William being the only one of the party who escaped alive.

WILLIAM DONLEY. The first of the Donley family to come to Washington county was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. He was a teamster on the National pike, and his occupation taking him frequently through the county he had ample opportunity to become acquainted with its many attractions. The promising appearance presented to him decided him in making it his future home, and accordingly he made a settlement. His wife, Mary, was of German parentage.

William Donley, a son of this honored pioneer couple, spent all his life in Washington county, of which he was a native. In his early manhood he had learned the trade of brick maker, which was his life vocation. His first brickyards were situated on what is now East Wheeling street, in Washington borough, and the entire hillside from where is now the home of Samuel B. Donley to the residence of Judge McIlvaine, and from Wheeling street to Beau street, was cut down a foot deep or more in order to furnish clay for the manufacture, in Donley's yard, of bricks, of which many of the prominent buildings of Washington are constructed. William Donley married Miss Mary Claffey, and children as follows were born to them: William, now a resident of Virginia; Thomas and Robert (both deceased); Samuel B., George and Charles, all residing in Washington, Penn.; Mary, wife of Luther Miller, of Washington; Margaret (deceased) and Ellen, wife of S. B. Sumney. The father died at the age of fifty-five years, the mother in 1880, aged sixty-five.

Samuel B. Donley was born in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., December 1, 1845, and his education was received at the common schools of the borough. Early in life he went to work in his father's brickyard, and for twenty years he has been in the business. His present yard is situated in the southern extremity of the borough limits, and gives employment to from fifteen to twenty hands, the production averaging 12,500,000 brick per annum.

On February 28, 1869, Mr. Donley was united in marriage with Miss Eliza McQuay, of Canton township, a descendant of one of the early settlers of that part of the county, and to this union have been born five children, to wit: William, married, and living in Washington, Penn.; and Frank, David, Mary and Loretta, all yet under the parental roof. The Donley residence is situated on East Wheeling street, which has recently been built up and improved till it is now one of the most pleasant and attractive thoroughfares in the borough, and on which for several years Mr. Donley's family were the only residents. In politics our subject is a Democrat, and in church connections a Presbyterian.

LOUIS KINDER (deceased) was a son of Valentine Kinder, and a brother of George Kinder. His great-grandfather, George Kinder, resided on Plum Brush, and followed the Ohio and Mississippi rivers as a trader and boatman. For a time he was successful in business, but, being overtaken by financial trouble, a few years later went to New Orleans and never returned. His son George was born in East Bethlehem township, this county, and lived in that vicinity until after his marriage, when he was accidentally killed in a carding-mill which he owned and operated. The maternal grandfather of our subject, Christian Boone, was born in Greene county, Penn. He had no educational opportunities, and followed farming and carpentry, but eventually became a successful business man.

Valentine Kinder, father of subject, was born in 1805, in East Bethlehem township. He received a limited education in the common schools, and was a good penman. When a young man he went to Galena, Ill., upon a mining expedition, thence proceeding to St. Louis he raised a crop of corn, and returning home, taught school for a time. He then married Miss Julia Boone, at which time his entire worldly property amounted to $35. He located just below the present home of his son, George, and remained there two years. He then removed to West Mill. Six years later he bought the home of his son Louis, where he lived a number of years, and thence removed to the old Nicholls farm near Hillsborough. At the time of his death, which occurred June 12, 1890, he left $10,000 for distribution, having previously divided $50,000 among his children.

Louis Kinder was born October 21, 1834, on Pigeon creek, West Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. When a young child his parents moved to the old home farm, where he was reared, and resided with his family. Although his school advantages were comparatively limited, Louis Kinder became a good scholar and an earnest reader, and one of the best informed men in his community. On December 10, 1856, he was married to Nancy Roberts, a daughter of J. D. and Elizabeth Roberts, and soon after his marriage he began business for himself upon the home farm.

J. D. Roberts, the father of Mrs. Louis Kinder, was born in 1802 upon the old farm in West Bethlehem township, and in early life followed the carpenter's trade, from which he saved enough to purchase his farm, where he spent the remainder of his life, accumulating a good property. In 1827 he married Elizabeth Hamilton, daughter of Alexander and Catherine Hamilton, and they had the following named family of children: Sarah, Leonard, Henrietta, Catherine, John, Wesley, Elizabeth, James, Antoinette and Nancy. Mr. Roberts and family were members of the Methodist Church. He died on the farm on January 10, 1877, and his wife at Hillsborough on January 10, 1889.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Kinder had the following children born to them: Elizabeth Jane (deceased), Wilber Leonard, Curtin, Iona, Anna, Valentine and Frank. Mr. Kinder was a Republican, and took much interest in the workings of his party. He was a highly-esteemed citizen and neighbor, and a successful business man. He was in the United States service about nine months, enlisting in the Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry in March, 1864. In religion he was a Lutheran, while most of his family were members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Kinder died October 6, 1889, deeply mourned by his friends and neighbors. He left to his family an excellent farm of 130 acres.

JOHAN W. PRY, one of the leading merchants of Burgettstown, was born May 9, 1846, in Cross Creek township. His father, Abraham Pry, was born November 10, 1813, in Hampshire county, W. Va., and died when the son was but four years of age. The child was left to struggle through the perplexities of boyhood unaided, but by dint of perseverance and energy he secured an education, and when about twenty-two years of age came to Washington county, Penn., settling in Cross Creek township. In 1840 he was there married to Rachel, daughter of David McClurg, of same township, and the young people settled on the farm where they are yet living. The following children have been born to their union: David M., Catherine J. (deceased), John W., William H. and Joseph M. (twins, the latter of whom is deceased), Abraham, Cynthia J. (deceased), Anna M. (deceased), Ambrose (living in Iowa) and Francis H. (deceased). The father of this family was originally a Democrat, then a Whig, and finally united with the Republican party, whose principles he now supports. He attends the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, contributing liberally to its maintenance.

John W. Pry, second son of Abraham and Rachel (McClurg) Pry, passed his youth on the home farm, receiving a common-school education. In 1864 he enlisted in Company H, Twenty-first Pennsylvania Cavalry, being sent to the army of the Potomac in the vicinity of Richmond, Va., where he took part in the closing scenes of the war. In August, 1865, he was mustered out of the service and returned home, afterward remaining with his parents until twenty-three years of age. He then moved on a farm in Cross Creek township, where he lived four years, and finally opened a general merchandise store in Burgettstown, where he has since been employed. On September 26, 1867, he was married to Mary E., daughter of John C. Rea, of Cross Creek township, this county. Mrs. Pry died January 5, 1887, and is buried in the family cemetery at Cross Creek. She left two children: Charles Lyle and Rachel C. Mr. Pry is a successful and energetic business man, and in politics is an active member of the Republican party.

JOSEPH E. JACKSON is probably the oldest native born citizen of Hanover township whose life has been wholly spent in the township, and is the oldest living representative of the oldest family in the township. The family were numbered among the first of those heroic men and women, who, leaving childhood's home and early friends, braved the innumerable perils to establish civilization in the unbroken wilderness. When we read the record of these early martyrs we may well exclaim with the poet: Whom do we call our heroes, to whom our praises sing? The pampered child of fortune, the titled lord or king? They live by others' labor; take all and nothing give. The noblest types of manhood are those who work to live.

In 1772, two brothers, Joseph and Philip Jackson, came from their eastern home in search of Government land, and crossing the mountains, pushed on till they stood on the western shore of the Monongahela river, within the limits of what is now Washington county. They were finally attracted by the heavy timber and thick shrubbery indicative of fertile soil, and pausing on the boundaries of Hanover township, proceeded to mark out an extensive claim with their tomahawks. Their only weapons were two trusty flint-locks, with which to defend themselves against the prowling beasts of the forest or a more wily human foe. Traces of Indians were plentiful, and with the utmost caution did the young men move from tree to tree, marking off their claim, and ever listening for the stealthy footfall of moccasined feet. They succeeded in thus taking up an immense tract of land, but, desiring to form a colony, returned to their homes before making any improvements. By offering every possible inducement they persuaded a number to return with them and seek a fortune in the "far West." Any article of clothing was accepted in lieu of payment for land, some giving a hat, or shirt, or any article most easily spared. When the colony was at length fully organized, they bid a last farewell to friends and neighbors, and with necessary supplies began the toilsome journey over the mountains, finally arriving safely at their destination. A rough shelter of poles and leaves was immediately erected, which was soon supplanted by log cabins, and religious services were then held regularly. In the absence of any minister, prayer-meetings were held, and a church being organized the two Jackson brothers were appointed as the first elders, both of whom contributed liberally to its support. It is impossible to exaggerate the intrepid spirit and untiring energy of these men, who gave their lives that future generations might enjoy the blessings of a prosperous home. The following children were born to Joseph Jackson: Thomas (who moved to Belmont county, Ohio, locating on a farm which is now the site of Centreville), Edward, Fanny (wife of Robert Scott), Rosanna (Mrs. Jonathan Potts), and Deborah (married to Joseph Crawford).

Edward Jackson was reared among the privations of frontier life, receiving a very limited education, and from early youth assisting in clearing the land. He was married to Rebecca Jackson, a native of Maryland. She was a daughter of William Jackson, who was no relation of Edward, but came to Hanover township in an early day. To the union of Edward and Rebecca Jackson sixteen children were born, of whom the following attained an adult age: Elizabeth (Mrs. John Mayhew, Pugh, W. Va.), Mary (wife of David Fulton, Hanover township), Lydia (Mrs. John McCullough, of Florence), William (of Hanover township), Edward, George, Thomas, Andrew, David, Simeon and Rebecca. Of these, Joseph E. and Andrew are yet living. The father was originally a Whig, but during Jackson's administration joined the Democratic party. In church relation he was a zealous member of the M. E. Church, although reared in the Presbyterian faith. He died in 1848, having been preceded to the grave by his wife about five months. They are buried in the cemetery at Florence.

Joseph E. Jackson (the subject proper of this sketch) was born July 31, 1807, on the old Jackson homestead in Hanover township. He grew to manhood on his father's farm, and for a short time in the winter season attended the rate schools of the vicinity. The children were usually set to work on the farm at an early age, and Joseph was no exception to that rule. In 1832 he was married to Mary Cunningham, who was born in 1802, a daughter of Francis Cunningham, who was a native of Maryland and an early settler of Hanover township. After his marriage Joseph Jackson located in Hanover township, along the headwaters of King's creek, where he erected a very substantial and commodious dwelling, also making numerous other improvements. Being overtaken by a disastrous fire, this residence was entirely consumed with all the contents. After the accident he removed to an adjoining farm, which he owned and has ever since resided there. Mr. Jackson began life with no capital, and has always been a leading farmer, now owning over six hundred acres of good land. He is yet able to do chores about the house and light farm work, in which he delights to be employed. Politically he has always supported the Democratic party, and in religion for over fifty years has been a member of the M. E. Church. Mrs. Jackson passed away in 1868, leaving the following children: James (a farmer of Jefferson township), Edward (a farmer of Hanover township), Margaret (Mrs. John Anderson, of Jefferson township) and Rebecca (wife of Johnson Hitchcock, of Harrison county, Ohio).

SAMUEL B. BARNARD is a prosperous agriculturist of unusual culture and brilliant business faculties, and is one of the most highly respected citizens of West Bethlehem township. The Barnard family is of Scotch origin, the early ancestors having emigrated from Scotland to America, where they settled in Washington county, Penn.

Ignatius Barnard, a son of these pioneers, and grandfather of subject, was born October 25, 1762, on the home farm in West Bethlehem township, this county. In early life he married Elizabeth Lewis, of Virginia, who bore him children as follows: Mary (Mrs. William Buckingham), James (who married Julia Bricker), Samuel (mentioned below), Ignatius (who died in infancy), Permelia (Mrs. Joseph Wise), Elizabeth (Mrs. Joseph Ross), Nathan (who married Hannah Zollars), and Catharine (unmarried).

Samuel Barnard, father of subject, was born December 1, 1796, in West Bethlehem township, and after receiving a limited education began life on the old homestead, which he afterward inherited. He was a prominent farmer and stock raiser, and very successful in his chosen vocation. On April 6, 1826, he married Eleanor Barnes, who bore him five children: John (who died in infancy), Demas (mentioned presently), Samuel B. and Elizabeth (Mrs. George Gayman) (twins), and Eleanor (Mrs. Isaac Kinder) (deceased). Of these children, Demas volunteered at Grafton, Va., and entered the Washington Cavalry, under Capt. A. J. Greentield. He was wounded in Virginia, and when told that his hours were numbered he said to his captain: "They say I must die. I would like to live a while longer to kill more traitors." He died mourned by every comrade, February 12, 1863, and was buried in the Lutheran cemetery, near his home. Mrs. Barnard died February 23, 1839, and on March 12, 1843, Samuel Barnard was united in marriage with Elizabeth Drake, who passed away August 10, 1860, and January 26, 1881, Mr. Barnard followed her to the grave.

Samuel B. Barnard was born August 31, 1835, on the home farm, where he assisted his father in the management of his estate until the Civil war began. The farmer was then quickly transformed into a Union soldier, enlisting October 14, 1862, in Company E, of the "Ringgold Battalion." He was a gallant and efficient defender of the flag, taking part in many important engagements, and was eventually transferred to Company F, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry. On July 19, 1865, he received an honorable discharge. At the close of the war he returned to the home farm, which he has since conducted very successfully. On June 12, 1881, Mr. Barnard married Mary L. White, whose parents were early residents of Washington county, Penn. Of this union were born five children, viz.: Twin daughters, born June 15, 1885 (deceased); Samuel W., born June 20, 1886; Mary Eleanor, born February 3, 1888, and Charles L., born October 3, 1890 (deceased). The home farm contains 145 acres of valuable land, situated in the southern part of West Bethlehem township. In politics Mr. Barnard is a Republican, and has filled various offices of trust satisfactorily to all concerned. He is honored as a man and as a citizen, and, having achieved prosperity by honest effort, fully merits the reward he has won.

JOHN McCLAY, one of the oldest living representatives of his family in America, was born in 1809, in Hopewell township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Samuel McClay, who was born in Ireland, and who, at the tender age of ten years, resolved to seek his fortune in the New World.

Embarking on a sailing vessel, Samuel commenced his voyage to America, and after a stormy passage of many weeks landed at New York; thence proceeded to Pennsylvania, where he worked out his passage, as was the custom of the time. (The transportation companies would bind out their passengers until their wages had paid the expenses of the passage across the ocean.) When the youth had paid the debt in the manner we have described, he commenced life for himself, and settling in Chester county, in the Keystone State, began business upon the economical principles which have become the peculiar characteristics of his descendants. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Sarah McClellan, a resident of Chester county, whose family had at an early day come from Ireland to the shores of America. Mr. and Mrs. McClay remained in Chester county until they had accumulated a little wealth, and then removed to Washington county, where they purchased a small tract of land (110 acres), which they at once engaged in clearing and improving. Their children managed this part of the work, as the health of the father began to fail, and he had to occupy himself in the less arduous business of teaming and stock trading. The children of this pioneer family were Margaret (Mrs. Robert Dinsmore), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Morrow), John, David, Robert, William and Sarah Jane. They were all members of the Covenanters Church, and so thoroughly were they imbued with the principles of their faith, that the impress of their zeal is still plainly seen in their descendants, who are nearly all ardent and conscientious workers in the church of their forefathers. Politically Mr. McClay was an enthusiastic Whig, and was very active in the interests of his party. After a useful life he passed from earth in the year 1838, followed by his wife in 1842. He left his family a comfortable inheritance. The influence of such men never dies, although they may spend but few years among us.

John McClay, the subject of this memoir, spent his earlier years in active work upon the home farm, receiving but a limited education, at the rate schools of the vicinity, the only text-books used being the "United States Speller," the "Western Calculator" and the Bible. The school-house was a log building, and the huge fireplace which extended across one end of the room was filled with logs which the older pupils cut from the forest trees. The clothing of the family was entirely home-made—the flax being first spun into linen, and then the fabric was dyed and made into garments. On April 26, 1838, Mr. McClay was married to Jane, daughter of James Smith. She died, and September 15, 1841, our subject married Jane, daughter of Robert Welch. By this union there were born the following children: Sarah (Mrs. D. W. Morrison), who died August 6, 1892; William W., John H. and Robert H. In 1857 Mr. McClay married Sarah Taggart, who lived but fifteen months, and December 15, 1869, he married Margaret, daughter of James Brownlee, who was one of the earliest settlers of Washington county. She had no children.

Mr. McClay has been one of the most successful husbandmen in his township, securing by hard work and economy a comfortable competence, and is now, toward the close of a long and useful life, enjoying the fruits of his early toil. Mr. McClay had long been a member of the Covenanters Church, and remained with them until 1858, when he united with the U. P. Church, in which he has ever since been an active and zealous worker. Politically he was originally a Whig, later a Republican, and is now in the ranks of the Prohibition party. He has always favored progressiveness, and has done all in his power to advance the interests of his township.

JAMES TAGGART MARQUIS was born October 9, 1825, on the farm in Jefferson township, this county, which is now his home. His grandfather, John Marquis, was a native of Wales, and, coming to America, settled near Baltimore, Md., where he remained but a short time. He then came to Cross Creek township, and located on the farm where he died. His wife was formerly Sarah Griffith, a native of Virginia, and they were the parents of nine children—six sons and three daughters—namely: Thomas, John, Mary, Sarah, Edward, Robert, James, Anne and William.

John Marquis (father of subject) was born January 10, 1784, and was trained from early youth to the duties of a pioneer farm. He enlisted in the war of 1812, remaining in the service till the close of the conflict. On November 16, 1816, he married Elizabeth Taggart, and they had a family of seven children, namely: Samuel F., M. D., Julia A., Margaret, James T., John R., Sarah J. and William E., of whom are yet living, William E., in New Cumberland, W. Va., and James T., subject of the present sketch.

James Taggart Marquis was early in life inducted into the mysteries of agricultural pursuits, which have always been his vocation. On January 31, 1861, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Bucher, a school teacher, daughter of Abner Bucher (who was also a school teacher in early life), and nine children have been born to them, namely: John A., Lizzie R. (wife of Rev. J. B. Lyle), Lawrence Verne, Julia Belle, Mary Lee, Lulu Pauline, Maggie Lenora (called by the tender Shepherd to His Bosom in infancy), James Taggart (triumphantly entered into rest March 28, 1890); and Nannie Archer. Mr. Marquis has always resided on the home farm, and is the owner of 100 acres of land. His children are all well educated, several of them having graduated: John A. is a graduate of Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Penn., also of the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Penn., now pastor of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Greensburg, Penn.; Lizzie R. and Mary both graduated from Blairsville Ladies' Seminary (subsequently Mary taught three years in this same institution); Lulu and Belle attended the Blairsville Seminary (Belle is now engaged in teaching in the High School Department of Brainerd Institute, Chester, S. C.). In religious connection the family are all members of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Marquis has been a ruling elder since his ordination, March 14, 1880.

(For historical sketch of the ancestry of Mr. Marquis see history of Marquis elsewhere in this work.)

FINLEY B. WINNETT, M. D. Washington county enjoys the reputation of having in her midst some of the most skillful physicians of the State, and not by any means the least of them is the gentleman whose name here appears. Dr. Winnett was born in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., August 10, 1848, a son of J. W. Winnett, whose wife was Mary Biddie, and they had four children: Finley B., Hiram (deceased), Margery (deceased wife of S. B. Weir), and Elizabeth (deceased wife of Dr. H. H. McDonough).

Finley B. Winnett received his rudimentary education at the academy at Hogs Summit, Penn. In 1867 he commenced to read medicine with Dr. David Shanor, of Beallsville, Penn. After two years he commenced a course of study in Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, which was followed by a course at Long Island College, Brooklyn, N. Y., where he graduated in the class of 1870. The Doctor then commenced the practice of his profession at Scenery Hill, a town situated on the National pike, some twelve miles from the borough of Washington, this county. Here he remained eight years, when, his health having become impaired, he moved to Nebraska, where he received the appointment of assistant surgeon for the U. P. P. R. R. Company, a position he held during his sojourn in that State; was also for some time pension examining agent for the U. S. Government. In 1884 he was nominated for the Legislature to represent the counties of Cheyenne, Sioux and Keith, coming within seventeen votes of being elected. In 1875 Dr. Winnett received the "ad-eundem medicine degree" from Cleveland Medical College. In 1885 he returned to Washington county, to the vicinity of his former home, continuing his practice until 1889, when he moved into the borough of Washington. He enjoys an enviable popularity as a successful physician and general practitioner, his ride being a very extensive one, and his practice one of the largest in the county, all his old patients remaining with him. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, and of the I. O. O. F., and vice-president of the U. S. Excelsior Building & Loan Association of Washington.

In 1869 Dr. Winnett was married to Miss Isabel Scott, daughter of John D. Scott, of Somerset township, and two children were born to them: John Elmer (who attended college one year at Thiel and one at Washington), and Ray (attending Washington and Jefferson College). John Elmer was for a short time at the head of his father's drug store, which he conducted with an ability seldom attained by men of his age. But the grim monster, death, loves a shining mark, and after a slight exposure and cold, at first trivial or slight, it developed into tuberculosis. He was prescribed for by some of the best physicians of the East, and tried for a while the seashore. Finding no relief, he was taken to Colorado, and Manitou Springs, and from there to Mexico. Finding no panacea there, he was brought home to his father, where he lived only a few weeks. His classmates in both colleges deplore his taking away. He was an honored member of the I. O. Heptasophis, who feel that a brother is gone. His parents feel the loss of a noble son more than mere words can express.

WILLIAM GALBRAITH, an influential citizen of Carroll township, is a native of the fair "Green Island" which has given so liberally to America of its noblest product — the warm-hearted energetic sons and daughters of Erin. Robert Galbraith was born in 1774, in Ireland, where he was married to Elizabeth Alexander, and where the following children were born to them: Robert, William and Frances. In 1825 he and his family came to America, locating in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn.

William Galbraith, the only living representative of his family, was born July 11, 1810, in Ireland, where he attended school and resided until fifteen years of age, when he came with his parents to America. His education was practically finished in the old country, as one day's experience in an American public school was all he afterward received. He learned the boat-building business, and was set to work at an early age to assist in paying off the debt on the home farm, consisting of 200 acres. He followed the boat business between the years 1827 and 1840, when the hard times of 1837 brought disaster upon that branch of industry. On April 29, 1835, he was united in marriage with Lucinda, daughter of Noah Fry. William and Lucinda Galbraith reared the following children: Robert, living in Allegheny county, served three years in the war of the Rebellion; William, who was also a soldier in the war of the Rebellion, and served three years under Col. Hambright in the Seventy-ninth Regiment P. V. L., and was killed in an accident in Nevada in the silver mines; Noah, a farmer in Delaware county, Ohio; Emeline, deceased wife of Frank Williams, and Cornelius, a resident of Kentucky. The mother died in 1815, and for his second choice William Galbraith was married November 30, 1848, to Mary, daughter of William Hill. The children of this union were Samuel, an enterprising farmer; Elizabeth, deceased wife of Albert Wickerham; John, assisting on the home place; Alexander, a farmer of East Pike Run township; Mary Frances, wife of John P. Mosier, of North Strabane township, this county; Thomas, living on the old place; Stephen A. B. (deceased), who was a graduate in the class of 1886 at Washington and Jefferson College (died while attending the Medical College, Philadelphia, December 3, 1889) and Ethel, living at home. In 1829 Mr. Galbraith erected the large barn, which is a model of workmanship and convenience, and in 1866 he built the handsome brick residence which is his home. He is the inventor of the "steel bit," a carpenter's tool, and is a most enterprising citizen.

THE SAMPSON FAMILY, who are among the most influential and wealthy citizens of Carroll township, were formerly natives of Westmoreland county, Penn., where William Sampson was born in 1765. He was married in that county to Mary Neal, who bore him four children. Some time after his marriage the family moved to Washington county, Penn., where the father died in 1815.

James Sampson, son of William and Mary, was born February 5, 1806, just above Webster, on the Monongahela river, in Westmoreland county, Penn., and in 1840 was married to Mary Grant, a native of Washington county. She bore him seven children, of whom are named William T., Harvey J., and John G. The mother died in 1888. James Sampson carried on a distillery in his early years in connection with farming, and he now owns 1,250 acres of land. He was president of the Bank of Monongahela City for ten years, and is one of the leading citizens of Washington county.

JOHN GRANT SAMPSON, a very prominent young farmer and wealthy stockman of Carroll township, was born February 6, 1852, on the old Sampson homestead in this county. He passed his youth on the old place, assisting with the usual duties of the farm, and on Christmas Day, 1879, linked his future with Mary V., daughter of John S. Williams, of Carroll township. To this union have been born five children, viz.: Mary Gertrude, William Howard, James Grant, Helen Marguerite, and Alice May Virginia. Mr. Sampson owns and occupies the old homestead containing 260 acres of fertile land, and is extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits. At one time he sold a herd of cattle worth $1,000 to a stranger, who never paid for them. He is a Republican in his political views, and in religious faith he is an earnest member of the Methodist Church.

JOSEPH B. DONALDSON is one of the representative business men of Canonsburg. He was born December 15, 1846, in Canonsburg, forty six years ago, and has been behind the counter for over thirty years, twenty-four of which he has been in the drug business. In 1876 he opened a drug store in Canonsburg, and has the largest and most varied stock of drugs and fancy goods in the city.

He has been the architect of his own fortunes. Beginning with a small stock, his business has rapidly increased, his fine store now being crowded with novelties and the usual paraphernalia of a drug store doing a good business. On October 30, 1872, Mr. Donaldson was married to Miss Maria M. Adams, of Canonsburg, and they are the parents of the following children: Louis, Mary, Susie and Lawrence. In his political preferences Mr. Donaldson is a Democrat, and in religion he is a Presbyterian.

BOON FAMILY. This is one of the oldest in Washington county. Of the early family of Boons, John was born in Ireland, where he grew to manhood and married. The family came to America many years ago, and first settled in Dauphin county, Penn., where John Boon engaged in farming and distilling, most of the wheat being distilled, as produce brought no profit. He finally moved to Canonsburg, Penn., then to Chartiers township, where he died. Their children were as follows: Mary, Nancy, William, James, Jane, Elizabeth, John, Margaret and Joseph; of whom William, James and John were soldiers in the war of 1812. In politics Mr. Boon was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run.

William Boon was born and reared near Wilmington, Del., and was there married to Margaret McHargue. They resided in Delaware some time after their marriage, then moved to Dauphin county, Penn., soon after crossing the mountains to Washington county, the journey occupying several days. They finally arrived in Chartiers township, and Mr. Boon purchased the tract of land now owned by William Russell, which was cleared and cultivated by the Boon family. In 1824 they removed to Smith township, this county, and a few years later settled permanently on the farm in Cecil township, which is now the property of James Boon. William Boon won success by his own untiring efforts, and was prominently identified with the interests of the community, especially those relating to educational matters. In politics he was a Whig and Republican, and held nearly every local office; in religious faith he was a member of the Presbyterian Church. His children were Levi, Alexander, Sarah, John, Margaret, William and James.

S. BLAYNEY. Among the prominent families of Washington county, the name of Blayney is identified as representing men of sterling worth, who lived lives of practical benefit to the community in which they resided.

The earliest representatives of this family in the United States, of whom there is any record, were Charles Blayney and his parents who emigrated from Ireland to this country, when Charles was seven years old. They settled in Ohio county, W. Va., where Charles passed the rest of his life. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and received his education at the subscription schools of the period. In early manhood he married Ann Potter, by which union were born children as follows: William, Vincent M. and Josiah. This wife dying in the spring of 1816, soon after the birth of her youngest son, Mr. Blayney, for his second helpmeet, married Nancy Faris, of Ohio county, W. Va., and the children of this union were John, Elizabeth (wife of William Reed), Susanna (wife of John Valentine), Charles, Martha (wife of Rev. George McDonald), James, David, Adam, Rev. Henry and Rev. J. McCluskey, all now living far apart; some near the Atlantic ocean, others on the golden shores of the Pacific. The father died June 11, 1860, the mother November 10, 1880.

Vincent M. Blayney, second son of Charles and Ann (Potter) Blayney, was born January 12, 1815, in Ohio county, W. Va. and was reared to manhood on the home farm, receiving at the same time a liberal education at the schools of his locality. In 1840 he was married to Mrs. Dora (Smith) Blaney, to which union one child was born—J. S., the subject of this sketch. The mother died when J. S. was but a week old. The father afterward, August 27, 1844, married Mary D., daughter of Samuel Donhey, of Buffalo township, and by this marriage there were five children, viz: Anna J. (wife of Dr. D. S. Eagleson), Rev. Charles P., Samuel D. (ruling elder in the Upper Buffalo Presbyterian Church), William V. and Joseph C. Vincent M. Blayney was called from earth March 18, 1887. Politically he was a staunch Republican, and at various times held offices of trust in his township. He was a warm supporter of the Presbyterian Church, and a devout member. In his life vocation—general farming and stock raising—he made a well-merited success.

J. S. Blayney was born October 10, 1842, in Ohio county, W. Va. On the same day that his mother died, his grandmother lost an infant, and immediately took the motherless little one to her home. Our subject remained in the home of his grandmother three years, then went to live with his father. In February 1865, he entered Company K, Sixty-first Regiment P. V. I., attached to the Sixth Army Corps, and took part in the battle of Petersburg and other engagements. When the war was ended he came home, and engaged in agricultural duties. On December 31, 1868, Mr. Blayney was married to Nancy M. Caldwell, who was born March 13, 1841, in Washington county, a daughter of Robert Caldwell. No children have blessed their union, but two adopted little ones—James W. and Mary Oliver—have found parental love and tender care beneath their roof. Mr. Blayney owns one of the finest farms in Washington county, which his father aided him to purchase. His luxurious home is elaborately furnished, and lighted and heated with gas, having every comfort and convenience. Politically he is an active Republican, and a valued member of the party; he has held nearly all the township offices. He is connected with the Buffalo Presbyterian Church, to which he gives a liberal support, both socially and financially. Mr. Blayney is one of the leading citizens and most prosperous farmers of Hopewell township.

SAMUEL ADAMS, an energetic citizen of Union township, is a native of Allegheny county, Penn., born at Port Perry February 21, 1851. His family have long been residents of that county, the grandfather, John Adams, having settled on the Allegheny river. The children of John Adams were born as follows: Alexander, Joseph, John, Samuel, Lewis, Mary, and an unnamed infant. Of this family Samuel is the only living member, and is residing on a farm near Wellsville, Ohio; John, Samuel and Lewis served in the war between the North and the South.

John Adams, son of John, was born in 1820, on the banks of the Allegheny river where his boyhood was passed. On arriving at an age of maturity he was united in marriage with Ellen, daughter of Aaron Tharp, a native of eastern Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Adams located near Port Perry, Allegheny Co., Penn., and he followed teaming in that locality; also worked on the railroad, and in digging coal. They were the parents of seven children, namely: Eva, Samuel, Mary, John, Ellen, James D., and Jennie.

Samuel Adams, whose name introduces this biography, was born at Port Perry, in Allegheny county. He was trained to hard manual labor from early youth, having worked in the mines during boyhood. He was the only support of the family while his father was in the army. In 1872 he bought a property in Port Perry, which he still owns. In 1874 he married Minerva, daughter of Benjamin Gilmore, a farmer of Allegheny county, and after marriage Mr. Adams continued working for five years; then attended the Southwestern State Normal School, at California, Penn., afterward returning to Port Perry. He conducted a butcher business at the last mentioned place for about one year, and in 1884 moved to the farm in Washington county, Penn., which contains 100 acres. In 1888 he purchased this place, and since that time has continued to reside upon it. He is a member and trustee of the Methodist Church; in politics he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and has held various local offices in Allegheny county. Children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Adams as follows: Elizabeth, born November 17, 1874, died March 3, 1875; Mary Ellen, deceased in infancy; James G. Blaine, born at Port Perry September 15, 1881, and is a jewel in the home on the farm, being twelve years of age, and bright as a silver dollar.

ELIJAH T. TOWNSEND. The Townsend family, of which this gentleman is a member, are of English descent. Many years ago, three brothers, Elijah, John and Isaiah Townsend (cousins of Glen Townsend, of Quebec), left the shores of the mother country and sailed to America. They settled in Egg Harbor City, N. J., and Elijah there reared a family of children, among whom was one named Daniel.

Daniel Townsend was born August 14, 1747, in Egg Harbor City, N. J., where he grew to manhood and engaged in the lumber business. In 1776 he entered the Revolutionary war, serving about two years, participating in the battles of Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, and Monmouth. In 1779 he came to Washington county, Penn., bought 400 acres of land of Joshua Wright, and settled permanently on that tract. He was married to Lydia Sawens, of Massachusetts, who bore him children as follows: Catherine (Mrs. John Baird, Beaver county), Naomi (Mrs. Uriah Burton), Julia (wife of Peters Sharp), Margaret (wife of William Chisler, Ohio), Rebecca (Mrs. John Hozer, Mercer county, Penn.), Ruth (Mrs. Stephen Higby, Ohio), Lydia (wife of Arthur Devore, Ohio), Elijah (a lieutenant in the war of 1812, died in 1871), and Joseph, all of whom were married, and are now deceased. The father was a Democrat in politics; he died September 1, 1833.

Joseph Townsend, son of Daniel and Lydia (Sawens) Townsend, was born March 1, 1796, on the old place in Washington county, Penn. He lived at home until fifteen years of age, then entered the war of 1812 as a fifer, but was brought home by his father. A few years later the juvenile warrior had so far modified his views as to prefer rural life. He became an excellent farmer, and devoted much attention to sheep raising. In early life he was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of Col. William Blackmore, and granddaughter of Samuel Blackmore, the latter of whom owned 100 acres on the site of the present city of Washington. The property was leased for ninety-nine years, the heirs having never claimed it. William Blackmore, son of Samuel, came with his father from Washington, D. C., to Washington county, Penn., and there reared six children, viz.: Thomas, Charles, Nancy (Mrs. Townsend), Eliza, Ellen, and Arabella, all now deceased but Nancy. To Joseph and Nancy (Blackmore) Townsend were born three children, namely: Charles W., Daniel B. and William (deceased in youth). The mother died September 5, 1833, and in 1834 Joseph Townsend was married to Nancy, daughter of Robert Flack. Her father was born in Ireland, and about 1800 emigrated to this country, settling on Chartiers creek, in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn. To Joseph and Nancy (Flack) Townsend were born three children, viz.: Robert (deceased), Elijah T., and Margaret J. (Mrs. J. W. Boyer, of Finleyville). The father voted with the Democratic party, and in religion was a member of the Baptist Church. He died on his seventy-fifth birthday, March 1, 1871, being followed by his wife in August, 1874, in her seventy-fifth year.

Elijah T. Townsend, son of Joseph and Nancy (Flack) Townsend, was born December 23, 1836, on the farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., which is now his home. He attended Beaver Academy and Allegheny College, in Meadville, Penn., and in 1858 was married to Nancy, daughter of Samuel Boyer, whose father was James. After his marriage Elijah T. Townsend remained on the home farm until the death of his father, when he took possession of the old place, which contains 135 acres of good land. He has been a very active member of the Democratic party, and, though they were then in the minority, was elected in 1878 as county commissioner. He served until 1882, and in 1884 was nominated by acclamation for treasurer of the county, but was defeated. He was a delegate to the State convention in 1882 and in 1892. He is a member and trustee of the Peters Creek Baptist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Townsend are the parents of three children, viz.: Anna M. (a graduate of Washington Seminary), married to David F. Templeton; Robert F. (at home), and Joseph B. (member of the sophomore class, Lehigh University).

THOMAS GRIMES. Prominently identified with the representative and successful farmers of Independence township stands the gentleman whose name introduces this brief sketch. He is a son of John Grimes, whose father, William Grimes, came from Ireland and settled in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn. William Grimes was among the earliest of pioneer settlers, coming to this county before the Indians had abandoned their former hunting ground. He cleared a small piece of land, and built a rude cabin, to which he soon afterward brought a youthful bride, who bore him the following children: John, Jane (wife of Adam Miller), Mary (wife of Daniel Lane) and Robert, all of whom are deceased, the latter having passed away in Donegal township, this county. The parents both died on the farm in Buffalo township.

John Grimes was born, in 1793, on the home farm in Buffalo township, where his parents passed their wedded lives. He received a meager education at the primitive schools of the place, and being obliged to attend irregularly, could not avail himself even of the poor opportunities then offered the seeker after literary knowledge. In 1813 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Reed, who was born in 1792, in the beautiful Shenandoah Valley of West Virginia, and afterward came with her parents to Washington county, Penn. Of their union were born the following children: Jane (deceased wife of Thomas Patterson, of Belmont county, Ohio), Sarah (unmarried, residing in Claysville, Donegal township), Robert (farming in Des Moines county, Iowa), William (a retired U. P. minister), Edward (deceased in Donegal township, at an adult age), Samuel (killed while serving in the Civil war), John (an agriculturist of Buffalo township, this county), and Thomas. John Grimes lived on a rented farm during the twelve years following his marriage, and then purchased the remaining interest in the old home place, where the remainder of his life was passed. He was a successful agriculturist and a valued citizen. In politics he was formerly an Old line Whig, and upon the organization of the Republican party became an active worker in its ranks. His wife died in 1871, and in 1884 he was laid by her side at the good old age of ninety-one years.

Thomas Grimes, the subject of this sketch, was born December 28, 1828, in Buffalo township, this county, was reared to farm work from earliest boyhood, and received a common-school education. On November 1, 1855, he married Susanna Sawhill, who was born October 10, 1833, daughter of William and Jane (Lorimer) Sawhill. Of this union the following children have been born: Chester, Lorimer (married January 1, 1890, to Miss Nettie Farrer, of Independence township), Sarah J., Nancy Irene (wife of A. L. Farrar, of Donegal township, this county), John Lemon, Mary Udella and Ida May. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Grimes located on his father's farm in the eastern part of Donegal township, and in 1868 moved to a place on Buffalo creek. In 1870 he purchased the old Lawrence farm adjoining Mt. Hope church in Independence township, where he has since resided. He devotes considerable attention to stock raising, and is a very progressive farmer, his home being supplied with modern appliances for convenience and comfort. He has recently erected a handsome residence, which enhances both the beauty and value of his property. In politics he is a staunch Republican, and has been selected to fill various offices of honor and trust, the duties of which he has performed with much credit to himself and the party. He is much esteemed by all who know him. He and his wife are members of the Mt. Hope United Presbyterian Church.

JOHAN SCOTT is a worthy representative of an old and enterprising family of Washington county, noted alike for intelligence and integrity. His grandfather, Abraham Scott, was born and reared in Maryland, and when a young man came to Pittsburgh, Penn., afterward settling in Washington county with his brother Alexander. He purchased a wild tract of land near Raceoon postoffice, Robinson township, this county, where his life was passed in agricultural pursuits. He was married to Jane, a sister of John Finley (the founder of Finleyville), and reared the following children: Rachel (Mrs. James Russell), Mary (wife of Thomas Fletcher), Ann (married to James Kerr), Jane (wife of David White), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Scott), Susan (married to John McBride), Abraham, Finley, Holland and Samuel. The father was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church at Raceoon.

Finley Scott was born in 1800, in Robinson township, this county, and here educated. In 1822 he was married to Margaret, daughter of James Stephenson, of Smith township. The young people first settled on a farm in Robinson township, this county, remaining there a few years, when they rented a neighboring farm, afterward purchasing a place in Smith township where they resided twenty years, and finally removed to the home where they passed the remainder of their lives. The children of this couple were Ann, Robert K., James, Samuel, Finley, John, Levi, Jane F. (Mrs. William Cole) and Margaret (wife of Thomas Ackleson). Mr. Scott was the architect of his own fortune, and owned 450 acres of land at the time of his death, which occurred in 1879. He was a Democrat, and held various township offices. In church connection he was first a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown, afterward uniting with the Associate Reformed Church, in which he was an elder. He and his wife are buried in the U. P. cemetery.

John Scott was born March 13, 1834, in Smith township, and passed his boyhood on the home farm. On March 3, 1868, he was united in marriage with Mary Agnes Carlisle, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, daughter of John Carlisle, and the children born to this union are Holland A. (of Burgettstown), John A., Finley I., Samuel M., Susie B., Lillie M. and Gracie D. After his marriage John Scott settled on the farm where he is now living, carrying on a general farming and stock raising business, and also managing an extensive dairy. Mr. Scott is a very successful and popular business man, and in politics has always been a Democrat; he has filled various offices, and given satisfaction to all parties. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church.

STEPHEN SANDERS. Washington county has received a number of her most valued citizens from New Jersey, and among the most worthy of these is the Sanders family.

Stephen Sanders, a native of New Jersey, was among the first to enter land in Morris township, where he died in 1825. His son, Daniel, but a boy when his father removed to Pennsylvania, was born in 1783. In 1804 he married Catherine Rutan, a daughter of Samuel Rutan, of Morris township, and of this union were born the following children: Eleanor, Stephen, Phoebe, Sarah, Ann, Daniel and Eunice, of whom Eleanor, Sarah and Daniel are deceased.

Stephen Sanders was born in 1809, and reared to farm life, which he has always followed. In 1834 he was married to Catherine ———, and to their union were born eight children: Simeon, Samuel, Jacob, Isaac Newton, Henry, Absalom, Azariah and Sample. Of these, Samuel, Isaac Newton, Henry and Absalom are still living, Isaac Newton and Henry being prosperous young farmers of Morris township. Mrs. Sanders died in 1887, and since that time Mr. Sanders has made his home with his son Isaac Newton.

Stephen Sanders

Isaac Newton Sanders married, October 17, 1872, Hannah, daughter of Obadiah and Elizabeth Clutter, and by her had four children: William Eunor, Stephen Byard, Estella Belva and Bertha May. He is a member of Upper Ten Mile Church. Henry Sanders married Elizabeth Dille, June 19, 1871, and of this union have been born five children: Hugh (who died at the age of nineteen), and Lillian, Cora, Grace Edna and Florence, all living. Samuel Sanders, of Waynesburgh, Penn., married Hattie Balsot, and has one child, Katherine Elizabeth Lee. Absalom Sanders, of Clarkstown, Penn., was married, in 1880, to Rebecca Huffman, and has no children. Jacob Sanders was married March 30, 1865, to Mary Axtell, and died March 19, 1869, leaving two children: Clarissa and Sarah Ellen. Simeon Sanders, during the Civil war, enlisted in the Federal army from Iowa, and died of fever at Little Rock, Arkansas.

Obadiah Clutter, father of Mrs. Isaac Newton Sanders, was a shoemaker by trade, lived in Amity and died there. On January 17, 1836, he married Elizabeth Yoder, daughter of George and Sarah (Coulter) Yoder. They died in Greene county, where Elizabeth was born, near Rice's Landing. To Mr. and Mrs. Clutter were born the following children: Sarah, wife of John Kelly, of Cumberland, Md.; Phebe, Mrs. John Gaines, of Amwell township; Mary J., in Washington; Eli Webb; George Brown; Margaret Ann; Catherine, wife of Warren Sanders, Bellaire, Ohio; Hannah (Mrs. Isaac Newton Sanders); Samuel Clawson; William M. (deceased). Mr. Clutter died in Amity in 1872, and Mrs. Clutter has since that time made her home with her children.

MICHAEL HACKARESS, who is perhaps the oldest man in Washington county, is a son of James Hackaress, who was born in Old Virginia, during the eighteenth century. The father was born a slave, but bought his freedom with money received from the sale of coon skins, and a little additional help from neighboring planters. After gaining freedom, he was married to Miss Catherine McDow, who had been freed because her owner had failed to register her until the time allotted for that purpose had expired. After his marriage, Mr. Hackaress moved to Washington county, Penn., where he farmed on shares, and worked at various odd jobs until his death, which occurred in the year 1831.

Michael Hackaress was born on Peters creek, Washington county, Penn., February 25, 1792, and when his father died moved to the farm on which he now lives. At that time the only improvements were a little hut, and a garden patch which had been made by some settler who abandoned it to return to a civilized country. Michael was first married to Peggy Jenkins, and they had ten children, namely: James, Edward, Lydia, Maria, Margaret, Eliza, Mary, Michael, an infant son (unnamed) and W. Casley. Of these children all are now deceased with the exception of Eliza. For his second wife Mr. Hackaress was united in marriage May 9, 1853, with Miss Sarah A. Brown, of Washington, Penn., and their children were Sarah Catherine, Virginia B., Eva A. and an infant. Two of these children are living with their father, who, although over a century has passed since he entered the world, bears lightly the weight of his hundred years, and is still a comparatively strong man. Although he can not labor as in his younger years, he eats as heartily as though he were yet in the prime of life. Mr. Hackaress has been a very successful business man, and now owns 211 acres of as good land as can be found in the township. He is upright and honest, and is highly esteemed by his neighbors, being one of the few colored men who have taken advantage of the opportunities given them by the Government. In politics he is a stiff Republican, and can boast of having voted for every President from Madison to Harrison, and will probably cast a ballot at the next Presidential election.

SAMUEL STEWART. Among the prosperous and well-known citizens of Nottingham township, this name is prominently identified. William Stewart was born, in 1803, in Washington county, Penn., and in early life was united in marriage with Jeanetta Gardener, who was born in 1803, in Ireland, coming to America in early youth. Mr. Stewart devoted his time to agricultural pursuits, making a specialty of stock raising. He was too old to enter the Civil war, but was represented on the field by his son William, and took an active part in local affairs. He was township supervisor fourteen years, township clerk several years, also served on the board of election. He died in 1874; his widow is yet living.

Samuel Stewart was born, in 1842, in Washington county, Penn., and during his boyhood attended the schools of this county. In 1876 he married Miss Eleanor A., daughter of William Barkley. Her grandfather, Andrew Barkley, was born in 1775, in Ireland, and was married to Elizabeth Jolly, who was born in 1757, in Pennsylvania, and died in 1846. They were the parents of eight children, all of whom are now deceased.

William Barkley, son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Jolly) Barkley, was born in 1800, in Washington county, Penn., and passed his youth on the home farm now owned by Butler Huggins. In 1822 he married Elizabeth Ogden, who was born in 1802, in this county, daughter of Samuel Ogden. Mr. Ogden was born in 1759, and when a young man was married to Elizabeth Crouch, who was born in 1761, in this county. They had ten children. Mr. Ogden was a tailor by trade, and a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He died in 1848, having been preceded by his wife in 1830. To the union of William and Elizabeth (Ogden) Barkley ten children were born, of whom five are yet living, namely: Elizabeth, Sarah J., Eleanor A. (Mrs. Stewart), William and Margaret. Mr. Barkley owned 118 acres of land, all under cultivation, and conducted an extensive sheep and other stock farm. He was a very prominent man in the politics of Washington county, having served in nearly all the township offices, and was collector several years.

To the union of Samuel and Eleanor A. (Barkley) Stewart a son and daughter have been born: Boyd T. and Jennie L. The farm of 127 acres of fertile, well-cultivated land is owned by Samuel and his brother William's children jointly. Samuel Stewart is an enterprising citizen, and has filled almost every office in Nottingham township. He gave among the first $100 subscribed to the building of a railroad in Nottingham township.

JONATHAN CAESBER, JR., was born September 17, 1821, in North Strabane township, this county, a grandson of Jonathan Caesber who was born in 1759, in the State of Delaware. In 1774 the grandfather came to Washington county, Penn., and here purchased a farm where he died in 1839. In the war of 1812 he furnished the United States Government with the last pack horses used at that time. In religion he was a Methodist.

John Caesber (son of Jonathan the pioneer) was born, in 1794, in Nottingham township, this county. He was a physician, devoting his entire life to that profession. In October, 1820, he was united in marriage with Hannah Holland, who was born in Allegheny county, Penn., in 1800, and five children were born to them, of whom two are yet living: John and Jonathan. The father died February 3, 1833, and in 1867 Mrs. Caesber entered the "valley of the shadow."

Jonathan Caesber, Jr., attended school in the home district, and was but twelve years of age when his father died. The fatherless boy, being thus early thrown on his own resources, worked on a farm four or five years, and completed his education. At the age of seventeen he began teaching a subscription school, following that vocation eighteen years; at the same time he owned a store and shoe shop. He finally learned the shoemaking business, to which he has devoted his later years. On May 30, 1844, he married Elizabeth Yant (who was born in 1822 in this county), and they have had six children, three of whom are deceased. Those yet living are Carrie H., Elizabeth B. and Frederick Y. Caesber. In 1838 Mr. Caesber was appointed postmaster at Munnstown, and served in that office until 1876, when he opened a shoe store and boarding house in Washington borough. In 1883 he returned to his present home, consisting of four acres of excellent land, situated near the depot of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and affording him a comfortable income. In politics he has always been a Democrat, and has served several times as school director and four terms as justice of the peace, which office he is yet holding. He was too old to enter the Civil war, but has ever been identified with the best interests of the county. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM B. SUMNY. The family of which the subject of this memoir is a prominent member have long been residents of Pennsylvania. Isaac Sumny, father of William B., first saw the light July 5, 1776, the day after the old Liberty Bell had proclaimed the birth of our infant nation. He was born in Westmoreland county, Penn., and in 1798 was united in marriage with Mary Turney (who was also born in 1776), and nine children were born to their union, of whom three sons are yet living. The father followed the trade of potter all his life.

William B. Sumny was born August 14, 1805, on the home place in Washington county, Penn., and passed his boyhood in attending the schools of the county. On November 14, 1829, he was married to Ruth Gamble, a native of this county, born in 1810. To this union one son and nine daughters were born, namely: Mary (Mrs. Mahood), residing at Melvin, Ford Co., Ill.; Elizabeth (wife of William Harbison), at Glade Mills, Butler Co., Penn.; Esther, still living with her father; Sarah (Mrs. Coneby), at Brownsdale, Butler Co., Penn.; Mrs. Hannah Sumny, at Beaver City, Furnas Co., Neb.; Emma (Mrs. Morrison), at McKeesport, Allegheny Co., Penn.; William (deceased); Nancy (deceased); Harriet (wife of Dr. Murray), at Amity, Washington Co., Penn., and Angelina (Mrs. Hamilton), at Thomas, Washington Co., Penn. The mother died December 21, 1891.

Prior to his marriage Mr. Sumny worked with his father at the potter's trade, and then after that event he bought fifty acres of land, to which he now devotes his attention. Politically he is an adherent of Democratic principles, and in religious faith he and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church.

DAVID W. GAULT. The prominent and influential family, of which the subject of this sketch is a worthy member, are representative citizens of Nottingham township.

Alexander Gault was born in 1797, on a farm in Washington county, Penn., where his youth was passed in the usual duties of agricultural life. On December 8, 1825, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Wilson, who bore him five children, namely: James, Edith, Sarah, John W. (who enlisted in Company K, P. V. Cavalry, and died in the service December 7, 1862) and Alexander (deceased). The mother died soon after the birth of her youngest son, and Mr. Gault was afterward married to Jane Flack, who was born in 1807. The children of this marriage were as follows: Robert, Mary J. and Addie, the last named being the only one yet living. The father owned about 150 acres of land. He died in 1872; the mother on February 15, 1887.

James Gault, son of Alexander and Mary (Wilson) Gault, was born in 1826, in Washington county, Penn., where his youth was passed. In 1853 he married Maria Sunney, a native of Nottingham township, this county, who was born in 1832, and has always resided in the vicinity of her birthplace. Four sons and two daughters have been born to this marriage as follows: Mary, David W., Alexander, John (deceased), Ettie and William. Mr. Gault has, with the exception of short intervals, always resided in Nottingham township, and has held almost every local office. He owns twenty-five acres of fertile land, and makes a specialty of fruit raising.

David W. Gault was born April 11, 1856, in Washington county, Penn. He completed his education at Pittsburgh, Penn., and received a diploma from Duff's Commercial College. After leaving school he embarked in a sawmill and lumber business, and also managed a farm of 130 acres. On September 4, 1884, he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of Martin Kammerer, a son of John Kammerer, who was born, in 1793, in Germany, and was educated in the schools of his native land. In 1820 her grandfather was married to Margaret Rigar, who was born in 1800 in Germany, and, bidding farewell to his young wife for a time, sailed for America in 1821. After finding a suitable location for a home, he sent for Mrs. Kammerer the next year, and settled in Washington county, Penn., where he followed the business of a millwright and miller. He then worked two years as a carpenter, and afterward engaged in a general mercantile business. He also leased, of one Thomas Officer, eighty acres of land on the present site of Kammerer village, which land he purchased in 1881, and erected thereon a dwelling and store room. He then built a tavern, and in 1845 erected a saw and grist mill, which was burned September 22, 1850, but was rebuilt the following year. Five children were born to his first marriage, namely: Mary Ann, born December 16, 1821; Barbara, born August 11, 1822; Catherine, born May 20, 1825; John, born April 1, 1827; and Martin, born April 14, 1829, all now deceased. The mother of this family died in February, 1830, and on July 21, 1830, Mr. Kammerer married Elizabeth Bender, a native of Germany, and the following children came to this union: Jonathan, born July 31, 1831; Joseph, born May 20, 1835; Elizabeth, born February 28, 1837; Jacob, born November 22, 1838; William S., born February 23, 1843 (on the Board of Trade in Chicago), married to a daughter of Dr. Emery, of Dunningville, Va.; and Franklin G., born February 24, 1845 (with William S., Room No. 35, Board of Trade, Chicago, known as the Kammerer Co., brokers), married to a daughter of Dr. Hildreth, of Wheeling, W. Va. Of this family Jacob died July 27, 1839, and Jonathan died October 20, 1887. The mother died May 18, 1859, having been preceded by the father July 24, 1856. He served in many township offices.

Martin Kammerer was born on the home place, and in early life was married to Catherine Sunney, who was born in 1829. They had three children: Mary (Mrs. David Gault), Flora (wife of Robert McNary) and Ella (married to William McGregor). Mr. Kammerer was a miller and distiller, and until shortly before his death was a partner in business with his brother Joseph. The latter years of his life were spent on the farm, where he died June 25, 1890, having been preceded by his wife June 4, of the same year.

Three children have brightened the wedded life of David and Mary (Kammerer) Gault, namely: Donald, Charles and Frank. Mr. Gault has filled many local offices in Nottingham township, and is a representative farmer.

JOSEPH S. STOCKDALE, employed by the Stockdale and Allen Coal Companies, including the Acme and Allen mines, has been connected with this firm at Stockdale since 1888. The town of Stockdale was begun in 1883, and in 1885 mines were opened on the Stockdale farm.

He is a grandson of Thomas Stockdale, who was born in Montgomery county, Penn., of English Quaker parents, and was there married to a lady who died leaving three sons, William, Thomas and John. In 1781, after the death of the wife and mother, the remainder of the family came to Washington county, Penn. He bought 100 acres of land, to which he afterward added another hundred acres, and was married in this county to his second wife, Amy Allen, who bore him children as follows: Joseph, Robert, Deborah, Allen and Hannah.

Both the parents of this family died on the farm in Washington county.

Robert Stockdale, father of subject, was born April 19, 1801, on the home place in Allen township, Washington county, and there received a subscription-school education. On November 6, 1825, he was united in marriage with Deborah Allen, a native of this county, and daughter of Joseph Allen. The young couple settled on the old farm, where the following children were born and reared: William, married to Rebecca Ailes, now living in Oregon; Amy, deceased at the age of six years; Elizabeth, widow of William Sprowls, West Finley township; Allen; Robert M.; Deborah E.; Sarah Mary, and Hannah Amy, wife of I. K. Jackman, Los Angeles, Cal. The mother of this family died March 13, 1850, and the father was then married to Dorcas Price, a native of Westmoreland county, Penn., who is yet living on the homestead. They were the parents of three children, namely: Joseph Snyder, Cyrus Field (living in Stockdale), and Martin J. (deceased). The father was a Democrat in politics, and in religious faith was a member of the Church of Christ at Fayette City, Penn. He died December 15, 1878.

JAMES B. VAN DYKE. The Van Dyke family are of Holland origin, their name signifying "beyond the dyke." Many years ago three brothers of the family, John, James and William, sailed from Holland to America, first locating in New Jersey, where John was married to a native of that State, his brothers having previously settled in Philadelphia county, Penn. In 1800 John Van Dyke moved with his family to an unimproved farm near Lindley's Mills, Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., remaining there but one year. He then returned to New Jersey, where he died, having left his family on the pioneer farm in Pennsylvania. He was twice married, and to the first union were born two children, John and Hannah. The children of his second marriage were Wright, Catherine, Nancy and Rena. The father was a Whig in political opinion, in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Wright Van Dyke was born December 15, 1799, on the home farm in New Jersey, and was reared and educated in the subscription schools of Washington county, Penn. In early manhood he married Rebecca, daughter of James Bane, a native of Amwell township, this county, and she bore him three children, viz.: Sarah, wife of Nathan Veatch; Elizabeth, deceased, and James B. Mr. and Mrs. Van Dyke passed their wedded life in Amwell township, where he died in 1847, followed by his wife in 1856. They were members of the Baptist Church, and in politics he affiliated with the Whig party.

James B. Van Dyke was born January 20, 1834, on the home place in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn. On September 18, 1855, he was married to Mary J., daughter of Rev. John Thomas, of Morris township. In 1862 he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment P. V. I., serving until 1864. At the battle of Chancellorsville he was shot under the right arm (the ball lodging back of his left lung, where it still remains), and, being paralyzed, was reported dead. He was taken from the field to the general hospital, then sent to Washington, returning home as soon as he was able. Before his furlough had expired he returned to follow the fortunes of his regiment, with which he remained until his health failed; in 1863 he was commissioned first lieutenant of his company.

After returning from the war Lieut. Van Dyke followed carpentering and building about three years, then opened a grain and feed store at Washington. He afterward conducted a grocery at Brownsville, Fayette county, and in 1875 came to California, to fill the position of steward of the Southwestern State Normal School. In 1880 he opened a general store, which was supplanted in 1882 by the dry-goods establishment he is now conducting. In political opinion Mr. Van Dyke was originally a Know-Nothing, but has been a Republican since the organization of that party. He is president of the California Glass Company, also deals in real estate. He and his wife are members of the Baptist Church, of which he is a deacon. They are the parents of four children, viz.: John W., George M., William S., and Mary Catherine (deceased). The three sons are all graduates of the State Normal College. George M. is also a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and is now practicing his profession at West Newton, Penn.; William S. is cashier of M. M. Dick's bank, West Newton, Penn., burgess of the town, also one of the principal stockholders and treasurer of the West Newton Wall Paper Company; John W. remains at home with his parents, and assists his father in the management of his business; William S. married Miss Carrie Taylor, of West Newton, who has borne him one child, Mildred.

SAMUEL HINDMAN. The ancestors of this well-known gentleman were born in a land of song and story, where wild legends were told the little ones as they sat by the fire-side or wandered amid the romantic scenery of Wales. But sometimes even the legends were forgotten, and tales of a far-off land, whose wealth and grandeur surpassed their wildest dreams, were told the children. Eagerly the people listened for tidings of those daring men who had crossed the ocean, and proved "truth stranger than fiction." Many a bold Welshman then sought a home in the New World, and among their number sailed Samuel Hindman with his family. They landed safely in America, and located in the State of Maryland. Mr. Hindman was twice married, and three children were born to him, among whom a son, John, is named.

John Hindman was born in 1769, near Port Deposit, in Maryland. He was there married to Sarah Patten and in 1796 came to Pennsylvania, the journey being made in a six-horse wagon, which carried all their personal possessions. They were accompanied by William Patten and his wife, the former of whom was a brother of Mrs. Hindman. They first made a halt in Findley township, Allegheny county, and thence moved to Union township, this county, where Mr. Hindman, in 1798, bought seventy-two acres of one Thomas Cannon, and afterward eighty-four acres of Nathan Dailey, which became the home of his descendants. It was then in an uncultivated state, only twenty acres having been cleared, and many improvements were made by Mr. Hindman. In politics he was actively identified with the Whig party, and in religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Mingo. He died on the farm in 1851, being followed in 1852 by his wife, who had borne him the following children: Mary (wife of Robert Campbell), William (married to Sarah Campbell, of Union township), Sarah (wife of John Storer, of Allegheny county), Robert (married to Hannah Pollock, also of Allegheny county), Martha (Mrs. William Morrow), John (deceased at the age of seventeen years), Eliza (wife of James Morgan), Jane (Mrs. Joseph S. Gaston) and Samuel.

Samuel Hindman was born August 25, 1812, in Union township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education at the subscription school on the Pollock farm. On May 9, 1839, he married Martha J., daughter of Joseph Hull, of Allegheny county, and they resided on the home place in Union township until 1864, when they came to their present home in Gastonville. Politically Mr. Hindman was a Whig and Republican, but is now voting with the Prohibition party, having always supported the temperance cause. In religion he has been an elder of the Mingo Presbyterian Church for thirty years. Mrs. Hindman died in September, 1889, leaving no children; but they had adopted and reared two little ones, one of whom, Virginia B., is married to Harry W. Milinger, of Finleyville.

ISAAC C. MOUNTS. This highly esteemed and prominent young citizen of Buffalo township, of which he is a native, was born May 31, 1855, a son of William H. and Mary (Malone) Mounts, the latter of whom was a daughter of David Malone. William H. Mounts was born in Rankintown (now a part of Washington), this county, June 19, 1800, and was brought up to practical farm life from his earliest boyhood. The school he attended during a few winter weeks in each year was held in a deserted log cabin, through which the winter wind gleefully whistled. In October, 1828, Mr. Mounts was married to Mary Malone, whose family were also old settlers, and after marriage the young couple made their home in Franklin township until 1852, in which year they removed to Buffalo township, where Mrs. Mounts died September 7, 1882, and Mr. Mounts June 22, 1885. He was emphatically a self-made man, and at the time of his death owned a large farm. Politically he was first a Whig, afterward a Republican, and although always taking a deep interest in the affairs of his party, would never accept office. Among the earliest members of East Buffalo Presbyterian Church, he was also one of its leading and most substantial supporters. The children born to this honored pioneer were: Sarah Jane (deceased), William (in Buffalo township), Adam (in Franklin township), Richard (in Buffalo township), Mary A. (deceased wife of Wishart Houston), Margaret (Mrs. Abraham Houston), Elizabeth (Mrs. Charles Kelly), Martha (wife of Samuel Parker, of Washington borough), Thomas J. (in Buffalo township), Theodore (deceased) and Isaac C.

Isaac C. Mounts was reared to farm life at the parental home, and educated at the common schools of the district. He was married December 25, 1879, to Laura V., daughter of George Coogle, the result of which union are four children. The parents are members of the United Presbyterian Church at East Buffalo, and in politics Mr. Mounts is a Republican, though not a strong partisan. He is a progressive farmer, and in connection with general agriculture is actively interested in stock raising.

THE ARMOR FAMILY. William Armor, the pioneer of the Armor family, was a native of Scotland, where his youth and early manhood were passed. Many years ago he came with his family to America, locating in York county, Penn., where he followed agricultural pursuits. In religious faith he was a Presbyterian.

Thomas Armor, a son of this pioneer, came at an early age to what is now Washington county, Penn., and settled on a 400-acre tract on Racecoon creek, Hanover township. The patent for this land was applied for September 15, 1784. He also, at the same time, applied for the adjoining tract of the same amount, in the name of his brother, who died after the confirmation of the application. Therefore, Thomas held and occupied both tracts, or 800 acres in all. He was a member of the Cross roads Presbyterian Church (now Florence), and assisted in the organization of Hopewell Church, of which he became one of the first three elders. In politics he was a Democrat. He married Jennie Moore, and to them were born four sons and two daughters, who all married and settled on his land, which he divided among them before his death in 1826.

Nancy married Benjamin Bubbitt—to them were born six children. William married Nancy McClelland—to them were born seven children. John married Matilda Glasgow—to them were born five children. John, with his family, moved to Holmes county, Ohio, about the year 1830. Mary married James Thompson, to whom were born eight children. They moved to Armstrong county, Penn., about the year 1837. Thomas married Hannah Crooks, and to them were born four children. James, the youngest, was born April 17, 1797. He occupied the homestead. His first wife was Margaret Wilson; to them were born four children. These children were as follows: John, who married Maria Culley, in March, 1850; Thomas and Wilson, deceased; Margaret Ann, married to James Donaldson, in March, 1852. Some time after the death of his first wife, or in December, 1832, Mr. Armor married Nancy, daughter of Alexander McCandless (who was of Scotch Irish descent), of Allegheny county, Penn., and to them were born four sons and one daughter. James Armor was an elder in the Hopewell Presbyterian Church for a number of years. In politics he was a Democrat until his death, February 7, 1871. He was followed to the grave by his widow, December 10, 1880.

A. M. ARMOR was born October 30, 1833; married Anna M., daughter of John Moreland, of Fayette county, Penn., October 26, 1865, who died March 17, 1880. For his second wife he married Mrs. Rebecca Wilson McCluskey (who had one daughter), June 15, 1882. In religion he was a Presbyterian, an elder in Hopewell Church, and afterward in the Hebron Church—a branch of the Hopewell Church. Politically he was a Democrat. He moved to Burgettstown, Penn., in November, 1892, where he now resides.

J. RAY ARMOR was born October 8, 1835; married Ella C., daughter of Robert Walker, of Washington county, Penn., April 3, 1878, who died June 12, 1885. He moved to Burgettstown in June, 1886, and engaged in the lumber business with J. P. and W. B. Linn—the firm name being Armor, Linn & Co. He is a Presbyterian in religion, and a Democrat in politics.

W. Sample was born April 24, 1838; married Sarah Moreland in June, 1864. To this union were born six children. He is a Presbyterian in religion, and a Democrat in politics.

Jane E. was born January 26, 1841; married Samuel Witherspoon, December 9, 1863. To this union were born eight children. She was formerly a Presbyterian, but now is a member of the United Presbyterian Church.

George P., born September 4, 1843, died August 2, 1872. James Armor's sons were a family of farmers. They still retain a large portion of the original 800 acres. W. Sample occupies the homestead, and likely to be followed by his sons, which will make the fourth generation of the family in occupancy.

THOMAS McGOWAN, superintendent of repairs of the Monongahela river slackwater improvement, a position he has held forty-nine years, is a son of John and Margaret (McGill) McGowan, natives of County Down, Ireland.

About the year 1831 they immigrated to America, settling on a farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., where the father followed milling and general farming. He took an active interest in the workings of the Whig party. They died several years ago, leaving children as follows: Martha, wife of Howard Kerr, of Foxburgh, Penn.; Thomas, whose name opens this sketch; Sarah Jane, living at Lock No. 4; John, who died at Lock No. 4, some years ago, and Nancy E., widow of Alfred Van Horn, of Lock No. 4.

Thomas McGowan was born in 1826, in County Down, Ireland, coming to America with his parents when but a child. He was educated in the district schools of Fallowfield township, and in April, 1844, he began life as a laborer on the Monongahela river, since when he has mastered all the details of navigation. He was superintendent of Lock No. 1 and adjoining places for some time, being rapidly promoted from one position to another. For over thirty years he has been superintendent of repairs, which business calls him to all points between Pittsburgh and Geneva, Penn. On November 18, 1852, he was married to Sarah A., daughter of Abram Fry and granddaughter of Samuel Fry. The Fry family are numbered with the earliest and most prominent citizens of Washington county. The first of the name to settle in Pennsylvania was one Samuel Fry, who was born in 1749, in Virginia, and was there married to Christina Speers, also a native of Virginia, born in 1752. They came overland to Washington county, Penn., in a very early day, and July 19, 1792, took a "tomahawk right" for a large tract of land in Fallowfield township. He was a famous hunter, and also worked on his farm.

remaining in the fort at night for protection from the Indians. He died in 1814, being followed by his wife November 9, 1841.

Abraham Fry, son of Samuel and Christina (Speers) Fry, was born in 1792, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a subscription school education, and in early life was married to Isabella Ringland, a native of Washington county. She bore him eleven children, namely: Samuel, living in Allen township, Washington county; John, also living in Allen township; Christina (Mrs. Abraham Colvin), of Fallowfield township; Abraham, who entered the U. S. service in Washington county, and is now living near Nashville, Tenn.; Henry, a resident of Sumner county, Tenn., on the Cumberland river; Noah, who died in Fallowfield township; Sarah, wife of Thomas McGowan; Jackson, living in Cowley county, Kans. (he enlisted in the Civil war, was taken prisoner, and was confined in Andersonville prison eleven months); Clarissa, who married Alexander Alman, and died in East Pike Run township; Smith, who owns the Fry homestead, and Isabella, wife of Elgy T. Van Voorhis, of Kansas City, Mo. After their marriage Abraham and Isabella Fry settled on the upper part of the old homestead in Fallowfield township. He was actively interested in public matters, and first affiliated with the Democratic party, then became a Whig and later a Republican. He died December 11, 1866, followed by his widow April 2, 1881, she having lived to see her youngest daughter the mother of twelve children. Both parents were members of the Disciple Church.

Thomas and Sarah A. McGowan settled on a home in the village of Lock No. 4. He has erected an elegant residence, surrounded by beautiful grounds, and among other improvements a handsome greenhouse adorns the place. In political opinion he is a member of the Republican party. In religion Mrs. McGowan is a member of the Disciple Church. They are the parents of three children, namely: J. K. M., married, and now has charge of Lock No. 4; Isabelle, wife of T. J. Allen, civil engineer, of Lock No. 4; and Abram F., married and residing at the same place. Mr. McGowan is one of the oldest navigators in Washington county, and is an expert in his vocation.

THEODORE J. ALLEN is a son of David B. H. Allen, a native of Allen township, Washington Co., Penn., who when a young man was married to Martina Springer, of Fayette county, Penn. They became the parents of twelve children, of whom Theodore J. is the fourth in order of birth. The father followed farming and land surveying all his life, and died in 1882; the mother is yet living on the old place.

Theodore J. Allen was born July 28, 1854, in Westmoreland county, Penn., where his early education was obtained. He then entered the Southwestern State Normal School, at California, Penn., and, afterward, Bethany College, in West Virginia, graduating from the civil engineering department in 1875. He has since followed the profession of civil engineer, at the same time being engaged in business with a coal company, as well as in farming.

On March 22, 1877, he married Isabelle, daughter of Maj. Thomas McGowan, a son of John and Margaret (McGill) McGowan, natives of County Down, Ireland, who, about 1831, immigrated to America, settling permanently on a farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., where Mr. McGowan followed milling and general farming; he took an active interest in the politics of the Whig party. John and Margaret McGowan died several years ago, leaving children as follows: Martha, wife of Howard Kerr, of Foxburgh, Penn.; Thomas; Sarah Jane, living at Lock No. 4; John, who died at Lock No. 4, some years ago; and Nancy E., living at Lock No. 4, widow of Alfred Vanhorn.

Thomas McGowan was born in 1826, in County Down, Ireland, and, coming to Washington county with his parents when but a child, was educated in the district schools in Fallowfield township. In April, 1844, he began life as a laborer on the Monogahela river, and since that time has mastered all the details of navigation. He was superintendent of Lock No. 4 and adjoining places for some time, being rapidly promoted from one position to another. For over thirty years he has been superintendent of repairs, which business calls him to all points between Pittsburgh and Geneva, Penn. On November 18, 1852, Major McGowan was married to Sarah A., daughter of Abram and Isabella Fry. Mr. and Mrs. McGowan settled on a home in the village of Lock No. 4, where he has erected an elegant residence, surrounded by beautiful grounds, and among other improvements, a handsome greenhouse adorns the place. In political opinion he is a member of the Republican party, and in religion Mrs. McGowan is a member of the Disciple Church. They are the parents of three children, namely: J. K. M., married, and now in charge of Lock No. 4; Isabelle, wife of T. J. Allen; and Abram F., married and residing at Lock No. 4. Major McGowan is one of the oldest navigators in Washington county, and is an expert in his vocation.

To the union of Theodore J. and Isabelle (McGowan) Allen four children have been born, namely: Edwin R., Eva W., Mable N., and Donald M. Mr. Allen has been an extensive traveler, having visited about twenty of the States in the Union and Mexico, passing one year in Los Angeles, Cal., as an engineer. He has been a resident of Lock

No. 4, Washington Co., Penn., for twelve years. He has served as justice of the peace, school director and postmaster, at Lock No. 4.

ABRAMHAM HAIR. The life of this gentleman bears testimony, in language not to be misunderstood, to what it is possible for man, with willing heart and hands, to accomplish. Few people, if any, in Washington county, deserve as much credit for advancement in life, commencing with dark days of poverty and adversity, and rising solely by their own unaided efforts to prominence and opulence, as does the subject of this memoir.

Abraham Hair was born April 23, 1823, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn. When but a young boy he was indentured to one William Wilson, to learn the trade of spinning wheel maker, and with him he remained until sixteen years of age, when he commenced working at various occupations, including carpentering, civil engineering, etc., and was for a time interested in the oil business. On May 19, 1858, he was united in marriage with Caroline Forsythe, who was born December 29, 1840, a daughter of Job Forsythe, of Parkersburgh, W. Va., and died April 15, 1860. For his second wife Mr. Hair wedded Margaret Wright, a native of Fayette county, Penn., born March 22, 1838, a daughter of Abraham Wright, of Point Marion, Penn., near the mouth of Cheat river, and to this union the following children were born: Caroline V., now Mrs. Isaac Hodgens, of Buffalo township; Laura L., now Mrs. R. W. Dodd, of Donegal township; Kate, wife of William Burig, of West Finley township; Adocia, living at home, and Maggie, who died in infancy. The mother of this family was called from earth January 27, 1873.

After his first marriage Mr. Hair took up his residence in Taylorstown, Penn., where he was engaged in the milling business for some considerable time, then moved to California, same State, where he worked in a boat yard, after which he was in the oil business on Dunkards creek, Penn., whence he proceeded to Clay township, Monongalia Co., W. Va., and there followed farming for some time. In 1872 he purchased the Shepherd L. Guy farm, in Donegal township, situated at the confluence of the Little and Big Buffalo creeks. Here he has since been engaged in general farming, including stock dealing to a considerable extent. He has lately erected an improved roller mill at a great outlay, thereby filling a long-felt want in his neighborhood, and which in itself is a practical illustration of his enterprise and progressiveness, and which is of invaluable service to the farming community; and in addition to all these industries he owns 316 acres of choice farm land, all the results of hard work, steadfast purpose, sound judgment and sterling integrity. Mr. Hair has no time to devote from his busy life to politics, but he invariably votes the straight Democratic ticket.

JHEOPHILUS HAWKINS, a prosperous farmer of West Pike Run township, a native of the same, was born February 1, 1852, on the home farm. He is a son of Elijah and Elizabeth Hawkins, the latter of whom died February 21, 1889, aged seventy years. He received a liberal education at the common schools of his district, and was reared from boyhood to agricultural pursuits. On September 9, 1880, he was united in marriage with Arminda Deems, who was born May 30, 1861, a daughter of Harrison and Catherine (Horn) Deems, pioneer settlers of this county. Mr. and Mrs. Deems were the parents of the following children: Ella, wife of Thomas Dagne, a farmer of West Bethlehem township; Belle, married to John Frederick, an agriculturist of West Pike Run township; Lizzie, wife of Stanton Lutes, a blacksmith of West Pike Run township; Arminda, Mrs. Hawkins; and Jennie, who is living at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins live with his aged father on the old homestead in West Pike Run township. The farm comprises ninety-five well cultivated acres, upon which a comfortable stone residence, a commodious barn, and out buildings have been erected. Our subject and wife have two children, viz.: Ernest R., born September 19, 1881, and Edna L., born September 28, 1891. Mrs. Hawkins is a member of the M. E. Church.

JOHAN GRAHAM, one of the best known and most highly respected native born farmer citizens of Donegal township, is a grandson of Robert Graham, one of the earliest settlers of that township, having lived here at a time when the Indian was yet a denizen of the forest wild.

Little is known of him, save that he was of Irish descent, and that he and his wife lived in Washington county, about two and one-half miles north east of Claysville. Their family consisted of nine children, five sons and four daughters—of whom Robert was born on the farm just spoken of, in Donegal township, and was here married to Sarah Jamison, who bore him the following children: John, Robert, Mary, Samuel, Jane, Sarah (Mrs. James Buchanan, of Brooke county, W. Va.), William (living in Nebraska, was twice elected to the United States Congress from Pennsylvania), and Margaret (Mrs. James Chambers, of Buffalo township). Of these, Robert, Mary, Samuel and Jane are deceased, the last two named having died before reaching maturity. The parents lived to a patriarchal age, the father dying in 1860, aged ninety-five, and the mother June 27, 1880, aged ninety-one years.

John Graham, the subject proper of these lines, was born January 14, 1811, and his boyhood days were passed in hard work on the farm, and in attending, during a few winter months in each year, the old log school house with its primitive furnishings and not less primitive antiquated "dominic." Mr. Graham remained with his parents during their lifetime, and after their decease he continued the farm work till a few years ago, when he leased the farm to tenants, and has since lived comparatively retired, simply overseeing the work. He has been very successful in all his undertakings, and is in the enjoyment of a well earned competence. Mr. Graham is blessed with excellent health, and has seen but little sickness in all his long life. He has never married. A member of the U. P. Church of Claysville, he is one of its liberal contributors. In politics, first a Whig, afterward a Republican and an enthusiastic Abolitionist, he has ever been a zealous party man and a loyal citizen. His success in life is due entirely to his own efforts and assiduous perseverance, coupled with sound judgment and characteristic prudence. He is public spirited and progressive, and enjoys the esteem and respect of all.

IRA L. LACOCK, an enterprising citizen of Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., is a native of the same, having been born January 19, 1860, on the farm of his father. He is a son of John V., and grandson of Ira Lacoek, who was born December 13, 1794, in Amwell township, Washington county, where his boyhood was passed in attending school and afterward in farming. He was married to Anna Bane, daughter of Isaac Bane, and the following children were born to them: William, Samuel (deceased), Isaac, John V., Elizabeth (Mrs. William Mounts) and Ira J. After his marriage Mr. Lacoek lived in Amwell township two years, then moved to Franklin township, and in 1856 settled in Washington, where he died December 13, 1876. He was a Democrat in politics.

John V. Lacoek was born September 5, 1822, in Amwell township, Washington county, and was educated at the subscription schools. On December 2, 1856, he was married to Sarah, daughter of William McClenathan, a native of Ireland. He then settled in Franklin township, afterward moving to Washington borough, then to the home place, and finally locating at Point Lookout, on the farm where he now resides, which consists of fifty-three acres of good land. Mr. and Mrs. Lacoek have had the following children: George S. (married to Mary Slusher, who has borne him two children, Biddell and Birdie), Dr. S. A., William R., Ira L., and Marion (deceased). Politically, he is an active worker in the Democratic party, and in religion is a member of the Disciple Church at Washington borough.

Ira L. Lacoek received his early education during the winter season at the school house at Point Lookout, and worked on the farm during the summers. February 23, 1882, he was united in marriage with Jennie, daughter of Lewis McKahan, of Washington, this county, and they have had two children: Lester, born April 15, 1883, and Earl (deceased), born January 11, 1891. One year after his marriage Mr. Lacoek moved to the farm in Amwell township, purchased in December, 1881, of Dr. F. J. LeMoyné, and then bought and moved to the Braddock farm, where he remained three years, when, in 1887, he sold it to J. F. Wilson. He then purchased the home farm of his father, where he erected his present residence. He has a large and valuable farm, containing 175 acres, which he has managed very successfully. In politics he is a Democrat, and has always taken an active interest in the success of his party.

SMITH F. SCOTT, son of Joseph A. and Eliza (Sheplar) Scott, was born April 2, 1846, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He is the fourth in a family of eight children, and received his early education in the schools of Fallowfield and Somerset townships. On November 22, 1866, he led to the altar Sarah F. Rogers, who was born April 30, 1844, in Beallsville, Washington Co., Penn. She is a daughter of Samuel W. and Sarah F. (Crawford) Rogers, both of whom were natives of Maryland. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Rogers were as follows: Priscilla W., wife of Adah W. Crouch, a farmer of West Pike Run township; Joseph H., of Beallsville, Penn.; Sarah F., wife of Smith F. Scott; Emma E., married to George R. Deems, an agriculturist of West Pike Run township; Mary A., deceased; and two who died in infancy. The father was a prosperous farmer, and in party preferences was a Republican, serving in various township offices. He died in 1890, the mother having passed away in 1882. Both were members of the M. E. Church at Beallsville, Pennsylvania.

Smith F. and Sarah F. (Rogers) Scott have four children, viz.: Alpheus C., born September 5, 1867; John E., born June 10, 1870; Samuel Clyde, born June 2, 1877, and Tryphena May, born October 18, 1881. Mr. Scott owns a good farm, which contains seventy-five acres, furnished with good buildings, and all modern improvements. He is a progressive, public spirited citizen, actively interested in all progressive movements, having filled various local offices. He votes with the Republican party. He and his wife are members of the Beallsville M. E. Church, to which he gives a liberal support.

There are still living of Joseph A. Scott's children four, namely: Henry S. Scott, of Bentleyville, who has a wife and three children, all boys; S. F. Scott, whose family is described in this sketch; J. Y. Scott, M. D., and wife, of Washington, Penn., and Margaret M. Miller, of Washington, Penn., who is married and has two children. Below are found the names and dates of births and deaths: Joseph Alexander Scott, born October 5, 1806, died February 15, 1881; Eliza Sheplar Scott, born June 11, 1815, died April 15, 1892; Joseph A. Scott and Eliza Sheplar were married November 23, 1835, at Peoria, Ill.; Henry Sheplar Scott, born July 27, 1840; Sarah Catherine Scott, born April 30, 1842, died January 26, 1847; James Anderson Scott, born May 10, 1844, died October 28, 1853; Smith Fry Scott, born April 2, 1846; Jesse Yager Scott, born November 13, 1848; Margaret Melissa Scott, born September 2, 1850; Nancy Peoria Scott, born July 27, 1853, died November 6, 1856, and Joseph Clark Scott, who was born September 12, 1855, and died October 30, 1881.

WILLIAM L. PORTER, now retired from active business, is one of the representative men of West Alexander. His grandfather, William Porter, was born and reared in eastern Pennsylvania, and was there married to Mary Lawson, who bore him children as follows: John, William, Mary, Thomas, James, Margaret and Elizabeth. Some time after his marriage Mr. Porter and his family started on the tedious journey to Washington county, Penn., and after several weeks arrived in West Finley township. He purchased and settled on a tract of 225 acres of uncultivated land. Neighbors were few in those days, and the Indians were oftentimes troublesome, but the brave pioneers struggled on until success crowned their efforts. Politically, Mr. Porter was a Whig, and in religion a member of the Seceder Church. He was an energetic man, and took an active interest in the improvement of the vicinity. He and his wife died on the old farm.

Thomas Porter was born in 1789, in West Finley township, Washington county, on the home farm, where he received his education. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of John Neal, of Carlisle, Penn., and they made a permanent home in West Finley township, where the following children were born to them and reared: William L. (subject of our sketch), Mary, John, Thomas, Angeline and Elizabeth. Mr. Porter was a farmer, also conducted a blacksmith shop, employing four men, and he made a success in both vocations. He was an active politician in the Democratic party, and in religion was a member and liberal supporter of the Associate Reformed Church.

William L. Porter was born January 9, 1818, near Pittsburgh, Penn., and worked on the farm during his boyhood days, receiving a subscription school education. He was married January 8, 1839, to Elizabeth, daughter of John Kimmoms, who bore him four children: Joseph B., M. J. (Mrs. A. J. Post), Harriet A. (Mrs. Samuel Schaeffer) and Lewis. The mother of these children died May 4, 1861, and Mr. Porter was afterward married on February 26, 1863, to Mrs. Elizabeth White. He passed the first twelve years of married life on his father's farm, and then purchased a place east of West Alexander, where he resided twenty six years. He then sold out, and clerked eight years in a general store at West Alexander. He afterward commenced business for himself, and having won the esteem and confidence of the community, was very successful in this venture. In 1883 ill health compelled him to retire from business, but he is still an active man. Mr. Porter is a very popular citizen, and has many friends, who rejoice with him in the success which he has so well earned. Politically he has always been an active member of the Democratic party, but has never accepted office. In religious connection he is the oldest member of the U. P. Church, with which he is connected, and to which he is a liberal contributor. He is a member of the Session, and has ever been a zealous worker in the cause, encouraging all progressive movements. Since the present edifice has been erected, Mr. Porter has twice served as treasurer, and has taken an active part in the upbuilding of the Society.

GEORGE HUNTER WRIGHT, This highly esteemed octogenarian is a living example of what patient purpose, resolute working, steadfast integrity and life of rectitude can accomplish in the ranks of the industrious, plodding agriculturists. He was born January 22, 1813, in Chester county, Penn., where he received a limited education at the schools of the period. His grandfather, Robert Wright, was a native of County Monaghan, Ireland, where he passed his entire life, married, and had a numerous family, of which one son, named James, became the father of the subject of this sketch.

James Wright was born in County Monaghan, Ireland, in 1778, and when a lad of ten years emigrated from his native land to America, landing in Philadelphia, Penn., whence he shortly afterward proceeded to Chester county, same State. Here he was "bound out" to one Daniel Cornick, a farmer, with whom he made his home, being trained in agricultural pursuits, until eighteen years of age, when he commenced the stone mason's trade, which he followed until 1818, in which year he came to Washington county, locating in Amwell township. Here he purchased a tract of land lying about three miles northeast of Amity, where he passed the remainder of his busy life. While a resident of Chester county he was married to Jane Burns, a native of the same, born of English parents, and to this union came the following children: Sarah, who lived to the age of fourscore; Samuel, who also lived to a ripe old age; James, who lived to adult age; George H., subject; Andrew Jackson and Henry Burns, both lived to manhood, and Margaret, now living in Amwell township, the widow of Nicholas Horn. The father of this family died September 6, 1855, the mother following him to the grave June 3, 1870, at the patriarchal age of ninety one. In politics Mr. Wright was a Democrat.

George H. Wright, of whom this memoir chiefly treats, under the careful preceptorship of his father, was early taught lasting lessons in industry and economy—lessons that formed in him habits of life which brought to him the success which secured him an ample competence for his declining years. At the age of nineteen (in 1832) our subject commenced life for himself, leaving home and working at different places by the month, on farms, in which he continued until the spring of 1838, when he took up his residence in Richhill township, Greene Co., same State, where he remained until 1849, at which time he came to East Finley township, this county, locating near where he now lives, about one mile southeast of East Finley postoffice. At that time the place was a "howling wilderness," but Mr. Wright manfully set to work, soon made a clearing on which he erected a substantial log cabin, a primitive but comfortable home for his wife and little ones; and by hard work, indomitable perseverance and good management, what was when he first saw it, a vista of wild rocks, he transformed into smiling fields of grain, and gardens that were made to "blossom as the rose."

On April 14, 1832, Mr. Wright was united in marriage with Lydia Holburt, a native of Virginia, born June 4, 1809, daughter of John Holburt, of what was then Morris (now Franklin) township, this county, and this union was blessed with children as follows: Frances Jane, born December 27, 1832, deceased in infancy; Catherine, born November 25, 1833, now living in East Finley township, the widow of George Ealy; John Holburt born January 8, 1839, died July 27, 1859; James Riley, born December 27, 1840, now in West Finley township, married to Jane Sprowls; Henry, born September 25, 1842, now in East Finley township, married to Rachel Rockefeller; Sarah Margaret, born May 16, 1846, at home with her father; George W. and Isaac B. (twins), born September 13, 1848 (George W. is living in East Finley, married to Juliette Day; Isaac lives in the same township, married to Frances Mills); Benjamin Franklin, born March 16, 1851, now lives in East Finley township, married to Phoebe Jane Tucker, of Amwell township. The mother of this large family died August 7, 1889, deeply regretted by all who knew her. She was a consistent member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Old Concord, as is Mr. Wright, and in his political preferences he has been a lifelong Democrat.

JOHAN WOODS, a pioneer settler of Chartiers township, was born November 23, 1817, a grandson of John Woods, a native of Ireland, who was there married to Mary Allen. They soon afterward immigrated to America, first locating in Westmoreland county, Penn., thence proceeding to Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., and then moved to North Strabane township, whence they finally came to the farm in Chartiers township, now owned by their grandson John, where they kept a tavern. The grandfather was a member of the Seceder Church, and both he and his wife died in this county, leaving a family of children, among whom was the father of our subject, Nathaniel.

Nathaniel Woods was born in Westmoreland county, Penn., and coming to Washington county in early manhood, was there united in marriage with Elizabeth Updegraff, born in the Shenandoah Valley, Loudoun county, Va. Her paternal grandfather had also been a native of Virginia, and coming to Chartiers township had made his permanent home in this county, where his children afterward settled. After his marriage Nathaniel Woods settled in Chartiers township, where the following children were born and reared: John, Margaret (who died in Cincinnati, Ohio), Mary (deceased), Nathaniel (living in Chartiers township, was a soldier in the Mexican war), Kate (living in Washington borough), Henry (deceased in 1852, a soldier of the Mexican war) and Elizabeth (residing in Washington). Mr. Woods was a farmer and distiller, and in politics voted the Democratic ticket. He was a soldier under Gen. Harrison in the war of 1812. On March 2, 1836, he was laid to rest, and was followed by his widow in 1885.

John Woods was reared on his father's farm, and received a limited education in the schools of Chartiers township. He then learned the trade of a painter, continuing in that work over forty years. In 1857 John Woods was married to Amanda Dickson, a native of Washington county, Ohio, and a daughter of Christopher and Elizabeth (Snyder) Dickson, who were natives of Virginia, but settled in Ludlow township, Washington Co., Ohio, in an early day, where the remainder of their lives was passed. After his marriage Mr. Woods settled on the farm in Chartiers township, where he yet resides. His wife died January 26, 1890, leaving five children, namely: Maggie (living in Pittsburgh, Penn.); Mary (wife of Edward Timmons, of Chartiers township); Henry (living in Canonsburg); Anna (Mrs. Rankin Zerba, of Clermont, Penn.), and John. Mr. Woods has followed his trade the greater part of his life, together with managing a farm. He has been a member of the Republican party since its first organization, and cast a vote for William Henry Harrison; he has served three or four years as township assessor, and has also filled several other offices of trust. Mrs. Woods was an earnest worker and member in the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church.

HIRAM VAN KIRK. The ancestry of this gentleman were natives of New Jersey, in which State his grandfather, Jacob Van Kirk, was born September 27, 1766. In early manhood he came with his father's family to West Bethlehem township, this county. He was married to Elizabeth Lee, who was born December 9, 1777, and they reared four children, viz.: Enoch, born April 14, 1796; Joseph, born January 17, 1798; Anna, born February 15, 1806; and Leah, born May 18, 1817.

Hiram Van Kirk, son of Joseph and Eliza (Corwin) Van Kirk, was born September 18, 1830, in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., where his entire life has been passed. He received his education in the common schools, and profited by his early opportunities. On May 15, 1862, he was united in marriage with Anna F. Hughes, who was born December 1, 1837, a daughter of Samuel L. and Susan Hughes, of Amwell township, who were the parents of nine children—five sons and four daughters. They are old residents of Washington county, and further record of the family will be found in the sketches of John and James W. Hughes. Mr. and Mrs. Van Kirk have two sons: James H., born July 17, 1863; and Francis J., born August 2, 1869, both of whom yet remain with their parents on the old home farm, which has been the property of Mr. Van Kirk for twenty nine years, and consists of 150 acres of prime land. He is also the owner of another farm of 114 acres, known as the John P. Van Kirk place. Politically, Mr. Van Kirk is an ardent supporter of the Democratic party, having been one of the "wheel horses" in Amwell township for many years. Mrs. Van Kirk is a member of the Christian Church, and though her husband is not connected with that body, he gives liberally to the cause, and does all in his power to promote the interests of morality and religion.

WILLIAM JAMES KELSO. The Kelso family are of Irish descent, and Mark Kelso, after his marriage to Elizabeth Ewing, came to a farm in Allegheny county, Penn., remaining there some time. In 1818 he bought an improved farm, which became his permanent home. His wife died many years before him, leaving the following children: Mary (Mrs. John Cowden, living in Mt. Pleasant township), Esther (who died in 1888), Elizabeth (who died in 1884), George, John (who married in Ohio, and had one child, Americus, now deceased), James, Martha and Letta Ann. Of these children James Kelso was first married to a Miss Elder, who bore him children as follows: William E., Mark, John, Elizabeth and Lucinda. The mother died, and for his second wife James was married to Jane Miller, and they had three children: Margaret, Alice and Miller. This wife also died, and the father then made a third choice in the person of Mrs. Catherine M. Millan, who bore him two children, viz.: James and Samuel George. The father of this family died in Allegheny county, Penn., two years after the death of his last wife. Martha Kelso became the wife of Phineas Kelso, of Lawrence county, Ohio, and four children were born to them as follows: Mark (who entered the service in Lawrence county, Ohio, and was killed in battle), Elizabeth, Andrew and John. Letta Ann Kelso was married to John Gregg, of North Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., the following children being born to their union: Elizabeth, Mark, Edward, Mary, Levi and Esther (twins), Clara, Emma and Ellsworth.

George M. Kelso, son of Mark and Elizabeth (Ewing) Kelso, was born April 6, 1806, in Allegheny county, Penn., coming in 1818 to Washington county with his parents. The family settled on the farm now owned by J. R. Kelso, where George M. grew to manhood. On March 28, 1838, the latter was married to Maria Rankin, who was born December 22, 1813, in Mt. Pleasant township. The young people settled on the home farm where their lives were passed. George Kelso and his wife were formerly members of the Union Church, afterward uniting with the United Presbyterian Church at Venice. He died March 27, 1879, his wife being laid to rest July 30, 1878. They were the parents of nine children: one who died unnamed; Mary Jane; Lizzie E. (wife of David R. P. Springer); Mark; Abigail Lavina, born in February, 1846 (deceased in March, 1847); Abigail Lavina, born December 21, 1847 (living on the home farm); J. R. (living on the home farm); William James, born May 5, 1852, and Maggie A., born July 2, 1854. Of these children Lizzie E. was married February 19, 1878, to David Springer, a native and resident of Robinson township, and to this union were born two children, one of whom is living, Charley Ross (Mr. Springer died August 29, 1887); Mark Kelso was married on October 19, 1871, to Elizabeth Cornelius Allison, a native of Allegheny county (they have had seven children, three of whom are living: George and Alexander (twins) and Mark; the father was a farmer of Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn.).

William James Kelso was born on the old place in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, there receiving his early education. On May 10, 1882, he was married to Ella Finley, a native of Allegheny City, daughter of William Finley, who was born in County Derry, Ireland. In about 1855 they came to America and located in Allegheny City, Penn., where they are now living.

After his marriage Mr. Kelso bought and moved upon the William McConnell farm in Cecil township, containing 103½ acres. He has made many improvements, and has erected a good barn. He votes with the Republican party, and in religion Mr. and Mrs. Kelso are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Venice, this county. They have one daughter, Mary Elsie.

JAMES JOHNSTON HOWE is a well-known citizen of Peters township. His ancestors came from Scotland many years ago and settled in eastern Pennsylvania, where James Howe was born and reared. James Howe learned the blacksmith's trade, and then settled on a farm near Washington, in Washington Co., Penn. He was married to Miss Margaret Clark, of this county, who bore him the following children: William, Mary, Ann, Jane, Thomas, James, Elizabeth, David, Nancy and Margaret, of whom James, Elizabeth, Nancy and Margaret are yet living. Mr. Howe followed his trade until 1822, then came to the home farm in Peters township, this county, where he was also engaged in farming. Prior to 1840 he was a Democrat, but after the Harrison campaign joined the Whig party, which was eventually merged into the Republican faction. He died in 1863.

William Howe, eldest son of James and Margaret Howe, was born October 29, 1816, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn. He passed his youth in performing the usual duties of farm life, and also learned the blacksmith's trade. In 1847 he was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of James Johnston, of Peters township, this county, and the young people located on a farm near the old place, where he worked at his trade, but afterward removed to Allegheny county, Penn., where they remained two years. In 1865 they returned to Washington county, and locating on the home place, he abandoned his trade and devoted the remnant of his life to farming. He died February 7, 1872, leaving one son, James Johnston.

James Johnston Howe, son of William and Nancy Howe, was born on the home place, in Peters township, August 23, 1848. He attended the Canonsburg Academy for two terms, and when his father died left school to take charge of the home farm. On October 18, 1882, he married Elizabeth M., daughter of William H. Carpenter, a prominent farmer of Lawrence county, Penn. The home farm contains eighty five acres of excellent land, and when wool was selling at a high price Mr. Howe made a specialty of sheep raising. Politically, he is a staunch Republican, and in religion is a member and liberal supporter of the Greenside Avenue United Presbyterian Church, of Canonsburg.

HUGH HANNA, M. D., a retired physician of Washington county, now living on a farm in Chartiers township, is the son of Hugh and Dorothy Hanna, the former of whom was born in Ireland, and came to Washington county in an early day, settling in Cecil township. He was there married to Dorothy Whitely, a native of Peters township, this county, and the following children were born to their union: William (a wagon-maker in Monongahela City), Thomas (who went to California in an early day and was killed in 1866, while in Nevada), Frederick (a saddler and harness maker, deceased in Peters township when in the prime of manhood), Eleanor (deceased wife of Samuel Smith, of Canonsburg), Nancy (married to James McLoney, of Odessa, West Bethlehem township, this county), James (farming in North Strabane township), Hugh, and Samuel (who died when about two years of age). The father of this family conducted a woolen mill on the "Craighead" farm in Cecil township for many years, and afterward devoted his time to agricultural work in Peters and Nottingham townships, this county. He was an active worker in the Democratic party, and held various offices of trust in said townships. At the time of his death, which occurred in 1842, he was a member of the U. P. Church at Peters Creek. His wife died in 1858, while residing in Nottingham township.

Hugh Hanna, M. D., was born in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education in the district schools of Nottingham township, and at an academy in Somerset township, taught by J. C. Messenger, the family having moved upon a farm in that vicinity. He began life as a school teacher in his native township, where he remained several terms, then taught one winter in Fallowfield township, and three winters in Peters township. He next taught three terms in Union township, at the end of which time he went to Allegheny county, remaining there one term. During this period of his life, the young man passed every leisure hour reading medicine, afterward attending one term of lectures at Ann Arbor (Mich.) University. In 1869 he entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, graduating March 12, 1870, and then commenced the practice of medicine in Allegheny county, Penn. In the fall of 1871 he went to Canonsburg, this county, and November 1, 1876, was married to Lizzie A. Wallace, a native of that town, a daughter of Thomas and Nancy (Arnold) Wallace. Thomas Wallace was a native of Washington county, Penn., and moved to Knox county, Ohio, where he died in 1865; his wife died in October, 1883, at Cambridge, Ohio.

Dr. Hanna remained in Canonsburg until 1878, when, after having been identified with the medical profession about eight years, he retired to a farm in Chartiers township. This farm is a part of the Henderson homestead, and was in the possession of that family over one hundred years. Dr. Hanna first purchased 101 $\frac{3}{4}$  acres, but has since added to it, and now owns 131 $\frac{3}{4}$  acres of good productive land. He and his wife have three children: Howard Thomas, Leota May and Birdie Bell, the latter of whom has become a good reader and mathematician under the instruction of her father, never having attended school. Dr. Hanna raises a fine breed of stock on his farm. The place is within the coal belt near McCounell's Mill. In politics the Doctor is a Democrat, and at this writing is a member of the school board. He started in life with but little, the success he has achieved being due to enterprise and industry. Mrs. Hanna is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Houstonville, this county.

GEORGE KELSO. Among the early residents of Cecil township were Benjamin and Mary (McCormick) Kelso, who settled in Allegheny county, Penn., about the year 1800. Benjamin Kelso served seven years and nine months in the Revolutionary war, and died from disease contracted while in the service.

Benjamin Kelso, a son of the pioneer couple above mentioned, was born in 1801, and reared in Allegheny county, Penn., where he received his education. In 1823 he was united in marriage with Martha, daughter of John Murdock, an early pioneer of Allegheny county, who afterward moved to Ohio, dying there many years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Kelso settled on the old homestead in Allegheny county, Penn., where he died in 1880, being followed to the grave by his wife in 1888. They reared the following family of children: Rebecca (married in 1836 to Cornelius Borland, now living in Cecil township, this county), John (a resident of Allegheny county, Penn., married to Mary Hall), Mary (wife of Richard Gladden), George (whose sketch follows), James (living in Pasadena, Cal.), Nancy (married to William Herron, of Noblestown), Margaret, Martha (wife of John P. McConnell), Benjamin (residing on the homestead in Allegheny county), Mark (living in North Strabane township), Samuel (residing in Xenia, Ohio) and Elizabeth. Of these are yet living Rebecca, George, James, Benjamin, Mark and Samuel. The father was a Whig and Republican in politics, and in religious faith he and his wife were formerly members of the Associate Reformed Church at Robinson's Run, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church at the same place.

George Kelso, son of Benjamin and Martha (Murdock) Kelso, was born April 28, 1822, in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., attending the subscription schools of the day during his boyhood. He began farming on the old homestead, and June 1, 1852, was married to Sarah Jane Wallace, also a native of Allegheny county, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Gilfilland) Wallace. The parents were natives of eastern Pennsylvania, coming when children with their parents to Allegheny county, where they were married. They were both members of the United Presbyterian Church at Robinson's Run, and Mr. Wallace was for some years a member of the Session. He died in 1881, being followed by his wife a few years later. His son William lives at the old home.

George and Sarah Jane Kelso passed the first years of married life in Allegheny county, and in 1857 bought 178 acres in Cecil township, Washington county. He has made many improvements on the place, and in 1881 erected a comfortable house; in addition to general farming he raises a good grade of sheep. He is a Republican in politics, and has served his township as inspector of elections and auditor. In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. Kelso are members of the U. P. Church at Venice. They have had children, five of whom are yet living, as follows: James, a teacher in North Strabane township, married to Lizzie McNary; William Wallace, married to Anna A., daughter of Rev. Anderson, and living on the home farm; Benjamin McCormick, married to Mary Miller, a resident of Pasadena, Cal.; George A., a farmer; and John, a bookkeeper, in Pittsburgh. Those deceased are Lizzie, who died in 1854, aged fifteen months; Maggie, who died in 1872, aged seven years; Sarah Bella, who died in 1876, aged fifteen years; and Mattie, deceased in 1880, aged twenty-one years.

JOSIAH MELOY was born October 20, 1826, in Franklin (then Morris) township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of Reese Meloy, whose father, William Meloy, was born in 1753, near Salem, Salem Co., N. J. William Meloy was there married to Lydia McCray, who was also a native of New Jersey, born in 1763, and in the year 1809 they started, in company with another family, to move to Ohio. While passing through Washington county, Penn., some of the family were taken ill, and they were obliged to stop at Coon Island, and the Meloy family became permanent residents of Pennsylvania. Mr. Meloy rented the "Hupp" farm in Washington county, and there passed the remainder of his life. His widow died in 1857.

Reese Meloy, a son of William Meloy, was born in 1796, near Salem, Salem Co., N. J., and coming to Pennsylvania with his parents grew to manhood in Washington county. He worked for a time on different farms, and in 1824 was united in marriage with Jane Caldwell, who was born in 1805, near West Middletown, Penn., daughter of Samuel Caldwell. They had the following children: Cyrus A. (farming in Amwell township, this county); Josiah (subject of sketch); Angeline (deceased in infancy); Hester, Mary and Reese; of this family the three last named died after attaining adult age. After his marriage Mr. Meloy located in Franklin (then Morris) township, this county, and some time afterward came to Donegal township, where he located on a farm about two miles west of Claysville. He continued to farm on this place until his death, which occurred May 23, 1860, his widow surviving him till February 2, 1889. Mr. Meloy began life with but little, but by hard work and good management succeeded in accumulating a considerable property. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and after the organization of the party, became a Republican.

Josiah Meloy, the second child in his father's family, came with his parents to Donegal township, where he received his education, and was trained to farm work. On July 9, 1863, he was married to Jane, daughter of Isaac Sutherland, of West Finley township, Washington county, and their children are Reese G. and Anna M., both living with their parents. After his marriage Mr. Meloy settled on the farm which is his present home, and has successfully followed agricultural pursuits, devoting considerable attention to stock raising. Politically, he is a Republican.

DAVID WEAVER, one of the oldest representative citizens in Peters township, comes of Irish descent, and is a grandson of John W. Weaver, who is supposed to have been born in the Emerald Isle. He came from Chester county, Penn., in 1787, and first located in Lancaster county, then bought 160 acres of land near Canonsburg, in Chartiers township, Washington county. He was a mason by trade, and followed that business until his death. His children were John, Sarah, Mary Jane, Nancy, Isaac, Thomas H., Dell, George and Joshua Thomas H. Weaver was born in 1796, in Lancaster county, Penn., and in early life came with his father to Washington county. He worked on the home farm during his youth, and was married to Mary, daughter of James White, an early settler of Washington county. They began wedded life on a farm about two miles from Canonsburg, in North Strabane township, where children were born as follows: James, Isaac, Thomas, David, Jane, an infant son, an infant daughter, John, George, Mary, Moses and Elizabeth. Of this family James, Isaac, Thomas, David and Mary are yet living.

David Weaver, son of Thomas H. and Mary (White) Weaver, was born July 27, 1818, in North Strabane township, and received his education in the subscription schools. On February 28, 1850, he was united in marriage with Clarissa M., daughter of the late Amos Enlow, a prominent farmer of this county, who spent about ten years in Illinois, which was then known as the "far west." In 1856 Mr. and Mrs. Weaver moved to their present home in Peters township, where the following children were born and reared: Isaac P., Mary C., Benjamin F., George J., Thomas P. and Amos Enlow, of whom but two are yet living, Mary C. (Mrs. Robert Donaldson, of Canonsburg) and George J. (married to Viola Cook, of Minnesota, who is living with his father and managing the farm). The old place contains ninety three acres of good land, and Mr. Weaver has conducted an extensive dairy business. He also keeps about fifty hives of bees, which bring a good profit. In politics he is a "true blue" Democrat, and has served in many township offices. In religious faith he is a member and liberal supporter of the United Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg.

FRANK M. GABBY, one of the most progressive citizens of Franklin township, was born March 6, 1812, in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his early life on the home farm. He attended the common schools of his vicinity, until about eighteen years of age, when his father needed his assistance in the duties of the farm. On December 21, 1870, Mr. Gabby was united in marriage with Sarah, daughter of Adam Weir, and their union has been blessed with one daughter, Jennie W. Mr. Gabby commenced married life on the farm of his father, and in 1881 moved to his present home in Franklin township, where he has since been engaged in farming and stock raising. He has always taken an active interest in any progressive enterprise of his township, giving his most hearty co-operation to every worthy cause. Politically he is an ardent worker in the ranks of the Republican party, and in religion he and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Washington.

ROBERT D. HENRY. For more than a century the Henry family have been residents of Washington county, more especially that portion of it in and about South Strabane township. They are of Irish descent, Robert, the great grandfather of our subject, having been born in the "Green Isle of Erin," where he married a countrywoman and reared a family of four sons—David, John, Nicholas and Joseph—and three daughters—Jennie, Margaret and Isabella. In 1783 they came to this country, finally settling near where is now the village of Claysville, this county, where the head of the family remained a short time, and then moved to South Strabane township, where he died.

Robert Henry, son of this pioneer, was married in early life to Ann, daughter of Nicholas Little, and by her had seven children: Joseph, Jane, Nicholas, Margaret, David, Isabella and John (all deceased). For many years Mr. Henry was engaged in trading, and among other ventures brought salt across the mountains with a train of saddle horses. He also followed agricultural pursuits with considerable success, having settled on the farm now occupied by our subject. He was a member of the Seceder Church of Pigeon Creek, and one of its early founders. He was a very prominent man in all social organizations, and in politics he was an Old line Whig.

Nicholas Henry, father of our subject, passed his boyhood and youth on the home farm, and early in life married Margaret, daughter of John Zediker, of the same township. The following children were born to this union: Robert D.; Mary, Mrs. Nathaniel White; Louis; Joseph, who died in 1854; and John. Of these, Louis enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., and was wounded at the battle of the Wilderness in May, 1864; he died May 24 following, his body being brought home and interred in Pigeon Creek U. P. Cemetery. The father of this family died April 24, 1838, and the mother on April 8, 1862. Mr. Henry early united with the Seceder Church, and, like his parents, gave it his earnest and heartiest support; politically he was an Old line Whig; socially he was an upright citizen, highly respected in the community.

Robert D. Henry was born July 31, 1820, on his present farm in South Strabane township, and attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood. He was one of the closest students of his time, and has since taken an active interest in educational matters, continually advocating better school privileges and a more thorough system. On November, 16, 1876, he was married to Catherine, daughter of Andrew Borland, and one child, Robert Howard (now deceased) was born to them; the mother died April 27, 1889. Mr. Henry has always lived on the old home place, which was patented to Thomas Kerr. From earliest youth he has been a member of the U. P. Church at Pigeon Creek, of which he has served as trustee several years. In his political preferences he is a staunch Republican, and was, prior to the organization of his party, an Old-line Whig. He has held many offices of trust in his township, and for years served as justice of the peace; he also served one term as jury commissioner of the county, from 1876 to 1879, and is an enterprising and substantial citizen.

HENRY T. BAILEY, a well-known citizen of Amwell township, is a son of Isaac Bailey, whose father came from Chester county, Penn., and located in Washington county. Isaac Bailey was united in marriage, November 20, 1841, with Agnes Garrett, and to them were born three children: Maria (now Mrs. H. H. Kinder), Henry T. and William G., the latter of whom died June 24, 1884; he lived on the old homestead.

Henry T. Bailey was born in East Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., where he remained until he was about thirty years of age. He obtained his earlier education in the common schools, afterward, in 1866, attending Iron City College. He then attended the Southwestern State Normal School, at California, Penn., for several terms. During the years 1875 and 1876 he attended the National School of Elocution, Philadelphia, from which he graduated December 10, 1876. He was a successful teacher in the common schools, and also in East Liverpool, Ohio, as well as at California, Penn., covering a period, in all, of eight years. On November 15, 1877, Mr. Bailey was married to Miss M. Emma Swart, of Amwell township, Washington county, and three children have come to brighten their home: Inez A., born April 3, 1880; Lena S., born January 18, 1883, and Harry Hiram, born November 23, 1891. Since his marriage he has been engaged in farming and stock raising. Mr. Bailey is Republican in politics, and in 1880 was appointed census enumerator for Amwell township; in 1884 he was elected county auditor, which office he held for three years. In religion he and his family are members of the Methodist Protestant Church at Amity.

WILLIAM C. RAMSEY, a representative agriculturist of Franklin township, and one of the enterprising citizens of the county, is a native of the same, having been born in Amwell township March 5, 1843.

George Ramsey, grandfather of subject, married Mrs. Lydia Lloyd, daughter of Mordecai Chandler, of Chester county, Penn., a member of one of the leading families of that part of the

W. C. Ramsey

Keystone State. Her grandfather came from England at an early day. Mrs. George Ramsey's first husband was a Mr. Lloyd, by whom she had five children—three sons and two daughters—of whom one son, Samuel, is yet living in Amwell township, aged eighty-eight years. After Mr. Lloyd's death his widow was united in marriage with George Ramsey, and one child was born to them, Reuben, father of the subject of this sketch. Mrs. George Ramsey died, in 1872, at the home of her son in Amwell township, aged ninety five years, and to the end was able to read ordinary print without the aid of glasses. In religious faith she was a member of the Society of Friends, and always wore the habiliments peculiar to the sect. She was a close student of the Bible, and had the faculty of quoting off-hand from any portion of the Scriptures.

Reuben Ramsey was born in Washington, this county, near the corner of College and Maiden streets, and received his education in the schools of the county. He learned the trade of cooper, at which he worked for a time in the southeastern part of the county and near the river. When yet a young man he married Margaret, daughter of Michael and Elizabeth (Closser) Horn, and a native of Amwell township. After marriage the young couple made a settlement in Amwell township, where he continued to follow his trade in connection with farming. Five children were born to them, of whom the following is a brief record: William Calvin, the subject proper of this sketch, has special mention further on; Robert Hamilton was a member of Company A, P. V. C., and served to the close of the Civil war (he died of disease contracted while in the army, leaving a family now living in Indiana); George Washington died, in 1874, of lockjaw, leaving no family; Nicholas Murray is yet living on the home farm in Amwell township; John Nelson, when a young man (in 1873) died in Amwell township, of scrofula. The parents both died in Amwell township, the father in 1882, the mother October 8, 1890. In politics he was an ardent Democrat, and in religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Amity.

William C. Ramsey passed his boyhood on the home farm, and attended the common schools of the neighborhood, his primary education there being supplemented with instruction at an academy and a normal school. On August 8, 1862, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., served to the close of the war, and was discharged June 25, 1865, at Albany, N. Y. He participated in two battles—Chancellorsville and Gettysburg—at which latter he was struck by a minie ball which fractured the bone between knee and instep. By reason of this he was confined to hospital ten months, and when he recovered was transferred to the Eleventh Veteran Corps, in which he was made quartermaster sergeant, prior to which he had been a color corporal. Returning to Washington county, he followed farming during the summer months, and taught school in the winter time, teaching, in all, seven terms, part of the time prior to his enlistment. In 1870 he was elected, on the Democratic ticket, sheriff of the county, serving the term of three years with satisfaction to all. He resided in town during his shrievaltyship, and at the expiration of term purchased his present farm, situated about five miles from Washington, where his home has since been, and where he built a comfortable residence.

In 1863 Mr. Ramsey was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Jane, daughter of Levi and Cynthia Sower, of West Bethlehem township, this county, and five children have come to bless their home: Clysses Bernard, Levi Harlan, Kate Florence, Wilmetta Maud Estella and Lillie Blanche. Mr. Ramsey has held various township offices with honor to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. He and his wife are members of the East Buffalo Presbyterian Church, in which he has been an elder since 1885. When the Farmers and Mechanics Bank was organized, he assisted in placing the stock, along with Dr. Roberts, and was chosen one of the directors. Mr. Ramsey is a self-made man in all respects, having, unaided, worked his way up from the bottom rung of the ladder of success; and beginning life a poor boy, with no capital save brains and a wilting pair of hands, assisted by an indomitable perseverance, he is now the owner of 225 acres of fair farm land. He is a man of firm convictions, having the courage in all contests of standing and fighting for what he deems to be right and for the good of his fellow-men.

LUKE P. BEAZELL is a son of William Bezell, the oldest voter in Fallowfield township, who was born February 22, 1807, in Allegheny county, Penn., a son of Luke Bezell, whose mother was of Irish birth, and father a native of Germany. Luke Bezell was born in 1773, in Westmoreland county, Penn., and when a young man was married to Elizabeth English, also a native of Westmoreland county. Ten children were born to this union, of whom one son and three daughters are yet living, namely: William, Catherine (Mrs. Ails), Mary (Mrs. Smith), and Eliza (unmarried). Luke Bezell, who always followed farming, died in 1857.

William Bezell learned the shoemaker's trade, which he has followed in connection with farming. On May 6, 1830, he married Susan West, a native of Fallowfield township, this county, and they have had seven sons and three daughters, viz.: Leander N. (deceased, served three years in the army). Elmira, R. West, Luke P., Margaret E., Mary L., William H., John S., R. W. B. (deceased) and Samuel. Mr. Beazell owns ten acres of land located four and one half miles from Monongahela City. He has filled almost every public office in Fallowfield township.

Luke P. Beazell was born January 19, 1839, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, and first attended the common schools, completing his education at Monongahela City, Penn. In 1861 he enlisted in Company D, Seventy-ninth Regiment, P. V. E., under Captain McBride; they were first sent to Louisville, Ky., and took part in the battle of Perryville, then marched into Tennessee, and fought at Stone River; from the latter place they followed Bragg to Chickamauga, and after that engagement returned to Tennessee, taking part in the battles of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. At this time Mr. Beazell re-enlisted, and being assigned to the same division, joined in the contest at Buzzards Roost, Ga.; then remained with Sherman until the capture of Atlanta, afterward accompanying him in his famous march to the sea. Luke P. Beazell also fought in the battle of Bentonville, where his division had to confront Johnston's entire army and, finally, participated in the grand review at Washington, D. C. He was promoted during Sherman's raid to the rank of lieutenant, and July 12, 1865, received an honorable discharge. After the war Mr. Beazell returned home to Washington county, and opened a planing mill at Monongahela City. On August 30, 1866, he was married to Josephine, daughter of John McCrory, and she has borne him the following children: Effie, Harry, Albert, Lillie, Josie May, Bessie and Bertha; of this family Harry, Lillie and Bertha are yet living. After his marriage Mr. Beazell opened a saw and planing mill at Coal Centre, and then conducted a tannery business for three years. He afterward opened a meat market, which he kept for twenty years, and is now a partner in and superintendent of the California Glass Company, dealing also in agricultural implements. In political matters he votes with the Republican party, and has held many borough offices: he has served for fourteen years as trustee of the Southwestern State Normal School at California. He is a member and trustee of the Disciple Church. Socially he is a member of Harry Billingsley Post, No. 168, G. A. R., having joined the post as a charter member in 1867.

WILLIAM C. ANDERSON, a prominent business man of Claysville, is a native of this county, born April 5, 1831, on the Stevenson farm in Donegal township.

He is a son of Benjamin Anderson, who was born in 1789 in Ireland, and came with his parents to America and to Washington county, Penn., where his boyhood was passed on the pioneer farm. In the war of 1812 he was captain of a company of drafted infantry, First Regiment of Pennsylvania Militia, and was afterward promoted to the rank of colonel. In 1816 he was married to Margaret Cook, daughter of Gen. James Stevenson, a civil engineer of Pennsylvania, who was born July 25, 1755; he was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and was taken prisoner by the British and confined in a prison ship. To Benjamin and Margaret C. Anderson were born eight children: Ann Eliza, Mrs. John Moore, of Buffalo township, who died at the age of thirty-five years; James Stevenson, a farmer of Donegal township; Thomas Love, who died March 7, 1892; Nancy Jane, deceased at the age of nineteen; Catharine, Mrs. Jonathan Brownlee, of Buffalo township; William Cook; Mary Melila, deceased at the age of nineteen, and John, who died when seven years old. Col. Anderson passed the first five years of his married life on the old home farm, situated about three miles west of West Middletown, in Hopewell township. He then moved to Donegal township, settling about one mile west of Claysville, along the National pike, where he owned 250 acres of land, which became his permanent residence. He was a staunch Democrat, and, besides holding different township offices, he was elected county commissioner in 1836. He was brigade inspector of Washington county for seven years. Col. Anderson and his wife were members of the South Buffalo United Presbyterian Church. He died in 1861, Mrs. Anderson in 1875.

William C. Anderson was reared and educated on the home place in Donegal township, and at the age of fifteen years commenced clerking for Joel Truesdell, with whom he remained two years. He then entered into partnership with James G. Noble, of Claysville, and two years later went to Cameron, W. Va., remaining with William McConaughy for three years. In 1856 he dissolved partnership with Mr. Noble, and passed one year with Samuel Prother, in Wheeling, W. Va. In 1856 William C. Anderson was married to Eliza, daughter of John Simpson, of Wheeling, W. Va., and they had the following children: Dr. John B., Sara (Mrs. William H. Lester), Mary, Dr. Thomas (a physician in Mansfield, Penn.), Robert and William. Of these children, Mrs. Lester was a missionary in Santiago, Chili, S. A., but died after a few years' work in the service of her Master, beloved by all both for her beauty of character and person. Her only son, Harold, arrived in this county in January, 1893, making his third trip to and from his Southern home, at the age of eight and one half years. His language is Spanish, which he speaks and writes fluently with the language of his father and mother. He will remain to continue his education in the United States. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Anderson engaged in general merchandize in West Alexander, Donegal township, and ten years later came to Claysville, where he bought out Schrontz, Martin & Brokman, and is still conducting the business. His success is due to his own efforts, and he is one of the leading men of Claysville. Politically he is an active member of the Democratic party. He and his family are among the leading members of the Presbyterian Church.

I SAAC LYTLE. Robert Lytle was born in Scotland, his family removing to Ireland when he was fifteen years old. Being dissatisfied he ran away from home at that age, and came to America, locating in Westmoreland county, Penn., which was on the extreme border of civilization. He there grew up to manhood, and married Anne Mason, adopted daughter of Joseph Markle, formerly governor of this State. Her own parents had been massacred by the Indians, and their house burned to ashes, she and a little brother witnessing the sad scene from a distance and unobserved by the Indians. They ran to the nearest settlement, which was that of Mr. Markle, and being alone and friendless in the world, he immediately adopted them as members of his own family. After the marriage of Robert Lytle to Anne Mason they came to Allegheny county, Penn., and patented 115 acres of land on the waters of Peters creek. The tract was called Littleton, for which the patent was granted December 11, 1784. To them were born fourteen sons and one daughter, of whom are named, Samuel, Robert, David, John, Joseph, George, Isaac and Abraham (twins), Benjamin, William and Elizabeth (afterward Mrs. Holcroft), none of whom are now living.

Joseph Lytle was born in 1790, at the old homestead in Allegheny county, Penn. He married Margaret Murphy, of Washington county, and removed to Mercer county, same State, but after some years returned to the old homestead in Allegheny county. Joseph died leaving five children, viz.: Benjamin, Anne, Sarah, Isaac and Mary, Isaac being the only surviving member of the family at this time.

Isaac Lytle, the subject of this sketch, born May 25, 1824, removed with his widowed mother to Washington county when he was about seventeen years of age. Shortly afterward he took charge of a store for Graham, Gilfillan & Co., on the Monongahela pike, viz., Myers'. Remaining there a year, he removed the stock of goods to Brownsville, and enlarging the business remained there one year, which was in 1845. On December 31, 1846, Isaac Lytle was married to Eliza Jane Gaston, daughter of William Gaston, of Gastonville, Washington county. After their marriage he gave his attention to farming, in 1858 purchasing and locating the farm on which they now reside, at Gastonville, Washington county. Squire Lytle (as he is generally called) is a staunch member of the Democratic party, and served as justice of the peace from 1860 to 1865. He is steward and trustee of the M. E. Church, with which he is identified. The children of this family are nine in number, viz., Frances D., Marian V., James Warren, Susan E., Robert C., William Gaston, Harry M., Ethel W. and George Herbert, all of whom are living.

A N. HATHAWAY, a prominent citizen and prosperous agriculturist of Franklin township, was born June 14, 1856, on the farm of his father. Jacob Hathaway, the first of the family name of whom there is any authentic record, was born in Pennsylvania, and in early life came to Washington county, where he made the first improvements in the vicinity, surrounded by fierce animals and roaming Indians. Here the following children were born to him: Jacob, Richard, Thomas, Benjamin, Joseph, John, and one daughter, who was captured by the Indians when a child and adopted by them. On arriving at womanhood she was married to one of the tribe, and she passed the remainder of her life with the children of the forest. Mr. Hathaway was connected with the church from the date of its earliest organization, and in politics he was a Federalist.

John Hathaway, son of the pioneer Jacob, was born in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the rate schools of that period. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Electa, daughter of Timothy Lindley, and she bore him two children: Jackson and Benjamin Franklin. After their marriage the young people remained for a time on the home farm, and in 1838 moved to Greene county, Penn., where they resided until 1844, when they came to Washington county, and about one year afterward moved to the village of Ten Mile. For his second wife John Hathaway married Selena Bratton, and the children born to this union were Jane Ann (Mrs. Jacob Yoders) and James. Politically Mr. Hathaway was a Whig, taking an active interest in the affairs of his party. The family were members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Hathaway died at the home of his daughter at an advanced age.

Jackson Hathaway was born in Morris township, this county, and was educated in the common schools of the neighborhood. On May 11, 1848, he was married to Martha, daughter of James Gordon, of Washington county, and they have had seven children: William, John, Leonard, Daniel, Nelson, Sarah and Mary. In politics Mr. Hathaway was formerly a Whig, and is now an active Republican.

A. N. Hathaway, the subject proper of this memoir, received a liberal common school education, and in early life he commenced business for himself. On December 26, 1882, he was married to Belle, daughter of Jacob and Jenny Yoders, of Greene county, Penn., who were the parents of seven children, viz.: Anna, Maggie, William, John, David, Newton and Minnie. To the marriage of A. N. and Belle (Yoders) Hathaway the following children have been born: Clarence, Mattie, Frank and Eddie. Mr. Hathaway has always been a Republican, prominently identified with the party. He purchased his present residence in 1889, and now owns one of the best farms in his vicinity.

JOHAN F. SCHRONTZ, a typical self-made business man, and a prominent agriculturist of Washington county, whose highly improved farm of 200 acres, in South Strabane township, is situated one mile from Washington borough, is a native of the county, having been born in Amwell township March 2, 1828. His grandfather, John Schrontz, a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, was a merchant tailor of considerable repute in the Fatherland. In 1804 he came to the United States with his family, and for a short time they had their residence in Harmony, a small town in Beaver county, Penn. From there they moved to Hamilton county, Ohio, where they remained one year, and then came to Washington county, where the grandparents passed the remainder of their days.

They had two children, John F., father of our sketch, being the elder. He was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in the year 1781, and there learned the tailor's trade, which he followed in his native land until he was about twenty one years of age, when he set sail for America, the voyage occupying about three months. Landing in Baltimore, Md., he sojourned but a few days, and then came to Washington county, Penn., where he remained a few days, and then proceeded to Harmony, Beaver county, soon after which he entered 160 acres of land in Hamilton county, Ohio. This property he soon afterward exchanged for a farm in West Bethlehem township, this county, which in a few years he sold, and in 1817 purchased a homestead in Amwell township, where he ended his days; he bought another farm in the same township, which he also retained. In 1811 Mr. Schrontz married Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob Schidler, and the children born to this union were Catherine (wife of Zebulon Ferroll), Regina (wife of Thomas Baldwin), George, Jacob (living in Ohio), Eliza (wife of John Feathreland), Ann (wife of David Friend), and John F.

The mother of this family dying in 1839, Mr. Schrontz married, in 1842, for his second wife, Sarah Titus, of Buffalo township, this county, who bore him one child, Frank T. The father was called from earth in 1863, aged eighty-two years, a member of the Disciple Church, of which society at Pleasant Valley he was one of the organizers, from which time he was an elder and one of its most zealous supporters. In politics he was a Whig, and was a leader and counselor in the party.

John F. Schrontz passed his boyhood at the home of his birth, receiving at the subscription schools of the locality a liberal education, which was greatly improved by after reading on his part. For several years he was engaged in farming. After leaving the place of his birth in 1864, Mr. Schrontz resided in Amwell township some years, and then moved to Union township, remaining there one and one half years, and thence proceeded to Allegheny county, same State, where he was in business twelve years; then came to Somerset township, this county, thence to Middletown, remaining two years; thence to West Bethlehem township, and from there after a year's stay to Amwell township; here he remained one year, and then proceeded to Claysville, in which village he was in business four years, at the end of which time he came to his present place in South Strabane township. On February 12, 1861, Mr. Schrontz married Nancy, daughter of Samuel Blackmore, of Peters township, and the children born to this union are Frederick (living in Tully, N. Y.), Annie, Charles, Lizzie and Emma. The mother of this family dying in 1874, Mr. Schrontz married on May 11, 1875, Nancy Griffith, daughter of John Griffith, of East Finley township, this county, and their children are John F. and Clark. The family are all members of the Disciple Church, in which Mr. Schrontz has been an active worker; politically he has always been a zealous adherent of the Republican party.

JAMES, JOHN and JOSIAH BLYTHE are sons of William and Mary S. (Marshall) Blythe, the former of whom, a farmer by occupation, was born on the old family farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., in 1800.

William Blythe was a son of James Blythe, a native of the North of Ireland, whence, in company with his brothers, John and Harry, he emigrated to America. James settled on the farm that yet remains in the family, in Fallowfield township, this county; John near what is now Fayette City, Fayette Co., Penn., while Henry went to Ohio, thence to the South. They were all Scotch Irish Presbyterians. William married Mary S. Marshall, a native of Cross Creek township, Washington county, born in 1809, a daughter of James K. and Rebecca (Hanover) Marshall, the father a native of Ireland, whence, when but a child, his parents brought him to this country, and to Cross Creek township, this county. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and for his services to the Government was given a warrant for 160 acres of land. He and his wife were Presbyterians of Scotch-Irish ancestry.

Mr. and Mrs. William Blythe were the parents of eight children—five sons and three daughters—viz.: James, Alexander F. (who died in June, 1840, aged seven years), John, Emeline (who died in 1848, aged twelve years), Elmira (married to Smith Carson, and residing on their farm in Fallowfield township), Josiah, William F. (who was a soldier in the Civil war, having enlisted, when eighteen years of age, in the Sixth Heavy Artillery, Two Hundred and Twelfth Regiment P. V., and died in November, 1864, of fever incurred through exposure in the field; he was unmarried), Harriet A. (married to Morgan Redd; they reside on their farm in Ohio). The mother died in September, 1863, the father on January 31, 1883. He was the owner of 300 acres of land in Washington county, and 320 in the West.

JAMES BLYTHE, eldest son of William and Mary S. Blythe, is a prominent contractor, builder and lumber dealer in Monongahela. He was born November 9, 1831, in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., on the old homestead farm, which he now owns, and which was the property of his father and grandfather before him. He remained on the farm until he was twenty years old, when he came to Monongahela and followed the trade of a carpenter. On March 20, 1856, he was married in Monongahela to Miss Elizabeth Butler, who was born on her father's farm in Carroll township, three miles southeast of Monongahela, a daughter of Ira R. and Mary (Boyd) Butler, the former born in Chester county, the latter near Havre-de-Grace, Md. Mr. Butler was a Quaker, and was descended from the followers of William Penn. The latter gave 1,000 acres to the family ancestor in Chester county, and a lot in Philadelphia, which latter is still in the possession of the family. The late Gen. Benjamin F. Butler was of the same family. In 1859 James Blythe moved to the old homestead farm in Fallowfield township, which he purchased in 1869. In 1876 he engaged in the lumber business under the firm name of Foster, Blythe & Neel. In 1884 he moved into Monongahela, where he has since resided. He and his wife have had children as follows: William H., Burgess of Charleroi, and engaged in real estate and farming (he married Miss Joanna Carson, who died in 1871, and they had one daughter, Millie); Ira R., a farmer owning a farm near Scenery Hill, Bethlehem township (he married Miss Josephine Carson, and they have five children: Cora, Luella, Alpha, James and Russell); and Mary A., residing with her parents. Mr. Blythe is a member of Henry M. Phillips Lodge, A. F. & A. M. He is a Republican, and has held various offices of trust, including president of the select and common councils. In October, 1862, he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Fifty-fourth P. V. I., serving until July, 1863, and was first sergeant of his company. Mr. and Mrs. Blythe are members of the M. E. Church, and rank among the leading citizens of their town.

JOHN BLYTHE, third son of William and Mary S. Blythe, was born on the old farm in Fallowfield township. He is a prominent architect and lumber merchant of Monongahela. He has been twice married, first to Miss Martha Pierce, by whom he had four children, only one of them surviving, Lorena, a thoroughly accomplished and well-educated young lady. She spent one year in an art school in Paris, France, and now resides in Monongahela. Her mother died in 1867, and Mr. Blythe then married Miss Lavina Campbell, by whom he has two children, Harry and May.

JOSIAH BLYTHE, fourth son of William and Mary S. Blythe, was born on the old home farm in Fallowfield township. When he was a youth his father purchased a farm in Carroll township, this county, to which Josiah removed, and has here since resided. At the death of his father he bought the interest in this farm of the remaining heirs. In 1872 he married Miss Nannie S. Teeters, of Monongahela, a daughter of Abraham and Fanny S. Teeters, and to this union have been born six children, as follows: William J., Minnie C., Lulu V., Sallie E., Laura V. and Norman B., all yet living under the parental roof. Mr. Blythe is a thorough French scholar, speaking the language fluently, as well as reading and writing it. He is a Republican, and takes an active interest in all political matters. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church. He is engaged in general agriculture, including stock raising, and makes a specialty of Poland China swine. He is also interested in other fine stock, including fancy poultry, turkeys and geese, of which he breeds many fine specimens of different varieties.

SAMUEL McFARLAND (deceased) was the son of Samuel McFarland, who was born in Northern Ireland, and was married to Jane Fulton. He (the father) emigrated to America about the year 1793, first living in or about Philadelphia, Penn., then coming to Washington, Penn., and settling in Smith township. On April 6, 1804, he bought 159 acres of land of Thomas Glass, and on September 3, of the same year, purchased 102 acres of Ephraim Chidester.

He settled upon the former piece of land, and his family were all born and reared there. The farm remained in the family name until about the year 1890, when the heirs of his son Thomas sold it to Maxiel Work. The children of Samuel McFarland are now all dead except Andrew. The son William settled upon one of his father's farms, near the home place. John settled on another farm, sold it and removed to Ohio. David, a Presbyterian minister, was married to Amanda Reed, first located in Peoria, Ill., then at Santa Fe, N. M.; then at San Diego, Cal., and finally became a missionary to the Indians, and died at Lapwai, Idaho; his widow afterward went into the Alaska mission field, being the first woman there. Joseph went to California during the gold fever of 1849, and died there. Thomas lived on the old home farm until a few years before his death, then removed to the borough of McDonald in the same county, where he died in December, 1886. Andrew spent most of his life in Cross Creek village, Washington county, then removed to Burgettstown, and thence to Missouri, where he is living with his son. Mary never married, but died in the household of her brother Samuel in 1859. Catherine married Thomas Farrar, and died in 1880 at the residence of her daughter in Peoria, Ill. Jane married James Farrar, and afterward died in Ohio.

Samuel McFarland, the subject of this sketch, was born June 11, 1812, in Smith township, Washington Co., Penn., and all his life was spent in that township and the adjoining one of Robinson, except the year 1872, when he lived in the city of Allegheny. On May 25, 1837, he was united in marriage with Jane Van Eman, who bore him children as follows: Margaret, born January 28, 1838; William Van Eman, born March 11, 1840; Sarah Caroline, born August 12, 1842; Mary Catherine, born December 29, 1844; John Wiley, born August 23, 1848, and Joseph Fulton, born August 11, 1850. Of this family, Margaret married Thomas Donaldson, of Candor, December 18, 1862, and had nine children, of whom three are now living: Joseph, John and Frank. William Van E. married Jane Dunbar, of Steubenville, Ohio, and to them were born three children: Omer, Charles and Ira (Omer died when three years old, in Washington county, Penn.; William then moved with his family to Sumner, Wash., where he still resides; his wife died in 1893). Sarah Caroline married October 21, 1868, W. C. Aiken, an elder in the Centre U. P. Church, of Midway, Penn. (their children were Joseph and Samuel; the mother died April 3, 1873, and two years later little Samuel died). Mary Catherine married August 22, 1867, James P. McCalmont, of Paris, Washington county, an elder in the U. P. Church, and they had born to them six children: Luella, Jennie, Samuel, Joseph, John and Robert. Rev. John Wiley was married in 1883, at Ft. Wrangle, Alaska, to Margaret Dunbar, of Steubenville, Ohio (they gave a few years of mission work at the McFarland Home, Ft. Wrangle, Alaska; at their own request they were transferred to the Hoonyah Mission, Alaska, where they still labor, the first and only missionaries in that far-off region; their children were Edna and Harry Seward, the last named dying of diphtheria in his third year, and buried in the Hoonyah Mission cemetery). Joseph F., now an attorney at law in Washington, Penn., was married in 1882 to Mary A., daughter of Rev. James and Katherine Ranken, and their children are Samuel Audley and Joseph. Mrs. Jane Van-Eman McFarland died August 24, 1853, and, for his second wife, Samuel McFarland was married May 22, 1861, to Matilda Duncan, who was killed by a run-away team April 23, 1865. On December 25, 1866, Mr. McFarland was married to his third wife, in the person of Margaret Bingham, and by this union, one son, Albert Agnew, was born January 6, 1872. Mr. McFarland was a farmer, but during the last sixteen years of his life, was retired from active business, and during all the years of his activity he was a constant sufferer; he was a member of the Presbyterian Church from early manhood, contributing liberally to its support, and was interested in all its work. In politics he was an unswerving member of the Democratic party, but was not an active politician, and never asked for any office. He died June 29, 1889.

Samuel McFarland, a nephew of our subject, and son of William, was a missionary in Siam, and is now filling a position in the Educational Department of the Court of Siam.

Capt. Charles W. Bingham was an officer in the army in the war of 1812. He was born in Adams county, remaining there during his boyhood and early manhood, and was married to Margaret Agnew, of Emmitsburg, Frederick Co., Md., who bore him children as follows: Sophia, William, Agnew, Albert, Martha, Margaret, James, Emma, Mary, and Charles Carrol. Of this family, all are dead but Margaret, Dr. James (of Clinton, Allegheny Co., Penn.), Emma (wife of Dr. W. V. Riddile), and Mary. The father was a Democrat, and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Margaret Bingham, above mentioned, is the widow of Samuel McFarland, the subject of this sketch.

WILLIAM PARCEL was born March 30, 1819, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., and is a representative of an early pioneer family of the county, who were originally natives of New Jersey. His grandfather, John Parcel, was three times married, and by his first wife had six children—three sons and three daughters—all of whom went West with the exception of one daughter; by the second wife there were two children, Stephen and Phebe; by the third marriage there were no children. John Parcel died at the age of eighty nine years, his last wife having preceded him to the grave some time.

Stephen Parcel, son of this old pioneer, was born in 1789 in Washington county. He learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed in his earlier days at Point Industry, Morris township. Later he conducted a mercantile business at the same place, and during the latter years of his life gave his attention to farming. He was very successful in each of his vocations, and accumulated a considerable fortune. Early in life he married Miss Doreas Ambler, of Belmont county, Ohio, daughter of William Ambler, and they became the parents of ten children, as follows: John and Sally, both deceased; Phœbe, widow of John Gardner, of Bellefontaine, Ohio; William, the subject of this sketch; Stephen, Isaac and Doreas, all three deceased; Elizabeth Jane, widow of Lewis Hoge, and now living at the old home (she has one son, James Lewis); and Samuel Ambler and Solomon Lee, both deceased. The father died July 4, 1844, the mother a year later, both at the age of fifty-four years. The Parcel family were at one time members of the Mount Herman Baptist Church, later of the Benlah Baptist Church. In his political preferences he was an Old-line Whig.

William Parcel received his education in the subscription school of the neighborhood, which was held in an old log dwelling. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, and now owns and resides on the farm which was owned by both his father and grandfather, and which is a valuable property, located one mile southwest of Sparta. With the exception of twelve years devoted to general merchandising at Point Industry (now Sparta) Mr. Parcel has given his exclusive attention to farming. Success has crowned his honest efforts, and he is now the possessor of a comfortable competence. He has never married. His sister Elizabeth Jane lost her husband some thirty-five years ago, and she has since lived with our subject. In 1871 Mr. Parcel was elected a justice of the peace on the Republican ticket, in a Democratic township, which speaks volumes for his popularity, especially when it is considered that he was again nominated, though he declined re-election. In church connection he is a Baptist.

ANDERSON HOOTMAN, a well-read and intelligent citizen of Amwell township, is a grandson of David Hootman, who was of German birth, and as a soldier in the pay of the British came to America during the Revolutionary war. No sooner did an opportunity offer, however, than the brave young German deserted from the British ranks and enlisted as a drummer boy with the patriots in their struggle for liberty. After the close of the war he remained in America, locating on a farm in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., where as a true patriot he resided from 1780 until his death, which occurred in 1859. The young soldier appreciated liberty so highly that he never drew any pay for his service in the cause of liberty. After settling on his farm he married, and had children as follows: sons—Henry, Jacob, John, David and Christopher; daughters—Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Shaler and Mrs. Deeds. Mr. Hootman was a Democrat, and held several offices in the district in which he resided.

David Hootman, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in 1793 in Donegal township, where he passed his youthful days. He attended the rate school in the neighborhood of his home, and became a well informed and successful man. When about the age of seventeen years he learned the blacksmith's trade, and after serving an apprenticeship of four years he opened a shop on the Monongahela pike at the then well-known "Parkinson House." In 1815 David Hootman was united in marriage with Nancy, daughter of Benjamin Parkinson, of Nottingham township, and she bore him nine children, viz.: sons—Benjamin, David, John, Christopher, William and Anderson; and daughters—Clarinda, Polly and Nancy. David Hootman began life with 6½ cents, and at his death his estate was valued at $40,000. For years he was captain in the State militia, and at one time he was a candidate for the State Legislature, but, having been prominent in advocating the Jefferson doctrine, he was defeated. He and his wife were for many years members of the Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church.

Benjamin Parkinson, father of this Mrs. David Hootman, took a very active part in the Whiskey Rebellion, which rising was the cause of the repeal of the excise law, a statute at that time too grievous and burdensome for the then West to bear. The document containing Parkinson's pardon, granted by George Washington, is still in the possession of the Hootman family.

Anderson Hootman, the subject proper of this brief memoir, was born on February 27, 1832, in Nottingham township, this county, and spent his early youth on the home farm, receiving his education in the common schools of his district, and remaining under the parental roof until he was twenty-five years of age. In 1859 he was married to Emily Leysa, of Somerset township, and the names of the children born to this union are David A., Mary F., John E., Lizzie B., Maximilian, Nancy K., William A., Franklin W., Osceola (deceased), O. Vern and Harry H. Some time after his marriage Anderson Hootman moved to Monongahela City, and engaged in mercantile business, but sickness in the family compelled him to close his store and return to the farm. Twenty four years ago he came to his present home, where he has since remained industriously engaged in agricultural pursuits. He has accumulated a comfortable property on the Cumberland pike in Amwell township, and also owns one hundred acres in South Strabane township. Mr. Hootman has always been a patriotic Democrat, and as a close observer of the financial issues of the country, is now in favor of a Third, or People's, party, in order to protect the mass of American industry, as he is of the opinion that the two great national parties have diverged too far from the cause his grandfather fought for. Mrs. Hootman and a portion of the family are members of Mt. Pleasant Presbyterian Church.

DAVID McCLURE is a grandson of James and Nancy (Crouch) McClure, who were born in Scotland, whence they emigrated to Pennsylvania in an early day. They settled on a farm in North Strabane township, Washington county, where thirteen children were born to them, and where the father died in 1854.

David McClure (father of our subject), a son of this pioneer couple, was born in the year 1802, in North Strabane township. He grew to manhood on the home farm, and in 1823 was married to Mary Cameron, who was born in 1802, a resident of the same neighborhood. Eleven children were born to them, of whom the following are living: James, David, Samuel, Mary, Joseph, Belle (wife of William Hickson), Martha (Mrs. Robert Kerr), William and Robert. Mr. McClure was a prosperous and influential farmer. In politics he affiliated with the Democratic party, and in religious connection both he and his wife were very active members of the old Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church, with which they were connected many years. Mr. McClure died in 1876, having been preceded by his wife in 1834.

David McClure was born October 20, 1830, in North Strabane township, and was educated in the schools of the vicinity. On November 16, 1848, he was united in marriage with Nannie A. Thomas, who was born February 20, 1831, in North Strabane township, a daughter of Jonathan Thomas. Jonathan Thomas was born February 16, 1803, in Washington county, Penn., and in 1825 was united in marriage with Elizabeth Cowyer, also a native of this county, born November 9, 1806. Their family consisted of the following children: Elizabeth, wife of G. G. Good (of Washington county, Ark.), Phoebe Martha, Maggie, Lydia, Liverton and Nannie A., all now deceased except Elizabeth, Liverton and Nannie A. Mr. Thomas was a prominent farmer and early settler of Washington county. In church connection he and his wife were devout members of the Centre Presbyterian Church. He died August 9, 1840, and was followed by his wife December 27, 1869. Mr. and Mrs. McClure are the parents of nine children, namely: Mary (wife of William Willett); Maggie (Mrs. J. Smith); John Boyd (married to Miss Jennie Dunn); William W. (married to Miss Elizabeth Dunn); Allie B. (wife of George Nelson); and Wheeler T., Sadie M., David R. and Jennie (all four residing with their parents). Mr. McClure has been prominently identified with the political history of North Strabane township. In his political preferences he is a Democrat. He has been auditor of the township three years, road-commissioner thirteen years, and is a liberal contributor to all worthy enterprises. In religious connection he and his estimable wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church.

ARTHUR CAMPBELL. This gentleman, who stands among the first of the successful and representative business men of Smith township, is a descendant of an old and well-known family of pioneer settlers.

Arthur Campbell (his grandfather) was born and reared in County Donegal, Ireland, where he was married, after which he emigrated to America. The young people came to Pennsylvania and located permanently on a farm in Smith township, Washington county, situated about two miles west of Burgettstown, then a wild and uncultivated tract of land. The following children were born to them: William (who moved to Jefferson county, Ohio, where he died), John (always lived on the home place), Robert (mentioned below), Arthur (married, and resided in Jefferson, then called Cross Creek, township), Joseph A. (a physician, who practiced in western Pennsylvania), Nancy (never married), Elizabeth (wife of James Gibson, of Hanover township), and Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Elder), all now deceased. Mr. Campbell accumulated a considerable property, and was a highly esteemed citizen. He died on the old homestead.

Robert Campbell was born on the home place in Smith township, this county, and in boyhood he assisted in the farm duties, and attended the subscription schools. In 1811 he was married to Jean, daughter of Ebenezer Smith, of Smith township, this county, and she bore him children as follows: Eleanor, born November 27, 1812 (became the first wife of Squire John Prondfit, of Burgettstown); Arthur, born January 20, 1815; Elizabeth, born June 20, 1818; Ebenezer, born May 4, 1820; William, born December 2, 1822 (went to California, and has not been heard from for years); Martha, born December 25, 1824, married to John McGough; Margaret, born September 25, 1827, married to Samuel Wilson, of near Gordonsville, Va.; and James, born in 1829, died at the age of fourteen years. Of these children the only one yet living is Arthur. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell settled on a part of the old home farm where he became a very successful business man. Politically he was a member of the Democratic party. He died on the farm, and his widow, who survived him many years, passed her last days among her children.

Arthur Campbell received a limited education in the subscription schools of the neighborhood of his place of birth. On June 15, 1843, he was married to Eliza J. Proudfit, who was born January 2, 1817, daughter of John P. Proudfit, an early settler of Smith township. Five children were born to their union, viz.: Jane E., at home; John L., a carpenter, living at home; Amanda M., at home, and who for the past two years has suffered from rheumatism so as to be unable to walk; Elizabeth C., deceased in infancy, and Robert J., married to Lulu Mayo (a daughter of Frank and Margaret Mayo, residents of Ohio), and living in the old house on his father's farm. To them were born three little girls: Mary A., Ida M. and Nellie P. On December 8, 1892, Mrs. Eliza J. Campbell died suddenly of paralysis, and she is buried in the cemetery at Burgettstown. Mr. Campbell remained on the old farm until he was twenty-seven years of age (at which time he married), and then moved to his present place, adjoining the old home where he was born. He is a very successful agriculturist, and devotes some time to the raising of fine bred stock. In politics he is a lifelong Democrat. His wife was a member of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown.

ROBERT M. CARRONS. Leslie Carrons, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a son of Daniel Carrons, who lived in County Down, Ireland, where he followed the vocation of farmer. He died there in the latter part of the eighteenth century, leaving Leslie, his only child, with little inheritance save a good education, which, however, proved a sufficient capital for this brave son of "Old Erin." In 1797 Leslie Carrons was married to Mary Chambers, daughter of James and Mary Chambers, and of this union were born: Daniel, James and Mary, before the parents decided to emigrate from Ireland and seek a home in the New World. The journey was made in about 1803, and the little family came to Pennsylvania, locating first at Chambers' Mills, Washington county, afterward removing to Amity, Amwell township, where they remained some years. In 1801 Mr. Carrons purchased the "Acheson" place of 161 acres, to which (a short time afterward) he added the "Stokley" tract of ninety acres, took possession, and there spent the remainder of his life in farming and conducting a distillery. After the family came to Pennsylvania three other children were born: Eliza (Mrs. Elkins), late of Iowa; Sarah, wife of Dr. James Stevens, of Washington county; and Robert, late of Henry county, Iowa. Mr. Carrons was a self-made and public spirited man, and was always consulted by his neighbors for advice upon any troublesome question; he was very successful in business. Politically he was an Orange man in Ireland, and a Democrat in America. He was a charter member of the Episcopal Church at Washington, and assisted in building it up. He died in 1851, his wife in 1876, in her ninety-eighth year.

Robert Carrons, the father of our subject, was born in Amity, Amwell township, this county, October 12, 1812, and received in the common schools a fair education, which he afterward made the foundation of a broad and varied store of knowledge. In 1817 he moved to Henry county, Iowa, and began farming upon a half section of land, to which he added as opportunity offered, until at the time of his death he owned nearly one thousand three hundred acres. On October 4, 1849, he was united in marriage with Jane Munce, daughter of Robert and Mary Munce, of South Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., and of this union three children were born: Leslie, born January 4, 1851; Mary, born May 30, 1853; Robert M., born November 2, 1854. Mr. Carrons was a conservative business man, who, unaided, gained enviable success. He was an enthusiastic Republican, yielding to no man in his loyalty to his party. He died in Iowa, December 7, 1883.

Robert M. Carrons was born in Henry county, Iowa, and after attending the common schools until seventeen years of age, passed one year at an academy. When twenty two years of age he came to Washington county, Penn., spending one winter there. In 1877 he again returned to Washington county, and began business for himself. He had been deeded his Uncle Daniel's interest in the farm, and some years afterward he bought out the heirs of his Uncle James. On October 4, 1877, Mr. Carrons married Emma Chambers, daughter of George and Catherine Chambers, and they are the parents of two children: Frank Leslie, born October 1, 1878, and Kate Jane, born May 20, 1890. Our subject is radically independent in politics. He is now engaged in farming and stock raising; beginning with Black-top Merino sheep, he now breeds Ayrshire cattle, and has bought some high-priced stock, sparing no expense to secure the best. His first lot was purchased, in 1880, of Dr. Sturdevant, of Massachusetts, and he has now a herd of 100 head of this famous breed, said to be the largest herd of Ayrshires in the West, and the second largest in America.

JOHN B. HAINER, one of the successful farmers of West Bethlehem township, is a son of G. H. Hainer, who was born in Germany, where he married Christina Loewer. They emigrated to this country and to Washington county, Penn., in 1832, bringing with them the following children: John B., Mary, Henry, Christina, Adam, Catherine and George; two other children—Elizabeth and Nicholas—were born in America. They are all living except Catherine. Nicholas and Adam are in the grocery business and live in New Castle, Penn.; Elizabeth is in Wheeling, W. Va.; Mary, George and Henry live in Ohio, and Christina is in Indiana.

John B. Hainer, son of the pioneer G. H., was born January 26, 1816, in Germany, and attended the schools of his native land, being under one instructor seven years. At the expiration of that time he was released from further attendance through the aid of influential friends, although the German law requires eight years' schooling for every boy. He then came to America with his father, and when nineteen years of age assisted in the cultivation of a farm in South Strabane township. He married Elizabeth Lauterbauch, who had also come to America, her father settling in Washington county. The following children have been born to them: Henry, John, George, Catherine, Adam, Jacob, Mary and Edward. Henry died at the age of twenty-eight years; the remainder are residents of Washington county.

Jacob Hainer was born in Canton township, this county, April 28, 1851. He now lives with his father. On October 17, 1874, he married Esther, daughter of Frederick Rasel, and they have the following family: George, Annie, Sadie, Norman, Flora and Nellie, all yet under the paternal roof. Mr. Hainer and his father, who resides with him, are both staunch Republicans, and in religion all the family are members of the Lutheran Church.

THE ARCHER FAMILY. Samuel Archer was born in Scotland in 1745. He, with a number of others, left that country on account of religious persecutions, and went to Ireland, where he married Miss Nancy Thompson, about 1768.

In 1770 he, together with many others, emigrated to America, arriving in the fall of that year in Baltimore, at which place they separated, locating at different places. Mr. Archer seems to have had two brothers in the company who settled in separate localities. From different branches of the Archer family have sprung some of the eminent men of this country, who have occupied prominent positions in the national councils, they having occupied seats in Congress with credit to themselves and honor to their country. Mr. Archer, soon after landing in America, removed to Carlisle, Penn., and took a claim to a tract of land. While he was building a house on his land, which was some distance from the settlement, a heavy snow-storm filled the paths, and on his return in the evening he lost his way and remained in the woods all night; his feet were so badly frozen that amputation above the ankles became necessary. His faithful dog laid down on his knees, which prevented his limbs from further freezing, and perhaps saved his life. He was confined to his house some two years before his limbs were healed. About eight years after this occurrence he removed from Carlisle to Canonsburg, and about 1799 he removed to Brooke county, W. Va., to a farm lately owned by Samuel Hindman, now by Ross Wright, where he cultivated a nursery, being obliged to walk on his knees. His wife and two daughters died and were buried on that farm. Mr. Archer died about 1819, near Independence, Penn., and is buried in Mt. Hope Church cemetery.

Ebenezer Archer, son of Samuel Archer, was born about 1770, and came with his parents to Washington county, Penn., when young. In 1794 he married Miss Elizabeth Jordon, and removed to Brooke county, W. Va., in 1799, when he settled on the farm now owned by Mr. Roy Glass, his great-grandnephew, near the Eldersville road, about two miles east of Steubenville, Ohio. He died on that farm in 1814, and was buried in the Cross Creek United Presbyterian cemetery. Ebenezer Archer was a very exemplary man, of great piety, and a ruling elder in the Associate (or Seceder) Church; a strong friend of peace and a good neighbor.

Samuel Archer, son of Ebenezer Archer, was born near Canonsburg, Penn., July 11, 1795, and came with his parents to Brooke county, W. Va., when about four years old. In March, 1821, he married Miss Mary Lee, by which marriage he reared a family of six children—five sons and one daughter—their names being: Elizabeth, William Lee, Ebenezer, David Thompson, James and Samuel. In 1831 he bought the George Atkison farm, situated one half mile from the river, directly east of Steubenville, Ohio, where he long resided and filled positions of honor and trust in his neighborhood. After residing for a time at Washington and Burgettstown, Penn., and at the home of his son, William L., he returned to the old homestead in Brooke county, W. Va., where he died at the home of his son James, August 14, 1887, at the advanced age of over ninety-two years, honored and respected by all who knew him. His first wife died May 1, 1851; his second wife, who was Mrs. Jane (Parkhill) McNary, of Jefferson county, Ohio, died in December, 1861.

WILLIAM LEE ARCHER, the principal subject of this sketch, was born in Brooke county, W. Va., April 15, 1824. When he grew to manhood he attended the academy in Holiday's Cove, W. Va., thus obtaining a liberal education. After assisting in conducting his father's business some years, his father settled him on one of the choicest farms in the neighborhood, where he now resides. After manfully, by his own exertion, freeing himself from debt, he rose to be one of the honored and successful business men of Jefferson township, and none more richly deserve the enviable reputation that they have won, than this representative citizen. On October 16, 1859 he was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Louisa, daughter of James Whiting, of Torrington, Litchfield Co., Conn., a representative of that famous family of Whitings whose history is inseparable with the early history of that State. Miss Whiting, with her early religious training and education, and New England culture and refinement, was eminently qualified to make their home what it is—a "model home."

As a result of their union children have been born as follows: Mary A., born September 2, 1861, died March 7, 1865; Lizzie J., born August 26, 1863, died January 27, 1865; Nannie Lee, born November 25, 1865, died June 6, 1877; Harriet B., born May 2, 1871, and Susan C., born April 26, 1874; the latter two have been educated at the best institutions of learning in the country. Mr. Archer and his family, true to the faith of their Scotch-Irish ancestry, are members and supporters of the Presbyterian Church.

MARY ANN GRABLE, an estimable lady of Bentleyville, is a representative of one of the old families of Washington county. She is a daughter of John Grable, a native of the county, where his whole life was passed in farming. In early manhood Mr. Grable was united in marriage with Mary Carson, who was born September 8, 1796, and she bore him children, as follows: Julia A. (wife of John McCormick, of Washington county), Mary Ann (whose name opens this sketch), Julia A. (deceased), Jerome (also deceased) and Joel. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Grable settled in Fallowfield township, this county, where he died in 1822. Mrs. Grable was afterward married to Charles Farquhar, who was born August 6, 1800, and was by occupation a farmer and tanner. They passed their wedded life in Washington county, and here Mr. Farquhar died in 1871, being followed by his wife in 1881, in her eighty-fifth year. She left four children by this marriage: Elizabeth (born March 13, 1834), John G., Salome and Isabella, all of whom are deceased save Elizabeth.

The Misses Mary Ann Grable and Elizabeth Farquhar have continued, since the death of their parents, to reside together on the old homestead. They have an abundance of this world's goods left to them by the industry and prudence of their parents, and are now only waiting the summons which will unite them on the other shore, in an unbroken family circle, never to part.

ALEXANDER TOTTFEN is a native and prominent citizen of Washington county, Penn., but in his veins flows the warm blood of Spanish ancestors. William Totten passed the early portion of his life near Red river, Penn., and afterward came to Hillsborough, Washington county. He was a tanner, and also worked at various other employments. When a young man he was united in marriage with Nellie Hamilton, who bore him five children, all of whom are deceased. The father passed away in his ninety-fifth year, and his widow lived to celebrate her one hundred and fourteenth birthday.

James Totten, the eldest son of William and Nellie Totten, was born about the year 1761 on the place in Washington county, Penn. He learned the blacksmith's trade, continuing in that business for twenty years, then settled on a farm. In personal appearance he was large, portly, and good-looking. He must have been a worthy representative of the gallant Spanish señors who never brook an insult, for at the age of eighty years he conquered the bully of Washington county, who had dared to call him a liar. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Margaret Pister, a resident of Upper Ten Mile creek. They were the parents of nine children, viz.: Sarah, Ellen, Hannah (deceased), George, Alexander, Henry, Marian (deceased), Amira (deceased) and Lavina.

Alexander Totten was born September 18, 1826, near Bentleyville, Washington Co., Penn. His youth was passed on the home place, and he then learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed for three years. He afterward worked for almost forty years at carpentry, and since 1848 has given his time to contracting. On August 12, 1846, he was married to Elizabeth Richey, of Washington county, Penn., and they had three children: Sarah, Mary, and an infant. The mother died in 1853, and on March 16, 1858, Alexander Totten married, for his second wife, Mary Dick, a native of Allegheny, Penn. The children born to this marriage were: Alexander and Annie. This wife died in 1863, and on April 14, 1864, he married Margaret Murphy, whose children were Maggie, James, Etta and an infant son, who was buried beside his mother in 1876. After the death of this wife Mr.

Totten married, September 21, 1883, Samantha Figley, of Washington county, who has borne him five children, namely: Lillie, Robert, Katie, and Amelia and Adelia (twins). Mr. Totten has leased one hundred and twenty eight acres of the home place; he owns a farm in Allegheny county, Penn. He votes with the Democratic party, and in Church relations was connected with the Baptist Society during his residence in Somerset township.

THOMAS HUDSON WILLIAMS (deceased) was born August 8, 1834, in Carroll township, Washington Co., Penn., a son of James and Nancy (Manown) Williams. James Williams, whose father came from Ireland in an early day, was also a native of Washington county, born July 4, 1801, was educated at the subscription schools and reared to the occupation of a farmer. He married Nancy, daughter of William Manown, of Allegheny county, Penn., and the children born to them were as follows: William, Margaret (Mrs. A. C. Sampson), John, Thomas H., Sarah (Mrs. Aaron Browdy), Robert, Leomon, David and Frank. In 1828 Mr. Williams settled on the home place in Carroll township, and here died October 4, 1869, his widow following him to the grave June 12, 1892. In addition to plain farming he was a prominent stock raiser and dealer. He was a director of the Monongahela cemetery. Politically he was originally a Whig, and on the formation of the party became a Republican; in matters pertaining to religion he was a member and zealous supporter of the M. E. Church.

Thomas H. Williams, the subject of these lines, was educated at a private school in Monongahela, and at the age of sixteen entered Duff's Business College in Pittsburgh. On leaving this, in 1852, he set sail from New York for California, via Cape Horn, the voyage consuming six weeks. On his arrival at the "New Eldorado" he at once commenced to work in the mines, at which he continued two years; then was engaged in banking at Mariposa, with Sullivan & Cashman, with whom he remained until 1858, when he returned home by the same route he went. We next find Mr. Williams at Pittsburgh, where he was engaged in the wholesale grocery business for two years; from there he went to Oil City, where for fifteen years he was engaged in general merchandising and oil producing. In 1875 he returned to Monongahela, and purchased the home farm, where he passed the remainder of his days, dying June 11, 1891. On September 21, 1859, he was united in marriage with M. Frances, daughter of Aaron Browdy, of Allegheny, and four children were born to them, viz.: Harry, Mattie, Bertha (deceased), and Frances (living). Mr. Williams was a Republican, and at one time served as mayor of Monongahela; in church connection he was a prominent and influential Presbyterian. In all educational matters he took special interest, and was instrumental in having the present public-school building erected; being at the time secretary of the school board and president of the building committee. He was kind-hearted and generous to a fault, and was recognized by all as a public-spirited, upright citizen. His widow is a resident of Monongahela.

JOSEPH HARRISON. Washington county is unusually favored with citizens who have ever been as deeply interested in her progress as in their own, and who have taken an active part in the promotion of all public enterprises. Among this class of early settlers Harrison is a familiar and honored name, the early representatives of the family, at present under consideration, having emigrated from England to Maryland many years ago.

James Harrison remained there, and in early manhood he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Hudgel, a native of Berkeley county, W. Va., who bore him the following children: William, James, George W., Joseph (all born in Virginia), and Eliza, Mrs. Harriet Van Gilder (living in Centreville, Washington county) and Maria (deceased), all three born in East Bethlehem township, Washington Co., Penn. Of this family Joseph and Harriet are the only ones yet living. In 1817 the family came to Washington county, Penn., where the father settled on a farm near West Brownsville. He died in 1825, followed by his widow in 1861. In politics he was an active member of the Whig party. Of their family, William purchased a farm in Iowa, near Oskaloosa, in 1868, and died in July, 1868, leaving his family in good circumstances. James settled on a farm in Harrison county, W. Va., and died in 1892. George W. settled on a farm in East Bethlehem township, Washington county, and died in 1890.

Joseph Harrison passed his youth in Washington county, and at the age of eighteen years began to work for himself. After ten years' hard labor he and a brother invested in a farm near Logansport, Cass Co., Ind., but his health failing, Joseph induced his brother to sell the property. After disposing of the place they returned to Washington county and bought a farm located on the National pike, near Brownsville. In 1867 he was united in marriage with Orella Tower, daughter of G. H. Tower, a native of Massachusetts, who graduated from Brown University in 1776, studied law, went to Warren, Ohio, and won a wide reputation in his chosen work. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are the parents of two children: Joseph Tower, and Mary Orella, who is now attending the Pittsburgh Female College. In a few years after their return to Washington county, Mr. Harrison bought his brother's interest in the farm, which contains 155 acres of valuable land, on which stands an imposing brick mansion erected in 1878, the most elegant structure to be seen for many miles. Mr. Harrison has been a very successful man, and his present prosperity has been due to his own individual effort, for he never received financial aid from any source. In politics he has always been a Whig and Republican, and of late years has been also a Prohibitionist. It has been seventy years since he has tasted whisky, and in looking over his past life he attributes his success in a great measure to his temperate habits.

ELIZABETH M. BOON is a lady whose ancestors were among the earliest and most prominent pioneers of the county. Galbraith Stewart, the maternal grandfather of Miss Boon, was practically the founder of the prosperous town of West Middletown. The warm blood of Irish patriots coursed through the veins of this pioneer, a worthy representative of his race. Galbraith Stewart was born in America, and early evinced the economical and industrious traits of his people. He learned the blacksmith's trade, and in early manhood was united in marriage with Elizabeth Scott (a native of Scotland), who with two other children was left an orphan at an early age. She was afterward brought to Pennsylvania by an uncle, and there grew to womanhood. Mr. Stewart secured a large tract of land, lying north of the present site of West Middletown, and after his marriage erected a shop and the first cabin of what afterward became West Middletown. It was situated on the north side of the road, which was much traveled by emigrants for Ohio county, Va., this being for some time the only building in the neighborhood. Plenty of custom came to the pioneer smithy, and when her household duties were done Mrs. Stewart would work the bellows, while her husband mended a chain or forged a bolt for the broken wagon of some traveler.

As time passed on the place became a stopping point for westward bound emigrants, and Mr. Stewart erected a more commodious building for the accommodation of travelers. The fire in the blacksmith shop died out as the labors of the tavern keeper and his wife increased. Prosperity came to them. Mr. Stewart erected several other buildings, and the nucleus of West Middletown was formed. In after years "Grandma Stewart" often declared to the children about her that the happiest days of her life were passed in the little one-room cabin by the roadside. For in following the path of duty which lay before them, they found that priceless pearl for which many a wealthy pleasure seeker has sought in vain—contentment. One by one little children came to bless their home, until eleven were gathered at their fireside, and only once did the angel of death hover over this happy pioneer family. Ten of the children lived to an adult age; seven of them were daughters: Eleanor (married to Thomas Boon), Mary (wife of Thomas McCall), Eliza (wife of Dr. David Adams), Margaret (married to James McFadden), Rebecca (Mrs. David McKennen), Harriet (wife of George Pentecost) and Clarissa (unmarried). The sons were William (married to Mary Cummins), Benjamin (married to Elizabeth Acheson) and Galbraith (married to Phoebe McKeever). Of these, Clarissa is the only one still living; she is residing in the State of Ohio.

Eleanor Stewart (mother of the subject of this sketch) was married to Thomas Boon, who came from the eastern part of Pennsylvania and was a grandnephew of the famous pioneer, Daniel Boone, to whose descendants our subject is said to bear a strong resemblance. Shortly after his marriage Mr. Boon removed to Wellsburg, W. Va., and engaged in the New Orleans trade, making frequent trips and prospering. While on one of his trips in the year 1822, he was stricken with yellow fever and died in a short time. His widow, with her four children: Elizabeth M., Thomas, Stewart and William, returned to West Middletown, where she resided until her death, which occurred April 10, 1874. She never married again, but mourned for the companion of her youth until called to meet him. Her constant companion was her only daughter, who remained with her. Her solace and comfort was her deep-seated faith in the teachings of Christ. She was a member of the United Presbyterian Church.

Thomas Boon (the eldest brother of Elizabeth M.) learned the tanner's trade, and removed to Ohio, where he married a Miss Criss. He now resides in Wayne county, Ohio. Stewart married Mary McKennen, of Reading, Penn. William married Miss Johnson, of Wayne county, Ohio.

DR. W. B. DONALDSON. Among the promising young physicians of Washington county none are better or more favorably known than Dr. Donaldson. He was born March 15, 1865, in Mount Pleasant township, this county, where his family are yet residing. He attended the common schools, then entered the Eastman Business College, graduating in 1885. After his graduation he worked as a book-keeper for a time, finally entering the office of Drs. McElroy & McCarroll, of Hickory, where he studied medicine for some time. He afterward entered the Western Pennsylvania Medical College, graduating in 1889, then began to practice his profession in Pittsburgh.

One year later he came to Midway, this county, associating himself with Dr. Patterson, whose interests he purchased in 1891. In 1892 Dr. Donaldson was appointed physician of the Pennsylvania Railroad, west of Pittsburgh. On September 11, 1888, he was united in marriage with Jennie F. Jackson, a resident of Mount Pleasant township, to whom two children have been born, Braden Maxwell (deceased) and Mary Lucile. Politically, Dr. Donaldson is a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM LEONARD was born December 9, 1821, in Greene county, Penn., and his father, Lot Leonard, was also a native of the same county. His grandfather, Lot Leonard, was born in New Jersey, and in early life came to Greene county, Penn., where he was married to a Miss Hoge, who bore him children as follows: William, John, Lot, Isaac, George, Elizabeth, Mary, Sarah and Leah. Mr. Leonard was a soldier in the war of the Revolution, and a Federalist in politics. He preached Presbyterianism, Methodism and Quakerism, but finally became a Freethinker, and preached his own new doctrine until he died, at the age of ninety-two years.

Lot Leonard (2) was born in Greene county, Penn., in the year 1796, and remained on the home farm during his lifetime. He was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of John Mosher, a resident of Washington county, and they had seven children, namely: Merritt, Jonathan, Melinda (Mrs. John S. Bayard), William, Levi, Lot and Aaron. Mr. Leonard was a successful farmer, and in political life was formerly a Whig, but, after the organization of the party, became a Republican. He was a warm friend of progressive education, and was school director of his district many years. He died in Greene county, Penn., in the year 1865, having been preceded to the grave by his wife in 1850.

William Leonard was born and educated in Greene county, Penn., the schools of the neighborhood then affording but meager advantages. In early youth he was cast on his own resources, and began life for himself. On September 28, 1848, he married Miss Cynthia Dickerson, daughter of William Dickerson, a prominent resident of Washington county. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Leonard settled on a farm in Greene county, where they remained five years, removing thence to their present home, upon which they have made many improvements, having erected a large brick residence, and a comfortable and commodious stock and grain barn. The following children have been born to this estimable couple: Elizabeth M. (deceased), William C., Wilson (deceased), Martha M. and Cynthia C. Mr. Leonard was originally a Whig, and, since the organization of the party, has been a Republican. He has always been interested in all matters of importance to the township, and has been school director for many years.

CHRISTOPHER SHELLER, a leading representative of the Sheller family, was born July 16, 1819, in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., where he has since resided. He is a son of Samuel Sheller, and grandson of William, who was born, reared and married in Germany. The children of William were William, Henry, John, Samuel, Mary (Mrs. Jacob Ruple), Catherine (Mrs. Benjamin Stephenson), Mrs. Beckly and Mrs. McKee. The family emigrated to America in an early day, and became the first pioneer settlers of Donegal township. Indians were numerous in those days, and the men attended church with guns upon their shoulders, ready for instant use. Mr. Sheller was a Federalist, and he was one of the founders of the United Brethren Church, of which he was a member.

Samuel Sheller was born in Donegal township, Washington county, and received an education in the German language. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Christopher Winter, and the following children were born to them: Daniel, Elizabeth, Christopher (our subject), Catherine (Mrs. John J. Clemens), Mary, Susanna (wife of Alexander Noble), and Lucinda (Mrs. Alexander Blair). Mr. Sheller always lived on the home farm. He was connected with the United Brethren Church. In politics he was a member of the Old-line Whig party. He died January 1, 1838, his wife in 1860.

Christopher Sheller passed his youth on the home farm, and received a common school education. He then learned the carpenter's trade of Isaac Winter, in West Alexander, serving three years as an apprentice, and three years as foreman. He then began life for himself, following his trade till 1872, when he retired from business. On October 7, 1852, he was united in marriage with Frances June, daughter of Philip Crow, of Donegal township, and the children born to their union were as follows: Elizabeth (Mrs. Barnet Chaney, deceased), Emma (Mrs. T. G. Peacock), Zillah and Adda (twins, deceased), and Fannie (deceased). On August 13, 1862, the mother of this family died, and October 27, 1863, Mr. Sheller married Nancy, daughter of Kenneth McCoy, whose father, Daniel McCoy, was of Scotch birth, and came with his parents to America, where he was married to Nancy McCoy, who bore him the following children: John, Alexander, William, Christina, Kenneth, Angus, Elizabeth, Joseph, James and Jane. In politics Mr. McCoy was a Republican.

[Kenneth McCoy passed his entire life in West Finley township, Washington, Co., Penn., and was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of James Brownlee, a pioneer settler of the county. Their children were Jane, Joseph, Nancy, Elizabeth (Mrs. Joseph Whitham), Mary (Mrs. Robert McHaffey) and John. Mr. McCoy was a Whig, and a strong advocate of the anti-slavery doctrine. He was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, and died in 1872, having been preceded by his wife in 1868.]

Mr. Sheller has become a successful man by his own exertions, and in politics was originally a Whig. Upon the formation of the party he became a Republican, and is now one of the leading Prohibitionists of his locality. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

SAMUEL C. SWABE. Among the prosperous agriculturists and well-known citizens of Fallowfield township, this gentleman occupies a prominent position. His father, Samuel Swabe, was a native of Westmoreland county, Penn., having been born in that locality in 1821. He passed his youth near the home place, and in 1841 was united in marriage with Elizabeth Collesher, also a native of Westmoreland county, Penn., whose parents were of Holland birth. To this marriage were born three children, namely: Catherine, born in 1842; Lavina (deceased in 1889), born in 1845; and Samuel C. In 1847 the mother died. In 1850 Mr. Swabe was married to his second wife, Miss Maria Bortnor, who bore him one daughter, Margaret S., born in 1855. This wife died in 1859, and in 1861 he made a third choice in the person of Mrs. Margaret Coyle, a member of a well-known family of Washington county. They had two daughters, namely: Dora R., born in 1862, and Ella, born in 1864. The wife and mother was called from earth in 1884. Mr. Swabe was a shoemaker and followed his trade until 1850, when he bought a farm in Fallowfield township, Washington county, to which the family removed in 1851. In 1855 he was elected justice of the peace, serving in that capacity for five years, and filling many other local offices. At his death, in 1888, he owned 265 acres of land, now occupied by his son.

Samuel C. Swabe was born April 6, 1847, on the home farm in Westmoreland county, Penn. He was but four years of age when his parents brought him to the farm in Washington county, where his school days were passed. Since the death of his father he has managed the home place. On September 18, 1890, he selected a bride in the person of Ella S., daughter of the late George Allen, a prominent farmer of Washington county, Penn. They have one daughter, Garnet A., born August 23, 1891. Mr. and Mrs. Swabe reside on a farm lying two and a half miles from Charlelot, and five miles from Monongahela City. He raises a large quantity of excellent stock. In politics he is a Republican, and has served his township in various offices of trust.

RONEY. The Roney family are among the most prominent of the pioneers of Washington county. The first ancestor of the family name, who came to America, was Hercules Roney, who was born in Ireland, and emigrated to America. His brother James soon followed him, and they settled in Washington county, Penn., where they took up a "tomahawk claim" of about sixteen hundred acres in North Strabane township, and passed the remainder of their lives in clearing and improving their farms.

James Roney, a son of Hercules, was the grand-father of the present generation here. He was born on the home farm, where his entire life was passed. In early life he was married to Jane McWhorter, of Washington county, Penn., and the following children were born to their union: Moses, William, John, James, Jane (Mrs. McKenty) and Margaret. Mr. Roney was a member and staunch supporter of the Pre-byterian Church.

John Roney was born January 25, 1811, on the home farm in North Strabane township, Washington county, and when a young man was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of David George, of Smith township, this county. Soon after his marriage Mr. Roney settled on a farm in West Finley township, where he is still living, a successful farmer and leading citizen. He is a prominent member of the R. P. Church. His children are James, born June 2, 1838, enlisted in Company K, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and was sent to the army of the Potomac, where he was taken prisoner, dying on March 22, 1863, from the effects of exposure; David G., born August 13, 1840, in West Finley township, this county, married, May 1, 1872, Martha J., daughter of Robert Sutherland, and they have three children: E. E., R. R., and J. J. (David G. was a soldier in the Civil war; he is an energetic business man, and a member of the R. P. Church); Nancy, was married to John Patterson, of Ohio county, W. Va., October 19, 1870, died April 4, 1873; Jane, who lives with her parents; Robert M., who died January 8, 1872; Samuel S., who died March 14, 1852; William S., who married Alice, daughter of John Woodburn, of Washington county, is a carpenter, residing at Claysville, Washington county; J. W., who married Mary, daughter of Samuel McKinch, of Washington county, is a farmer of Donegal township, Washington county; Albert, who went to Ness City, Kans., in April, 1886, died there in July, 1886, of fever; A. J., who married Amelia, daughter of Charles Burig, of Washington county, is a farmer residing on the home farm.

J. C. RONEY passed his younger days on the home farm in West Finley township, and on September 11, 1872, was married to Mary, daughter of Joshua Blake, of Marshall county, W. Va., and she bore him children as follows: Myrtie, Earl, Benlah, Florence and Robert. The mother died April 19, 1881, and for his second wife Mr. Roney was united in marriage September 29, 1885, with Marie, daughter of Mrs. M. J. McBurney, of New Castle, Penn. Mr. Roney first engaged in the mercantile business with Adam Hall, at West Middletown, Penn., where he remained but a short time, and then went to Wehsburg with the same man. He afterward moved to Bothany, where he remained a few years, and, in 1885, Mr. Roney came to West Alexander, where he has since been engaged with his brother, David G., in the grain business. They also conduct a general store, and are known as reliable business men. Politically Mr. Roney is a prominent member of the Republican party. He is a member of the U. P. Church of which he has been an elder several years.

JOHN JAMES C. and K. NOBLE McDONALD, of Robinson township, are among the largest landholders in the northern part of the county. They are grandsons of John McDonald, who was born in Lis-bavanich, County Fernanagh, Ireland, April 30, 1730. John McDonald emigrated to this country in 1773, and purchased a tract of land called Mt. Pleasant, on Robinson's run, now included in Robinson and Mt. Pleasant townships. In 1775 he settled on the Mt. Pleasant property, and afterward bought other lands adjoining Mt. Pleasant, called Blackberry Plain, Gooseberry Thicket, Highlands and Primrose Hill. He also bought large tracts in Allegheny and Beaver counties, and in West Virginia. All these lands were well located and are now very valuable. On April 28, 1778, he married Martha T. Noble, daughter of Col. Noble, who lived in Allegheny county, near Noblestown. They had six sons—Andrew and William (twins), John, James, Alexander and Edward—and four daughters—Margaret, Martha, Elizabeth and Mary—all now deceased. The eldest son, Andrew, was a graduate of Jefferson College, studied for the ministry, and was pastor of White Oak Flats Presbyterian Church for a number of years. The surviving children of Rev. Andrew McDonald are Andrew (a farmer), Abram (a boatman) and Mrs. Bryne. John, the third son of John McDonald, was a distinguished member of the Pittsburgh bar, and contributed by his wealth and public spirit to the early improvement of the city of Pittsburgh. He was a prominent real estate owner in that city, and built the old "St. Charles Hotel," at first called the "Exchange Hotel," where the "Anderson House" now stands, and he was at one time president of the Bank of Pittsburgh. He married and reared a family, still represented in Pittsburgh. The remaining sons, William (twin of Andrew), James, Alexander and Edward, gave their attention to farming.

The four daughters, Margaret (wife of Dr. Glenn), Martha (wife of George Allison), Elizabeth (Mrs. John Mitchell) and Mary (wife of Rev. William Nesbit), were more than ordinary women in mental endowment, usefulness and piety. Grandfather John McDonald died, in 1817, on his own farm, "Mt. Pleasant," Washington county, and was buried in Raccoon cemetery. He was a man of wealth as well as moral worth. He gave his aid in first organizing the Raccoon Church at Candor. James Cooke, maternal grandfather of the subjects of this sketch, was an officer in the Revolutionary war, and soon after the close of that struggle came to Cross Creek township, this county, where he purchased a large tract of land and passed the rest of his days. He married Martha McCombs, and descendants are still to be found in Cross Creek township.

James McDonald, better known as "Colonel McDonald," father of the subjects of this sketch, was the fourth son of John McDonald, and was born August 29, 1783. He received his education at a subscription school of the vicinity. His father gave him part of his Washington county lands—which were then a wilderness, and which he improved. On September 25, 1825, he was united in marriage with Juliana Cooke, daughter of James Cooke, who resided near Cross Creek village, this county. They had four children: Martha Malvina, Margaretta Jane (deceased July 24, 1874, aged forty-two years), John James C., and K. Noble. The mother, at the age of eighty-five years, April 29, 1881, passed from earth at the old home, where her surviving children now live. The father passed his entire life on this estate, dying on April 3, 1863, and was buried in the Raccoon cemetery. He was the owner at the time of his death of a large farm of 1,000 acres. In his political affiliations he was originally a Whig, then, on the organization of the party, became a Republican, and was active in the interests of the cause, but no office seeker. At the beginning of the Rebellion of 1861, he was heard to utter these words: "This war will never be ended until every slave is free." He was noted through life for the possession of a strong, independent will, but was always found a ready and kind sympathizer for the afflicted and distressed. He was a regular attendant and liberal supporter of Raccoon Presbyterian Church, in which he was raised, and which his father aided in first organizing.

The two sons, John James C. and K. Noble, live on the home farm with their sister, and carry on farming, giving their attention to raising fine stock, more particularly horses, making roadsters a specialty. They are Presbyterians, and in politics have always been Republican.

RALPH VAN KIRK. Of the first families in Washington county, none are more prominent than the Van Kirks. John, Henry and—Van Kirk, natives of New Jersey, came to this county, and settled in Amwell township. John first left his native State, and on December 10, 1785, purchased of Abner Howell a tract of 359 acres in this county, which was patented February 26, 1792. Here he lived until his death, which occurred in 1797, when the farm was divided between his three sons, Jacob, Henry and Joseph. He left four sons and three daughters, who were born in New Jersey: Sarah, Jacob and Henry being the children of his first wife; and Joseph, Elizabeth, John and Catherine were children of a second marriage. Henry Van Kirk, the second of the three brothers, purchased a tract of 260 acres of land which was known as "Red Thorn Bottom." On this farm he lived and died, leaving six children, namely: William, Gideon, Arthur, Henry, John and Mary, all of whom were born in New Jersey, and William remained there. Arthur, the second son of Henry Van Kirk, learned the trade of a cabinet-maker, and after his marriage to Elizabeth Parkinson, settled in Amwell township, where the following children were born: Asher, Edward, Ralph, William, Lucretia, Emma and Sarah.

Ralph Van Kirk was born December 27, 1815, and married Sarah Cooper, November 11, 1841, a daughter of Sylvanus Cooper, of Franklin township. To Mr. and Mrs. Van Kirk were born the following named children: Charles, Addison (who died in infancy), Jennie and Ella (who lives at home with her mother). Charles married Elizabeth Gamble, daughter of Levi Gamble, of West Bethlehem township, and to them was born one daughter, Dora (who died of typhoid fever March 20, 1883, at the age of fourteen); Jennie married George McGree, of Franklin township. They have two sons: Hiram Winnett, Ralph Alexander, and one daughter, Nellie Brown. Mr. Van Kirk was for six years director of "Washington County Home," which office he filled with much credit. He was one of the leaders of the Republican party in his neighborhood, and commanded the esteem of all who knew him. An honest citizen, an earnest Christian and member of the Methodist Church, he was a leader in the community. Mr. Van Kirk was called to his "long home" in January, 1890, deeply mourned by all.

Sylvanus Cooper, named above, is descended from John Cooper, who emigrated from Buckinghamshire, England, in 1635, and settled at Lynn, Mass. Four years later he located at Southampton, L. I., whence the family spread out to other settlements. Zebulon, the father of Sylvanus, born in New Jersey, emigrated to Washington county, Pennsylvania, where he married Mary White. To them were born four boys and four girls. Sylvanus was born December 27, 1789. In 1812 he married Mary Bryant, a lady of noble character and a cousin of William Cullen Bryant. He had twelve children. Zebulon, the oldest, married Sarah Nicely, and resides in Iowa. He has nine children. David married Hanna Dille. They have ten children. He died in Memphis, Mo., of paralysis. Charles married Sarah F. Daychurek, of New Brunswick, N. J. He was a minister of the Presbyterian Church. His last charge was at South Centerville, N. Y. He had three children. John married a lady in Texas, and resides in Carrollton, Mo. Five children were born to them. Catharine married Harvey Gamble. Their late home was in Winfield, Iowa, where they both died. They had four children. Jane married Thomas Hanna. They have five children. She has been dead for several years. Mary married John Atkinson. They had four children. She died at the residence of her son Charles in Missouri. Sarah married Ralph Van Kirk, of Washington county. She has three children living: Charles, Jennie and Ella. Addison died in infancy. Elizabeth married Nelson Day. Three children were born to them. She now resides in Iowa. Caroline married Gallatin Vaile and they reside in Rochelle, Ill. They have five children. Henrietta, the youngest, lives in Carrollton, Mo. Sylvanus Cooper died at the residence of his son, Zebulon, in Winfield, Iowa, on April 10, 1873, at the age of eight-four years. His wife died August 9, 1846, at the age of fifty-three years.

GYRUS G. ARNOLD, a leading citizen of Hanover township, traces his ancestry to one Samuel Arnold, who was born in County Down, Ireland, about ten miles from Newry, and the same distance from Banbridge.

When a young man he was there married to Margaret Glass, who bore him the following children in Ireland: Nancy (married to William Anderson), and Mary (died of "king's evil"). Some time during the latter part of the eighteenth century this family came to America, and made their first permanent location in Allegheny county, Penn., where other children were born, namely: John (of whom a sketch follows); Margaret (wife of John Stewart, Noblestown, Allegheny county, Penn.); Jane (Mrs. John Moore), and Elizabeth (married to Hugh Glenn, died in Richland county, Ohio). Samuel Arnold and his wife died in Allegheny county.

John Arnold (the father of our subject) was born August 10, 1800, in Allegheny county, Penn. He received a meager education in the schools of that period, and worked on his father's farm until he was a boy of sixteen or seventeen. He then began to learn the trade of a saddler (which at that time was a very lucrative vocation), working under his brother-in-law, John Stewart, at Nobles-town, Penn. In 1821 he was married to Mary Cavitt, who was born in 1805, in Allegheny county, Penn., daughter of George Cavitt, a native of Franklin county, Penn., whose father, Patrick Cavitt, was born in Ireland. After his marriage John Arnold located ten miles west of Pittsburgh, along the Pittsburgh & Steubenville Pike, in Allegheny county. He finally secured a small tract of land, to which he added by patient industry and toil. They remained in Allegheny county twenty-five years, and in 1846 removed to Hanover township, Washington county, Penn., along King's creek, where he continued to follow farming. In politics John Arnold was a Whig and Republican. At an early age he made the good confession in the Union Church, and in 1854 was elected elder in the King's Creek Associate Reformed Church, which position he held until his death, November 20, 1863. His widow survived him until January 29, 1880, when she was laid by his side in Frankfort cemetery. She also was connected with the same church as her husband, and when the United Presbyterian Church was organized, united with that Society. They were the parents of the following children: George C. (a U. P. minister), born February 19, 1825, deceased December 1, 1863; Margaret (wife of Robert Ramsey, Beaver county, Penn.), born November 1, 1826; Samuel, born October 11, 1829, deceased December 2, 1849; John (living in Cedar Rapids, Iowa), born February 23, 1832; William T., born December 2, 1833; Agnes (Mrs. B. F. Mevey, of Allegheny, Penn.), born June 24, 1836; J. G., born November 9, 1839, deceased June 5, 1857; Cyrus G., whose name opens this sketch, born September 5, 1842; and J. Lee (living in Chicago), born January 23, 1850.

Cyrus G. Arnold was born on the home place in Allegheny county, Penn., and moved with the family to Washington county, Penn., where he attended the public schools and passed his youth at home. In 1867 he was married to Mary G. Black, a native of Hanover township, this county, daughter of James Black. Their children were John H., born November 1, 1867; Mary C., born February 23, 1870, and Grizzie B. (deceased in infancy). The mother died in 1872, and was buried in Paris cemetery. For his second wife Cyrus G. Arnold selected Nannie L. McWhirter, of Mercer county, Penn., daughter of John McWhirter. This wife died in 1883, the mother of four children, William K., Vesta, Margaret E. (born July 10, 1882,) and Nannie L. (born August 25, 1883), of whom Vesta died in infancy, and Nannie L. is living with her grandparents in Mercer county, Penn.

In April, 1886, our subject was married to his present wife, Nettie M. Savage, daughter of William and Jane (Duncan) Savage, who was born in Allegheny county, Penn. The children of this marriage are Cyrus D., born May 7, 1885; James S., born July 25, 1887; and Edna Jane Cavitt, born May 31, 1890, all of whom are living. Mr. Arnold took charge of the home place on King's Creek after his first marriage, and has ever since resided there. He has given his attention to farming and stock-raising, and is a prosperous agriculturist. He is well versed in questions of local and general interest, and is a leader in church matters, being an elder in King's Creek United Presbyterian Church, with which his wife is also connected. Politically, he is a supporter of Republican doctrine, and is much interested in the success of his party.

JOSEPH COATSWORTH. This enterprising gentleman is a native of the County of Durham, England, where he was born July 12, 1842. His father, Joseph Coatsworth, was also born and reared in that English county, and was there married to Sarah Allison, who bore him seven children, Ann, Thomas, Margaret, Joseph, William, Sarah and John. Mr. Coatsworth was an expert lead-ore miner, and investigated its different branches in his native country. He concluded that America offered opportunities for his family, and emigrated in 1853, and followed coal-mining at Pittsburgh, Penn. A few years later he purchased a farm in Carroll township, but finally removed to Monongahela City, where he died in 1861. He was a strong supporter of Whig and Abolition principles, and upheld his views with tenacity. He was connected with the primitive Methodist Episcopal Church, but on coming to America united with the Methodist Episcopal Society of Monongahela City, of which he was a most conscientious member.

Joseph Coatsworth came with his parents to America when but a lad, and passed his minority in Washington county, Penn. In 1872 he opened a grocery store, and engaged in the coal business at California, afterward conducting a grocery at Monongahela City. He finally abandoned the grocery and opened a butcher shop, where he is now doing a very good business. On May 4, 1864, he married Trovillo, daughter of Washington Eckles, formerly of Westmoreland county, Penn. Mr. Eckles was born in that county, where he learned the carpenter trade, and coming to Washington county, finally settled at Monongahela City many years ago. He was married to Eleanor Mumbower, a native of this county, who bore him the following children: Alfred, Jefferson, Antilissia, Amanda, Amzi, Trovillo, Floral, Ida and Ira. Mr. Eckles was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. and Mrs. Coatsworth are the parents of seven children, namely: Anna V. (wife of L. T. Claybaugh), Charles W., J. W., May, Kate G., Bessie and Eva. Mr. Coatsworth is an active member of the Democratic party, and has served the borough as councilman.

Jonas Crowthers, who came to this country from Yorkshire, England, in 1850, married a daughter of the late Joseph and Sarah Coatsworth, Sr., in 1854. To them were born: Joseph B., W. H., J. J., Sarah, Thomas A. and R. C., Jonas and Lee, all nearly grown to manhood and womanhood in this county. On coming to the United States, Mr. Crowthers engaged in coal-mining, and being an expert miner, soon became an operator in and shipper of coal, in which business he has been very successful.

JAMES M. McMURRAY, one of the prosperous rising young agriculturists of Donegal township, comes of that rugged Scotch-Irish race, of whom it is said that wherever members of it are gathered together there are sure to be found men of large character, imbued with the fundamental principles that abide in the race—love of civil and religious liberty. Samuel McMurray, his paternal grandfather, was born about the year 1762 in County Down, Ireland, and was there married to Margaret Brown, who was born in 1765, also a native of Ireland, by whom there were seven children, all born in Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., as follows: James, Ann, Eliza, John, Margaret (married to John Rees), Mary (married to John Erskine), and Jane (married to Samuel Barr), all now deceased, John being the last of them to "cross the river." After his marriage Samuel McMurray and his wife came to the United States, landing in Philadelphia, whence they proceeded to Washington county, same State, settling on the farm in Donegal township, which our subject now owns. Here he passed the remainder of his busy life, dying February 18, 1849.

John McMurray, the fourth child born to Samuel and Margaret (Brown) McMurray, first saw the light in 1804 in Donegal township, this county, and here his boyhood days were passed on his father's farm, his education being received at the somewhat primitive subscription schools of the period. In 1852 he was married to Margaret Boyd, who was born May 12, 1813, in Hopewell township, this county, a daughter of James Boyd, and to this union were born two children, viz.: William (deceased), who was a farmer in Independence township, and was married to Kate Armstrong, and James M. After his marriage John McMurray settled on a farm in Donegal township, near where his son now lives, situated about one mile east of West Alexander, and here followed general farming up to the time of his death, which occurred February 7, 1867, after which event his widow removed to the borough of West Alexander, where she is still living at a ripe old age. He was a prominent Republican, and held numerous township offices. As a farmer he was eminently successful, being possessed of superior business capacity and sound judgment, and by the time of his decease he had accumulated considerable property.

James M. McMurray was born December 13, 1854, on the farm he now owns and lives on, in Donegal township, and where he received all his instruction in agriculture, his education in the meantime being received, during the winter months, at the common schools of the district. On the death of his father he moved to West Alexander with his widowed mother, and after a residence there of about three years returned to the farm, where he has since remained, successfully following his life work. On September 27, 1877, Mr. McMurray was married to Augusta Slater, who was born November 3, 1857, a daughter of David Slater, of Ohio county, W. Va., and by this union there are two children: Lizzie A., born July 4, 1878, and James W., born July 14, 1881, both living at home with their parents. In his political predilections Mr. McMurray is a Republican, and has held several township offices, such as school director, but does not waste time on politics. He is progressive and popular, and has a bright future before him.

STEPHEN APPLGATE, than whom there is no more enterprising citizen in the county, was born in Allegheny county, Penn., May 5, 1825. He is a grandson of Benjamin Applegate, the place of whose birth was eastern Pennsylvania, where he was reared and educated, and whence, in 1767, he migrated to this county, settling near the Monongahela river, in what is now Forward township, Allegheny county, where he patented a tract of 100 acres of land, subsequently entirely improved by the family. He came in the spring of 1767, and, having made a clearing, seeded it to corn, then returned home, but when he again came, in the fall, he found bears had destroyed the entire crop. He was one of the earliest members of the U. P. Church in this section, their place of worship being known as the "Henderson Meeting House," and he was one of the most active and progressive of the earlier pioneers.

Vincent Applegate, son of Benjamin, was born in Allegheny county, Penn., where he was educated, trained to farming pursuits, and where, on the old home farm, he passed his entire life. He married Riodosha Harker, of Virginia, and their children were Richard, Delilah (Mrs. Abraham Applegate), Harvey, Elizabeth, Josiah, Harrison, Rebecca (Mrs. Gideon Wall), Keziah (Mrs. Jacob Conklin), Eli and Stephen. The father died August 3, 1839, the mother September 3, 1859. They sleep in the family burying-ground. They were members of the Henderson U. P. Church; in politics he was an active Whig.

Stephen Applegate was reared on the farm where he was born; his education was, necessarily, very limited. For some years after his marriage he remained on the home place, and in 1873 came to Monongahela City, where he has since resided, retired from active life. On October 29, 1846, he was married to Minerva, daughter of James Applegate, also a native of Allegheny county, whose wife was Rachel (Holdercraft), and children as follows: Elsie (Mrs. Samuel Dennison), John, Elizabeth, Rachel, Harriet J. and Minerva (Mrs. Stephen Applegate). James Applegate was a prominent farmer and stock-raiser, in politics a Whig, in religion a Baptist. Our subject and wife have had one child, Josephine, married to Moses Colvin, and their children are Minnie, Mary and May. Mr. Applegate was originally a Whig, but a Republican since the formation of the party. He is a representative, self-made man, one who has attained success by his own efforts, industry, perseverance and thrift.

AMOS PATTERSON. The Patterson family, of which the subject of this sketch is an honored member, comes of direct English descent, now several generations removed. Robert Patterson, a native of New Jersey, the great ancestor of the family in Washington county, in 1794 came from York (now Adams) county, Penn., to this county, with his family, locating in Morris township. The trip was made in wagons, at that time an undertaking of no small magnitude. The names of Robert Patterson's children are Joanna, James, Timothy, William, John, Robert, Polly, Abigail and Peter.

John Patterson, son of the pioneer Robert, was born in 1782, in York (now Adams) county, Penn.; he married Mary Enlow, a daughter of Elliott Enlow, who removed from Maryland to East Finley township, this county, prior to 1800. To this union twelve children were born, eight of whom lived to maturity, as follows: Elliott, Rachel, James, Phoebe, Amos, John, Jesse and Aaron. Of these children are now living: Amos (our subject), John (in Greene county, Penn.), and Aaron (in Mercer county, Ill.).

Amos Patterson was born in 1816, and received the limited educational advantages which the neighboring schools afforded. In 1843 he was married to Harriet Cooper, who was born in 1821, a daughter of John Cooper, of Morris township, this county, and to their union have been born three children: John A., born in 1846, died in 1853; Clara, born in 1855, married to S. L. Day; Mary Elizabeth, born in 1864, at home with her father. Mrs. Patterson died August 20, 1889. Mr. Patterson has been remarkably successful as a farmer, and has accumulated valuable property. He is a life-long Democrat, and a member of the Baptist Church at Pleasant Grove.

JOSHUA WRIGHT was born May 4, 1822, in Peters township, where he lived continuously until 1859, when he moved into Washington borough, in order to give his children a thorough education.

Joshua Wright, great-grandfather of the subject of this memoir, came with his brother James from the Cumberland Valley, and settled about 1765, in Nottingham township, this county, on Peters creek. They obtained a tract of land containing over 800 acres (near what is now Finleyville) from Indians, part of which land still remains in the family, Joshua, the great-grandson, having 210 acres of it. In 1779 the great-grandfather bought of his brother James all his share of their joint purchase, and our subject has in his possession the quit-claim deed for same, in which the following words occur: "I quit-claim to my brother against all save God Almighty, who being maker of the Universe, I cannot quit-claim against Him." After he had part of this land cleared and a crop put in, he returned to Harrisburgh and married Charity Sauns, daughter of John Harris, for whom Harrisburgh was named. In October, 1776, Joshua Wright was one of the justices of the peace in Youghiogeny county, and ex-officio judge of the court. He presided over the court in April, 1777, and was also through the Crawford expedition in 1782. After this sale, James Wright went to Kentucky, where he was killed by the Indians. In 1783 Joshua Wright, while on his way with two other men to New Orleans with a boat-load of provisions, was attacked by the Indians, who shot the two companions, and Wright, bravely defending himself to the last, shot several of the Redskins with his own musket and those of his slain companions. Overpowered by numbers, however, he was finally captured, and taken to a point near Sandusky, Ohio, where he was made to "run the gauntlet," and was burned at the stake. It was supposed he was decoyed to this tragical fate by Simon Gerty, the white renegade from Fort Pitt. He left three children: Lydia, Enoch and Agnes.

Enoch Wright was born March 10, 1776, on the home farm in Peters township, this county, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He was but a boy when his father was killed. He married Rachel James, and of their children but one grew to maturity, Joseph, who became the father of our subject. Enoch Wright and his wife both died on the old farm, he in 1846 at the age of seventy years. He was an active man, enjoying most robust health. For over thirty years he was a justice of the peace. He participated in the "Whiskey Insurrection" in 1794, opposing the rising, as he was in favor of paying the tax imposed, and firmly held to his position, even in the face of threatening letters received by him, some of them conveying notice that his buildings would be burned did he not join the insurrectionists. He was by no means easily persuaded, but finally he reluctantly united himself on the side of the Rebellion, and after the shooting of one man, he entered with zeal into it. He served as county commissioner, was director of the poor, and during his incumbency he superintended the building of the first poor house in the county. He was a member of the Baptist Society, and gave the lands and means for the building of a church. Being a strong antislavery man he had it inserted in the deed for this property that no slavery doctrine or sentiments should be preached or discussed in this church. When the church divided he transferred his membership, and deeded land and building to the Methodist Society. His wife survived him nearly twenty years, and died at the age of ninety years.

Joseph Wright, father of subject, was born on the home farm in Peters township, August 1, 1794. He received a common-school education, which was supplemented by study at Canonsburg College, where he was at the point of graduating when failing health compelled him to leave. After this he became a local preacher in the M. E. Church, and every Sabbath he conducted Divine service up to the day of his death, which occurred in 1854. He was a close student, making it a rule to read six hours every day. In politics he was a Whig. On November 6, 1814, he married Catherine, daughter of Colonel Thomas and Catherine (Hurd) Hopkins. The Hopkinses came to the county at a very early day, and have since been prominently connected with it. Eleven children were born to this union, as follows: Darthula (married Dr. James Miller, and died in Pittsburgh); Catherine (married Thomas Rankin, now of Nebraska; they first settled on a farm in this county); Lucinda (married John Storer, and died leaving one child); Joshua; Enoch (died in Iowa in 1891); Thomas Andrew (died at the age of five years); Joseph Thornton (died in Pittsburgh in 1871); Margaret Ann (married Dr. C. W. Townsend, lives in Peters township, near Bower Hill); Mary Ellen (married Rev. John C. Brown, of the M. E. Church, lives in Iowa); Hopkins (who has been an invalid ever since he was five years of age); and Charity S. (wife of Dr. D. M. Anderson, living on part of the old homestead). The mother of this family died in 1863. They were all members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Joshua Wright, the subject of this memoir, was reared on the old farm, where he was born, then for a short time attended the subscription schools of the neighborhood, and afterward studied at an academy. The principal part of his education was received from his father, who commenced to teach him Hebrew before he was ten years of age, making him rise in the morning at four or five o'clock for the purpose of study. For a private tutor he had one Aaron Gammel, under whom he studied every day, without a vacation, for a year. On March 17, 1814, Mr. Wright was married to Miss Sarah C., daughter of Rev. John White, and sister to Judge J. W. F. White, of Pittsburgh. Her mother was a member of the James family. The following children were born to this union: John A., a Methodist Episcopal minister; Speranza Kate (widow of George Brown, now living at Findlay, Ohio); Joseph Enoch (a Methodist Episcopal minister); Elizabeth Ann (married to L. G. Linn, an attorney of Butler, Penn.); William Fleteher (an insurance agent of Buffalo, N. Y.); James Sauns (who died at the age of fifteen years); Hallie Lucinda (wife of Everett Smith, an attorney of Ravenswood, W. Va.); Ada Blanche (wife of Joseph B. Spriggs, of Washington, Penn.); Frank Laurance (a dentist of Duluth, Minn.); and Robert J. (an attorney of Pittsburgh, Penn.). The mother of this family died in 1868, in Washington, at the age of about forty-two years, and in July, 1870, Mr. Wright married Mrs. Jane Dill (née McFerran), a full cousin of the late Mrs. President Harrison, by whom there are no children. In 1870 he opened a bank, in partnership with Col. William Hopkins and Hon. James H. Hopkins, and continued in same until his retirement in 1885. For many years he has been a member of the M. E. Church. At this writing, March, 1893, there are nine children living, with five daughters-in-law, three sons-in-law, twenty grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

ROBERT WARD is a son of Thomas, and grandson of Stephen Ward, a native of Maryland, of English descent, who passed his youth in that State. When a young man Stephen Ward came to Washington county, and settled on a farm near Bentleyville, where he worked Squire Bentley's farm on shares. While living in Maryland Stephen Ward was married to Hannah Thurston, who bore him five children, none of whom are living. In political opinion the father was a Democrat. He was thrown from a load of hay, the accident resulting in his death.

Thomas Ward, son of Stephen, was born on the farm near Bentleyville, and attended the log cabin subscription schools of the neighborhood. At the age of eighteen years he came to a farm in East Pike Run township, this county, remaining there fifteen years. After locating on this place he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Williams—the old wagoner on the Washington Pike. Seven children were born to their union, as follows: Mary, wife of Thomas Worley, living near Shireoaks, this county; Melinda, married to Daniel Linn, of Fayette county, Penn.; John, living at California, Penn.; Stephen; Robert; James, living at California, Penn., and Thomas, a resident of Uniontown, Penn. Stephen is deceased. The father voted with the Republican party, and in religious faith was a member of the Methodist Church. Mrs. Ward died in 1846, and he was laid by her side May 18, 1891.

Robert Ward was born November 2, 1842, on a farm in East Bethlehem township. He married Anna Robinson, a native of East Pike Run township, February 16, 1867. She was born March 23, 1842. They have had six children, namely: Austin, Lizzie, Averel, John, Annie (deceased in infancy) and Pearl. Mr. Ward owns and resides upon eighty acres of good land, which is the fruit of his own industry. He casts his ballot with the Republican party. In church relations he is identified with the Methodist Society. Austin, his oldest son, was married to Miss Laurie B. Pepper, November 3, 1891. They have one child, Alonzo. Austin resides on a farm of forty acres in the same township.

ALLEXANDER MCKINLEY, retired jeweler, Washington, is a native of the borough, born January 4, 1817, a son of Alexander, who was born in this county. Samuel McKinley, grandfather of our subject, was a pioneer in North Strabane township, where he bought land and passed the remainder of a very busy life. He married a daughter of Thomas Scott, who was the first prothonotary and the first representative in Congress from Washington county.

Samuel McKinley had several children, of whom Samuel went to Ohio, and Alexander, the father of our subject, remained in his native county, where he learned the trade of mechanic, working chiefly at furniture making. He married Hettie, daughter of Abednego Jones, a tailor, whose trade was mostly among the Quakers, and who came from Philadelphia to Washington. He was in the former city when the British captured it, and was arrested by them as a spy, but was released; he died in Washington. Alexander McKinley died suddenly in middle life while at dinner; his widow survived him several years, passing away in Washington. They were the parents of ten children, of whom three sons and four daughters were living at the time of their mother's death; now (1892) there are surviving one son, our subject, and one daughter, Clara, widow of William Bryson, of Washington.

Alexander McKinley, whose name commences this sketch, received his education at the public schools in his native city, and afterward attended Washington and Jefferson College. He learned the jewelers' trade, and in 1840 opened a store for himself, continuing until 1886. On April 27, 1852, Mr. McKinley was married to Margaret D. Hayes, of West Granby, Conn., who was visiting her brother when she met her future husband. She died in 1871, the mother of eight children: Frances E.; Thomas, in eastern Pennsylvania; Lucian, a physician in Ohio; Frank B.; Samuel, in Washington; and Alexander, Ella and Alice, who died young, the latter preceding her mother to the grave. Mr. McKinley's next marriage was on January 30, 1872, with Mrs. C. J. Dalbey, whose maiden name was Bailey, an English lady, a resident of Wheeling, W. Va. Politically, our subject was first a Whig, and since the organization of the party has been a staunch Republican, standing firm in the ranks, and is now an uncompromising Protectionist. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

F. B. McKinley, the third son of Alexander McKinley, was born April 26, 1860, in Washington, Penn., and attended the Union High School, afterward studying Latin under the preceptorship of Rev. George P. Wilson. He commenced to learn the jewelry and watchmaking trade with his father, and continued with him until February, 1886, when Alexander McKinley retired. In March, 1886, he opened business on his own account. On September 22, 1886, he was united in marriage with Miss Queen M., daughter of David F. Ross, of Washington, and a member of one of the oldest families of the county. She is a graduate of the Union High School, and of the Washington Female seminary. One child, Ethelynn May, has come to bless this happy union. Mr. McKinley is a Republican, a member of the Improved Order of Heptasophs, and a deacon of the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington. He is one of the most popular rising young business men in the borough, and has surrounded himself with hosts of friends.

JAMES S. FORSYTHE, one of the well-to-do, progressive agriculturists of Washington county, is a native of the Keystone State, born in Fayette county December 2, 1845.

William Forsythe, his grandfather, moved, in 1775, to that county from Maryland, and "tomahawked" a claim to a tract of wild land that is now a fertile farm, in the possession of some of his descendants. He died at the age of eighty-two years, the father of ten children. One of his sons, Eli Forsythe, married a Miss Jane McKee, a native of Ireland, and by her had ten children, of whom

William, born in Fayette county August 27, 1799, became the father of the subject of this sketch. William Forsythe, son of Eli and Jane (McKee) Forsythe, was reared in the old home, and for the most part followed agricultural pursuits throughout his long and busy life. At one time he shipped coal to the southern markets. In 1829 he married Jane, daughter of John Steele, and settled on "Snow Hill," where he died at the age of eighty years. His widow died three years after, when aged seventy-five. They were the parents of eight children, of whom the following is a brief record: John died in California in 1852; Eli died in 1890; Nancy married James S. Elliott and lives in Fayette county; Johnson died in 1891; Elizabeth is the wife of Isaac T. Crouch; Mary is the wife of L. S. Miller; James S. is the subject proper of this memoir; Ruth is married to Frank Hough, and lives in Fayette county.

James S. Forsythe was reared to farm life in his native county, his boyhood winter months being passed in the common schools of the district, and for a time in an academy, after which he took a commercial course at the Iron City Business College, Pittsburgh. He then returned home, and remained on the farm until the death of his parents. In 1879 he embarked in mercantile business at Redstone, Fayette county, which he carried on three years; then, in 1882, purchased a farm in Amwell township, this county, which he still conducts, and in connection with general farming deals considerably in live stock, making a specialty of Short-horn cattle. In 1890 he moved into the borough of Washington, where he now has his home, situated about one mile from the courthouse. Mr. Forsythe married Miss Mary E. Morton, daughter of George Morton, of Philadelphia, Penn., a native of Ireland, of Irish lineage, October 4, 1876. By this union five children were born, viz.: Lillian S.; John Morton, who died September 24, 1886; Jesse H., Raymond D. and Robert N. Politically, our subject is a Republican, and has held various township offices. He is a Presbyterian in church connection.

GEORGE A. DOUGHERTY, M. D., one of the best known and most successful physicians of Washington county, was born in County Derry, Ireland, December 15, 1839, a son of Edward and Lillie (Allender) Dougherty, both natives of the "land of the shamrock."

The family came to America in 1840 and made their new home in Washington, this county. Our subject attended the common schools of the borough, later attended Washington College, and then commenced reading medicine. In 1859 the family returned to the mother country, and our subject entered the University of Glasgow (Scotland), where he passed through a full curriculum—four years, graduating with the class of 1864-'65. The bursar fee which he paid on entering the university was ten pounds sterling.

At the hospital he took a special course in medicine, and received from the university the degrees of M. D. and C. M. (Master in Surgery). The University of Glasgow is far famed as a seat of learning, and is one of the oldest institutions of the kind, having been founded in the year 1450. After finishing his course at the university the Doctor spent one year in a dispensary. In 1866 he returned to this country, and in the following year commenced the practice of his profession, in which he has since remained. On January 14, 1880, Dr. Dougherty was united in marriage with Rebecca M. Clokey, to whom two children were born: Anna Elizabeth, and a son who died in infancy. Dr. and Mrs. Dougherty are members of the United Presbyterian Church of Washington. He has a very extensive general practice, his ride being not only far and wide over the county, but even considerably beyond. The Doctor possesses a very complete and select library, and keeps abreast of the times.

WILLIAM N. McCLAIN was born October 30, 1847, in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn. He is a grandson of John McClain, a native of Ireland who emigrated to America about 1779 and located in this county. He was soon afterward married to Rachel Tucker, who bore him the following family: Sarah, Elizabeth, James, Simeon, John and William. In political life John McClain was one of the first adherents of the Whig party in Washington county. In religion he was a member of the Presbyterian Church. His remains, with those of his wife, are interred near their pioneer home. Simeon McClain passed his youth in working on the home farm, and attending the common schools. In early manhood he was married to Jane, daughter of Isaac Carter, who bore him children as follows: John, Elizabeth (Mrs. H. K. Bell), William N. and Ellen (twins, the latter of whom is married to S. S. Bell), W. Ross, and Mary (Mrs. Holmes Andrews). Mr. McClain was the architect of his own fortune, and an industrious, enterprising man. He was formerly a Whig, afterward becoming an active member of the Republican party, although he would never accept any political office.

William N. McClain passed the days of his boyhood on his father's farm, and received, in connection with a good grammar-school education, that practical home training, which was no doubt the foundation of his subsequent successful business career. He is now one of the most progressive farmers of his section, and though residing in Washington

Penn., supervises the work of his tenants, doing a large share of the same himself. He has several times held township office, faithfully discharging the duties thereof, and by his upright moral character winning the highest esteem of all his friends and acquaintances. His farm of nearly 200 acres is rich and productive and yields him a large annual income. In March, 1873, he was united in marriage with Flora E., daughter of Josiah Cooper, also a resident of Franklin township. Mr. Cooper was a member of the old Cooper family which settled in that section in the pioneer days, and was married to Clarissa Penn, who bore him one son and one daughter, Flora E. and Herschel (the latter deceased). Mr. Cooper was an active member and liberal supporter of his church, and a man prominent in his community. He was first a Whig then a Republican, at one time serving as county commissioner in the latter party. Later he became an ardent Prohibitionist, leading the forces of the cold water advocates in Washington county, and by his activity in the lecture field and genuine enthusiasm for the cause enabling them to make large inroads into the ranks of the old parties. He died an honored and respected citizen. Mr. and Mrs. McClain now live quietly in their Washington home, enjoying the well-earned fruits of a successful life of economy. They have no children.

DEMAS LINDLEY is a son of Benjamin Lindley, who was a son of Levi Lindley, who came from near Mendham, N. J., with his two brothers, Caleb and Demas, being among the first settlers in Morris township, coming about the year 1780.

Our subject is a worthy representative of the family of Lindleys in Washington county, and is one of the most prominent and enterprising farmers of Franklin township. He was born August 9, 1818, in Morris township, this county, a son of Benjamin and Jerusha (Cooper) Lindley, and his boyhood and youth were passed under the paternal roof, his education being acquired at the neighboring subscription schools, which in those days were at the best but limited. Demas Lindley was married first in 1812, to Lovina, daughter of Luther Day, of Morris township, who came from New Jersey, and whose wife was a Vankirk. The young couple commenced their married life on a farm in Buffalo township, where they remained four years, and then moved to the present home in Franklin township, where Mr. Lindley yet resides. His wife departed this life April 8, 1889, and now sleeps in the cemetery at Prosperity, a handsome monument marking her resting-place. Side by side for nearly half a century this worthy couple had toiled industriously and prospered, and who shall say that her work and aid were not essential elements of his success in life? She was a woman of true Christian virtue, ever seeking to make her friends better and happier.

Mr. and Mrs. Lindley had no children, but adopted a niece, Sarah A. Lindley, daughter of Cephas Lindley, and who, on October 16, 1879, married Hamilton Post, a son of Stephen Post. The children born of this union are: Demas L., Homer S., Grace L. and Levina A. In politics Mr. Lindley is a staunch Republican, having been originally an old-time Whig, and was assessor and school director of his township for many years. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Bethel, and is held in high esteem by all who know him.

JOSEPH M. SPRIGGS, a leading merchant in the borough of Washington, is a native of the same, having been born on Chestnut street April 26, 1831.

His grandfather, Joseph Spriggs, came in an early day from New Jersey to Washington county and settled in Canton township, where he followed agricultural pursuits. He died in West Virginia at the age of seventy-five years, the father of seven children, all of whom are deceased. James Spriggs, one of these children, was born in Washington county February 11, 1801, and reared on his father's farm, attending in his boyhood the subscription schools of his district, which in those early days were of a somewhat primitive character. He held the office of constable eleven years; was sheriff one term (1837-40), register of wills one term (1842-45), and was assistant burgess at the time of his death, August 6, 1851, which was caused by falling on his head when jumping out of a wagon, death ensuing a few days afterward. His widow, who was a daughter of David and Elizabeth Boyce, and was born in Washington county January 6, 1805, died June 11, 1876, at the age of seventy-one years. They had a family of ten children, all of whom died young except one daughter, Mary Ann (married to Dr. R. W. Davis, of Washington), and our subject, the latter being now the only survivor. Mrs. Davis died in 1869, the mother of three children, two of whom are living.

Joseph M. Spriggs, whose name appears at the opening of this biographical sketch, attended the common schools of Washington and Washington College, and when yet a boy commenced clerking in William Duvall's grocery store, a line of trade in which he has ever since continued, with some slight interruption, in the city of his birth. In 1854 he embarked in business for himself in the building nearly opposite where he now is, and there remained seventeen years. He was a year out of business, and in 1886 he erected his present three-story building, equipped with all modern improvements, including an elevator, and here, under the firm of Joseph M. Spriggs & Sons, he has since been engaged in a large and increasing business, comprising general grocery, hardware, feed, etc., the largest of the kind in Washington. In May, 1891, he commenced a grain elevator business in the city, which is in charge of his son, Charles H. In 1851 Mr. Spriggs was married to Margaret, daughter of James Donahoe, of the village of Cross Creek, in this county, whose family were among the early pioneers of the county. James Donahoe was born in 1801, and died in Cross Creek in 1872. For thirty years he was a justice of the peace; was commissioner two terms, and at one time was in the State Legislature, representing Washington county. His widow is now a resident of New Cumberland, W. Va.

To Mr. and Mrs. Spriggs were born eight children, of whom the following is a brief record: James D. is a Presbyterian minister at South Lyon, Mich. (he married Annie Wilson, of Fayette county); Mary Eliza died in infancy; Charles H. lives in Washington, Penn. (married Alice Hallam, and has three children); William died in infancy; Joseph B. is married to a daughter of Joshua Wright and resides in Washington; Margaret died in 1891 at the age of twenty-two years; George D. died in infancy; John M. is still at home. On February 2, 1888, the mother passed through the "golden gates" at the age of fifty years, and on October 16, 1889, Mr. Spriggs married Margaret A. Seaman, daughter of Alexander Seaman (deceased), who for many years was one of the leading grocerymen of Washington. Mr. Spriggs is a Republican in politics, and in church connection has for forty years been a member of the M. E. Church, of which he is at present steward.

CAPT. SAMUEL CAMPBELL (deceased) was a native-born citizen of Hanover township. His grandfather, Archibald Campbell, was born in Ireland, where he was married to a countrywoman, who bore him several children, and died in Ireland about the year 1800.

Archibald came to America after the so-called Act of Union, locating near Candor, in Washington county. He was here married to Mrs. Elizabeth (Fletcher) Scott, a widow lady, who bore Archibald Campbell two sons: Josiah S. (of whom a sketch follows) and Samuel (deceased, who was a law student). Archibald Campbell died about 1811, near Candor, this county, followed by his widow about 1830, and both were buried in the Raccoon cemetery.

Josiah S. Campbell was born here April 16, 1806. He attended the common schools, remaining with his widowed mother after the death of the father. He then learned the carpenter and wheelwright trades, also working at wagon-making. On August 15, 1825, he was married to Rosanna Teel, who was born January 20, 1804, daughter of John Teel, a Revolutionary soldier. The following children were born to Josiah S. and Rosanna Campbell: Catherine (Mrs. J. W. Butz, of Frankfort, Beaver Co., Penn.), Elizabeth (Mrs. John Anderson, of Mansfield Penn.), Samuel (the subject of this sketch), James T. (an undertaker of Galion, Crawford Co., Ohio), John J. (a mechanic of Memphis, Tenn.), Stephen M. S. (a mechanic of Paducah, Ky.), Thomas F. (a member of the Fourth P. V. C., taken prisoner during the operations along the Weldon Railroad, and after surrendering his arms, was shot down by the enemy), Nancy A., Mary A. and Margaret (the latter three died in early youth). For many years Mr. Campbell followed his trade at Frankfort, Penn., where most of his life was passed. He died December 9, 1858, and in 1879 his wife was laid beside him in the Presbyterian cemetery at Frankfort. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church at Frankfort, in which Mr. Campbell had been an active worker, serving as superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and was for many years a trustee of that church. In politics he was formerly a Whig, then became a leading member of the Republican party.

Samuel Campbell was born February 24, 1831, in Florence, Washington Co., Penn. He received a common-school education, and when a young man learned the trade of a cabinet-maker under Robert Stevens, of Frankfort, Penn., where his parents then resided. On March 11, 1855, he was married to Jane Vance, who was born March 11, 1834, near Burgettstown, Penn., a daughter of William P. and Mary (Stephenson) Vance. Mr. Campbell remained at Frankfort one year after his marriage, then moved to a farm in Hanover township, Beaver county, which, in the fall of 1861, he traded for a place near the northwestern boundary of Washington county, where he made a permanent home. On August 25, 1862, he enlisted in Co. H, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., at Beaver, Penn. His first engagement was at Chancellorsville, and he followed the fortunes of his regiment until the second day's battle at Gettysburg. On that memorable afternoon, while fighting in the wheat field near the stone wall, he received a wound in the neck, which disabled him from service for sixty days. He returned to the field in September of that year, and was stationed for some time at Annapolis, Md., afterward joining his regiment. On September 10, 1862, he was appointed second lieutenant of his company, and on November 1 was made captain, serving in that capacity until the close of his service. In September, 1864, he was honorably discharged, and returned to his home in Washington county, bearing with him the reputation of a fearless soldier and just commander. He then resumed farming, which he followed during his active life, engaging extensively in stock-raising and fine wool-growing. With the assistance of an economical wife, combined with his own industry, Capt. Campbell was as successful in private business as on the field of battle. In politics he was formerly a Whig, then a Republican, having been an advisor and counselor of the latter party. He died March 8, 1887, and was laid to rest in Frankfort cemetery. Since his death Mrs. Campbell has been living on the old home farm, to which Mr. Campbell had made several additions. The children of Samuel and Jane Campbell are William J., S. F., Anna Mary (Mrs. J. A. Hanlin), Thomas F. and Joseph V., all of whom are living on the home place, which is managed by the sons, Samuel F. and Thomas F.

MATTHEW H. CROUSE (deceased) was descended from German ancestry. His grandfather was a member of the United States Navy, and was killed on a man-of-war in the war of 1812. His wife, also a German, died of yellow fever about the same time.

Philip J. Crouse was born April 2, 1802, in Philadelphia, Penn., and became an orphan when not more than ten years of age. He was the only child, and after the death of his parents came to Washington county with his guardian, Robert Russell. His education was obtained in the subscription schools of the day, and he lived near Florence, Penn., until he became of age. In April, 1826, Philip J. Crouse was married by Rev. McCurdy to Ruth Ann Mayhew, a native of Maryland, who came to Washington county with her parents when but two years of age. The children of Philip and Ruth Ann Crouse were as follows: Rebecca (deceased wife of James Blakely, Henry county, Ill.), Elizabeth (Mrs. Barnett McCracken, of East End, Pittsburgh), Nancy (married to William Burns), Matthew H. (mentioned below), Thamar A. (Mrs. J. A. Bubbett, of Hanover township), Richard M. (corporal of Company H, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., received wounds at Hatcher's Run, Va., which resulted in his death), Margaret G. (widow of Samuel McKibben, living in McKeesport, Penn.) and Mary J. (wife of Mr. D. M. Wylie, Hancock county, W. Va.). After attaining his majority Philip Crouse came into possession of a farm, which his guardian had purchased, but the title proving faulty, lost both farm and the money invested. He then went to Georgetown, Beaver Co., Penn., and was a steamboat pilot on the Ohio river for several years, finally returning to Hanover township, this county, where his remaining days were passed. He died December 12, 1855, and his wife passed away February 8, 1888. They are buried in Florence cemetery. Mrs. Crouse was a member of the U. P. Church, and in politics Mr. Crouse was a Republican.

Matthew H. Crouse, son of Philip and Ruth Ann Crouse, was born January 16, 1833, near Georgetown, in Beaver county, where he attended the common schools and worked on the farm. After his father's death he and his brother, Richard, purchased a place in Hanover township, Washington county, near the northwest corner. The two brothers removed with their widowed mother to this place, and being energetic, industrious farmers, prospered. After the death of Richard, Matthew took his share, and by incessant toil succeeded in clearing it of debt. On November 26, 1879, he selected as a life companion Agnes L. Tarr, who was born January 27, 1849, in Hancock county, W. Va. She was a daughter of Jackson and Mary Ann (Crawford) Tarr, and grandchild of Peter Tarr, a native of Germany. To the union of Matthew Henderson and Agnes L. (Tarr) Crouse the following children were born: Anna Mary, born December 6, 1880; Edith, born December 25, 1882; and Lila M., born August 25, 1885, all of whom are living. Mr. Crouse continued to reside on the farm which had been in his possession since the death of his brother. He died February 10, 1888, having been preceded by his widowed mother February 8, 1888. Both were buried on the same day. Mr. Crouse was a very successful business man, and left his family an excellent farm of 210 acres, upon which a fine house and other improvements were erected. In politics he was a Democrat up to the war, when he joined the Republican forces. He was a member of the U. P. Church at King's Creek, with which his widow is identified. Since his death his widow and children have resided on the home farm, which Mrs. Crouse manages.

THOMAS D. McCARTY, a leading business man of Midway, this county, was born May 3, 1858, in Mount Pleasant township. The earliest pioneer of the family name in this county was one John McCarty, who settled in Robinson township and reared a family of children, of whom Timothy was married to a daughter of Thomas McConnell.

John McCarty (a son of Timothy McCarty) was born, reared and educated in Mount Pleasant township, this county. He attended school in a rude log cabin equipped with all the usual primitive furnishings of the period, the greased paper which served as window-panes being but a poor medium for the transmission of light. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Jane Roseberry, who was born September 5, 1810, daughter of Benjamin Roseberry, of Robinson township. The following children were born to their union: Martha (wife of Russell Thompson, and mother of three sons and five daughters); Timothy (deceased, a young physician who graduated at the Philadelphia Medical College; he was married to Tillie George, who bore him one daughter, Cora M.); Benjamin R. (living in Mount Pleasant township); James H. (deceased, physician of Jefferson, Harrison Co., Ohio, and graduate of Philadelphia Medical College); John S. (living in Midway, this county); Richard C. (drowned July 4, 1851); Elizabeth M., and Thomas D. (whose name opens this biography). Mr. McCarty was an active member of the Democratic party, and in religious connection was a member of the Raccoon Presbyterian Church from early youth, contributing liberally to its support and serving many years as elder. He always followed farming and stock-raising. He died January 19, 1886, and was laid to rest in the Raccoon cemetery by the side of his wife, who had preceded him to the grave April 11, 1874.

Thomas D. McCarty lived on the home farm during his boyhood, and attended the common schools. He then entered the academy at McDonald, Penn., remaining there some time, afterward spending some years at the Western Pennsylvania University. In February, 1883, he opened a general hardware store at Midway, Penn., which he now manages, and in 1888 purchased a half interest in his brother's (John S.) lumber yard. In 1891 he bought an undertaking business of James Meloney, and conducts these various enterprises with energetic vim and eminent success. On January 3, 1890, he was united in marriage with Anna, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Stark, natives of Scotland. One daughter and a son, Elvie L. and John T., have blessed their union. Politically, Mr. McCarty is an energetic Democrat, and takes an active interest in all progressive movements.

DANIEL DUNCAN. Among the prosperous and influential citizens of Smith township, none is more prominently identified with the best interests of the community than this gentleman, who is a grandson of Alexander Duncan.

John Duncan, father of subject, was born about the year 1768, in Lancaster county, Penn., where he was married, and in 1780 he came to Washington county, locating in Smith township, about one mile and a half north of Burgettstown. At that time it was a wild tract of land, covered with heavy woods, inhabited only by Indians and wild beasts. Here the young couple made their home, and began to clear away the surrounding forest. A brother, Daniel Duncan, who came West with him, was killed by lightning. To this marriage of John Duncan, five children were born: Alexander, David, John, Elisha and Susan, all of whom lived to adult age, and Susan, who was born June 30, 1800, died at Florence in 1890, having lived to see her great-great-grandchild. Mrs. John Duncan died soon after the birth of her youngest child, and Mr. Duncan then married Nancy Morrison, of Washington county, who bore him children as follows: James, Elizabeth, Jane, and a son deceased in infancy (twins), Joseph, Daniel (whose name opens this sketch), and Norris. Of this family Daniel is the only one yet living. The mother passed away, and John Duncan for his third spouse married Mrs. Emery, who died in 1852. He was extensively engaged in the stock business during his later years, being one of the first to bring fine-bred cattle into that part of Washington county. He was very successful in business, accumulating a considerable property; in political opinion he was an enthusiastic Whig.

Daniel Duncan was born May 12, 1815, on the home farm where he is yet living, and where his father first located after coming to Washington county. Our subject received a limited education in the primitive old log schoolhouse of the day, and on September 20, 1851, he was married to Rachel Van Eman, who was born in 1825, a daughter of Garrett Van Eman, a native of Smith township. To this union children were born as follows: Ella (at home), Logan V. and O. C. (twins), the former a farmer living on a part of the home place, the latter living at home, and Norris, who died in infancy. This wife died in 1855, and was buried at Florence, this county. On June 18, 1860, Daniel Duncan was married to Margaret, daughter of John Horner, of Hanover township, this county. The home farm of 215 acres, upon which Mr. and Mrs. Duncan are residing, has been in the possession of the family over one hundred years, and is now in an excellent state of cultivation, all the improvements having been made by him. He has been extensively engaged in the breeding of fine stock. In politics Mr. Duncan was originally a Whig, and since the organization of the party has been a Republican. He has held several township offices. Both he and his wife are consistent members of the U. P. Church at Burgettstown.

WC. BALDWIN, long and favorably known as a thorough-going wide-awake business man, was born January 12, 1858, in the village of Amity, Amwell township, Washington county. In 1860 his father, Rev. John Sealey Baldwin, removed to Brookville, Penn., where he was pastor of the M. P. Church. In 1862 he returned to his native county, and was stationed at Washington at the time of his death, which occurred March 16, 1863. His wife, Jane E., who was a daughter of William Iams, of Amity, died February 22, 1878. The family consisted of two sons and one daughter: Samuel F., born July 8, 1860, died December 8, 1862; Florella E., born July 8, 1854, married to W. L. Milne, of Washington, Penn., and William C., who was about four years old when he lost his father.

Our subject attended public school until ten years of age, and then entered the dry-goods store of William Smith, where he remained several years. In 1873 he went to Bellaire, Ohio, where he clerked in the dry-goods store of George R. Taylor, remaining there until 1875, in which year he returned to Washington and opened a confectionery store in the room now occupied by R. W. Hallam. In 1876 Mr. Baldwin sold out to John Brown, and entered the employ of W. S. Kammerer, who was then in the dry-goods business in the Montgomery building. In 1879 Mr. Kammerer, being in poor health, closed out his store. Mr. Baldwin, then twenty years of age, had spent ten years in stores, and had made up his mind to continue in it. He formed a partnership with Frank H. Judson in the furnishing goods business. In 1882 our subject bought out Mr. Judson, he wishing to engage in the printing business, this being his trade. Mr. Baldwin continued in business until 1890, when he sold out to E. G. Cundall & Sons; at the time he sold he was doing the largest business in his line in the city. Our subject was also one of the founders of the Ethanmont stock farm.

In 1889 he, with others, organized the Willow Grove Oil Co., operating in Washington and Greene counties, Penn. On January 1, 1893, the New York Life Insurance Company appointed Mr. Baldwin general agent of southwestern Pennsylvania.

In 1879 Mr. Baldwin married Miss Josie E. McCormick, daughter of William and Sarah McCormick, of Clarksburg, W. Va. Mr. Baldwin's office is in the Donnan Law building; his residence is on College street.

ISAAC P. COWDEN was born in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, in 1798, a son of John and Ann (Sloan) Cowden. He was reared on the farm, and received such education as was obtainable in the schools of the period. In 1823 he married Esther Nelson, who was born in 1799 on a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, where their son John is yet residing. She was a daughter of James and Ann (Duncan) Nelson, and granddaughter of John and Margaret (Gilliland) Nelson.

John and Margaret Nelson were both natives of Ireland, where they were married shortly before emigrating to America. After reaching this country they took up their abode in York county, Penn., where they resided for a number of years, then moved to Washington county, at that time a wilderness. To reach their destination, they had to move their household belongings on packhorses, the children being carried in creels (great wicker baskets), slung one on each side of a horse. In this way they accomplished the wearisome journey over the mountains, sometimes receiving the hospitality of a pioneer, whose lonely cabin they discovered, sometimes camping by the wayside when night overtook them, but always with stout hearts pushing on, until their destination was reached in safety, and they found their new home in the wilderness. Only one clearing marked the western march of civilization, but undaunted by the dreary outlook they went to work. Fortune smiled upon them, and soon they were able to provide themselves with not only the bare necessities of life, but also with a comfortable, well-furnished house. They were industrious, and therefore prosperous, contented and happy. Nine children grew up around the family hearthstone, viz.: Esther, William, John, Margaret, Archibald, Nancy, Ann, James and Samuel. Of the privations endured by these pioneers, we need mention only a few. Salt was an article much needed and very difficult to obtain. To procure a supply it was necessary to make a trip over the mountains and transport it on packhorses. At first neighbors were few, living long distances apart. To attend church they had to go to Canonsburg. Schools were decidedly primitive affairs. Amid such surroundings James Nelson grew to manhood, and was then married to Ann Duncan, a member of an Irish family of pioneers who had eight children: John, Samuel, Mary, Margaret, Elizabeth, Susan, Isabelle and Ann. After his marriage to Ann Duncan, James Nelson removed to Beaver county, Penn., and remained on a farm in that county until his death. His children by the first marriage were John, Margaret, Isabelle and Esther. This wife died and Mr. Nelson then married Delilah Ralston, who bore him two children—James and Ann. After her mother's death, Esther, then a small child, lived with her grandparents, by whom she was reared and educated, remaining with them until her marriage with Isaac Cowden.

Isaac P. and P. Esther (Nelson) Cowden had the following children: Lillie Ann (widow of Robert Thompson, now living in California), John (who married Louisa Scott, now residing on the old Nelson homestead in Mt. Pleasant township), James (married to Violet Glass, residing in southern Kansas), Martha and Margaret (to whom we are indebted for this sketch), who are unmarried, and reside together in West Middletown, Penn. Isaac P. Cowden was a successful farmer and stock raiser, and resided in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, all his life. He was never actively engaged in political affairs, finding in domestic life and agricultural pursuits a more congenial atmosphere. In religion he was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, like his wife and daughters. His death occurred in May, 1865, his widow mourning his loss until 1877, when she, too, answered the last call.

WILLIAM DEVORE is descended from a gallant Holland pioneer, by name Andrew Devore, who was born in 1736, and was one of the Hessian soldiers captured at Trenton by Gen. Washington, and though but a boy in years, the lad was roused with indignation against the tyranny of the Hessian prince, who had sold his countrymen to serve the English. When an opportunity was offered for him to return to the British army, he flatly refused, and enlisted with the colonial cause. In the summer of 1782 he located on a farm in Nottingham township, Washington county, Penn., part of which is yet owned by his descendants. Here, amidst the scenes of pioneer life, his children were born as follows: Adam, Henry, William, Samuel, James, Andrew (deceased in infancy), Polly and Betsey, none of whom are now living. Mr. Devore became a wealthy farmer, and his industry was evinced by the crooked finger on the hand thus maimed through hard work. He gave 133 acres of land to each of his children, and died on the old place. Politically, he was a member of the Democratic party.

William Devore, the third son of Andrew, was born and reared on the homestead in Nottingham township, this county, and attended the log school-house of the period. He learned the shoemaker's trade, and followed that vocation in connection with farming all his life. In 1821 he was united in marriage with Mary Martin, a native of New Jersey, and she bore him children as follows: Lydia, Andrew (living in North Strabane township), David (a resident of Monongahela City), Phoebe (wife of James Kelsey, Washington, Penn.), Jackson (a resident of Iowa), Mary (a resident of Missouri), Sarah (Mrs. Fox, of Butler county, Penn.), William and Margaret. The mother was a member of the Methodist, the father of the Baptist Church. He voted with the Democratic party.

William Devore, son of William and Mary (Martin) Devore, was born January 19, 1836, in Fallowfield township, Washington county, Penn., on Maple creek. When about five years of age he came to the home place in Nottingham township, this county, where his youth was passed. On March 6, 1862, he married Sarah Ann, daughter of James Fox, and they continued to reside on the home farm until 1867, in the spring of which year he bought a small farm in Fallowfield township, to which they removed in the autumn. They resided there several years and then bought 135½ acres in Carroll township, where they are yet living. He worked six months at $8.00 per month, and from that pittance saved $12.00. He was afterward employed at $9.00 per month, then cropped on shares, afterward worked at 50 cents per day for eleven months, saving from these wages $270. He and his brother then worked four months to perfect a sawmill, and on the first investment cleared $106, on the next $200, and then $1,550. In 1873 he owed $5,000, which has been paid with 10 per cent. interest. He is now engaged in farming and stock-raising, and owns some property in Monongahela City. Politically he is a Democrat. The children of this family are Mary Elizabeth, wife of S. Worman; James, interested in the saw-mills at Monongahela City; Arabella and Henry C., living with their parents.

ROBERT S. McCULLOUGH. In proportion to its population, Hanover township can justly claim as large a number of pioneer families whose names have been indissolubly woven with the history of Pennsylvania, as any township in the noble Keystone State. Among the many who have assisted in the development of Hanover township is the gentleman whose name introduces this biography.

John McCullough (familiarly known as "Squire Mc") was born in 1807, near Hookstown, Beaver Co., Penn. He passed his boyhood in attending the ordinary subscription schools, then learned the carpenter's trade, and in early manhood he began to follow that business in Florence, Washington county. He was there married to Lydia Jackson, who was born in 1807, in Hanover township, this county. She bore him four children, viz.: Rebecca (wife of Alexander McConnell), Agnes (Mrs. Levi Culley, of Florence), Elizabeth (married to Silas Dorman, of Burgettstown, Penn.) and John E. (of Florence, Penn.). The mother of this family was laid to rest July 6, 1842, in Florence, Penn., and Mr. McCullough afterward married Mrs. Deborah (Jackson) Smith, a widow lady, and two children blessed their union, viz.: Robert S., of whom a sketch follows, and Margaret E., deceased wife of Robert Scott, a merchant of Florence, Penn. Mr. and Mrs. McCullough resided in Florence, where he followed his trade for many years. He finally bought a farm, which his son managed, the father continuing to reside in town. John McCullough was possessed of a very sympathetic nature, and was a warm friend of the colored race, having been a sturdy Abolitionist; in politics he was an enthusiastic advocate of the principles embodied in the Democratic platform. He served as justice of the peace in Hanover township for thirty-two years, giving perfect satisfaction. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he was trustee. He died June 4, 1875, mourned by many warm friends. His widow is yet living with her son Robert S., and her step is as firm, her movements as swift as those of many a woman of sixty years, though she has passed her four score years and six.

Robert S. McCullough, son of John and Deborah McCullough, was born February 14, 1844, in Florence, Penn., and received a common-school education. He was an active, energetic youth, and passed his early manhood in various pursuits. On February 27, 1868, he was united in marriage with Miss Carrie Shields, who was born in 1812 in Hanover township. The young couple first located in Florence, Penn., and in 1874 moved to the farm in Hanover township, which he now occupies. He purchased it on time, and by excellent management combined with industry soon freed his home from debt. He believes in looking at the bright side of life; therefore, while many others were wasting time grumbling about "hard times," he was persevering in the duties of each day, until he is now recognized as one of the most systematic and successful farmers of Hanover township. Mr. McCullough deals extensively in stock and wool, and is specially interested in the wool-growing industry. Politically he has always supported the Democratic party; his wife is a member of the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church. Mr. McCullough has never sought political preference, choosing rather to devote his time and attention to his varied business interests, in which he has been eminently successful. His career in life furnishes a striking example of what may be accomplished by energy and enterprise. Starting at the foot of the ladder, with a capital consisting of naught but pluck and energy, he has pushed himself forward through his own efforts, unaided save by the wise counsels of a faithful wife.

PHILIP CURRY is a son of Jesse Curry, whose father, Andrew, was a native of Virginia, a soldier in the war of 1812, and died in 1868.

Jesse Curry was born in 1817, in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., coming in 1827 with his parents to Pennsylvania. In 1843 he was married to Rebecca Axtell, who was born in 1807, in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of Philip Axtell. Mr. Axtell was born in 1778 in New Jersey, and at the age of eighteen years came to Pennsylvania, following farming all his life. He served several terms as justice of the peace, and died in 1875. To the union of Jesse and Rebecca (Axtell) Curry three sons have been born, as follows: William B. (deceased), born in 1846; Philip, whose name opens this sketch; and Richmond L., a carpenter, living in this county, born in 1852. Mr. Curry was too old to enter the war, but was represented by his two eldest sons.

Philip Curry was born May 4, 1848, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., and attended the home school during his boyhood. In 1864 he enlisted in Co. C, Ringgold Cavalry Battalion, taking part in the battle of Droop Mountain and in numerous skirmishes. At the close of the war he returned to his father's farm in Washington county, and January 17, 1867, he was married to Eliza Jane Yoders, by which union four children—three daughters and one son—were born, viz.: Minnie Viola, Emma R., Clara M. and Oscar. Mr. Curry's second marriage was on June 27, 1877, with Sarah E., daughter of Andrew J. Curry, and by her seven children were born, viz.: Daisy D., Sidna W., William B., Joseph P., James V., Alice L. and Francis M.

DEMAS M. FRAZEE, senior member of the firm of Frazee & McClain, dealers in boots and shoes, Washington, is a native of Washington county, Penn., born January 6, 1854. His grandfather, David Frazee, came to the county when a small boy, and in after years became an extensive landowner, having several hundred acres. He was here married to Catherine Sutton, and they both died in this county, the latter in 1850, the former in 1855. Three of their children lived to maturity: David, Andrew S., and a daughter who was married to Peter Miller, but died soon thereafter.

Andrew S. Frazee was born in 1816, near the present village of Lone Pine, in Washington county. He received his education at the schools of the place of his nativity, and was reared to farm life. In the summer of 1861 he enlisted in Co. A, Twenty-second Cavalry (Ringgold Battalion), in which he served over one and one-half years, when he was seized with typhoid fever, in consequence of which he was discharged, and on his return home he resumed the peaceful occupations of the farm. In 1836 he was married to Miss Leah Moninger, who bore him fourteen children, ten of whom grew to maturity, viz.: Catherine A., who married Richard McMillan, and died in Missouri; Martin V., now in the commission business in Chicago; Mary J., widow of Robert C. Vandegrift, of Washington; Sarah E., wife of H. H. Riggle, of Amwell township; David L., also in Amwell township; Demas M.; Permelia S., wife of James E. Reynolds, in Washington; Priscilla W., married to T. J. Harshman, of Washington; Clarinda C., wife of William Moore, in Chicago; and Maggie L., in Amwell township. One of the family, Barbara A., died at the age of fifteen years. The father died in November, 1889, his death being caused by the bursting of a blood vessel while coughing; one year previously he was stricken with paralysis, from which he had partly recovered. The mother is still living, at the age of seventy-two years.

Demas M. Frazee remained on the old home farm until he attained manhood, and while his father and eldest brother, Martin V., were gone to the war, all the general care of the farm devolved on David L. and himself, then mere lads. Many a day before he was nine years of age did he have to follow the plow and attend to the general work of the farm; but he yet found time to improve his mind, for he attended both the common schools of his township and the Lone Pine Academy. In course of time he taught school two winters in Amwell township, but during the greater part of the following winter he was laid up with typhoid fever. In the following summer (1881) he opened out a general store at the locality where is now Topsail post-office, whence after a time he moved to the village of California, on the Monongahela river, where he remained about five and one-half years, engaged in general merchandise business. Selling this establishment out, he came to the borough of Washington, and in February, 1885, formed a partnership with R. C. Vandegrift in the boot and shoe business, the firm later becoming Frazee & Montgomery, by the retirement of Mr. Vandegrift in favor of B. F. Montgomery, which continued until February, 1891, when the present firm of Frazee & McClain was formed by the retirement of Mr. Montgomery in favor of Hiram McClain. In 1883 Mr. Frazee was married to Miss Joanna L., daughter of Isaac Powell, of California, this county. Her father died in 1879; her mother, Caroline Shutterly, is still living in Washington. Mr. Frazee is a member of the Christian Church, of which he is treasurer and a deacon, and of its Sunday-school he was superintendent one year. Socially he is a member of the Equitable Aid Union, and is a popular, progressive, wide-awake citizen.

HENRY BROSCHEART, the genial and popular landlord of the "Auld House," Washington, was born December 17, 1849, in the town of Permesence, Germany, of which country his father was also a native, born in 1820. The elder Broschart, who is a stonemason by trade, came with his family to America in 1852, and made a settlement in Sullivan county, Penn., where he now resides. He is a Democrat and a member of the Catholic Church. In the Fatherland he had married Mary Press, who bore him children as follows: Frederick, Christian, Henry, Jacob, Michael, Frances, Gottlieb and Mary, the last two named being deceased.

Henry Broschart came with the family to the United States, and here he was reared to manhood and educated. His first business was lumbering in Forest, Clarion and Jefferson counties, Penn., and then he went into the oil country where he kept hotel until 1885, in which year he moved to Washington, this county. Here he conducted the "Rush House" for one and one half years, and then leased the "Auld House" which he manages with well-merited success. On June 19, 1878, Mr. Broschart was united in marriage with Lena, daughter of Valentine Smith of Sullivan county, Penn., and the children born to them were Helen, Ernest, Leo, Paul and Clara, the last named being deceased. Mr. Broschart has lately been interested in an extensive glass industry at Redkey, Ind. He is a sound Democrat, and in religion is a member of the Catholic Church.

MRS. JANE BOYD is one of the popular and intelligent ladies of Canonsburg. Her father, Zacheus Patterson, was born and reared in Cumberland county, Penn., where he was married to Margaret, a native of Adams county, same State, daughter of David and Jane (Carrick) Waugh. The young couple made their home in Cumberland county till 1808, when he purchased a farm in North Strabane township, this county, to which they removed. The parents were members of the Chartiers Seceder Church, and the father was an active worker in the Whig party. They were the parents of the following children: John, Robert, David, Stewart, Sarah, Ezra, James, Josiah, Eliza, Tabitha, Jane and Mary. Of this family Jane grew to womanhood and on March 15, 1835, gave her hand in marriage to Wilson Boyd, son of Hugh Boyd.

Hugh Boyd, a native of Ireland, was there married to Elizabeth Scott, who bore him children as follows: Mary, Robert, Wilson, Bankhead, Margaret and Joseph. In 1823 the family came to America, first locating on Mingo creek, Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., where they remained some time, thence removing to the farm now occupied by C. M. Berry. Hugh Boyd was a Whig in politics, and in religion a member of the Seceder Church in Ireland, having transferred his membership to the church in Washington county, Penn., after his immigration. He and his wife died in South Strabane township, this county, and both are buried in the cemetery at Pigeon Creek.

Wilson Boyd was born August 9, 1800, near the town of Newtown, Limavady, County Derry, Ireland, there receiving his early education. At the age of eighteen years he immigrated to Canada, then went to Philadelphia, thence to Pittsburgh, and worked on a farm in Washington county, Penn., until the arrival of his family, when he lived with his parents. After his marriage with Miss Patterson he settled in North Strabane township, this county, residing there fourteen years. They then moved to Somerset township, where Mr. Boyd died in 1876. He was a Whig and Republican, and in religion was formerly a member of the Seceder Church at Pigeon Creek, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church, to which he gave a liberal support. Mrs. Boyd continued to reside in Somerset township till 1890, when she moved to Canonsburg where she has her home. She reared the following named children: Robert, David, Elizabeth, Hugh S., Bankhead, Sarah M., Mary J., Robert and Anna T. Of these David enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment P. V. L., and was killed at the battle of Gettysburgh. Elizabeth was married to Murdoch Smith, and has one son, Boyd D., born March 27, 1878. Hugh S., married to Bell J. Watson, was licensed to preach the Gospel August 8, 1876, by the United Presbyterian Presbytery of Cleveland, and ordained and installed pastor of the United Presbyterian congregation at New Bedford, Lawrence Co., Penn., where he remained until the early part of 1888, when he accepted the pastorate of the U. P. congregation at Greensburgh, Penn.; he graduated at Westminster College, at New Wilmington, Lawrence Co., Penn., in June, 1875, standing second in a good class. Bankhead was graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in June, 1867; he was licensed to preach the Gospel by the United Presbyterian Presbytery of Chartiers in January, 1870, and died March 7, same year. Sarah M. died March 2, 1869. Mary J., died May 27, 1871. Robert died January 17, 1873.

JAMES MILLER. In the array of progressive agriculturists who have risen to prominence, and who have contributed substantially to the material prosperity of Washington county, stands the worthy man whose name opens this biographical sketch.

James Miller, grandfather of subject, was born in the Emerald Isle, immigrating to America in early manhood. He first located in Lancaster county, Penn., where in 1782 he married Miss Margaret Shearer, who was also born in Ireland. In 1786 the young couple moved to Washington county, Penn., and made a home on the farm in Mt. Pleasant township now occupied by their descendants. Mr. Miller made three visits to Ireland after settling in America. He took an active part in politics, and served his township as justice of the peace. He died in 1819 in Mt. Pleasant township, his widow surviving him many years. Both were members of the Seceder Church.

John Miller, father of subject, was born on the home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, and in 1815 was united in marriage with Margaret Miller, a native of Ireland, who came with her parents to America in 1811. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Miller settled on the home farm, where seven children were born to them, namely: Margaret, who was married to John Givan, of Beaver county, Penn., and died in 1872; James; Sarah, married to William Marshall, of near Lawrence, Kans.; Mary, who was married to Robert Givan, of Beaver county, Penn., and died in 1872; Nancy, first married to Samuel H. White (who was murdered for money in 1857, in Chartiers township), now living in New Concord, Ohio, the widow of Rev. McManus; Elizabeth, who married John Miller, and died in July, 1890; and Ann, deceased wife of J. G. Paxton, of Chartiers township, this county. Mr. Miller, who always followed farming, died in 1859, when over seventy years of age, his widow surviving him till 1871. Both were formerly members of the Seceder Church, afterward uniting with the Chartiers Cross Roads United Presbyterian Congregation.

James Miller, the subject proper of this memoir, was born September 23, 1819, on the old home farm in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in the primitive subscription schools of the period. On February 11, 1852, he was united in marriage with Margaret Givan, a native of Beaver county, Penn., daughter of William and Letitia Givan, natives of Ireland, who made their permanent home in Beaver county, Penn. The father died in 1873, the mother having passed away some years before. After their marriage Mrs. Miller lived on the home farm, eight miles from Washington, which contains 257 acres of well-improved land, and has been in the possession of the family for 106 years. Mr. Miller has erected a good residence, a tenant house, three comfortable barns and two sheep houses, all commodious and well-built. Politically he is a Democrat, has served as supervisor, and nine years on the school board. He and his wife have been members of the Chartiers Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church for forty years. They have no children.

ANDREW J. PROUDFIT is descended from a well-known family of Washington county. His grandfather, David Proudfit, was a native of Scotland, and coming to America located in York county, Penn., where his son John was born January 28, 1775. In 1802 John Proudfit came to Washington county, Penn., locating in Hanover township. On April 9, 1809, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Lyle, a native of Cross Creek (then Hopewell) township, born March 24, 1793. She was a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Hays) Lyle. Some time after their marriage John and Elizabeth (Lyle) Proudfit returned to York county, Penn., as the father of John was growing old and feeble, and needed the care of his children. The young couple remained on the home farm until the father's death, which occurred in 1826, and John and his family then again moved to Washington county, settling one mile west of Burgettstown, where he passed the remainder of his life. The trips across the mountains were full of danger and accompanied with many inconveniences. On one occasion Mr. and Mrs. Proudfit rode three hundred miles on horseback to visit relatives in York county, Penn., the wife carrying an infant in her arms, and many hardships were endured on the journey. The following children were born to these pioneers: David, born August 13, 1810 (deceased September 19, 1813); John L., born September 3, 1812 (deceased September 22, 1882); James K., born April 21, 1815 (deceased February 25, 1816); Eliza J., born January 2, 1817, was married to Arthur Campbell, of Smith township (and died December 7, 1892); Agnes, born June 17, 1819 (deceased August 15, 1824); Robert F., born December 23, 1821 (deceased); Cinderella, born September 16, 1821 (wife of Jacob Proudfit, a native of Ashland county, Ohio); William, born May 10, 1828; Andrew J., born March 20, 1831; and Eleanor, born August 29, 1833 (Mrs. Thomas Shipley, of Hanover township, this county).

Andrew J. Proudfit was born on the old home farm, situated one mile and a half west of Burgettstown, this county, where he was trained to agricultural pursuits from early boyhood, receiving an education in the common schools. On January 21, 1865, he was married to Elizabeth Porter, who was born September 19, 1839, daughter of Andrew Porter, of Jefferson township, this county. One daughter has been born to Andrew J. and Elizabeth (Porter) Proudfit, namely: Ida A., who graduated from Washington Female Seminary in the class of 1890, and still remains with her parents. Since his marriage Mr. Proudfit has resided on a farm one and a half miles north of Burgettstown, and has followed farming and stock-raising, giving special attention to fine-wool sheep. He is well and favorably known as a good citizen and successful farmer, and is surrounded by many friends. In politics he has been a lifelong Democrat. He and his wife are both members of the Presbyterian Church.

HENRY CHAPMAN. Among the successful agriculturists and business men of Washington county none stands higher in the estimation of the intelligent members of the community than the gentleman whose name here appears.

He comes of rugged, loyal Scotch-Irish ancestry, his grandfather, Richard Chapman, Sr., having been born in County Monaghan, Ireland, where he married Sarah Patterson, also a native of that county, and where six children came to brighten their home, an humble one indeed, for they were poor but honest small farm tenants. Having now so many mouths to fill, and little ones to clothe besides themselves, the parents decided on seeking a new home in America, "where children are blessings, and he who hath most, hath aid for his fortune, and riches to boast." Accordingly they took passage for themselves and six children on a vessel sailing from Belfast, and as they gazed from the deck, with tear-bedimmed eyes, on the now fast receding isle of their birth and childhood, their hearts were buoyed with hope for a bright and happy future, the hope that ever "springs eternal in the human breast." But, alas! they had not proceeded far on the briny deep ere misfortune befel the little family circle. The vessel was overcrowded, water was scarce, the weather tempestuous, and as a consequence sickness came among them—a sickness so fatal that all the children of Mr. and Mrs. Chapman succumbed, sank to the "dreamless rest that lulls the dead," and were buried at sea.

With resolute purpose and stout hearts the bereaved parents, after landing in Philadelphia, strangers in a strange land, and possessing but little of this world's goods, started out, for the then "Far West," with no small difficulty ultimately succeeding in reaching Washington county, Penn., where they made a settlement in Mount Pleasant township. Here they built them a log cabin, and here they experienced all the hardships and encountered the many dangers incident to pioneer life. Six children, four sons and two daughters, were born to them in this, their new home, the following being a brief record of them: Robert moved to Ohio, becoming an early settler in Holmes county, where he died; Mary married James McNinch, and lived and died in West Finley township; Andrew was a farmer in Donegal township, where he died; Alexander died in Claysville, this county, where he kept store; Jane married Joel Lamborn, and died in Washington county, where she had passed her entire life; Richard, Jr., will have special mention presently. The father of this family died in Mount Pleasant township, near Hickory, May 26, 1803, the mother passing away December 17, 1826, in Pittsburgh, Penn., while visiting friends.

Richard Chapman, Jr., was born May 15, 1794, on the old homestead in Mount Pleasant township, and received but a meager education at the primitive subscription schools of the day. When he was yet a boy his father died, and his mother then conducted a roadside inn near the town of Hickory, which tavern enjoyed considerable patronage from the traveling public, particularly emigrants moving westward. At this time Richard's spare hours from school were spent in assisting his mother, and so continued until his marriage, when he settled on a farm in the same township, where he followed agriculture up to the time of his death. On February 3, 1815, he was married to Catherine Updegraff, a member of an old Washington county family, who was born December 22, 1795. The children born to this union were as follows: Patterson, born November 15, 1815, a physician, who died in Belmont county, Ohio, at the age of seventy-two years; John, born April 20, 1817, died when ten years of age; Andrew, born December 19, 1818, died at the age of thirty-one years; Richard, born October 22, 1820, died aged fifty-five years in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, where he was practicing medicine; Margaret, born July 31, 1822, died unmarried; Henry, the subject of our biographical narrative; Julia, born July 15, 1826, deceased wife of A. C. Chapman; Eliza Jane, born September 29, 1828, wife of Benjamin Bungard, of Greene county, Penn.; Alexander, born September 5, 1831, died aged fifty; Hiram J., born June 1, 1833, resides in Guernsey county, Ohio, where he is a physician; Barzillai, born October 2, 1835, is a physician in Bakersville, Coshocton Co., Ohio, where he now resides; Robert U., born July 21, 1837, is practicing medicine in Des Moines, Iowa; and Minerva, born June 2, 1839, died in infancy. The father of this large family was called from earth June 6, 1861, in Greene county, Penn., whither he had moved. He was a member of the Disciple Church at Hickory, as was also his widow. In politics he was a strong Democrat, a prominent figure in the party. For seventeen years he was constable of the township, and was a widely known and very popular man in the community. His widow survived him a few years, dying suddenly December 25, 1866, of heart disease, while on a visit to her sons in Ohio.

Henry Chapman was born September 1, 1824, in Hickory, Mount Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., his education (which was most limited, as he had to commence working for himself very early in life) being secured at the common schools of the district. At the age of twelve years he left home, and for some time worked for James Ross, a farmer in the same township, after which he worked at various other places until 1847, when he went to Belmont county, Ohio, whence in 1850 he returned to Washington county, settling on a farm on Buck run, in Donegal township, where he has since resided, and which property he purchased in 1875. This highly improved piece of land is situated about two miles southwest of Atchison, and is equipped with some of the finest farm buildings in the township. On February 21, 1848, Mr. Chapman was united in marriage with Susan Botkins, a native of Belmont county, Ohio, born in 1832, a daughter of Col. R. C. Botkins, of that locality. Col. Botkins was born in Fayette county, Penn. He was married April 16, 1818, to Rachel Vernon, of same county, and three children were there born to them. After moving to Ohio the Colonel was engaged in farming, and he and his wife passed the rest of their days there, the former dying in 1861 at the age of sixty-seven years, the latter in 1846 at about the age of fifty years. Col. Botkins was a school teacher for a time, in both Pennsylvania and Ohio, and Mrs. Chapman has in her possession some of the books he used. The arithmetic is written in a neat, legible hand, showing much care and proficiency. He was active in the cause of education, and in military matters he took much interest, rising to the rank of colonel. Ten children were born to him and his wife, nine of whom attained adult age, four of them being yet alive, viz.: Benjamin V. (in Adams county, Iowa); Elma Ann (widow of David Bell, and residing in Iowa); Susan (Mrs. Henry Chapman), and Isaac Harry (in Bates county, Mo.).

Eleven children have come to bless our subject and wife: Frank, a farmer in Baylor county, Tex.; Maria, deceased in infancy; Eber, died at the age of twenty-four years; Margaret, living with her parents; Henry, a resident of Lincoln, Kas.; Ella, wife of Edward Kinyon, in Nebraska; Rachel, at home with her parents; Clara, who died at the age of fourteen years; Eva, wife of Frank Linville, of Donegal township; Cora, a school teacher, living with her parents; and A. Campbell, also at the paternal home. Mr. and Mrs. Chapman are consistent members of the Dutch Fork Disciple Church, and in politics he is a lifelong Democrat. His fine farm comprises 200 acres of prime land, and he raises pure-bred Spanish Merino sheep, of which he has a flock of 350; also Devonshire and Jersey cattle. He has in his possession a church "letter" over 100 years old from the Seceder Church in Monaghan, Ireland, to the church here, which letter was brought by his grandfather from across the ocean. Mr. Chapman is a highly respected citizen, justly honored and admired for his many noble traits of character. He is a typical self-made man, one who has fought his way unaided through life, his weapons—a stout heart and willing hand; his watchword and battle-cry—"Excelsior."

JOLBERT T. SHIPLEY, one of the oldest and best-known native-born residents of Smith township, was born April 10, 1812, a son of John Shipley, whose father was a native of Maryland.

John Shipley was born about twelve miles from Baltimore, Md., and passed his boyhood in his native State, there receiving his early education. At the age of twenty-one years he came to Washington county, Penn., and purchased a wild tract of land in Smith township, to which he added from time to time until he had 135 acres, where a log cabin was erected. He was united in marriage with Miss Lydia Day, and to this marriage were born the following children: Benjamin, George, John, William, Nancy, Tolbert T., Richard, Samuel, Catherine, Rachel and Henry. John Shipley was an active worker in the Whig party, and in religious faith a member of the M. E. Church.

Tolbert T. Shipley received his early education at the primitive log schoolhouses of the day, with no floor, punchon seats and greased paper windows. Their first instruction was given on a paddle upon which some of the more simple characters were inscribed. On January 8, 1831, he was united in marriage with Ellen, daughter of Samuel Clokey, of Smith township, this county. Samuel Clokey was born and reared to farm life; he married Sarah Thompson, a native of Lancaster county, Penn., and coming to Washington in an early day, settled in Smith township. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church. He died April 12, 1848, leaving children as follows: Mary (Mrs. David Woods), Andrew, William, Robert, Elizabeth, Sarah, Margaret, Jane, Ellen (Mrs. Shipley) and Julia.

Tolbert T. and Ellen Shipley resided on the old farm three years after their marriage, then lived in Carroll county, Ohio, four years, finally returning to the home place, and in 1876 settled in Burgettstown, where they are yet living. As no children have blessed their union, they took as their own a niece, Martha Pyles, who was married to Capt. J. R. Day. After her marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Shipley took a boy named Pressby, who is now living in Mansfield, Penn. They then took a young girl named Agnes Bell, who remained with them until her marriage to William D. Andrews, and is now living in Dennison, Ohio. Politically, Mr. Shipley was first a Whig and then a Democrat. In religion he is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Burgettstown.

GREER McMANNIS, a representative citizen of Buffalo township, is a son of James, and nephew of John McMannis, whose father, William, was born in the year 1787, in Eastern Pennsylvania.

William McMannis passed his youth at home and then came to Washington county, Penn., settling in Canton township. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Patrick Burus, a native of Ireland, and the children born to them were as follows: John, William, James, Ann, Elizabeth and Hannah. Mr. McMannis sold his farm in Canton township, then located on a farm in South Strabane township, and in 1830 came to Buffalo township, settling on a farm in Pleasant valley, where he died in 1849, being followed by his wife in 1873. In politics he was a Whig.

James McMannis was born, in 1825, in Canton township, Washington Co., Penn., and was educated in the district schools. He was married February 23, 1854, to Caroline, daughter of Greer Hair, of Buffalo township, and after marriage he settled near Claysville, this county, where he remained eleven years; then purchased a farm of 170 acres, which he continued to improve up to the time of his death. His children were: William, Lizzie, Mary (Mrs. James W. Hodgens), Greer, Flora, Sylvia (Mrs. Joseph Lacroix) and Kate. The mother of this family died in September, 1877, the father on November 26, 1891. He owed his success to a life of industry. In politics he was a Democrat.

Greer McMannis was born March 28, 1861, and passed his youth on the home place, where he has since resided, receiving a common-school education. On January 15, 1885, he was married to Jennie, daughter of Alexander Buchanan, of Taylorstown, this county, and they have one child—Ella V. Mr. McMannis is an enterprising, progressive citizen, and a worthy representative of the name he bears. Politically, he is an ardent member of the Democratic party.

WILLIAM S. KAMMERER, commission merchant, No. 35 Board of Trade Building, Chicago, Ill., was born on the old homestead farm of his father in Nottingham township, Washington county, Penn., February 23, 1843, a son of John and Elizabeth (Bender) Kammerer. He was educated in the common school of his native township, and immediately after his father's death (then but thirteen years of age) he entered the store at the old homestead as clerk, where he remained until about the age of twenty, when he engaged with J. S. Dilworth & Co., of Pittsburgh, in the wholesale grocery business as clerk. His health, however, apparently giving way, he, at the solicitation of his brother Joseph, opened a general store at Hillsboro, Penn. But finding this a very limited field for success, after about one year he removed to Baltimore, Md., where he engaged in furnishing grain to Government contractors, which business, though profitable, came to a close with the war, after which he removed to Springfield, Ill., and engaged as clerk in the dry-goods store of Kimber, Ragsdale & Co., where he remained almost four years. Returning to the old homestead in the fall of 1868, he connected himself in business with his brothers, Joseph, and Frank G., under the firm name of Kammerer Brothers, remaining in the above firm until the spring of 1873.

On October 31, 1872, Mr. Kammerer was married to Miss Mattie G. Emery, daughter of Dr. Boyd Emery, of Dunningville, same county. In the following spring he located in Monongahela City, where he engaged in the dry-goods, notion and millinery business. In 1876 he sold out, and removed to Washington, where he engaged in the same business, remaining there until 1879, when, owing to severe illness, he closed out his business, and again returned to the old homestead. Improving in health, he went into his brother's store as clerk, where he remained until the summer of 1881, when he removed to Chicago, and engaged in the grain commission business with his brother Frank G., where he still remains. Mr. Kammerer resides at Riverside, a suburb of Chicago. He and his wife are the parents of one child, Boyd L., born December 21, 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Kammerer are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he has been a trustee and treasurer during the past five years in the church at Riverside.

THOMAS SLATER, a well-know farmer of Cecil township, is a son of James Slater, who was born, in 1767, in County Armagh, Ireland, and learned the shoemaker's trade. In 1792 he embarked on an American-bound vessel, landing first in New York City, where he followed his trade, and was married to Martha Thompson. She was a native of Ireland, and a fellow-voyager with Mr. Slater. In 1800 they came to Allegheny county, Penn., soon afterward locating on the farm where he died in 1842, having been preceded by his wife in 1832. They were members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, in which he was ruling elder for many years. Their children were: Mary, who married Matthew Crawford, of Mt. Pleasant township, and died in 1832; Elizabeth, married to William Crawford, and died in 1838; John, who died in infancy; John (who died in March, 1883), married to Margaret George Thompson of Pittsburgh, Penn., and first locating in Allegheny county, afterward moved to Cecil township, this county; James (a shoemaker and farmer, deceased in 1863, married to Margaret Watters, of Allegheny county, Penn., thence moving to Indiana); William (married in 1854 to Margaret McCoy of West Virginia), was pastor of the Reformed Presbyterian Church at Miller's Run between the years 1843 and 1847, then resigned on account of ill health and died March 24, 1889; Margaret (deceased in March, 1891 at Beaver Falls, Penn.), became the wife of John McAnlis, of Beaver county, Penn.; Jane, widow of John George, of Mt. Pleasant township, now residing at Beaver Falls, Penn.; Thomas, of whom a sketch follows; and Martha, unmarried, who died in 1839, in Beaver county, Penn.

Thomas Slater was born in 1819, in North Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., and received his early education in the subscription schools of that locality. In 1843 he came to Mt. Pleasant township, this county, locating near Hickory, and was married same year to Christina J., a native of Pittsburgh, and daughter of William and Margaret (George) Thompson. The father was born in Allegheny county, Penn., and the mother was a native of Mt. Pleasant township. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Slater resided on a farm near Hickory until September, 1855, when he came to his present farm in Cecil township, this county. It contains 173 acres of good land, upon which he has erected a comfortable house and commodious barn, also made various other improvements. The following children have been born to this union: William T., a teacher of Wilkinsburg, Penn.; John R., living in Cecil township; George W., a physician in Baltimore, Md.; Elizabeth G., wife of Sherman G. Sackett, Colorado; Jane Allison, married to F. L. McClelland of Topeka, Kans.; Anna, who died in 1872; Emma and Ella (twins); Margaret wife of Dr. S. A. S. Metheny, and Thomas Melville.

Mr. Slater has much of the force and foresight that characterizes all self-made men, who, from small beginnings, have carved out for themselves a competence or a fortune. Himself a diligent reader, and a consistent friend of higher education, he has spared no pains to give his family advantages in this respect, often at much personal self sacrifice. He is a man of strong character and of well-defined opinions, especially on moral questions; and stands high in the estimation of all who know him, or have dealings with him, for his personal integrity and worth. In his early life he traveled somewhat in the West and South, visiting at one time in South Carolina where friends of his mother lived, near Abbeville; since the Civil war, however, he has heard nothing of them. Cousin "Jimmy Wilson" had a large plantation and many slaves.

FRANK G. KAMMERER, commission merchant, and prominent and influential as a member of the Board of Trade, Chicago, Ill., is a native of Washington county, Penn., born February 21, 1845, on the old homestead farm of his father in Nottingham township.

John Kammerer, father of the subject of this memoir, was born in 1790, in Germany, where he was educated and became prominent in business circles as a lumber merchant in the city of Frankfort-on-the-Main. He was twice married in his native land; first in 1820, to Margaret Dunker, by whom he had five children, and she dying in 1830, he married for his second wife Elizabeth Bender. In 1831 he and his family came to America, settling in Washington county, Penn., and embarking in mercantile and other businesses on a tract of land he afterward (in 1839) purchased, in Nottingham township. Here were born to him children as follows: Jonathan, Joseph, Elizabeth, Jacob, William S. and Frank G. Of these Jacob died in 1839, and Jonathan in 1890. Frank G. and William S. are in business in Chicago. The father died July 24, 1856, the mother May 18, 1859.

Frank G. Kammerer was educated in the common schools of his native county, and received a thorough business training at the Iron City Commercial College, Pittsburgh. He then engaged in business with his brother in the village of Kammerer, Washington county, remaining there until 1875, when he traveled for a year, after which he embarked in the insurance business at Washington, Penn., with Major A. G. Happer, under the firm name of Happer and Kammerer. This continued until the latter part of September, 1879, when he retired from the firm and moved to Chicago. In the meantime (in 1877) Mr. Kammerer assumed control, as vice-president and general manager, under Dr. Geo. P. Hayes, of what became the Pittsburgh Southern Railroad (now the B. & O. Short Line), running from Washington to Pittsburgh, and built the road from Finleyville to Washington. With this road he was connected two years, or until its completion, at which time he retired from the management.

In 1880 Mr. Kammerer became a member of the Board of Trade of Chicago, and established the present flourishing firm of F. G. Kammerer & Co., office No. 35 Board of Trade Building, he being sole member of the firm. From the account of the Chicago Board of Trade given in Andreas' history [1885—p. 315"] we quote the following: "Frank G. Kammerer is one of the very few business men of Chicago, who, in a comparatively short period of time, have been able to firmly establish themselves among the ablest and most nuturing competitors of the most enterprising city in the world. Coming here only six years ago from Washington county, Penn., where he passed his earlier years in the successful prosecution of various mercantile and manufacturing enterprises, Mr. Kammerer at once engaged in the grain and provision trade, and by his energy and business foresight he has made the house of F. G. Kammerer & Co. a synonym for fair dealing and stability. He has been a prominent member of the Board of Trade since coming to Chicago in 1878, and in January, 1884, was honored by being elected a member of the committee of arbitration." On page 320, same history, we notice that Mr. Kammerer was a member of the committee on arbitration in 1884-85-86, with William Gardner, J. C. Merrill, G. W. Phillips and F. G. Logan. In 1886 Mr. Kammerer was elected a director of the Board of Trade, serving the full term, retiring in 1889.

In addition to his Board of Trade business interests Mr. Kammerer has made several successful real estate investments, and is the owner of a considerable amount of property. He was one of the leading promoters of the artificial ice industry in Chicago, and was one of the first stockholders of the present company—the Consumers Pure Ice Company—of which he was elected president, and at present is a director and member of the executive committee. This is the largest original enterprise of the kind in Chicago, and one of the largest in the world. He is also largely interested in the manufacture and introduction of the "Hinson Car Coupler," one of the leading couplers of the Master Car Builders' type which has recently been legalized and endorsed by Congress, and he is president of the company that has control of the patent.

On December 9, 1886, Frank G. Kammerer was united in marriage with Miss Dorrie List Hildreth, daughter of E. A. Hildreth, M. D., and Susan L. McMehen, of Wheeling, W. Va., and two children have come to brighten their home: Eugene, born January 23, 1888, and Frances, born October 21, 1889. Mr. Kammerer owns an elegant residence on Woodlawn avenue, one of the most beautiful and fashionable streets in the "Garden City," South Side.

AARON BANE, one of the intelligent business men of Amwell township, is a grandson of Nathan Bane, who with his father and five brothers came from Virginia to Washington county, Penn., thus becoming identified with its earliest history.

One brother, Joseph, pushed on to the Ohio river and died in Kentucky; the others settled in Washington county. Indians were numerous in those early days, and they had a very disagreeable manner of informing the pale-faced intruder of their presence, and also of their intentions, which were by no means of a friendly nature at that period. It was soon found necessary to organize a company in order to provide a defense against sudden attacks of the savages, and of this company Nathan Bane was made captain. Here follows a very interesting item of philological information, as given by Mr. Aaron Bane: "While instructing the men of the company, Capt. Bane was accustomed to give the order 'Aim well,' and from this order the township received its present name." Mr. Bane was married to a Miss Nelson, who bore him six children: Abraham, Jake, Hannah, Becky, James and Joseph.

Joseph Bane was born in 1776, on the middle fork of Ten-Mile creek, and passed his youth attending the rate schools and assisting on the farm, until he was twenty-four years of age, when he took the farm now owned and occupied by his son Aaron. Mr. Bane died in 1836, in his sixty-second year, his wife following him to her long home in 1839.

Aaron Bane was born on the old homestead September 14, 1821, and has there passed the sixty-eight years of his life. His earlier years were employed in farm work and a few months' attendance at the winter schools. In 1860 he was married to Mary W. Curry, daughter of John and Deborah Curry. They have three children: John C., Albert G. and Edith. Of these, John C. is a rising young lawyer of Washington; Albert G. is now twenty-five years of age, and has charge of his father's farm of 220 fertile acres, which he will eventually own. Mr. Bane has always been a Republican, while his two sons vote the Democratic ticket. The family belong to the earliest settlers of the county, and have always been highly esteemed for their moral and intellectual worth. Mr. Bane is of Quaker descent, and does honor to his ancestors.

DRYDEN VAN KIRK, the oldest living representative of his family, was born in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., August 27, 1815. He is a grandson of Henry Van Kirk, who was born January 9, 1742, and in early manhood was married to Sarah Van-Kirk, who was born July 22, 1749. She bore him the following children: William, born February 1, 1763; Johnson, born January 11, 1765; Mary, born April 7, 1771; Gideon, born April 19, 1775; Ira, born January 29, 1779; Arthur, born June 6, 1781; Sarah, born July 18, 1784; Henry and John (twins), born May 12, 1788; Ann, born January 16, 1791; Elizabeth, born September 7, 1794, and Jennie, born December 14, 1796. Mr. Van Kirk was one of the pioneers of Washington county, Penn., and settled in Amwell township, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred April 3, 1797. He was a Federalist in politics, and in religion a member of the Baptist Church.

Henry Van Kirk was born in Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his early boyhood in work on the home place; then served an apprenticeship as a mason, which trade he followed several years. He was united in marriage with Ruth Jolly, who was born January 1, 1792, and she bore him the following children: Mary E., born February 7, 1810; Dryden, born August 27, 1815; Jane, born December 12, 1817; Charles, born July 19, 1820; Ruth, born January 15, 1821; Susanna, born August 19, 1826, and Milton, born

May 14, 1829. Mr. Van Kirk first settled in Amwell township, Washington county, but afterward moved to Franklin township, where he remained until his death. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and in political views was a Whig.

Dryden Van Kirk was born on the home farm in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth at home, where he learned of his father the trade of a mason. He followed that business throughout his early life, being for many years employed in different parts of the county, and the testimonials of his skill are yet standing. He is now enjoying the fruits of those early years of toil, and is the owner of one of the best farms in the township. He was united in marriage with Miss Matilda Sowers, a resident of Winchester, Va., and then settled in Franklin township, where he has since resided, and reared the following children: John O., born September 18, 1833; Henry (deceased), born January 11, 1835; William, born September 24, 1836; Charles, born April 20, 1838; Simeon (deceased), born September 21, 1840; George M. (deceased), born August 12, 1849; Nancy J. (Mrs. John McClelland), born July 28, 1845; Sarah (Mrs. Henry Lindley), born November 8, 1847; and Hiram, born May 15, 1858. Mr. Van Kirk is an energetic member of the Republican party.

John O. Van Kirk was born on the home farm in Franklin township, Washington county, and passed his early life at home. On November 12, 1868, he was united in marriage with Eliza, daughter of William Long, and they have two children: Frank and Howard. Mr. Van Kirk is an active member of the Republican party, and for years has been the assessor of Franklin township, and has also served as constable many times. The family are members of the Disciple Church at Washington.

EMANUEL W. KELLER. This well-known citizen is a member of one of the oldest families of Monongahela. His father, George A. Keller, was a native of Bedford county, Penn., and there grew to manhood and was married to Margaret Waltman, daughter of a neighboring farmer. In 1836 George A. Keller and his family came to Monongahela, where the following children grew to maturity: William L., George A., Andrew J., Emanuel W., Samuel P., Lemah Mc., A. Jane (wife of Isaac Yohe) and Margaret (married to John W. Teiters). The mother was a member of the Lutheran Church, and later of the M. E. Church.

Emanuel W. Keller was born November 14, 1832, in Bedford county, Penn., and received his early education in the schools of Monongahela. He began life for himself at an early age, working for some time as cabin boy and steward on the river boats running to New Orleans. In 1852 he opened a grocery store at Monongahela, and conducted that business for eleven years; then sold out and worked in a foundry several years, finally purchasing his present dry-goods store in company with his brothers, George A. and Samuel P.; George A. retired from the business several years ago. On June 7, 1855, Emanuel W. Keller was united in marriage with Eunice J., daughter of Noble Woodard, and she bore him one son, W. Clyde E., now deceased. Mr. Keller is a public-spirited citizen, and takes an active interest in the success of the Republican party. He has been for many years a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JAMES McCORMICK NEILL, who now occupies the old homestead of the American branch of the family, was the first of the family born therein, although it has been the property of his ancestors for about a century.

Reynolds Christy Neill was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in 1771, where the Reynolds and Neill families were as old as the Pillar Towers. He emigrated to America when a young man, and located at Canonsburg, Penn. Soon afterward he married Sarah Bowen, and engaged in the mercantile business, riding to Philadelphia on horseback to order his goods, after which they were hauled over the mountains to Canonsburg. He was engaged in the mercantile business for many years. Reynolds C. Neill was the father of four children, namely: Samuel, Reynolds Christy, James and Nancy. He purchased a farm in North Strabane township in 1810, one mile south of Canonsburg, which still remains in the name. He died April 14, 1812, his wife June 3, 1859, in the eighty-sixth year of her age, and both are interred in Oak Spring cemetery. Samuel received an education at Jefferson College, after which he went West, locating at Shelbyville, Ill. James married and raised a family. He died on his farm in Ohio. Nancy died in the thirty-eighth year of her age.

Reynolds Christy Neill learned the shoemaker's trade in his boyhood days at Canonsburg. He was married August 7, 1827, to Miss Flora McCormick, who was born in Millin county, Penn., removing with her parents to Ohio in early childhood. In 1831 they returned to Washington county, and in 1838 located on the old farm, one mile south of Canonsburg, where they resided the rest of their lives. He died May 21, 1877, being in the eighty-third year of his age. His wife died April 24, 1887, in the ninetyeth year of her age, and both are interred in Oak Spring cemetery. Their family consisted of six children, namely: Thomas, Samuel, Sarah Ann, Nancy Jane, James McCormick and Reynolds C.

Thomas Neill was born September 30, 1829, and was married twice, his first wife being Jane Weaver, to whom two children were born, namely: Flora Jane and Thomas Reynolds. They reside on part of the old farm. His second wife was Miss Kate Kerr.

Samuel Neill, second son of Reynolds Christy, was born May 4, 1833, and was married to Miss Lizzie Berry, of Dunningville, Penn., January 20, 1859. He is a farmer and stock-raiser, and during his stay in this county raised fine Merino sheep. On February 22, 1882, he left Washington county and located in Humeston, Wayne county, Iowa, where he purchased a farm and now resides. His family consists of five children, namely: Anna M., born May 21, 1861; Flora E., born June 5, 1863; John Christy, born April 29, 1870; Lizzie E., born July 14, 1874, and William M., born February 15, 1877. Anna and Flora are married, and live in Humeston. John attended College, and Lizzie attended the High School at Humeston. Samuel is an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Humeston. James McCormick, born in 1838, is noticed at the close of this sketch. Reynolds C., the youngest son, was born October 15, 1840. He married Miss Mattie Wilson, May 14, 1885, and is the father of two children, Clark and Eva. He now resides on Greenside avenue, Canonsburg.

Sarah Ann and Nancy Jane reside on Central avenue, Canonsburg, on the lot where their grandfather used to keep his store, 100 years ago.

James McCormick Neill was born October 15, 1838, he being the first member of his family born on the farm which has been so long in the name. He was married March 5, 1873, to Miss Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Thos. D. and Eliza Caldwell Weaver. Settled near Clinton, Allegheny county, and then near Candor, Washington county; returned to the old homestead in 1890. To them were born six children, namely: James Weaver, Flora Annetta, Mary, Dora Bell, Elizabeth and Edna, all of whom are at home. It has been the custom of the family while living on the homestead to attend the Chartiers Presbyterian Church, the oldest church in the community.

MT. GREER is a member of one of the pioneer families of Cecil township, and a son of Robert Greer, who was born in 1804, in County Down, Ireland, and in 1820 came with his parents to Chartiers township, Washington Co., Penn., locating on the Allison farm. He was soon afterward married to Nancy Rice, and in 1828 began wedded life on the old homestead in Cecil township, this county, where five children were born to their union, namely: Adam R., living in Hancock county, Ohio; Mary Isabelle, wife of H. Rial, of Hancock county, Ohio;

M. T., whose name opens this sketch; Robert, who enlisted in 1861, in the Eighty-fifth Regiment, P. V. I., for three years or during the war, and died in 1862 at the White House Hospital, Richmond, Va.; and Sarah Ann, living with her brother, M. T. The father died in February, 1887, having been preceded by the mother in 1867. Both parents were members of the Presbyterian Church at Centre.

M. T. Greer was born January 12, 1835, on the farm in Cecil township which is yet his home, and received his education in the district schools of the neighborhood. The homestead contains 132 acres of good land, which is kept in the highest state of cultivation by the present owner, who also gives considerable attention to raising a fine grade of cattle. He has watched the development of the county, having seen all of the railroads enter it, and Greer's Station is located on his farm. He has taken an active interest in politics, voting with the Democratic party, and has filled various offices of trust in the township. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Centre.

JAMES J. HUNTER, a representative farmer of East Finley township, is a son of James Hunter, who was born about the year 1776, of Irish parents in eastern Pennsylvania, and spent his early life in that State.

On June 21, 1810, he was there married to Eleanor Garrett, and immediately thereafter they moved to Buffalo township, this county. To this union were born the following named children: Margaret (deceased), born April 12, 1811; Susan (deceased), born October 24, 1814; Elizabeth, born April 13, 1818, now living in East Finley township, this county, the widow of Robert Marshall; James A.; and William, residing in West Finley township. Mrs. Hunter died in 1824, and March 29, 1827, Mr. Hunter was united in marriage with Sarah Clark, of Buffalo township, this county, and they had two children: John Clark (deceased), born December 24, 1827, and Sarah Ann (deceased), born October 6, 1830. The mother of these children died in 1846, and November 2, 1848, Mr. Hunter was united in marriage with Jane Welsh, who died in 1888. Mr. Hunter followed farming and distilling until 1839, when he came to East Finley township, settling on the farm now owned by his son, James J. Hunter, and which is situated about a mile east of Good Intent, near the western line of East Finley township. He passed the remainder of his life on this farm, and died in the year 1858. He was a member of the U. P. Church at Wheeling, and in politics he was a Whig.

James J. Hunter was born October 26, 1820, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn.; and was in early life inducted into the mysteries of agriculture by his parents. He came with the family to East Finley township, and in 1843 began life for himself by doing farm work for other people, and cropping on his father's place. On October 19, 1845, he was united in marriage with Jane Hutchisson, who was born in 1825, daughter of Thomas Hutchisson, of East Finley township, and by this union there are three children: Joseph S., born June 24, 1846, now a farmer living in Franklin township, this county; Thomas H., born June 14, 1848, a farmer living in East Finley township, this county; and James C., born June 30, 1852, residing in Brilliant, Jefferson Co., Ohio. Mrs. Hunter died in 1853, and on November 13, 1860, Mr. Hunter was married to Elizabeth Marshall, who was born in 1822, a daughter of Gilbert Marshall, of East Finley township, a hardy pioneer, who lived to be nearly one hundred years of age. James J. and Elizabeth (Marshall) Hunter have had the following children: Mary E., born March 27, 1862, married November 5, 1891, to Alfred Sprowls; Jane A., born September 12, 1863, still living with her parents; and Florence M., born July 27, 1865, also at home. After his first marriage (in 1845) Mr. Hunter resided for some time in West Finley township, this county, then came to East Finley township, and in a short time returned to his former home, but finally, in 1861, moved back to East Finley township where he has since remained. Mr. Hunter, as did his father before him, has made a financial and social success of his life by practicing the valuable virtues of industry, perseverance and thrift. In politics he is a worker in the ranks of the Republican party. In religious connection he and his wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Dog Wood Grove, East Finley township.

JOSEPH WILSON. To the energetic, patriotic, warm-hearted and enthusiastic sons of the Emerald Isle America owes a lasting debt of gratitude. The blood of Erin's sons has ever freely flowed in behalf of American liberties and for the American people. From the days of the Revolution, when Patrick Henry voiced the anguished cry of a maddened nation in burning words of eloquence, to the present time, as gold-crowned Monopoly would crush the toiling millions beneath her feet, laugh to scorn their cries for mercy—through all these years has rung that cry which is echoed in the heart of every true Irishman—"Give me liberty or give me death;" and many have accepted death, that their adopted and beloved country might enjoy the blessings of liberty. Of this noble race the family of which we write are worthy representatives. Thomas Wilson was born and reared in County Antrim, Ireland, and in early life made choice of a helpmeet in the person of Mary Ellis, whose children were as follows: Joseph, Margaret (wife of William Chapman), Nancy (Mrs. Archie Wilney), Matthew, Thomas, Eliza (wife of Patrick Rush) and Robert. The father was a member of the Seceder Church. He followed farming, and both parents died in their native land.

A. J. Hunter

Joseph Wilson was born February 28, 1827, in County Antrim, Ireland, and was there married to Nancy Kerr. In 1853 the children of the Wilson family came to America; Joseph came a year ahead of wife and two sons: John and Joseph E., aged two and four years respectively. They had a stormy voyage of nine weeks' duration, but finally landing in Baltimore, Md., proceeded to Washington county, locating in Canonsburg, where Joseph Wilson followed the boating and coal business until 1862. He then enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth P. V. I., with the army of the Potomac. He was wounded in the foot by a minie ball, at Cold Harbor, and after returning home he engaged in business. In 1871 he opened the grocery which he is now conducting. In politics he is a Republican, and served as Burgess of Canonsburg one year and assistant Burgess several years. He is a member and liberal supporter of the U. P. Church. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson the following is a brief record: John, born in County Antrim, Ireland, was reared and educated in Canonsburg, this county; was married to Mary, daughter of William Skyles, and she has borne him eight children. John Wilson is the manager of the Oak Spring cemetery. Joseph E., born in Ireland and reared in Canonsburg, Penn., in early life was married to Vianna Ferguson; is engaged in the coal business. Thomas is living at home. David follows teaming for a livelihood; in early life he was united in marriage with Mary Jones. Matthew is an enterprising and prosperous grocer of Canonsburg; selected a life companion in the person of Miss Jennie Gilin. George was married to Amanda Gutherie, and they are now residing in the State of Ohio, where he carries on a profitable business. Robert, who married Martha Thompson, is a huckster. Mary E. was educated at the common schools of Canonsburg, at the academy, and also attending the normal school at California, this county; she is now teaching in the schools of Canonsburg. The family are members of the U. P. Church, and the sons are all staunch Republicans.

SAMUEL A. LACOCK, M. D., of Canonsburg, is a physician recognized by the profession and the public as a man of eminent ability, skill and enterprise, having hewed his own way to the prominent position he now occupies. He is a representative of one of the oldest families of Washington county, one Samuel Lacock—whose children were Ira, John R. and Samuel—being the first to settle here. Ira Lacock was born in this county, and in early manhood was married to Annie Bane, who bore him children as follows: William (living in Washington county), Isaac (a resident of Missouri), Samuel (deceased), John V. (of whom a sketch follows), Elizabeth (wife of William Mounts) and Ira J. (an attorney of Hiawatha, Kans.). The father died in January, 1877, at the age of seventy-three years, the mother having preceded him to the grave in 1871, in her seventy-first year.

John V. Lacock was also born in Washington county, where he was educated and grew to manhood. He selected a life companion in the person of Sarah J., daughter of William and Mary (Coulson) McClenathan, of Amwell township, this county, who were connected with the Death family, of England. James Death, Sr., emigrated from England about 1680, with his wife Sophia. Their children were Edward, James, William, Charity and George Death. Charity Death married Samuel Coulson. Their children were Mary, William, John, Sarah, James, Rachael, Thomas and Anna. Mary Coulson married William McClenathan. Their children were Isabella, Samuel, William, John, James, Blair, Allen, Thomas, George S., Mary and Sarah Jane. The last named became the wife of John V. Lacock. To the union of John V. and Sarah J. Lacock five sons were born, viz.: George S. (living in Kansas), Samuel A. (whose name opens this sketch), William R. (living in Amwell township), Ira L. (a resident of Franklin township), and John Marion (deceased in infancy). The father is yet living on a farm in Franklin township, owned by his son, Samuel A. The mother died December 11, 1889, aged sixty-four years.

Dr. Samuel A. Lacock was born December 23, 1849, in Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his youth on the home farm, attending during the winter months the public schools of the neighborhood. His later education was received at Washington and Jefferson College, and in 1870 he entered Bethany College, W. Va., graduating therefrom in June, 1873. After his studies were finished, he taught school for two years, then read medicine at Washington. In 1875 he took a medical course at Ann Arbor, Mich., and in 1876 entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he graduated in March, 1877. In July of the same year Dr. Lacock commenced the practice of his profession at McConnell's Mill, in Chartiers township, remaining there three years. In April, 1883, he came to Canonsburg, where he has since resided. In early life the Doctor was married to Flora Slusher, who died leaving one child, Hallie M. In 1878 he was united in marriage with Miss Olive Kate, daughter of Hugh C. De France, of Chartiers township, who has borne him two daughters—Elva

E. and Ida M.—and one son—Joseph C. Dr. La-cock has a large practice. In politics he is an active worker in the Democratic party, having served his party in many ways. During the nine years he has been a resident of Canonsburg he has taken an active part in extending the borough limits and generally improving the town, and is at present greatly interested in the prosecution of the establishment of water-works, electric light, and sewerage of the town. He has served one term as city burgess, nearly eight years as school director, and is now a director in the Citizens' Bank.

HENRY CONRAD, proprietor of the only tin shop in Burgettstown, was born November 5, 1838, in Prussia, and is a son of Charles Conrad, whose father was born and reared in that country, being there married to a Miss Schules. Grandfather Conrad was a merchant and farmer, and both he and his wife died in Prussia.

Charles Conrad was born in 1798, in Prussia. In early manhood he married Catherine Conrad, a member of another family of the same name, and their children were Catharina, Julia, Elizabeth, Caroline, Charles, Henry, Jacob and Daniel. In 1846 he and his family embarked in a sailing vessel for America, landing at New York after a heavy storm, which lasted a day and a night, the crew and passengers thinking every moment would be their last. After arriving in New York, the family proceeded westward to Lock No. 17, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, where Mr. Conrad purchased a farm, on which he remained twenty years. He then moved to Wabash county, Ind., and there passed the remainder of his life. He was an ardent member of the Evangelical Church, and contributed liberally to its support; in politics he was a Democrat. He followed agricultural pursuits.

Henry Conrad, a son of Charles and Catherine Conrad, lived with his parents until sixteen years of age, when he began learning the trade of tinner with one John Luchenbough, of Canal Dover, Ohio, serving an apprenticeship of three and a half years. He then followed his trade at Zoar, same State, afterward moving to Pittsburgh, Penn., and few years later to New York, where he remained one year. He then returned to Pittsburgh, and in 1872 opened a tin shop in Burgettstown, this county, where he has since continued. On July 12, 1866, he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ulrich, a native of Germany, and two children have been born to their union: George H. and Margaret. In 1876 Mr. Conrad started a small greenhouse, which has increased to his present magnificent collection of beautiful and varied vegetation, including both flowers and vegetables, which are kept in a large and elegant conservatory. Mr. Conrad has made his own way to the upper round of the ladder of success. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion has been a member of the Evangelical Church for years.

George H. Conrad was born June 30, 1867, received his early education in the schools of Burgettstown, and at the age of fourteen years attended the Evangelical School at Pittsburgh, Penn. When sixteen years of age he entered his father's shop, where he has since remained. On January 21, 1892, he married Sadie E., daughter of William Jones, of Midway, Penn. Politically George H. Conrad is a Republican, and in religious faith he is a member of the Evangelical Church.

WV. RIDDILE, M. D., is one of the prominent physicians of Burgettstown. His early ancestors were natives of Roxburghshire, Scotland, one of whom emigrated to America at an early day, and reared a family of children in this country. John Riddile (the grandfather of W. V.) was born and grew to manhood in America, and married here. He came to Washington county, Penn., in an early day, purchasing a tract of land in Smith township, where he remained until his death. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church of Candor. In politics he affiliated with the Democratic party, serving several years as justice, in which position he gave satisfaction to all. He was the father of six children, namely: Abraham, Joseph, John, Catherine, James and Ann.

Samuel Riddile, father of Dr. Riddile, was born on the farm in Smith township, receiving his early education in the log schoolhouse of the period, and remaining at home during his boyhood. In early life he was united in marriage with Margaret, daughter of Joseph Scott, and the young people settled on a farm in Smith township, this county, where the following children were born: John, Mary (wife of Robert McFarland), J. S. (deceased), S. P., James (living in California), David (deceased), Robert (deceased), Sarah (Mrs. James Hayes), Catherine (wife of William Proudfit), Abraham (deceased) and W. V. (our subject). Mr. Riddile followed building and farming. In politics he was a Democrat. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Candor, afterward uniting with the one at Burgettstown.

W. V. Riddile, M. D., was born October 6, 1839, in Smith township, being educated at the common schools and Burgettstown Academy. In 1861 he entered the office of Dr. T. W. Bradley, remaining with him three years, during which time he entered the University of Michigan in 1863, graduating in 1864. He then began to practice at Noblestown, Allegheny county, afterward moving to Candor, living there five years, when he passed one year in Pittsburgh, and finally settled in Burgettstown, where he has since resided. He was united in marriage with Rosa, daughter of Hon. Finley Patterson, of Cross Creek township, twenty-three years ago. She died in 1875 leaving three children: Thomas (deceased), Fred C. and Harry B. For his second wife Dr. Riddle was married to Emma, daughter of Charles W. Bingham, by which union there is one daughter, Mamie J. Dr. Riddle has taken an active interest in educational matters, and in politics is a Democrat. He is an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM C. CONDIT. The pioneer ancestors of this family date back to 1678, when the name of John Condit was first heard. He located in the town of Newark, Essex Co., N. J., in 1689, and in 1691 was married to a widow, Mrs. Catherine Barton, a niece of Sir Isaac Newton, whose estate she inherited. Mr. Condit succeeded Sir Isaac as Master and Warden of the English Mint. His wife died May 27, 1737, and on January 20, 1739, Mr. Condit passed away, leaving the estate to his son Peter, whose eldest son, Samuel, inherited it in turn. In 1885 there were 1623 descendants of Samuel Condit, first grandson of John, living in the United States. Peter, the fifth grandson of John (the ancestor, who resided in Morristown, N. J.), was the individual to whom the Condit family in Anwell township trace their genealogy. Philip Condit was born in Newark, N. J., in April, 1709, and passed his life near Morristown, same State, where he died December 3, 1801, aged ninety-two years. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Jabez Condit, son of Philip, was born February 8, 1739, and was married to Phoebe Smith, of Morristown, N. J. He passed his life on his father's farm, and the old home is filled with sacred mementoes of these ancestors of the past century. He died November 22, 1801, followed by his wife March 6, 1813. Jonas Condit, son of Jabez and Phoebe (Smith) Condit, was born January 14, 1769, and came to Washington county when about twenty-five years of age. His second wife was Hannah, daughter of Rev. Thaddeus Dodd, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Condit was a man of fine physique and strong moral character. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Upper and Lower Ten-Mile, and in 1805 was elected an elder. He and his family assisted very materially with the sacred music, and members of their family have led the choir exclusively since 1843. Mr. Condit was a justice of the peace many years by appointment of the Governor of Pennsylvania.

Daniel Condit, son of Jonas and Hannah Condit, was born December 10, 1813, in Anwell township, and was educated in the common schools. On February 2, 1837, he was married to Priscilla Carter, who died October 20, 1874. On November 21, 1875, he wedded Amanda Chitter, and she died January 1, 1878. On April 14, 1880, he selected his third wife in the person of Mary Johnson. Mr. Condit's children were William C., born October 6, 1839; Mrs. Henry Horan, born October 11, 1842, and Mrs. Ruth A. Brownlee, born April 12, 1850. Mr. Condit was for many years a useful and zealous member of the Presbyterian Church, and was ordained an elder September 12, 1858. He was superintendent of the Sunday-school, and leader of the choir for twenty years, the latter position being now occupied by his son. He was very fond of Scripture and historical reading. Politically he was first a Whig and then a Republican, serving as school director and treasurer of the township for many years.

William C. Condit, son of Daniel and Priscilla, was born in Amity, Washington county, and when six months old was brought by his parents to Lindley's Mills, where he remained for two years, when his parents again moved to the place adjoining the one which he now owns and occupies. In 1859 he was married to Mary J. Strouse, granddaughter of Rev. Thaddeus Dodd, and they have had four children: Silas, born November 8, 1860; Jennie McAfee, born December 31, 1865; Anna McAfee, born July 28, 1871, and Lottie M., born May 31, 1878, died January 28, 1881. Mr. Condit has always been a great reader, and like his father is an earnest student of Scripture and history. He has a fertile farm of 100 acres. In politics he has always been an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, having held several township offices. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the Ringgold Cavalry Battalion for three years. On June 6, 1864, he was shot through the right lung, receiving injuries from which he yet suffers. He and wife have been members of the Presbyterian Church for thirty-four years, while their children have been members for seventeen years.

ARCHIBALD B. DARRAGH. Robert Burns expressed the universal desire of every earnest man and woman, when, in his inimitable style, he penned the lines now quoted the world around:

Oh, wad some Power the giftie gie us,
To see oursels as others see us.
It wad frae mony a blunder free us,
An foolish notion.

Had the Scottish bard written no other word, that verse would have immortalized his name. Ample proof of this is given in the insatiable craving of the world for biographical literature. The best and most satisfactory way to "see oursels as others see us," is in the study of the characteristics of humanity as exemplified in our fellow mortals. This favorite study is less wounding to our personal vanity than a rigid self-examination would probably be, and answers the same purpose. Therefore are we interested in the lives of those around us, especially in those who have made a signal success, and, overcoming every obstacle, stand to-day in honored places. John Darragh was born in Ireland, but emigrating to America at an early day became a prosperous farmer. Of his large family, Daniel was the second child in order of birth.

Daniel Darragh was born in 1767, in Ireland, and in 1774 came with his parents and brother, John, to America. They located in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., on the old home farm yet occupied by their descendants, where Neal and Archibald, the younger brothers, were born. His sisters were Isabella, Margaret, Elizabeth, Jane and Mary. Daniel passed his youth on the home place, and in 1815 was married to Sarah Sheldon, a native of Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn. Three children were born to their union: John C., moved to California in 1849, thence to Nevada, where he died; Mary, wife of Harris Thusbar, died in 1861, at Pontiac, Mich.; and Archibald B., born September 1, 1826. The father always followed farming, serving his township in almost every office. He took the census of Washington county twice, riding on horseback to perform that duty. He died in 1859, followed by Mrs. Darragh in 1865.

Archibald B. Darragh was born on the old place in Nottingham township, Washington Co., Penn., there securing his early education. In January, 1851, he selected as a life companion Miss Amy Gamble, who died in 1853. For his second wife he married Sarah A., daughter of Alexander Gault, a representative citizen of Nottingham township. They have had nine children, four of whom are yet living, viz.: Amy Jane, Daniel C., Alexander W. and Annie E. When the war opened in 1861, the father left his widowed mother, and his wife and children, to fight for the honor of the Stars and Stripes. He enlisted in the First Pennsylvania Cavalry as a private, taking part in the battle of the Wilderness, and the other engagements of the army of the Potomac. He returned home in 1864, having been promoted to the rank of orderly sergeant, and laying aside the sword once more resumed the peaceful life of a farmer, in which he has since been engaged. He owns 192 acres of well-cultivated land, including a large coal mine, which he sold to the Nottingham Coal Co. at $55 per acre. He has been county auditor for three years and served in different capacities. Mr. Darragh now has a deed in his possession which is over 106 years old.

Of the pioneers of this family in America, John moved to Pittsburgh, and was elected the second mayor of the young city; Archibald entered the United States army, and was commissioned captain; Isabella married Daniel Liggett, and lived to be eighty-six years old; Margaret married Dr. Baird, and lived to be eighty-seven years old, and Jane, who married Joseph Scott, and died in her eighty-sixth year. Of the Sheldon family of five sisters and four brothers, Mrs. Charlotte Graff is now living in the eighty-fourth year of her age.

JOHAN G. MARTIN was born March 17, 1824, in Wales, and passed his early childhood amid the wild scenes of that picturesque land. His father, William Martin, was born in Scotland, and was married to Margaret Creighton, a highland lassie. The young couple resided in Wales for some time after their marriage, and in 1832 sailed to America, first locating near Allegheny City, Allegheny Co., Penn., where he followed gardening. About 1860 they moved to Alliance, Ohio, where he died in 1870, followed by his wife in 1874. They were the parents of the following named children: John G.; William, living in Alliance, Ohio; Isabelle, wife of Joseph Kirkpatrick, a miner, of Upper Michigan; Mrs. Marion Porter, living near Alliance, Ohio, and Maggie, widow of John Atwell, of Mount Union, Ohio.

John G. Martin came with his parents to Allegheny county, Penn., in 1832, and remained there until 1850, when he was married December 20 of that year to Charlotte D. Allen, a native of Washington county, Penn., and daughter of Abiah Allen. The grandparents of Abiah Allen were Joseph and Deborah (Hill) Allen. Joseph Allen was a native of England, and member of the Quaker Society. He came to America about the year 1770, and in 1774 took out a patent for a large tract of land on the Monongahela river, in Washington county, Penn. Ten years later he secured 354 additional acres, called "Allen's Delight." This farm adjoined his first purchase, and the two tracts contained over 880 acres of land, which he divided among his children in 1799, keeping one portion for himself and wife. In this pioneer home, surrounded by the beasts of the forest and wild Indians, were born the following children: Eli, John, Samuel, William, Joshua, Emma (Mrs. Thomas Stockdale), Deborah (Mrs. Wenders), and Benjamin. The latter son received no land, but was dependent upon the others for his support. The father died at an advanced age in 1839. Joshua, son of Joseph and Deborah (Hill) Allen, was born on the home farm in Allen township, Washington county, and when a young man was married to Elizabeth McCrory. They passed their lives on the old place.

Abiah Allen, son of Joshua and Elizabeth (McGroxy) Allen, was born in 1799, in Allen township, Washington county, where he grew to manhood. In 1822 he was married to Mary Hough, who was born in 1799, in Fayette county, Penn., where the wedding ceremony took place. They settled in Allen township, Washington county, and five children were born to them, namely: Maria Ellen, wife of John White; David B. H., who died in Westmoreland county, Penn., in 1880; Charlotte D. (Mrs. Martin), Barbara Ann (widow of Wilson Jackman), in Galva, Ill., and Alexander Bonaparte, of Cleveland, Ohio. The parents always resided on the home place. In 1817 the father was killed by falling from a tree; his widow died in 1887.

John G. and Charlotte D. (Allen) Martin moved to their present home in Allen township, in the spring of 1850. The place contains 120 acres of fertile land where he is engaged in gardening and general agriculture. He is actively interested in politics, voting with the Republican party, and has served for years as a member of the school board. He and his wife are members of the Disciple Church at Fayette City. Their children have been born as follows: Maggie, wife of George Maxwell, of Allen township; William D.; Mary Belle, wife of Herman McFall, living on the home place, and Eliza Jane, deceased wife of George Maxwell.

W P. VANCE. Among the leading business men of Burgettstown, this enterprising merchant takes a prominent position. His family are numbered with the earliest pioneers of Washington county. Maj. William Vance, born in Scotland in 1718, died in Pennsylvania in 1788, and was buried in Cross Creek cemetery. Joseph Vance, the son of Maj. Vance, was born about the middle of the eighteenth century in Scotland, but emigrated in early manhood. He first settled in Winchester, Va., and in 1774 came to Pennsylvania. He located in Cross Creek township, Washington county, while the Indians were still numerous, and soon achieved a wide-spread reputation as an Indian fighter, many of the dusky warriors having fallen by his unerring rifle. Few, if any, were more prominently identified with the early settlement of the western portion of Washington county, than was Joseph Vance. He married and passed the remainder of his life in the wilderness, where his first log cabin was erected. The uncultivated land has now become a fertile farm. He and his wife were called to their rest at an advanced age, leaving their children to finish the work so nobly begun.

Among these children was a son, William, born in the year 1776, and reared in Washington county amid the usual trials and dangers of pioneer life. His education was necessarily limited, as schools were few, and at best afforded but meager opportunities. He was first married to Rachel Patterson, a resident of Cross Creek township, who bore him six children. She died, and a few years afterward he selected a second wife, Hannah Patterson, a member of an old family of Cross Creek township. To this union, also, there were born six children. Mr. Vance always lived in Cross Creek township, and was one of the representative men of the day. He died in the year 1856. He was a Whig in politics, and in religion a member of the Presbyterian Church. Vance's Fort was located on the home tract, having been used as a church, the first sermon preached in the vicinity being given in that building.

Allison Vance, son of William Vance, was born in 1808, on the home farm, and was educated in the neighboring schools. He was married to Margaret, daughter of John Campbell, of Smith township, this county, and settled on a farm adjoining the old place, where the following named children were born and reared: John (deceased), W. P. (subject of this sketch), Rachel (deceased), David (deceased), Robert C., James L. and Leander. In politics, Allison Vance was an active worker in the Whig party, and in religion a member in and liberal supporter of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church. After a successful life he died in 1890, his wife having crossed the dark river three months previously. The remains of both now rest in Cross Creek cemetery.

W. P. Vance was born September 1, 1812, in Cross Creek township, this county, remaining at home until twenty years of age. He then went to Washington, Penn., and learned photography. After following that vocation a few years, his health failing, he sold out, and coming to Burgettstown, this county, opened a hardware store, which he has since conducted. On July 1, 1865, W. P. Vance was united in marriage with Alice M., daughter of Andrew McFarland, of Cross Creek township, this county, and their children are Annie M., Charles M. and Alice M. Mr. Vance is a public-spirited man and very successful in business, owning a fine stock of hardware, and supplying a large amount of custom. In politics he is a Republican. He and his family are attendants of the Presbyterian Church.

SILAS BALDWIN. Among the pioneer families of Franklin township, the name of Baldwin has ever been a synonym for enterprise and industry. The early home of that family was in the State of New Jersey, where they were engaged for many years in agriculture.

Jonathan Baldwin first came to Washington county, Penn., with his family, and settling in Morris township, made a new home in the unbroken wilderness. His three sons, William, Francis and Jonathan, assisted their father, toiling early and late to secure a comfortable home. In a few years the father and mother were laid to rest near the scene of their labors, and the sons began life for themselves. After the death of the parents, Francis Baldwin, in 1803, married Rebecca, daughter of Thomas Hill, a resident of East Finley township, and the following children were born to them: Stephen, Sarah, Thomas, Jonathan, John, Phoebe, Francis, Sealy, James, Amos, Silas and Cephas. Mr. Baldwin was one of the organizers and a liberal supporter of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Van Buren. In politics he was a member of the Whig party. Thomas Hill was in the war of the Revolution, and when it was over he settled in East Finley township and married Jemima Euloe. He had several thrilling adventures with the Indians and many narrow escapes. Three children were born to them: James, Isem, and Rebecca, who married Francis Baldwin.

Silas, son of Francis and Rebecca Baldwin, was born December 4, 1827, in Morris township, and passed his boyhood on the farm. In early manhood he was married to Sarah (daughter of Thomas and Margaret Sargeant), who bore him children as follows: John T., Mary J., Sarah M., Anna V., William E., Elizabeth E., Ida F. and Ira F. Mr. Baldwin still manages the farm with the aid of his children, and his property is the result of his own economy and industry. Politically he was a Whig, but since the Republican party was organized, has been an active worker for the principles embodied in that platform. William E. Baldwin was married to Mary J., daughter of John B. Weir, and they have four children: Morris P., Leo D., Julia Audrey, and an unnamed infant. This family is second to none in industry and enterprise, and enjoy the esteem of the community in which they reside. John T. Baldwin married Alice Mires, to whom one daughter, Eva Jane Baldwin, was born.

THOMAS MOORE BIGGER. The sons of Erin are and ever have been among the leaders of all enterprises in which bravery, energy and enthusiasm are the requisite ingredients. No dangers appall, no obstacles conquer, no failures overcome the dauntless spirit of a true Irishman. About the middle of the last century Thomas Bigger, a native of County Antrim, Ireland, was there married to Elizabeth Moore, who was born in the same county. The young couple decided that their wedding trip should be an ocean voyage, accordingly they embarked for the New World not many days after their marriage rites were over. After landing in America, they came to Pennsylvania and first located on a piece of land near Hickory, this county, which belonged to George Washington, but was then in court. His rights, however, were soon established, after which Mr. and Mrs. Bigger settled on a farm in Robinson township, which is yet in the family name, being now the property of Matthew Bigger. The Indians had not then entirely abandoned the old hunting grounds, and often compelled the adventurous pioneers to flee for life to Fort McDonald, but as new settlers entered, and the forests were cleared away, the red men roved further west, finally leaving the pale faces, in undisturbed possession of their homes. Eleven children were born to Thomas and Elizabeth (Moore) Bigger, as follows: Matthew, Jane, John, James, Thomas, Ann, James, Samuel, Martha, Andrew and Elizabeth.

Andrew Bigger, the youngest son of Thomas, was born April 1, 1793, and from boyhood was reared to farm duties, continuing to follow farming all his life. In early life he was married to Miss Sarah Campbell, who was born January 8, 1796, in eastern Pennsylvania, and after their marriage settled on the farm of 500 acres, now owned by their son, Thomas M. Game was yet abundant in those days, deer, wild turkeys and panther being plentiful. Mr. Bigger was a staunch adherent of the Whigs until the Free Soil party was organized, when he became a Democrat, and in religious faith was an organizer of the Robinson U. P. Church. Mr. and Mrs. Bigger were the parents of the following children: Mary A., Eliza, Jane, Martha, Rachel and Thomas Moore.

Thomas Moore Bigger was born June 1, 1836, in the old home which is yet standing across the road from his present residence. He assisted with the general duties of the home farm during his boyhood, and on March 10, 1859, entered matrimonial life in company with Margaret, daughter of the late Andrew Donaldson, of Robinson township, this county. The children of this couple are Andrew R., born August 31, 1860; James D., born November 13, 1864; Sarah E., born January 5, 1868; Mary J., born April 30, 1870; and Martha M., born March 12, 1873, all of whom have enjoyed the advantages of a college education. Thomas Moore Bigger yet owns the old homestead, which is kept in a fine state of cultivation and yields him a good income. Politically he has always been a staunch Democrat, having served his township and party by filling various offices of honor and trust. He is an earnest member and hearty supporter of the Robinson U. P. Church.

DAVID B. WINTER, an old and highly respected citizen of Donegal township, is a son of David, whose father, Christopher Winter, was born in Rhine Pfalz, Germany. Christopher Winter emigrated from his native land at an early day, and coming to America settled in Donegal township, Washington county, Penn., there erecting a log cabin, and began to clear the forest from his land. He soon thereafter married Miss Catherine Schaeffer, a lady of German ancestry, whose parents lived near Washington borough, Penn. At this period the Indians were yet very troublesome, and made frequent raids—murdering, plundering and burning as they swept on. At such times the pioneers fled to the blockhouses, leaving their property to the tender mercies of the savages. Mr. and Mrs. Winter lived to a good old age, dying on the farm where they had spent so many hours of toil and danger. They left a family of children, among whom was a son David.

David Winter (father of subject) was born on the pioneer farm in Donegal township, this county, and passed his boyhood days in the usual manner of frontier children; assisting in the farm work, and attending the subscription schools (which were then held in rude log cabins), during a few months of each year. He was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Perry McCoy, of Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., and she bore him two children: David B. and Elizabeth Margaret (deceased wife of Alexander Wiath). After his marriage, David Winter erected a house on the home farm, near the residence of his father, and became a successful farmer. He was a popular and enterprising citizen, and in politics a Democrat. After long and useful lives, he and his wife were laid to rest beside the home where their lives had been passed.

David B. Winter, the only son of the above couple, was born November 1, 1823, in the old house of his father, which is yet standing but a short distance from the large and commodious residence of the son. Mr. Winter worked for his father on the farm in his youth, and attended the common schools. In 1846 he was married to Mary Jane, daughter of William Bryson, of Donegal township, Washington county, and their children were as follows: Elizabeth (Mrs. Franklin Chapman, of Donegal township), Hannah (deceased), David A. (a carpenter, living in Abilene, Tex.), William (a farmer of Donegal township), Joseph (farming in Clark county, Kans.), Nancy C. (Mrs. Joel Snodgrass, of Omaha, Neb.), Alice (Mrs. John Leinville, of Donegal township, this county), Mary (deceased), and John F. (deceased in infancy). The mother of these children died, and in 1870 Mr. Winter was married to Sarah, daughter of William Milligan, of East Finley township, this county, and they have one son and one daughter: George K. and Udora, both living at home. Mr. Winter remained on his father's farm until some time after his marriage, when he erected a beautiful home on an adjoining piece of land, where he is now residing. He has always been a farmer and has been very successful. Politically, he was a Democrat until 1860, when he cast his ballot for Abraham Lincoln, since which time he has been an ardent supporter of the principles embodied in the Republican platform. He and his wife are both members of the Dutch Fork Baptist Church, to which Society he is a liberal contributor.

JOHN REED (deceased) was a son of David Reed, one of the earliest pioneers of Washington county, Penn. David Reed, who was of Scotch-Irish descent, and a native of Lancaster county, Penn., about the year 1777 came with a brother, John, to Washington county. They were offered settlement rights by the State of Virginia on certain conditions which they accepted, and immediately erected their cabins on the land. In the fall they returned to Lancaster county, where John's wife was awaiting him, and David's betrothed then becoming his bride, the two couples moved to their new homes in the following spring. They lived there several years in undisturbed possession, but the land being really a portion of the George Washington survey, was afterward claimed by that famous personage, while the title was being investigated.

After the ejectment suit was decided, the two brothers removed to Cecil township, where they purchased land. John died in 1816, leaving the following children: David (who settled on the home farm), John (sold his land, which is now owned by John Cabbage), Catherine (Mrs. Daniel McClean, Chenango, Penn.), Ann (married to Robert Story), Jane (wife of Rev. David Emery, Darlington, Beaver Co., Penn.) and Mary (wife of Rev. Alexander Murray, Slippery Rock, Penn.) David Reed took a tomahawk claim of 400 acres, and passed his life in Cecil township, this county. He was a ruling elder in the Seceder Church at Canonsburg, of which his wife was also a member; she died many years ago, and he is now buried by her side. Their children were Alexander (married in Cecil township), David (farmer of Cecil township), Mary (wife of George Murray, Chartiers township), John, James (formerly a jeweler of Washington, afterward living in Pittsburgh, Penn.) and Joseph (deceased in 1888, formerly lived on the old homestead in Cecil township). All of these children lived to an advanced age, but are now deceased.

John Reed (the subject of this sketch) was born in 1787, in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, and was reared in Cecil township, there receiving his early education. He afterward attended Jefferson College, at Canonsburg, under the preceptorship of Dr. McMillan, during the early history of that institution, graduating in 1806.

In 1826 John Reed was married to Jane May, a native of Cecil township, this county, and daughter of John and Phoebe (Ross) May, who were born in Lancaster county, Penn., and after their marriage settled in Cecil township, where they lived and died.

After their marriage John and Jane (May) Reed made a permanent home in Mount Pleasant township, and the homestead is still in the possession of the family. John Reed was actively interested in politics, being a member of the Federalist party. He represented Washington county in the State Legislature from 1816 to 1822, also served many years as justice of the peace, and was county commissioner. He and his wife were formerly members of the Seceder Church, afterward uniting with the U. P. Church at Mount Pleasant in which he was a ruling elder. His wife died many years ago, and he was laid to rest beside her in 1877, weary with the weight of ninety-two years of life. The following children were born to the union of John and Jane (May) Reed: Phoebe, Mrs. A. J. Miller, of Hickory, this county (deceased in 1883); Margaret, living on the home farm; David, a farmer of Smith township, married to Martha Borland; John (deceased in 1866); George, of whom further mention is made below; Jane, Mrs. John Wilson (living in this county); Samuel (mentioned farther on), Mary and Elizabeth (living in this county).

Of the children of the above family, George Reed is living on the old homestead, following farming. He is not an active politician, but votes with the Republican party, and in religion is a member of the U. P. Church at Venice, this county. Samuel Reed was married in September, 1885, to Lizzie Harper, a native of Cecil township, this county, and daughter of John Harper, who was born in Cecil township. John Harper was married to Ellen Jane Wallace, a native of Ireland who was brought to America when but three years of age. She is still living on the home farm in Cecil township, but her husband died in March, 1885. Samuel Reed and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at Venice, this county. Their home is in McDonald, Robinson township.

WILLIAM LIGGETT, the oldest living representative of what has ever been one of the most progressive and time-honored families of Washington county, was born April 28, 1821, in Independence township. The Liggett family are of Scotch descent, and trace their origin to two brothers who left their Scottish home and crossed the ocean to America. Landing at Baltimore, Md., they there remained but a short time, and then pushed westward, finally locating in Washington county, Penn. One of these brothers, Thomas Liggett was married to Parmelia Dempster, a resident of Washington county, and passed his life in Independence township. He was a man of stalwart frame, six feet tall, well-proportioned in every way, and possessing great courage and powers of endurance. He was noted for his positive character and sturdy adherence to his word, which principles were implanted on the minds, and were evident in the lives of all his children, who were as follows: Joshua, (a farmer of Tuscarawas county, Ohio), Elizabeth (deceased in Iowa), James (deceased in Coshocton county, Ohio), Harriet (widow of Laban Headington), Robert (of whom mention is made in sketch of John S. Liggett), Mary Ann (deceased in Illinois), Sarah (widow of John Hemp-hill), William (of whom mention is made below), Thomas (farming in Hopewell township), David A. (a merchant of Independence, Penn.), and Anderson (living in Hot Springs, Arkansas). Mr. Liggett died January 29, 1861, Mrs. Liggett on September 17, 1882.

William Liggett was born on a part of the farm which he now owns. He lived at home during his boyhood, and received a limited education in the rate schools, much of his time being employed in farm work. On September 16, 1845, he was married to Nancy Jane (who was born September 24, 1827), daughter of John Mulholland. This union was blessed with the following family of children: Addison (a gardener in Emporia, Kansas), born October 5, 1846; Sarah J., born May 1, 1850, died June 9, 1875; Adeline, born March 8, 1853, died May 4, 1884; William W. (farming in Cass county, Mo.), born October 12, 1855; John T., born December 22, 1857, died January 19, 1889, and Marion A. (a sketch of whom appears further on). The mother of these children died April 9, 1862, and on December 22, 1863, Mr. Liggett was united in marriage with Elizabeth C., who was born June 10, 1831, a daughter of Samuel Cowen, of Mt. Pleasant township, and their children are as follows: Anna M. (Mrs. Geo. Worley, living in Silver Lake, Kosciusko Co., Ind.), born December 6, 1864; Lewis S. (of whom a sketch follows), born September 16, 1866; Charley, born March 8, 1869; Lucy J., born June 27, 1871; and Irene G., born November 22, 1874. Soon after his marriage Mr. Liggett settled on the home place, where he yet resides. He carries on general farming and stock-raising, making a specialty of the wool-growing business in which he has been very successful. He now owns a large amount of land, and is one of the substantial business men of the township. Politically, he has always been a Democrat, and both he and his wife are members of the Lower Buffalo Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder.

Samuel Cowen, father of Mrs. William Liggett, was born in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., July 9, 1807, a son of John and Martha (Caldwell) Cowen, the former a native of York county, Penn., the latter of this county. Their children were William, James, John, Robert, Martha, Anna, Jane (Mrs. James Lee) and Samuel. The father of this family came to Washington county at an early day, and purchased from the Government the place now owned and occupied by John McCalmont. It was all wild land when Mr. Cowen came to it, but was cleared and improved by the family. He was an Old-line Whig in his day, and a staunch Presbyterian, a member at one time of the Upper Buffalo Church, later of the one at Prospect, and was an elder in both. He died in August, 1833, his wife having passed away in 1815. Samuel Cowen was educated in the subscription schools of the locality of his birthplace. He was a farmer and stock dealer all his life. In 1837 he was married to Mary Dinsmore, and their children were John, Elizabeth (Mrs. William Liggett), William H., Martha J., Mary B., Samuel Calvin, Nancy Ann (deceased) and Chalmers. The father departed this life January 7, 1870, and was buried at Fort Scott, Kansas; the mother was called to her long home October 13, 1888. Mr. Cowen was originally a Whig, and on the organization of the party became a Republican. In religious faith he was a member of and elder in the Presbyterian Church at Mt. Prospect.

William Siggett

MARION A. LIGGETT was born March 31, 1860, on the home farm about two miles northwest of West Middletown. His early years were spent on the farm of his father, and he obtained a common-school education. On September 27, 1882, he was married to Alice B. Denny, who was born January 24, 1862, daughter of Walter and Mary (Welch) Denny, of Hopewell township. They have had four children, two of whom died in infancy. The two living daughters are twins: Margaret and Mary, born October 4, 1890. After his marriage Mr. Liggett located two and a half miles north of Claysville, this county, where he is still farming. He recently erected a fine dwelling and barn, which afford an evidence of his prosperity, having also purchased additional land. In politics Mr. Liggett has always supported the Democratic party. In religious connection he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville.

LEWIS S. LIGGETT received his early education in the common schools of Independence township, and afterward took a four years' course at Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Penn. After leaving school he returned home and began farming on a part of the old place. On June 18, 1890, he was married to Hannah M. (who was born September 24, 1864), daughter of William Patterson, of Cross Creek township, and they have two sons, William Leonard, and John Patterson. Since his marriage Mr. Liggett has resided in a handsome residence which he erected and furnished with all modern conveniences, making a beautiful home. He is an active and industrious young man, evidently inheriting the characteristic traits of energy and integrity, which have distinguished his family for generations. Both he and his wife are members of the U. P. Church, of West Middletown, Pennsylvania.

MORGAN MARTIN, a native of West Bethlehem, and now a citizen of Amwell township, is a descendant of Zephaniah Martin, a blacksmith and a member of the Presbyterian Church, who came with his wife and family from Morris county, New Jersey, about the year 1786. His son, James Martin (grandfather of our subject), married Anna McMyrtre, in New Jersey. Securing a patent for 200 acres of land, they located in West Bethlehem township, this county. They had children born to them as follows: Thomas Martin (married Mary Bradbury in 1821, died September, 1851, aged sixty-five years, leaving three children: John M., residing in Greene county, Penn.; Thomas, who died in Missouri in February, 1892, and David, residing in Kansas); Joseph (of whom a sketch is given below); Zephaniah (a blacksmith, married Belle Hood, to whom were born John and Anna, all of whom are dead); Jane (married Joseph Dunn died, June 13, 1863, aged seventy-two); Joseph Dunn (died December 15, 1865, aged seventy-seven, leaving seven children: Washington (dead), James, Morgan L., Joseph, William (dead), Anna and John); Sarah (married David Bowman, who removed to Ashland county, Ohio, in 1829, where eight children were born, of whom no recent account is at hand); Elizabeth (married Stephen Jewell in 1822, and removed to Ohio in 1828; they had nine children: James (deceased), Jonathan and Joseph (reside in Ohio), John Martin (deceased), Mary A. (deceased), A. J. Jewell (residing in Iowa), Jacob (residing in Kansas), Patience (deceased), and Sarah J., deceased). Mrs. Elizabeth Jewell died in 1844. The mother of this large family died in 1800. Mr. Martin afterward married Katherine Moore, with whom he resided on the farm until the time of his death in 1827.

Joseph Martin (father of our subject) was born on the farm in West Bethlehem township, March 15, 1790, and spent his early years attending school in the winter and working on the farm in the summer. He married Elizabeth Hayden, who died shortly after without issue. He next married Nancy Iams, of Amwell township, December 27, 1821, living at Iams' Mills. John Iams, the maternal grandfather of Morgan Martin, came to Washington county, from Maryland, about 1776, and purchased of a Mr. Keys the property, formerly known as Iams' Mills (now Bissell P. O.), which had been previously patented by a Mr. Kelsey. Mr. Iams and his wife, whose maiden name was Hampson, walked and carried all their worldly possessions from Maryland to Pennsylvania; but being a miller and millwright, he prospered, purchased an old mill on the site of the one now owned by Morgan Martin, and tearing it down erected a new building, where he continued to follow his vocation the remainder of his life. In addition to the mill property Mr. Iams owned about 300 acres of land, and was very successful in business. He died July 1, 1823, leaving the following named children: William Iams (married Delilah Meek, died April 1, 1869, aged seventy-seven years; she died September 6, 1876, aged ninety-three years, leaving ten children: Miller, John H., Elisha, Thomas, Isaac, William, Delilah, Mary, Abraham and Rachel); John Iams (died April 30, 1846, aged thirty-four years and six months); Nancy (who married Joseph Martin); Charity (wife of John D. Smith, died January 19, 1876, aged seventy-seven years). Her husband died March 12, 1876, aged eighty-one years, leaving the following children: Martin, Thomas (deceased), Amos, John, Joseph, Nathan, William, Freeman, Elizabeth, Nancy and Ira (deceased). Sarah, wife of William H. Hathaway, died April 15, 1838, aged thirty-four years and six months. Mary married Moses Smith, died September 5, 1859, aged fifty-nine years four months and five days. Moses Smith died September 11, 1818, aged forty-one years ten months and twenty-eight days. They had children born to them as follows: John (who died in the army, at the battle of Fair Oaks), Moses, Joseph and Sarah (Mrs. Huffman).

Joseph Martin owned 280 acres of land. In politics he was a Democrat, and though not a politician, took an active interest in securing good local government. He died December 25, 1850, aged sixty years, nine months and ten days. Mrs. Martin was a member of the Baptist Church, and died in that faith on January 21, 1879, aged eighty-four years and eleven days. The record of Joseph and Nancy (Iams) Martin's children is as follows: Morgan, born October 19, 1823; Elizabeth L., November 21, 1825, died December 13, 1825; John L., February 8, 1828, died November 8, 1892; Joseph, April 2, 1831, died May 13, 1853; Anna, July 23, 1833; and Sarah, February 1, 1836, all of whom were born in West Bethlehem township. John L. married Elizabeth Barr November 30, 1851, and to them children were born as follows: Joseph (deceased), Sarah (Mrs. Keys), A. Jackson, Martha, Samuel and C. W. Martin, who reside on the farm located by their grandfather in West Bethlehem. Anna married A. P. Van Dyke January 25, 1855. To them were born: Leroy M., Nancy (Mrs. Swart), Elizabeth (Mrs.

Bebout), Kate M., Hannah C. (Mrs. Allen, deceased), Thomas and Florence A. Van Dyke. Sarah married Neal Zollars November 7, 1860. They had eight children: George, Joseph, Nancy (deceased), Ezekiel (deceased), Grant, Kate, Elmira, and Martha Zollars.

Morgan Martin, son of Joseph and Nancy (Iams) Martin, was born October 19, 1823, and remained on the farm until twenty-seven years of age. About 1850 he began the milling business at Martin's Mills (now Bissell postoffice), of which he is postmaster, which business he has ever since followed with success. On September 18, 1856, he was united in marriage with Anna Reese, daughter of Thomas and Anna (Sunderland) Reese, of West Bethlehem township. To Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Martin have been born eight children, namely: Sanford, born June 18, 1857, married Alice Bigler March 9, 1882, and died September 5, 1889, at Tacoma, State of Washington; Eliza Jane, born December 19, 1859, married October 13, 1883, William S. Bigler (she died August 22, 1887, leaving two children, Israel G., born August 11, 1884, and Estella, born February 11, 1887); William R., born December 28, 1862; Anna, born December 17, 1864; Sarah, born June 8, 1867; Nancy, born August 12, 1869; Mary Ellen, born September 6, 1872, died December 30, 1885, and Lucinda, born October 10, 1874. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Martin, with their family, belong to the M. E. Church. Politically he is a Democrat, though not a politician. He commenced keeping a general store in 1876, and continues to operate both mill and store with marked success. He built the residence in which he now resides in 1854, and erected the store in 1880, in which is carried on his mercantile business and the business of the Bissell postoffice.

The brothers and sisters of Thomas Reese are: Jesse, Solomon, William, James, Rachel (Mrs. Fisher), Nancy (Mrs. Egy), Sally (Mrs. McCormick), and Sena (Mrs. Scott). The record of the children of Thomas Reese and Anna Sunderland Reese is as follows: William Reese (married Matilda Mikesel, and had born to them: James, Henry, Nancy (Mrs. Miller), Frank, Elsworth, Ellie and Ida, the most of whom reside in Illinois. By his second wife he has two children). Henry Reese (married Catherine Argo, had born to them Samantha (Mrs. Cole), William, Addie (Mrs. Routh), Jennie, Lyman, and Oran. By his second wife he had three children, all residing in Illinois). Sarah (married Samuel Braden; their children are named as follows: John Newton (deceased), Leroy, Flora (Mrs. Sharp), Mary Ellen (deceased), Martha, Anna (Mrs. Shrontz), Rebecca (Mrs. Gray), William, Henry, Sarah and Samuel B. Braden, all residents of this county). Rebecca (married John Ferrell; their children are: Elizabeth, Henry, John S., Jerry, Joseph, A. J., Harvey, Lizzie (Mrs. Keller), Mary (Mrs. Smith), part of whom reside in Iowa, the rest are residents of Nebraska). Isabell (married A. J. Grable, and had born to them: Emerson, Laura, Alvin, Mary, Will, Oscar, Anna, Edward and Lizzie, the most of whom reside in Kansas). Anna (married Morgan Martin, as already related). Nancy (married Albert Clarke, and to them were born Alice and William, who reside in Kansas). Mary (married A. J. Garrett, and had born to them Zadie (Mrs. Woodhead), Nora (Mrs. Glogan), Jackson, Martin R., and Daisy. They are residents of Kansas). Lucinda (married Cyrus Critchfield, and to their union was born one son, Sanford Critchfield, who resides at Denver, Colo.). Thomas Reese married Martha Thomas, and had born to their union Anna, John, William, Archibald, Charles and Georgia May, all residents of Coal Centre, this county.

JOSEPH G. CHARLTON. In tracing the history of our civilization we find no influence has been more potent for good than that of the daily press; especially is this true of the present century, when every important fact around the globe is brought to our very doors, and he who runs may read the record. Few of us often pause to think of the vast amount of brain power and energy required to keep this wonderful machinery of the press in motion. We twine fair laurel wreaths to crown our heroes who battle in deadly strife for liberty, and why should the heroes of literature go down to the grave in utter oblivion? Their victories are no less important to the world than were those won on bloody fields, and many a martyred hero has fallen after a warfare of not four, but four-score years in the army of the Scribes. All honor to our soldiers whether in the fields of carnage or of literature; both are fighting for liberty and right if they are true soldiers, and through the efforts of both "the truth is marching on."

Joseph G. Charlton was born May 17, 1811, in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., and passed his boyhood at the home of his uncle, in North Strabane township, receiving a common-school education. At the age of eighteen years he entered the printing office of The Reporter, Washington, Penn., remaining there about four years. He then went to Pittsburgh, also working in other places. In 1870 he opened a confectionery store in Washington, Penn., and some years later proceeded to Indianapolis, Ind. On Oct. 16, 1874, he was married to Tabitha S., daughter of James Hall, of Washington, Penn., and she has borne him two children, Maud and Harry. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Charlton resided five years at McConnell's Mill, Washington Co., Penn., where he conducted a general store. At the end of that time he entered the publishing office of the Canonsburg Notes, and in 1886 opened an office, publishing a paper called The Local. In 1888 he purchased the Canonsburg Herald, and is now the sole proprietor of both publications issued under the latter name, consisting of a seven-column folio. Mr. Charlton attends the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in political opinion is a Republican.

JOHN MCCOY, a descendant of one of the prominent early pioneers of this county, and himself one of the most highly respected citizens of West Finley township, is a native of the same, born in 1836 on the farm whereon he now lives.

Daniel McCoy, his grandfather, a native of Scotland, came to America in 1772, with his brothers, Angus and James, landing in Baltimore, Md., where, as was the custom at that period with impecunious immigrants, they were hired to a tobacco planter to work out the price of passage. On the same trip there came over a Miss Nancy McCoy, who for a similar reason was hired to the same planter who employed Daniel, and the friendship which sprung up between Nancy and Daniel ripened, in course of time, into a love which resulted in their union for life as soon as their passage had been fully worked out. They then came to Washington county, Penn., and here bought the farm, in what is now West Finley township, that has been in the possession of the McCoy family ever since, the original land patent for which was obtained from the Craig heirs. The old deed, dated 1788, is still in the possession of the subject of this sketch. To Daniel and Nancy (McCoy) McCoy were born nine children: Alexander, John, William, Angus, Kenneth, James, Betsey, Christy and Joseph, all now deceased. Angus McCoy's children were Joseph D., Janet, Margaret, William and Alexander; while the children of James McCoy were Alexander, John, William, Daniel and David.

Kenneth McCoy, who was the fifth child in the family, was born May 25, 1791, on the farm his father had settled on, and here lived all his life cultivating the soil, and every year adding to the improvements thereon. This farm he bought at the time of his marriage with Jane Brownlee, which happy event occurred April 18, 1817. Their home was brightened by the birth of children as follows: Jane, born June 1, 1818; Joseph, born November 1, 1819; Elizabeth, born October 4, 1824; Mary, born August 29, 1827, and John, our subject, all yet living except Jane and Joseph, the former of whom died August 15, 1844, and the latter December 27, 1887. The father departed to that Better Land, "where all have gone and all must

John McCoy was reared to the occupation of his forefathers, and has never left the old home farm, excepting the time he spent in traveling in the western States, shortly after his father's decease. His education was received at the common schools of his district, which he supplemented with much reading and close observation of men and things. With the savings from his hard earnings, he was enabled, on his return home from the West, to buy off the other heirs to his father's estate, and he is now sole proprietor, the property being one of the finest in the township. Mr. McCoy was married November 19, 1877, to Mary E., daughter of George Eckles, of West Finley township, and their union has been blessed with four children: Margaret, born August 26, 1878; John, born December 7, 1879; George, born February 18, 1882, and Edwin B., born September 10, 1886. In politics Mr. McCoy has been a lifelong Republican, but has never aspired to office. The McCoy's have always been liberty-loving people, and some members of the family, in days gone by, were prominent Abolitionists.

Kenneth McCoy, father of our subject, aided at various times many slaves in their escape by the "Underground Railroad" into Canada, and at one time he had eleven colored fugitives secreted in his barn, whom he fed and sheltered until an opportunity offered for them to continue on their flight to liberty. It is said of his cousin Kenneth McCoy, of Ripley, Ohio, that some years ago he pried open the doors of a jail, cut the hand-cuffs and shackles off the prisoners, and liberated a number of unfortunate runaway slaves, who had been recaptured and temporarily incarcerated. He was a blacksmith and tool-dresser. Knowing where quarrymen had left a crowbar, he seized it and carried out his project of freeing the slaves. The authorities arrested another man, and summoned McCoy as a witness to identify the crowbar. The prosecutor asked him when he saw the crowbar last? "Why," he responded, "at the jail, the night I let the darkies out." The prisoner was discharged; but there is no record of the prosecution of McCoy for this early effort to emancipate the colored brothers.

SAMUEL M. MCCONNELL. Among the representative and well-known old citizens of Hanover township, none stand higher than this gentleman.

The genealogy of the family can be traced to two brothers, Alexander and Matthew, who left Scotland, their native land, for America, prior to the Revolutionary war. Matthew McConnell was born about the year 1742. After landing in America he was attracted by the fertile valleys in Lancaster county, Penn., and, there making his first permanent settlement, commenced agricultural pursuits. Here he was married to Mary Alexander, a native of Lancaster county, and about 1779 this couple started to seek their fortunes in the "far west," as Washington county was then considered, making the tedious journey over the mountains. They were frequently obliged to cut roads through the forests as they proceeded. All the streams were forded, and the nights passed under some spreading oak, or perhaps they slept in their wagon. Their location in Washington (then a part of Westmoreland) county was made within the present limits of Cecil township, where some of their descendants are yet living. A log cabin was soon erected, and the giant oaks fell beneath the axe of the pioneer until a space was cleared, on which they planted the essential crop of corn. Matthew McConnell passed the remainder of his days in this wilderness home, and the rude cabin which had first been erected was soon displaced by a more substantial and commodious dwelling which stood for many years after. As new settlements were made, the wilderness was gradually transformed into waving fields of grain, and comfortable homes were made. Politically Mr. McConnell was a prominent member of the Federalist party, and filled several offices in the county at various times; he was one of the twelve justices of the peace who constituted the court of Washington county. In religion he was a prominent member of the Union or Associate Reformed Church. His children were Alexander, who died of small-pox when young, vaccination being then unknown; Elizabeth, who also died of small-pox; John, who moved to Trumbull county, Ohio, where he was an early settler; Frances, who resided in Harrison county, Ohio; Jane, who was married to William Berry, and died in Canonsburg, Penn.; Prudence, who married John Dunlap, and lived near Poland, Mahoning Co., Ohio; William, who resided in Richland county, Ohio; Mary, who lived in Cecil township; James and Lettie (twins), the latter of whom never married, and Martha, never married.

Matthew McConnell, son of Matthew and Mary (Alexander) McConnell, was born in Cecil township, Washington Co., Penn., October 8, 1778, and passed his boyhood on the farm of his father, attending the subscription schools. He then taught school in Richland county, Ohio, living at home most of the time. In 1812 he was married to Ann Merchant, daughter of Samuel Merchant, a native of County Londonderry, Ireland, who immigrated to America and to Washington county, Penn., settling in Hanover township in early times; he was driven out by Indians only to return in later years, and passed his remaining days on the farm. The following children were born to the union of Matthew and Ann McConnell: Matthew A. (deceased in youth), Margaret (now the widow of Thomas Merchant, and living in Florence), Elizabeth A. (deceased in youth), Samuel M. (whose name opens this sketch), Prudence (who resides in Florence), Matthew F. (farmer of Hanover township, who was born September 4, 1827, and died March 8, 1891), and Mary Jane (unmarried, living in Florence, Penn.). Mr. and Mrs. McConnell passed their wedded lives on the "Old Merchant Homestead" in Hanover township, where he followed farming until his death, December 29, 1829. He was a very progressive man, and though dying in the very prime of life, had become prominently identified with many public movements. In politics he was a Whig, and in religion believed in the creed of the Associate Reformed Church, but owing to the long distance which must be traveled in those days to attend a church of that denomination, he united with the Presbyterian Church at Cross Roads, of which his wife had previously been a member. She died in 1876, in her seventy-sixth year, on the same farm where she was born and where she had passed her life.

Samuel M. McConnell was born October 14, 1821, in Hanover township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a subscription-school education. His first "book" was the letters of the alphabet pasted on a wooden paddle, and the length of a school term was very uncertain, as no stated time was designated. He worked for his father on the home place, and afterward labored as a farm hand at several places in the neighborhood. On October 2, 1866, he was married to Sarah J. Wallace, daughter of James Wallace, who was descended from an old family, prominently identified with the pioneer history of Hanover township.

Robert Wallace, a native of Scotland, immigrated to America and settled in Westmoreland county, Penn., where he remained about three years. He there married Jane McCoy, and the young couple came to what is now Hanover township, this county, where in 1771 he took out a patent for 300 acres of land on Brush creek. Indians were numerous and settlers scarce, and several times they were driven from their home to return again after the Indians had gone. So they continued to reside in their cabin home until about 1775, when one day in May of that year, Mr. Wallace, returning from a search in the forest for some calves that had strayed away, found his cabin in ashes and his family (then consisting of his wife and three children) gone. He at once knew it to be the work of the savages, who as he afterward discovered had lain hidden in a convenient flax patch until they had seen him leave home. Hastily arousing the few neighbors, the little band of determined men started in pursuit. They soon struck the trail, and had not proceeded far when they found the body of the youngest child, who had thus early fallen a victim to the bloodthirsty instincts of the savages. They followed the trail to the Ohio river, but arrived too late to prevent the Redskins crossing; and further pursuit being futile, returned to their homes. Mrs. Wallace was also massacred on the way, and her mutilated body was afterward found near that of her babe. The two remaining children were taken by the Indians as far west as Indiana, where the younger died in captivity. The eldest child, Robert, was restored to his father three years later through an exchange of prisoners. This son, Robert, lived until his death in Robinson township, where he was known as "Indian Bob," a term indicative of his early captivity, and one of his sons still resides upon his farm there. Robert Wallace, Sr., afterward married Mary Walker, and they had the following children: John, Jane, James, Ann, Sarah and Elsie. The youngest daughter of James Wallace, of this family, became Mrs. S. M. McConnell. Robert Wallace, Sr., resided on his farm, on Brush creek, until his death, which occurred about the year 1807, when he was aged eighty-seven years, and was buried at Florence. Among the earliest settlers of Hanover township, he was indeed one of those sturdy men who braved untold dangers and opened a pathway through the wilderness, which has made possible the march of civilization and the wonderful progress of the nineteenth century.

One daughter has been born to the union of Samuel McConnell and Sarah Wallace, viz.: Annie J. (Mrs. George Saxton), who with her husband is yet living on her father's farm. After his marriage Samuel M. McConnell located on the old Wallace farm, situated about two miles east of Florence, in Hanover township, and has given his entire attention to general farming and stock raising, in which he has been very successful. Politically he was originally a Whig, now a Republican, and is one of the influential men of his party, which he has served in various local offices. He is one of the best-known men in the community, and has hosts of friends. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he is very active, having been a member of Session, of which he officiated as clerk for more than twenty-five years. He was also clerk of the board of trustees for more than twenty years. In 1883 the faithful wife and loving mother was called by the Master to her higher abode. On December 13 her spirit passed beyond the river of death to that heavenly home "where no storms ever beat on that glittering strand, while the years of eternity roll." Early in youth she became a member of the Cross Roads Presbyterian Church, and her whole life had been one of exemplary Christian womanhood. She passed away in her forty-seventh year, honored and revered by all.

Mr. McConnell still resides at his old home where he has passed so many years of his life, enjoying a handsome competence, the direct result of industry and economy. He is a man of strong personalities, and adheres to what he considers right with a tenacity characteristic of the race from which he is descended. He, however, is not intolerant, but has for the opinions of those who differ from him the utmost deference and respect. Though in his seventy second year, he is the mental and physical superior of many younger men, while his hair and beard, now whitened by time, become the wearer as the silver crown of a life well spent, rather than as a mark of the passing years.

A J. THOMAS, one of the best-known and most enterprising native-born farmer citizens of North Strabane township, first opened his eyes to the wonders of the world April 21, 1851.

Edward Thomas, grandfather of A. J., is the first of the family in this county of whom there is any data. He was a native of eastern Pennsylvania, whence, when a young man, he came hither and made a settlement in North Strabane township, where he carried on farming to the end of his busy life, becoming one of the leading citizens, ever in the van of all progressive movements. He was here married to Rhoda, daughter of David Leonard, of Washington county, who resided near the village of Bentleyville, and the children born to them were Sarah, Mary, Ann, (still living at ninety-two years), Rebecca, Phoebe, Liverton, Lydia, Rhoda and Nancy. Rebecca was blind from the age of seventeen years to her death in her seventieth year. Mr. Thomas early united with the Presbyterian Church, in after life becoming a trustee, serving for many years, and an elder. Politically he was a zealous Democrat.

Liverton Thomas, father of our subject, was born in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., May 12, 1808, and his education was received at the schools of his district, which he enhanced by much after study. In 1831, he was married, in Ohio, to Miss Mary A. Glandon, who was born in Maryland October 2, 1813 (a daughter of William and Mary M. Glandon), who moved with her parents to Harrison county, Ohio; the results of this union were nine children, eight of whom are yet living, viz.: Edmond, in Saline county, Neb.; William, a farmer in Chase county, Neb.; James M., a merchant in Nottingham township; Rhoda L., wife of John Hodgens, of Des Moines county, Iowa; G. L., a physician in Philadelphia, Penn.; Belle M., wife of James C. Matthews, a farmer and undertaker in North Strabane township; A. J., on the old home farm, and Ida M., wife of William Kettle, of Rush county, Kans.; (Caleb F. died in infancy). The mother died December 10, 1873 and the father then went to live with his daughter, Mrs.

John Hodgens, in Des Moines county, Iowa, where he now is. A member of the Presbyterian Church, he has always been a liberal supporter, was the donator of the land on which the Fairview church now stands, and materially contributed toward its erection. Politically he is a lifelong Democrat, and has been in his day a hard worker for the party's interests.

The boyhood and youth of A. J. Thomas were spent on the homestead where he was born, attending during the winter months the common schools of his district, the remainder of the year being reserved for hard out-of-door work on the farm. In 1873 he was married to Jennie M., daughter of Andrew Couch, of Nottingham township, and four children have come to brighten their domestic hearth: Alma (died at eleven months), Errol M. (died at eleven years and two months), Wallace C., and Josie A. (died at two years and three months). Their mother dying (January 5, 1880), Mr. Thomas wedded, November 10, 1890, Rilla C., daughter of Andrew Crawford, of Peters township. The family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Mount Prospect, of which Mr. Thomas is trustee. Politically he was born a Democrat, has lived a Democrat, and expects to die one; he has repeatedly been urged to accept office, but has, on account of his many home duties and responsibilities, invariably declined the proffered honor. Soon after his marriage Mr. Thomas purchased a portion of the home place, on which he has continued to reside. He is a successful farmer and stock raiser, and is respected in the community as an upright, progressive and loyal citizen.

SAMUEL W. CRAFT. The well-known family, of which this gentleman is a conspicuous member, are of German descent, and the earliest record of them now extant is of one Daniel Craft, who came to Fayette county, Penn., about the year 1750, and settling near Merrittstown, there entered a wild, uncultivated tract of land, which continued to remain in the family name until 1891. This Daniel Craft had three sons, Samuel, Daniel and Benjamin.

Samuel Craft, son of the pioneer, Daniel, was born in Germany, and there received his early education. He learned and followed the trade of a silversmith in the Fatherland, and when a young man came to America. He here bought several teams, and carried goods across the mountains to Philadelphia and Baltimore, but finally abandoned that business, and took up the trade of clock making. He had two children, Samuel and Elizabeth. In religious faith he was a member of the Baptist Church. Samuel Craft, son of Samuel, was born and reared in Fayette county, Penn., where he attended the subscription schools. In early life he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Adam Chess-round, of Washington county, Penn., and the following children were born to this union: Adam, Peter, Washington, Jonathan, Abel, Leroy, Joshua and Eli. The father passed his life in agricultural pursuits. In 1821 he went to Vincennes, Ind., and resided there about ten years, and then returned to Washington county, and lived for some time in Fallowfield township. Some years later he removed to Fayette county, Penn., whence in 1850 he went to Iowa, where he died. In religious faith he was a member of the Baptist Church; in politics he was an active Whig. Adam Craft, son of Samuel and Elizabeth Craft, was born in 1810, in Fayette county, Penn., where he was reared and educated. In early manhood he selected a life companion in the person of Margaret, daughter of Jacob Bird, and their children were Jacob, Samuel W., Elizabeth (wife of John L. Trent), Sarah (deceased wife of Jacob Huggins) and three whose names are not given. After his marriage Mr. Craft settled on a farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn., and followed farming in connection with the carpentry and building business. He remained on that place about four years, then moved to a farm owned by his father-in-law, and in 1844 came to East Pike Run township. In 1850 he moved to California, this county, and died in that village September 6, 1853, his widow surviving till February 22, 1887. They were members of the Baptist Church, and in political opinion he was a Democrat.

Samuel W. Craft, whose name opens this sketch, son of Adam and Margaret Craft, was born at Jonestown, Washington Co., Penn., July 1, 1835, and was reared in the same county, attending school in the log schoolhouse of that age. He worked on a farm till he was seventeen years old, when he learned the trade of ship-carpenter, working as a common hand until 1859, when he became foreman of the yard, continuing as foreman till 1865, then becoming a partner in the ship-building business, and remained in the business till 1879, when the railroad completely destroyed their yard. He then open up in the furniture and undertaking business, which he is still successfully engaged in. He became a member of the M. E. Church at the age of sixteen years, was leader of choir about thirty years, retiring on account of failure of voice; serving also as class leader, trustee, steward and treasurer for many years. On May 24, 1862, Mr. Craft was united in marriage with Martha, daughter of Joseph Powell, a native of Washington county, Penn., and she has borne him nine children, of whom Josephine and Katharine are still living. Mr. Craft became deeply interested in the success and welfare of the Southwestern State Normal School, located at California in 1866, giving liberally of his time and money. In 1867 he was elected a member of the Board of Trustees, and has served continually ever since, serving as chairman of important committees, and as vice-president for years. Soon after Mr. Craft entered the Board he was recognized as its financial leader, and in 1873, when the school had reached the end of its resources, and the trustees had done all they were able to do, and the sheriff was pushing claims on them, it became imperative on the Board to raise money to save the institution from financial wreck. The duty of formulating a policy to raise the needed money speedily, fell on Mr. Craft, who successfully planned a financial policy by issuing five fifteen-year and five twenty-year first and second mortgage coupon bonds which were successfully placed on the market at par, from which they realized in a short time sufficient funds to save the school financially, and since that time he is known as the father of the successful financial policy which saved the institution, and the guardian of the treasury. In politics, like his father, he has always been a Democrat and takes special interest in local affairs.

JOHN J. GEORGE, farmer and stock raiser, Mt. Pleasant township, was born February 5, 1847, in Columbiana county, Ohio, a son of David H. and Christiana J. (George) George. His paternal grandfather was Judge Thomas George, who married Jane Hunter, and she died many years ago. He was married the second time, and passed away in August, 1873.

David H. George, a son of Judge Thomas George, was born in 1813, in Jefferson county, Ohio. In 1839 he was married to Christiana J. George, who was born in 1819, in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington county, Penn., a daughter of Jacob and Isabella (Berry) George, both of Washington county, Penn. Jacob George was a Covenanter originally, and then joined the United Presbyterian Church, in which he was a ruling elder. He died November 29, 1880. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. David H. George settled in Columbiana county, Ohio, and children were born to them as follows: J. Newton (deceased in March, 1880), Thos. P. (living in McDonald, Penn.), William K. (yet living in Columbiana county, Ohio), John J. (whose name opens this sketch), Robert E. (living on the old homestead), Bella J. (wife of Rev. S. J. Kyle, a minister of Cambridge, Washington Co., N. Y.), and Margaret T. (who died unmarried December 6, 1861, in Ohio). The parents were formerly members of the Associate Reformed Church, then united with the U. P. Society. The father was an active member of the Whig and Republican parties, and an ardent Abolitionist. He died December 16, 1861, in Ohio, where his widow is yet residing. David H. George had eleven brothers and sisters, all now deceased except two brothers and one sister; his wife had one brother and two sisters, of whom the brother and one sister are dead.

John J. George was educated in the district schools of his birthplace. In 1874 he came to a farm in Mt. Pleasant township, Washington Co., Penn., and March 3, 1881, was married to Miss A. Emma, who was born in Pittsburgh, Penn., only daughter of John and Nancy Lindsay, natives of Ireland, who came to America many years ago, locating in Pittsburgh, Penn., where the father is yet living; the mother died in 1877. Mr. and Mrs. John J. George have resided all their married life on the farm of 137 acres which belongs to Mrs. C. T. George, and they own (adjoining the property) sixty-two acres of land which contains a producing oil-well. Mr. George is an active member of the Republican party. He and his wife are members of the Centre U. P. Church at Midway, in which he is a ruling elder. They have an adopted daughter, Bertha B.

WILLIAM PEES is one of the most enterprising and prosperous agriculturists of North Strabane township, and is a member of an old and highly-respected family.

Nicholas Pees, great-grandfather of subject, in company with an uncle emigrated from Germany and settled in Canigangig, "east of the mountains." Here he married and had three children: Mary, Andrew and George. About the year 1769 he journeyed on foot to what was then known as the "backwoods," and took up 400 acres of land on Little Chartiers creek, in what is now North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn. He returned East, and brought back to his new home his wife and three children, above named, the boy George, together with all their worldly effects, being conveyed on the back of a horse, the rest journeying on foot. During the first winter the family lived in a small log cabin, which the father had erected near the present residence of John M. Berry, on the original tract of 400 acres. Here were born four more children: Nicholas, Catherine, Betsy and Susan. All of the children except Nicholas married and had children. Andrew served in the war of 1812. This honored pioneer, Nicholas Pees, died at the patriarchal age of 105 years. In stature six feet one inch, and well proportioned, he was a modern Goliath in physique and strength. His faithful wife lived to be upward of ninety years of age.

George Pees, grandfather of subject, was four years old when the family came to Washington county, he being the one that came along with the chattels on horseback. He was married to Lydia Vaughn, a native of New Jersey, daughter of John Vaughn, and the children born to this union were: Polly (1), Andrew, Rebecca, Zachariah, John, Nicholas, George, Joseph, James, Eliza, Polly (2), Lydia, and two daughters who died in infancy. Of these children Polly (1) was burned to death when quite young; Joseph died at the age of thirty, and James at the age of twenty-five. The others married, had families, and remained in Washington county. George Pees passed from earth March 1, 1849, and his wife followed him to the grave October 16, 1865. Both are buried in the cemetery of Pigeon Creek Presbyterian Church, of which they were active and prominent members.

Zachariah Pees, father of subject, was born July 15, 1799, in the house now owned and occupied by John M. Barry. When twenty-one years of age his father exchanged farms with his uncle, Andrew Pees, securing in the exchange a saw and grist mill, known far and wide as "Pees Mills," which was operated by Zachariah Pees fourteen years. On December 27, 1820, he married Hannah Pees, and the following is a brief record of the children born to them: William is the subject proper of this memoir; Joseph, born August 21, 1823, was married to Sarah Newsom; Andrew, born July 1, 1825, married Julia Ann, daughter of John and Sarah Ann (Haines) Dickson, by whom he had the following children: Zachariah Mason, Ida, Elizabeth and John; Mary, born May 1, 1827, married Jacob Anthony, a farmer in Illinois, and had ten children: Hannah, Pearson, Belle, Jane, Ann, Abbie, Ettie, Grant, John and Zachariah; Lydia, born July 24, 1830, married Zachariah Pees, a farmer in Illinois, and had four children: Sloan, Francis, Clark and Leslie; Elizabeth, born June 5, 1833, died March 11, 1841; George, born April 27, 1835, died May 3, 1835; Hannah Jane, born May 20, 1839, died May 16, 1841; and Phoebe, born April 7, 1811, died October 30, same year. Mrs. Pees died October 4, 1846, and Mr. Pees was married, January 13, 1848, to Jane, daughter of Robert and Margaret Jackson, and born in Lancaster county, Penn., October 18, 1806. Her family were connections of President Andrew Jackson. By this second marriage Zachariah Pees had one child, Margaret, who was born May 12, 1849, and died May 18, 1877. About the year 1825 Mr. Pees bought a farm in Ohio, which he afterward sold, and then purchased the farm in North Strabane township, this county, now occupied by his son William. He died October 19, 1885, an elder in the Pigeon Creek Church, in the cemetery of which he now sleeps.

William Pees was born October 13, 1821. He was reared from boyhood to farm life, and received his education at the schools of his district. On May 30, 1841, he married Mary Jane Cheesman, and this union was blessed with one child: Mary J., who was born December 31, 1845 (on November 10, 1875, she married John Alexander Gault, by whom she had the following children: Mary Emma, born September 1, 1876; D. Leroy, born September 26, 1878; Emma C., born September 12, 1880; Olive E., born October 25, 1882; Nora Virginia, born October 19, 1884; Jennie Mowry, born October 12, 1886; and John Alexander, Jr., born December 19, 1889. They live in Union township, near Courtney). Mrs. Pees died February 12, 1846, and William Pees was married in 1818 to Eliza J. Davis, who was born August 25, 1822. Two children came to them: Hannah, born December 14, 1819, and William A., born January 6, 1852, both deceased. Their mother passed away on May 26, 1853, and Mr. Pees was married, on January 12, 1854, to Cordelia Sutman, who was born April 14, 1833, a daughter of Joseph and Susannah (Myers) Sutman, and this third marriage was blessed with seven children: Catherine, born May 2, 1855, married, September 28, 1880, to Samuel H. Brehm, of Uniontown, Penn., by whom she has had three children: Roy E., Clyde G. and Cora Lena; Anna M., born January 10, 1856, and married, August 26, 1879, to J. B. Thomas, of West Alexander, by whom she has had three children: Ada D., Oliver W. and James William (deceased); William T., born November 5, 1858, and married September 11, 1879, to Josephine Kelsey, who bore him four children: Violet Myrtle, Anna Bell, Jessie Melvin and Orlo, who died when two months old (William T. is a farmer of North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn.); Albert E., born August 17, 1861, married to Lillie Arend, who bore him one son, Albert Floyd (he lives on the old homestead); Clara B., born November 13, 1863, was married, June 7, 1883, to John Thomas, of Chartiers township, by whom she had the following children: Charles H., and Olive Pearl and William J. (twins, the last married being deceased); John M., born May 20, 1865 (living on the old homestead); and Sudie E., born September 22, 1866, married, June 30, 1885, to John R. Gamble (she has no children). Mrs. Pees is the eldest in a family of nine children born to Joseph and Susannah (Myers) Sutman, viz.: Cordelia, Leman (deceased), Brittie C. (widow of William Stark), John M., Aaron (deceased), Hiram, William, Henry and Mary (Mrs. Fred Schively). Joseph Sutman died November 1, 1880, and his wife October 30, 1883. He had been a soldier in the Civil war, as were also his sons, John M. and Aaron. Hiram ran away and enlisted in Pittsburgh, but he was too young, and his mother went after him.

William Pees is a strong Democrat, and takes considerable interest in politics. He has served as school director four terms, or twelve years; justice of the peace ten years; and also as township inspector and auditor. In 1880 he was appointed postmaster at Kerr's Station, and held that office until 1890. He and his wife have been consistent members of the Fairview Presbyterian Church for the last thirty years, and enjoy the respect and esteem of a wide circle of friends. He was a leading elder, and superintendent of Sabbath-school of Fairview a number of years.

JAMES CRAWFORD (deceased). Among the widely-known and universally esteemed citizens of Canonsburg and Peters township, none have proven more worthy of love and respect than has this gentleman, a trusted and honorable business man, a true-hearted Christian gentleman. His father, James Crawford, was born in County Down, Ireland, where he was married to Miss Mary Carson, a native of the same place, who bore him six children, namely: Hamilton, Margaret, Mary Ann, James, Ellen and Francis. Of these, James and Mary Ann settled in Pittsburgh, Penn., the other four in Canada.

James Crawford, whose name opens this sketch, was born about 1812, in County Down, Ireland, and came to America with the family. In early life he settled in Pittsburgh, Penn., and worked at the mason's trade, afterward becoming a contractor. He was united in marriage with Esther, daughter of John Watson, of Peters township, Washington county, and granddaughter of William Watson. The latter emigrated from County Down, Ireland, to America, settled in Lancaster county, Penn., and later came to Peters township, where he purchased a timbered farm, and erected a cabin, then returned to Lancaster county for his family, cutting a door in the cabin after their arrival. It had no floor, and weeds had grown up inside. His wife sat on a log nursing John Watson, grandfather of Miss Mary Crawford and Mrs. Jennie Wasson. He served in the Revolutionary war, taking part in the engagements at Brandywine, Germantown and many others. He married Mary Edgar, who came from County Down, Ireland, to America when yet a little girl, and who bore him one son, John. William Watson and his wife were truly pioneers.

John Watson was born in Lancaster county, Penn., and came to Peters township, this county, with his father when quite young. He followed farming, and in early life married Miss Mary Gibson, of Pigeon Creek, this county, and by her had four children: Esther, Mary (Mrs. John Kerr), Jane (Mrs. James Kerr, of Pittsburgh), and William. Esther was born February 21, 1806, and her father dying when she was but a child, she lived with her grandfather until his death, then resided with an uncle, James Gibson, of North Strabane township, Washington county, until her marriage to James Crawford.

James Crawford followed the business of contractor in Pittsburgh, Penn., for seven or eight years after his marriage, then moved to Canonsburg, in order to send their children to the Olome Institute. They lived in town eight or ten years, finally returning to the farm. In politics Mr. Crawford was a Republican, and had been offered many offices of trust, but for many years declined to serve; was finally induced, however, to accept the office of burgess of Canonsburg, holding that position several terms. He was a member of the U. P. Church, in which he was also trustee. On June 12, 1877, he died, leaving a wife and two daughters to mourn his departure. Mary, the eldest daughter, graduated from the seminary at Canonsburg, where she is now living. Mrs. Crawford died June 30, 1892. Mary owns the homestead, comprising 100 acres of land in Peters township, this county, which has been in possession of the family over one hundred years.

Jennie Crawford (sister of Mary and younger daughter of James and Esther (Watson) Crawford, in early womanhood was united in marriage with Rev. Luke J. Wasson, an earnest and eloquent young minister of Fairview, and son of Hugh and Elizabeth (McQueety) Wasson, who emigrated to America. Mrs. Wasson and sister reside in Canonsburg.

Luke J. Wasson was born in October, 1846, in County Antrim, Ireland, and was but two years of age when his parents settled in Robinson township, Washington Co., Penn., where the remainder of their lives was passed. He attended the academy at Candor, this county, and in 1863 entered the junior class of Jefferson College, graduating in 1865. He then took a theological course of study at the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, receiving his license to preach in 1868. He was soon after called to the Presbyterian Church at Calcutta, Columbiana Co., Ohio, and after preaching there one year, declined to accept the call. On April 23, 1869, he was ordained by the Presbytery of New Lisbon, and in June, 1870, united with the Pittsburgh Presbytery. On October 12, of the same year, he became the pastor of the Fairview Church. On November 5, 1868, he married Miss Jane Crawford, whose family history is above recorded. Two daughters blessed their union: Alice G. and Frances C. In April, 1873, Rev. Wasson was released from ministerial duties, and, his health having failed, went west to recuperate, but while in Minneapolis he died, June 3, 1873. A brief life, as we mortals count time, and taken from earth in the very prime of early manhood, yet who can say how many years of fruitful service were compressed into those few months of devoted work. Only Eternity can determine if his crown may not have more jewels than that of many whose hairs have grown white with the burden of many years. One item is culled from the many tributes of affection and respect given by those who knew Rev. Wasson most intimately: "As a man he was much respected; as a laborer for Christ he was diligent and consecrated; and as a preacher earnest and successful among his late parishioners, his character and ministry are held in fond and grateful remembrance."

MATTHEW RYBURN, a well-known citizen of Chartiers township, comes of Scottish ancestry. His grandfather was James Ryburn, who was born in York county, Penn., of Scotch parents. He became a soldier in the Revolutionary war, serving from April 1, 1777, to April, 1780, when he received an honorable discharge; then coming to Washington county, Penn., bought a tract of land of one James Smith. He was married to Elizabeth Gordon, and their union was blessed with four children, namely: Matthew, Elizabeth, James and David. The father of this family died in 1826, and the mother lived with her children for many years afterward.

Matthew Ryburn (father of subject) was born in York county, Penn., and when ten years old came with his parents to Washington county. He was educated in the subscription schools of Chartiers township, and in early manhood was married to Catherine Gordon, daughter of Thomas Gordon, of Buffalo township, this county. The young couple settled on the farm in Chartiers township where the widow of John Ryburn is now living, and the following children were born to their union: John (deceased December 17, 1888, was married to Rebecca Thompson, who is living on the old homestead), Elizabeth (living with her brother Matthew), Matthew, Thomas (deceased September 1, 1851), Mary Jane (wife of J. R. Smith, of Canton township), Nancy and Catherine, twins (the former deceased at the age of eighteen years, the latter when nineteen years old), and James (deceased December 9, 1863). The father of this family died in 1865, being followed by the mother, in June, 1881. He was a member of the Whig party.

James Ryburn, son of James Ryburn, married Mary Ann Bigley June 23, 1825. They moved to Heyworth, Ill., a few years after their marriage. John married Rebecca Thompson December 20, 1866, and the following children were born to them: Joseph, John, Katharine, Emma and Matthew.

Matthew Ryburn, whose name opens this sketch, was born September 6, 1822, in Chartiers township, this county. He was reared on the farm and educated in the district schools of Chartiers township, afterward learning the cooper and carpenter trades. He is an expert cooper, having made twenty barrels in one day, and has followed various other occupations. He owns a good farm of 120 acres, and has erected about $5,000 worth of buildings upon the place, together with other improvements.

Mr. Ryburn has achieved success by hard work, being now a prosperous business man. He belongs to the Republican party, and in religion is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Cross Roads.

ISAAC NEWTON CONNETT. Members of the Connett family have been important factors in the social and material history of Washington county for nearly a century. The immediate subject of this sketch, whose name appears at the opening thereof, was born in Morris township in 1826. Both his father, James Connett, and his grandfather, whose name was also James, immigrated to Morris township from New Jersey in 1801. Upon locating in Morris township, the senior James Connett, grandfather of subject, purchased what is known as the "Connett farm," six months after its entry, located one and one-half miles northeast of Prosperity. It is one of the best in that section. James Connett, Sr., was a weaver by trade, to which he gave his sole attention, and at one time he did all the weaving of linen and woolen goods in the southern part of the county. His death occurred in 1865.

James Connett, Jr., father of Isaac N., was born in 1797, in the town of the nativity of T. De Witt Talmage—Bainbrook, N. J. He remained with his father until about seventeen years of age, receiving such an education as the times and surroundings afforded, which were by no means such as are enjoyed at present. After leaving the paternal roof, young Connett worked about in various places at sundry things until 1821, when he married Miss Rebecca Cary, a daughter of Henry Cary, who had removed to Washington county, from Morris-town, N. J., in 1802. Isaac Newton Connett was the second in a family of three children born to this union. His brothers, Henry and Oliver, died at the ages of four and nineteen, respectively. The father died in 1882, and the mother in 1872.

Educated to practical farm life, Isaac N. Connett has made farming his lifetime vocation. His success attests to his energy and practical judgment. He has seen Washington county evolve from almost a wilderness to its present prosperous state. He speaks of hearing his mother tell of how, in the days of their early location there, travelers were actually compelled to construct their own roads in many instances. Mr. Connett was in 1847 united in marriage with Lucinda Lindley, of Morris township. She is descended from a family of early pioneers, who settled in Washington county as early as 1783, the first members having immigrated from New Jersey. Her grandfather was one of three brothers who were all Revolutionary soldiers, and who in later years came to Washington county and constructed a fort called Lindley's Fort, near where Isaac Connett now resides. This fort was at that time the strongest fortification between Wheeling (W. Va.) and Brownsville (Penn.). It withstood all the attacks of the Indians, the barricades never having in any part been broken down. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Connett have been born four children, all of whom are living, viz.: Flora Samantha, who married, in 1868, S. B. McVay, of Morris township; Hannah Rebecca, married, in 1872, to Joseph Shafer, of Knox county, Ohio, where they now reside; Sarah Cordelia, married, in 1879, to Wiley Parkinson, of Greene county, Penn. (Mr. Parkinson died in 1885, and Mrs. Parkinson now resides with her parents); Clara Bethany, the youngest, was married, in 1884, to Joshua Heironimus, of Madison county, Ohio (Mr. and Mrs. Heironimus now reside at Plymouth, Iowa, where he is telegraph operator in the office of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, which position he has held a number of years). Prior to 1884 Mr. Connett was allied with the Republican party, since which time he has given his influence and support to the Prohibition cause. In the sense of an office-seeker he is not a politician, though he takes an active interest in matters pertaining to the welfare of his county and community. A continuous residence of fifty-eight years at the same place has proven him worthy of the esteem in which he is held.

JOHN E. SPHAR. The Sphar family have been identified with the history of Washington county for many years. Matthew Sphar was born in Switzerland, and, in company with two brothers and one sister, immigrated to America at the age of seventeen years, about the year 1760. He first settled in Williamsburg, Va., and on April 21, 1767, took the oath of allegiance under Queen Anne. He was there married to Margaret Shively, and in 1780 came to Washington county, Penn., and purchased of one Colonel Cooke 200 acres of land on the Monongahela river, in what is now Washington county. He took an active part in the Whiskey Insurrection, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He died about the year 1822, leaving three children, namely: John, Mattern (who moved to Adams county, Ohio, thence to Indiana), and Henry (who lived in this county).

John Sphar was born in 1777, in Loudoun county, Va., and when but three years of age came with his parents to Washington county, Penn. He received a subscription-school education in Allen township, and when a young man was married to Susanna Redd, a native of Washington county, and reared the following children: Mary, wife of John Shively, Guernsey county, Ohio; Jacob was first married to Susan Wood, who died, and he was then married to Charlotte Wilson; Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Dunlevy; Daniel, married to Mary Speer, and lived in Kentucky; Ann, wife of William Spah, of Indiana; Barbara, wife of William Hollingshead; Mattern, married to Margaret Coyle, of Ohio; Sarah, widow of Joseph Beazell, Allen township; Rachel, married to Robert Gailey, Clarion county, Penn.; John, married to Lucy Ann Scott, and Henry. Of this family, three are yet living: Sarah, John and Henry. The father voted with the Whig and Republican parties, and served as supervisor of the township. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. He died in 1856, having been preceded by his wife and mother in 1852.

John Spahar was born February 26, 1817, on the old place in Allen township, Washington county, Pennsylvania. In 1839 he was united in marriage with Lucy Ann Scott, daughter of Parker and Sarah (Carson) Scott, all of whom were natives of Fallowfield township. Her parents had twelve daughters, of whom Mrs. Spahar is the only one yet living. Mr. Spahar owns seventy-five acres of the old homestead, where he has followed general farming. He cast a vote for William Henry Harrison, and since the organization of the Republican party has been an earnest supporter of that faction, having served as a member of the school board and also as supervisor. He is no less interested in religious than in political movements, having been licensed as an exhorter and class leader in the Ebenezer M. E. Church, with which his wife is also identified. The children of this influential family are as follows: Sarah, wife of William Rogers, of Fallowfield township; Parker S.; Henry, married to a Miss McElhaney, of Armstrong county, Penn.; James, deceased in his twenty-sixth year; John E.; Susanna, widow of Ephraim McKee; Gertrude, married to J. H. Redd, and Wesley, deceased at the age of nineteen years.

John E. Spahar, the fourth son of John and Lucy Ann (Scott) Spahar, was born December 27, 1849, in Allen township, this county. He received a district-school education, then attended one term at the college at California, this county. After leaving school he began to follow farming, and on October 29, 1872, was married to Sarah Jane, daughter of Cornelius and Harriet (Phillips) McKenna. They were early settlers of Allen township, this county, where their daughter, Sarah Jane, was born. They moved to Ohio, but in the spring of 1873 Mr. and Mrs. Spahar settled on the homestead farm in Allen township, where they now are living. He is an ardent Republican. He assisted his father on the farm till 1887, when he became owner of part of the farm. While he was thus engaged, foreseeing in the near future the development of the coal lands for which the Monongahela Valley is noted, he turned his spare time to reading surveying. After some practice in land surveying and town plats, he was called to construct maps of coal fields. He drew the first map of the coal field that is now known as the Red Bird mine. Then followed the mapping of the extensive field now owned by the Laughlius, known by the name of Vesta Coal mines. He also located the main gas line from the famous Parson Well in the Maple Creek gas field; then carved out and optioned some coal land for which he found ready sale, besides doing much other work, being the only surveyor in Allen township. He is a member of the Mt. Tabor M. E. Church and secretary of the Sabbath-school. The following children have completed the family circle: Clark Herbert, at the age of nineteen is wire chief in the main office of the Western Union Telegraph Company, in Chicago; Nellie Ethel, Rena Maud, Eldora Belle, Gertrude, Lawrence Garfield, Jennie May, Evangeline, John McKenna, Russell Harrison, and Bessie Inez. Parker S. married a Miss Dunlevy, daughter of Andrew Dunlevy, of Washington county.

ANDREW BORLAND, a representative of one of the oldest families of Peters township, was born November 12, 1793, in that locality. He grew to manhood on the home farm in Peters township, and when a young man, March 3, 1825, was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander McClure, a native of Ireland. They were the parents of the following named children: Alexander Mc. Borland, Mary (Mrs. Thomas McClelland), Rebecca (Mrs. Arthur Hopper), Margaret A. (Mrs. John Bell), Elizabeth (Mrs. J. R. McClure), Sarah J. (Mrs. John Watson), Andrew J., Catherine (Mrs. R. D. Henry), Rachel, Martha W. and James L. Borland. Of these children, Rebecca, Catherine, Martha and Rachel are deceased. Mr. Borland passed the first years of his married life in Peters township, Washington county, and afterward made a permanent home in South Strabane township. He was a successful business man, and took an active interest in all public enterprises or charities which were worthy of his aid. In politics he was a staunch Democrat, and was frequently elected to county offices by his party. In religious faith he was a leading member of the United Presbyterian Church. He died July 18, 1860, on the farm now owned by A. J. and J. L. Borland, and was mourned by a large circle of friends.

Andrew and James Borland were born on the home farm in Peters township, Washington county, and received a common-school education. In early youth they assumed the management of the home place in South Strabane, which they still own, transacting all business together. They are among the leading men of the township, and enjoy the esteem of all who know them. They have never married, and a sister, Margaret A., and her daughter, Mary M. Bell, attend to the household duties. They have an excellent farm, and deal largely in stock. Both of the brothers are active workers in the Democratic party, of which they are members. The Borland family were among the organizers of the United Presbyterian Church at Peters Creek, and the brothers contributed liberally to the support of the Pigeon Creek U. P. Church, of which they are members.

ALBERT ZELT. Jacob Zelt was a native of Bremen, Germany, where the family were engaged in agricultural pursuits. But after many years of faithful toil in the land of his birth, the father at last came to the conclusion that success could be more easily won in newer fields, where there was less competition and more freedom. No sooner was this decision made than his eyes turned to that Mecca of all oppressed children of the world—America—and in 1838 he emigrated to this the "Land of Promise."

The long and perilous journey was made in a sailing vessel, and, did space permit, we might tell of weeks of danger and suspense, ere the travelers arrived in safety at their destination. Jacob Zelt was then a boy of eighteen, and soon after the arrival of the family in America he went to Virginia, where he was employed upon the public works for some time, and then came to Pittsburgh, Penn. After a year's residence there, he removed with his family to Washington county, Penn., where he passed the remainder of his life. In 1842, in Pittsburgh, Penn., he was married to Mary Bartz, and this union was blessed with the following children: William, John, Jacob, Lewis, Adam, Frank, Henry, Albert, Mary (Mrs. William Hartman) and Ella (Mrs. Douglas McMurray). Politically, Mr. Zelt was a Democrat, and an active worker in his party. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, giving it a liberal financial support. Beginning life for himself when a mere boy, with neither friends nor money and a stranger in a foreign land, Mr. Zelt was in every sense of the term a self-made man, and his success in business, achieved as it was in the face of so many obstacles, should serve as a strong incentive to all struggling young men. Mr. Zelt passed from the scene of his labors May 10, 1882, to join the wife who had preceded him to the dark valley on February 17, 1879.

Albert Zelt, the subject proper of this memoir, was born December 7, 1860, in Washington, this county, where he has passed his entire life, and received his education at the schools of the borough. On June 25, 1881, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Lewis Fleming, of Allegheny county, Penn., and the children born to them are John, born in March, 1886; Mary, born in December, 1889, and Harry, born in May, 1891. Mr. Zelt has always been an enthusiastic advocate of Democratic principles. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He and his brother are the proprietors of a mill which they purchased in 1887, and since they have assumed the management of the property it has been much improved in many ways. The present owners employ all the latest improved machinery, and have doubled the capacity of the mill, which was found to be essential in order to supply their customers, as their work is famous for its excellent quality. They are an enterprising and progressive firm, and enjoy the confidence and respect of the entire community.

AH. ALLISON, a prominent farmer and stock raiser of Chartiers township, is a native of the same, having been born here November 24, 1828, a son of Hugh and Jane (Gabby) Allison, also natives of Washington county.

John and Jane (Brownlee) Allison, grandparents of subject, were natives of the Highlands of Scotland, emigrating to Washington county, Penn., in 1768. On April 5, 1786, they obtained a patent for 115 acres of land, and settled on the same, cultivating and adding to it until they had 640 acres. They were the parents of nine children, eight sons (all of whom died in Washington county, except Gavin, who died in Butler county, Penn.) and one daughter. They were as follows: John, deceased in 1804; Gavin, deceased; Archibald, deceased in 1835; William, deceased in 1764; James, deceased in 1810; Thomas, deceased in 1840; Ebenezer, deceased in 1812; Hugh, deceased in 1853, and Jane. The father of this family died in March, 1790, in Washington county; his widow survived him several years.

Hugh Allison, the father of subject, was born in 1773, in Washington county, Penn., on the farm in Chartiers township, and was reared to farm life. In 1791 he was married to Miss Jane Irwin, a native of this county, who bore him one child, Jane, who became the wife of George Morrison, and died in 1871, in Mattoon, Coles Co., Ill., leaving seven children. Mrs. Allison died in Washington county in 1795, and in 1798 Mr. Allison was married to Miss Jane Brownlee, a native of Washington county, who died in 1802, the mother of two children: Eliza, who married William Scott, and afterward moved to Guernsey county, Ohio, where she died, leaving seven children; and Ammi, who died in Washington county at the age of fourteen. In 1804 Mr. Allison was again married, this time to Miss Rebecca McBride, of this county. To this union were born the following children: Maria, who became the wife of Hugh Lee, and moved to Henderson county, Ill., where she died; Rebecca, wife of John C. Hanna, died in Washington county, the mother of four children; Hugh and James, both deceased in infancy; John, married three times (he moved to Henderson county, Ill., and died there, leaving a large family); Thomas, moved to Henderson county, Ill., and married a Miss Graham (his death occurred in 1869, in Illinois); and one that died in infancy. The mother of this family died in 1818. In 1820 Mr. Allison married Miss Jane Gabby, a native of Washington county, daughter of James and Janet (Brownlee) Gabby, natives of Maryland, who came in an early day from Chambersburgh to Washington county, where they died. To Hugh and Jane (Gabby) Allison were born eight children, as follows: Jane G., born June 11, 1822, married to Joseph McNary, and residing in Chartiers township, this county (they have nine children); James G., born September 18, 1824, married to Mary Gabby, and now residing in Nuckolls county, Neb. (he had a family of ten children, eight of whom are now living); Margaret, born March 11, 1826, widow of E. K. Rogers, residing in Washington county (she has six children); Archibald H.; Hugh Brownlee, born April 20, 1830, first married to Mary Jane Gabby, and they had five children, but one of whom is living (his second wife was Mrs. Oakison; he moved to Des Moines, Iowa, where he is now residing); one that died in infancy; Anna Henderson, born June 27, 1833; and Ebenezer, born August 12, 1835, married in 1873 to Orpha Jane Hayes, and residing on a part of the old homestead. Mr. Allison was a man of robust health. He was an active worker in the United Presbyterian Church, and was chosen elder at the age of about twenty years. He attended all the synods and meetings of the Presbytery, and was present at the meeting that made slavery a question of communion; he was also an ardent advocate of the temperance cause. He was commissioned major in the State Militia. He was a Whig, active in politics, and held several offices of public trust in the township. He died in Washington county September 3, 1853, his wife surviving him until December 11, 1870.

Archibald H. Allison was reared on the home farm, and received his education in the district schools of the county. For a while he taught school in Washington county, and studied under private teachers, but his life work has been agriculture. Mr. Allison has made many improvements on the farm upon which he now resides. It consists of 125 acres of good land, in a fine state of cultivation, upon which he has built a substantial dwelling house and barn. Politically, Mr. Allison is an active Republican, and has held various offices of trust in Chartiers township. He was in the convention that opposed "Know-Nothingism" in the county; is active in all that pertains to the public welfare, and is a prominent, enterprising man.

JAMES HANNA was born October 3, 1836, in Washington county, Penn., a son of Hugh Hanna, who was born June 14, 1798. On March 31, 1825, Hugh Hanna was united in marriage with Dorothy Whitely, who was born May 22, 1801, and to their union were born eight children. The father died June 8, 1842, and the mother passed away June 11, 1858, and was buried in Brush Run cemetery.

James Hanna passed his early life at home, and at the age of seventeen years began to learn cabinet making, but abandoning this for the carpenter's trade, continued to follow the latter vocation until 1877. On September 1, 1870, he made choice of a bride in the person of Catherine, daughter of George and Jane (McMahon) Johnston. To the union of James and Catherine Hanna the following children have been born: Hugh Willard (a school teacher), Mary Jane, George Johnston, and two that died in infancy. In 1868 Mr. Hanna bought sixty-four acres of land in North Strabane township, and to the original tract he has added thirty acres, which makes a very pleasant home. The family attend the Chartiers Presbyterian Church.

WALTER DENNY, a son of Robert, and grandson of Walter Denny, is one of the well-known and most highly esteemed citizens of his township. His grandfather was born in the year 1750, east of the mountains, and followed the occupations of a farmer and miller. He was there married to Esther Maxwell, and in the year 1788 came to Washington county, locating near Canonsburg. After several years he moved to a farm near Washington borough, where he passed the remainder of his life, and reared the following children: Catherine, Martha, Margaret, Esther, Eleanor, James, Robert and Walter, all of whom lived to an adult age. Mr. Denny died in the year 1802, and was followed by his wife in the year 1813.

Robert Denny was born in the year 1875, east of the mountains, and when but a child came with his parents to Washington county. He received his education at the rate schools, and in the year 1814, was united in marriage to Lydia (who was born in 1795), daughter of James McMannis, and their children were Walter, Anne (Mrs. J. C. Sloan, of Hopewell township), Esther, James, Robert, Elizabeth (these four are deceased), William and Cathrine (twins, the former living in Kansas, and the latter, Mrs. Work, of Buffalo township), and Lydia (widow of Alexander Work, of Harrison county, Ohio). After his marriage Mr. Denny located one mile and a half north of Washington borough, in South Strabane township. He then moved to Chartiers township, and there continued farming until his death, which occurred in the year 1832. His widow followed him in 1853. Politically he was a Democrat, and in religious connection a member of the Associate Reformed Church.

Walter Denny was born April 30, 1816, in South Strabane township, this county. He assisted his father on the farm, and received his education in the usual log schoolhouse. In the year 1842 he was married to Mary (who was born February 28, 1822), daughter of John Welch, of Chartiers township. The children born to them were as follows: Mary Jane (Mrs. Samuel Leper, of Beaver county, Penn.); Elizabeth Ann (wife of John Wilson, superintendent of the County Home); Margaret L. (Mrs. J. G. Hanna); Sarah L. (deceased in infancy); Sarah E. (deceased); Robert N. (deceased in infancy); John W. and Laura (Mrs. William Patterson, of Hopewell township) (twins); Samuel T. (a farmer of Hopewell township); Alice (Mrs. Marion Liggett, of Donegal township); Agnes; Cora (Mrs. Robert Buchanan); and Martha (living at home). After his marriage Mr. Denny first located in South Strabane township, and in the year 1819 went to Hopewell township, moving in 1875 to his present home, which is situated about one mile and a half west of West Middletown, near the boundary line of Hopewell and Independence townships. Mr. Denny has always been a farmer, but of late years has been enjoying a comparatively retired life in his elegant home. Politically he was originally a Whig, and a strong Abolitionist, then a Democrat, afterward a Republican, and now a Prohibitionist. He has never been bound closely to party lines, but has voted according to the dictates of his own judgment, and held various township offices. He and his wife are members of the U. P. Church at West Middletown.

JAMES PRIGG, now retired from active work, is a worthy representative of a family long and favorably known in Canton township, of which he is a native, having been born in 1822, a son of Samuel Prigg, a sketch of whom appears in that of William Prigg, elsewhere. Our subject was reared to farm life almost from the cradle, and in his boyhood, during a few weeks in the winter time, attended the subscription schools, which were situated at a great distance from his home; and although his educational advantages were extremely limited, yet his opportunities for learning in the school of practical life were abundant. At an early day Mr. Prigg commenced life for himself as an agriculturist, and with the aid of his faithful wife he has met with well-merited success, being now the owner of 250 acres of well-improved land, besides a fine dwelling house in the borough of Washington, whither he and his wife moved in 1885, and where they are now living retired, enjoying the fruits of their industry.

On September 9, 1852, James Prigg was united in marriage with Nancy C., daughter of Joseph and Nancy Mountz, of this county, and the children born to them were: Ellen A. (deceased), Oliver J. and Laura (Mrs. John H. Wilson). The family are all Presbyterians and prominent in church matters. Politically, Mr. Prigg has been a lifelong Democrat, and has ever manifested a deep interest in the welfare of his township and county, where he is recognized as a leader in the community.

ENOCH D. PRIGG, one of the best-known native-born farmers of the county, is a son of Samuel and Hetty (Day) Prigg. He was born November 11, 1817, in Canton township, and from very early life experienced little else than hard work on his father's farm, varied occasionally during the winter season by a few weeks' attendance at the nearest subscription school, to reach which entailed a long journey through the deep snow, often in the teeth of a piercing wind. The schoolhouse was an old log cabin, the floor made of puncheons, seats of undressed slabs supported by wooden pegs, while the writing desk was simply a slab extending across the room, and placed so high that the younger scholars could scarcely reach it. The fireplace was a huge affair at one end of the room, the generous fire being replenished by the older students usually during the noon hour. The other medium for keeping the boys "warm," the indispensable "birch," was under the immediate care of the dreaded dominie himself, who considerately kept it in a condition of chronic "pickle." Leaving school at an early age, our subject commenced his life-work in earnest, but true to his filial instincts remained at home with his parents, until his assistance was no longer necessary. He then, in company with his brother William, purchased a farm, which they worked on shares and greatly improved, until they bought another tract, when they divided their property, the old home place falling to Enoch's share.

In June, 1858, Mr. Prigg married Matilda M., daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth M. Daniels, and the children born to them are: Andrew, who married Miss Thomasene Elwood; Sarah (Mrs. Charles Taylor); Belle (Mrs. Elmer Longdon); Lottie (Mrs. James Lacock), and Morgan. Mr. Prigg owns 385 acres of land in Canton township, and is a member of a company owning large areas in the "Sunny South." In politics he has always been an enthusiastic Democrat, but in county and township elections votes for those whom he thinks will best serve the people, irrespective of party considerations. He is a liberal and useful citizen, one who unaided has made his own success.

When a small boy Enoch frequently accompanied his father across the mountains, assisting him to the Baltimore market, whither he went to sell horses, he being a large dealer for those early times, and at the same mart Enoch witnessed the sale of negro slaves.

BENJAMIN FARABEE. Foremost among the successful farmers of Morris township, Washington county, stands our subject. He is a self-made man in every particular, having acquired the wealth he now possesses by industry and strict integrity.

Benjamin Farabee is a son of Thomas Farabee, whose parents emigrated to this country from England in the early part of 1700, settling in Bucks county, Penn. Thomas Farabee had five brothers and one sister. Their names were as follows: Joseph, John, Samuel, George, Benjamin and Jane. The last named brother and sister settled in South Carolina, where they died. Thomas Farabee married, in Bucks county, Jane Colley, a native of that county. He, being attracted with the fertile hills and valleys of Washington county, emigrated thither with his four brothers, at about the same time (being about the year 1800), each purchasing land, Thomas owning what now forms a part of the immense tract of our subject. The wife of Thomas Farabee died in 1836 at the age of fifty-six, and Thomas Farabee died in 1819, aged seventy-six years. To their union were born the following children: Jane (Mrs. Stephen Craft), Mary (Mrs. Charles Bogue), Sarah (Mrs. Daniel Robison), William (who died in Athens county, Ohio), Stacy D. (in Washington county, Penn.), Samuel D. (in Missouri), Thomas D. (in Washington county, Penn.), Nancy (Mrs. Dr. Doddridge), and Benjamin, the only member of the family now living. Mrs. Bogue had three children; Mrs. Robison nine; William eight; and two of the latter's sons—Spencer and Thomas—are practicing physicians in Ohio; Stacy D. had three children, as had also Mrs. Doddridge; Samuel D. had three children, one son—Harvey—who was a valiant soldier and officer in the Civil war, serving as captain and major, returning home at the close of the struggle. Benjamin Farabee was born in 1822, and was first married to Phoebe Day in 1842, who died in 1849 without issue. In 1856 he married Margaret McKerriban (Bane), a good Christian woman and an earnest church worker, who died March 10, 1889, aged fifty-eight years. Mr. Farabee afterward married, on March 18, 1891, his present wife, an estimable and refined Christian lady, Miss Mary E. Inlay, daughter of John F. Inlay, of East Pike Run township, Washington county.

Mr. Farabee has been variously connected in church relations, having been a class-leader, and teacher in the Sunday-school for more than twenty-eight years, and superintendent a part of that time, and is at the present time teacher of a Bible class, also holding the office of steward and trustee. The Mount Zion M. E. Church has the liberal support of Mr. Farabee in the way of contribution to all its various demands. He is a true and loyal friend to the Church of his choice, and is appreciated as a useful, intelligent and pious citizen in the community in which he lives. His health has been somewhat impaired by an attack of la grippe a few years ago, which necessitates his comparative retirement from active farm work. Politically he has been a lifelong Republican.

JOHAN H. VAN KIRK is a representative of the family of that name in Franklin township. His grandfather, Joseph Van Kirk (1), was a native of the State of New Jersey, which had long been the home of his ancestors, but in early youth he came to Pennsylvania, and located in what is now South Franklin township, Washington county. Joseph Van Kirk (1) was united in marriage with a Miss Beabout, and there were born to them the following children: Eben, Reuben, Osee, Sarah, Christina and Joseph (2). Mr. Van Kirk passed the greater part of his married life on the farm, but some years before his death he sold his farm, and with all his family except his son, Joseph (2), removed to Wayne county, Ohio, which in those days (1824) was considered the "Far West."

Joseph Van Kirk (2) was born April 14, 1807. His early life was spent on the farm, consequently he had but limited means and opportunities for an education. In 1825 he was married to Nancy Hagerty, and there were born to them four children, all of whom died in childhood except Christina. She lived to womanhood, and was married to Colin Dickerson, but about one year after she died, leaving one son, Joseph Dickerson, who now resides in Champaign county, Ill. Mr. Van Kirk was married (the second time) May 11, 1837, to Martha Adams, who was born May 11, 1805, and to this union there came four children, viz.: Joseph A. (sketch of whom appears further on); Sarah Margaret, born March 24, 1842; John H. (of whom a brief sketch follows); Mary Ellen, born February 14, 1848, died in 1854. Of these, Sarah Margaret was married to Silas Tharp, of Amwell township, Washington Co., Penn., December 4, 1873. Joseph Van Kirk had, as already intimated, but a limited education, but by diligent use of such means as were at his command, he succeeded in fitting himself for all the numerous duties which devolved upon him from time to time. Possessed of a good memory, and a taste for reading, he was well-informed and well up with the times in which he lived, always ready to give aid in money or influence for the promotion of improvements for the public good. He was a shareholder in the first railroad built in the county, know as the "Hempfield Railroad," and also in the Chartiers Valley Railroad, and was a staunch supporter and shareholder of the Upper Ten-Mile Plank Road Co., which he served for many years as manager, and for several years occupied the position of president of the company. He was frequently called to serve his fellow-citizens in different offices in his township, all of which duties he performed with conscientious fidelity. In religion he was a Presbyterian, uniting with the Church of East Buffalo in 1853, soon after which he was chosen to the office of ruling elder, a position he filled acceptably until the close of the pastorate of Rev. William P. Aldrich; he afterward united with the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington, Penn., and was a member of this church at the time of his death, which occurred May 8, 1870; his funeral service was conducted by his pastor, Rev. Henry Woods, D.D. Having no capital to begin business save willing hands and a strong will, he nevertheless succeeded in securing a competence, which enabled him to spend his last years in comfort and contentment. His first land purchase adjoined the farm formerly belonging to his father, and here he built his home, and lived until he was called to his final rest.

John H. Van Kirk was born on the home farm in South Franklin township, Washington Co., Penn., July 12, 1844. On November 21, 1872, he was united in marriage with Miss Margaret J. Noble, a resident of Buffalo township, Washington county, and they have had five children, as follows: One, a daughter, born February 2, 1876, died in infancy; Mary V., born February 10, 1877; Robert N., born December 17, 1878; Mattie Bell, born March 24, 1881, and Sarah Margaret, born March 17, 1884.

JOSEPH A. VAN KIRK was born August 29, 1840, on the home farm in South Franklin township. His youth was here passed, and in attending the common schools, until he attained his majority. On October 22, 1863, he was married to Sarah E. Van Kirk, who was born October 14, 1842, a daughter of Captain Joseph Van Kirk, of Amwell township, Washington county.

After marriage they settled on a portion of the farm, where they continued to reside and where the following children were born to them: Clarence B., December 20, 1865; Charles, October 29, 1869, and Joseph B., August 29, 1871. Mr. Van Kirk was well-informed in the current topics of the day; he was an ardent worker in the ranks of the Democratic party, and was chosen at different times to fill positions to which he was elected; in religious belief he was a Presbyterian, having united with the church of East Buffalo in his youth, but afterward transferred his membership to the Second Presbyterian Church of Washington, Penn., of which he was a member at the time of his death, which occurred April 14, 1883.

JOSEPH ADAMS was born in Ireland, May 27, 1770, and died June 2, 1832. He was married in 1793 to Martha Moore, who was born November 12, 1768, and died September 29, 1828. There were born to them five sons and three daughters: the sons were James, William, Robert, John and Joseph, all of whom removed to Perry county, Ohio, after the death of their parents, and none of them are now living except Joseph, who removed to Sigourney, Keokuk Co., Iowa; the daughters were Margaret, Mary and Martha, of whom, Margaret was married to Samuel Mustard, and to them were born nine children, four sons and five daughters. The sons are now all dead; the youngest was a prominent minister of the United Presbyterian Church, and died in Walton, Kans., in August, 1890; two daughters, Margaret G. and Esther Jane, still in Claysville, Washington county, and are esteemed for their social-qualities and upright Christian characters. Mary Adams was married to John Dickerson, and to them were born two children: Margaret and Joshua; Margaret died in early womanhood, while Joshua is living in South Franklin township, Washington county, one of its respected citizens. Martha Adams was married to Joseph Van Kirk, May 14, 1837.

Joseph Adams and his wife, Martha Moore, came from Ireland in the same ship, but did not know each other until after they arrived in America, although the vessel was thirteen weeks making the voyage. They were Presbyterians, and members of the Church of Upper Buffalo at the time of the pastorate of Dr. Anderson. Their children were early in life instructed in the doctrines of their religion, and some of them were able to ask and answer every question in the Shorter Catechism without the aid of a book. These early impressions were so stamped on their memories that it bore much fruit during their lives, as they all possessed a high regard for truth and morality, and with them carried an influence for all that was good and pure; in fact, their religion was to them their comfort through life and triumph in death. Joseph and Martha Adams settled in Buffalo township, Washington county, where they spent their remaining years, and after death their bodies were laid to rest in the cemetery of Upper Buffalo, Washington county, Pennsylvania.

JOHN V. HANNA, a worthy and honored representative of one of the oldest families of Washington county, is a native of the same, having been born January 6, 1829, in Morris township.

His grandfather had come to the county at a very early day, married, reared a family, and died after a long life of usefulness as a pioneer farmer. His children were John V., Hugh, James, Eleanor, Martha and Nancy. Of these, James was brought up from boyhood to agricultural pursuits, his education being received at the common schools. When a young man he served a full apprenticeship to the trade of wheelwright, which he afterward followed in his own and neighboring counties. Soon after finishing his apprenticeship he was married to Phoebe, daughter of Benjamin Day, and the results of this union were the following named children: Benjamin A. (who died in Washington county), Hugh (died June, 1892, in Carroll county, Ohio), Rebecca, John V. (the only one of the family now living), Samuel and James M. (the latter deceased in Washington county in 1872). James Hanna removed to Carrollton, Ohio, where he followed his trade many years and died. His widow afterward returned to Washington county, having in the meantime been married to Joseph Weir. She died in the fall of 1881. Mr. Hanna was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

The youth of our subject was passed on the home place of his stepfather, with whom he remained until old enough to start out in life for himself (which he did at an early age), his education being secured at the common schools, which he attended a few months each year. He commenced life as a hired man on the farm, and by hard work and economical habits finally succeeded in purchasing a portion of the home place, thus step by step plodding on until now he is one of the solid men of his township; he has resided on his present place eighteen years. Mr. Hanna enlisted August 16, 1862, in Company K, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and served three years, being discharged in June, 1865. Politically Mr. Hanna has always been a strong Democrat, and has held various township offices; in religious faith he is a liberal supporter of the Presbyterian Church.

HENRY CAIN, an old and successful farmer of Donegal township, is a son of Thomas Cain and grandson of John Cain, the latter of whom, a native of Ireland, in early manhood immigrated to America, locating in Maryland, where he was united in marriage with Mary Means. About the year 1785 he came to Greene county, Penn., where brothers of his wife had located a year or two before. Here the following children were born to him: Thomas, Dennis, John, Nancy, Mary, Elizabeth and Catherine, all now deceased. John Cain, the father of this family, was among the early pioneers of Greene county, and shared the hardships and dangers of frontier life. He died about 1830, and his widow then returned to her native Maryland, passing the remainder of her life among her relatives.

Thomas Cain, the eldest in the above-mentioned family, was born in 1784, in Maryland, and, when a young child, was brought by his parents to Greene county, Penn. Almost every farmer operated a distillery in those days, and the youth of Thomas was passed in assisting in that work, and in the farm duties. He was naturally an apt and intelligent boy, and his meager educational opportunities were thus supplemented; he was also a mechanical genius, and made good use of almost any tool. In 1812 he was married to Mary Montague, who was born in 1784, a daughter of Henry and Rosanna Montague, who left County Tyrone, Ireland, in 1792, and after a stormy voyage of eleven weeks and three days, landed at New Castle, Del. They first located in eastern Pennsylvania, and soon afterward began the long journey to Kentucky, of which State they had heard so many glowing descriptions. But the severe winter of 1793 set in when the travelers had reached Washington county, so they concluded to remain there till spring, and made a temporary stop in Canton township. During this interval they met an old frontiersman who had been in Kentucky, and knowing the hostile disposition of the Indians at that time, he advised this family to remain in Pennsylvania. Mr. Montague took the advice, and proceeding a few miles farther west, made a permanent home in Donegal township, near the present post-office of Coon Island. To Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cain were born the following children: Henry (deceased at the age of ten years), Nancy (deceased wife of James Reynolds), Rosanna (married Patrick Reynolds, and died at a good old age), John (farming in Donegal township), Thomas (also farming in Donegal township), and Henry (our subject). Mr. Cain lived in Greene county for some time after his marriage, and in 1824 came to and made a permanent home on the old Montague farm, near Coon Island, Donegal township, Washington county. He was an industrious and successful man, respected by all who knew him. He died in 1857, his widow on March 17, 1860.

Henry Cain, the youngest son of Thomas and Mary (Montague) Cain, was born February 25, 1825, on the farm where he is now living, and which is located about one mile northwest of Coon Island, in Donegal township. When he was twelve years of age his father died, and the farm was then managed by the elder sons, with what little assistance young Henry could give. In 1882 our subject was married to Bridget Ryan, who was born December 1, 1848, a daughter of Martin and Mary (Fitzpatrick) Ryan, residents of Washington, Penn. Mr. and Mrs. Cain have no children. He is engaged in general farming and stock raising on the old home place, and has met with well-merited success. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and is now a Democrat. He and his wife are both devout members of the Catholic Church.

JAMES STEVENSON AND THOMAS LOVE ANDERSON are descended from that sturdy people known as the Scotch-Irish race. Their ancestry lived originally in Scotland, and were of the Covenanter faith. To escape religious persecution, they fled their native land and settled in County Donegal, Ireland. Here the great-grandparents of James S. and Thomas L. lived and reared a large family: George, Matthew, Benjamin and a daughter—Mrs. Scott, her son John, a merchant, settled in Baltimore, Md.—being among the number.

Benjamin, their grandfather, was married in 1780, to Nancy Love, of County Tyrone, Ireland, where they became the parents of six children: William, Thomas, Benjamin, George, Jane and Nancy, none of whom are now living. Grandfather Anderson followed the blacksmith trade in Ireland, and in 1792 he sailed with his family to America, accompanied by his brother Matthew and family. After a long and tedious voyage of over thirteen weeks, during which time little George was seized with a fatal disease and his body buried in an ocean grave, the family landed in New York. They proceeded to Washington county, Penn., and settled on Brush run, in what is now Hopewell township, the neighborhood being then very thinly settled. Mr. Anderson continued to work at his trade while the sons attended to the duties of the home farm. Here he died in 1827, his wife having been called home a short time before. Of their children, William settled in Harrison county, Ohio, where he married Melila Thompson; Thomas was a river trader, and died in New Orleans; Jane became the wife of Holstin Bartleson, of Hopewell township; Nancy married John Daugherty.

Benjamin Anderson, their father, was born in Ireland in 1789. He came with his parents to Washington county, where his boyhood was passed on the pioneer farm. At the outbreak of the war of 1812, he was made captain of a company of drafted infantry, which entered the service under the command of Gen. Richard Crooks, whose battalion was a part of the First Regiment of Pennsylvania Militia, which was assigned to duty in the West under Gen. William Henry Harrison. About the close of the war Capt. Anderson (afterward raised to the rank of a colonel) returned home, and in 1816 was married to Margaret Cook, daughter of Gen. James Stevenson. To them were born eight children: Ann Eliza (Mrs. John Moore, of Buffalo township, deceased at the age of thirty-five), James Stevenson (farmer of Donegal township), Thomas Love (died March 7, 1892), Nancy Jane (deceased at the age of nineteen), Catharine (Mrs. Jonathan Brownlee, of Buffalo township), William Cook (merchant, Claysville, Penn.), Mary Melila (deceased at the age of nineteen) and John (died when seven years old). Col. Anderson passed the first five years of his married life on the old home farm, located about three miles west of West Middletown, in Hopewell township. He then moved to Donegal township, settling about one mile west of Claysville, along the National pike, where he owned 250 acres of land, and which became his permanent residence. He was brigade inspector of Washington county for seven years. In politics he was a staunch Democrat, and besides holding different township offices, he was elected county commissioner in 1836. Col. Benjamin Anderson and his wife were both members of the South Buffalo U. P. Church. He died in 1861, Mrs. Anderson in 1875.

Mrs. Margaret Cook Anderson's father, Gen. James Stevenson, a civil engineer, was a native of Pennsylvania, born July 25, 1755. The place of his birth is not definitely known, but his boyhood home was in Letterkenny township, Cumberland county. Though scarcely more than a boy at the outbreak of the Revolution, he enlisted in the struggle for independence, endured the hardships of the Colonial soldier on the field, suffered the misery and want with fellow-prisoners in the hole of an English prison-ship, where the greater number of his companions starved to death; and bore as the evidence of close encounter, the scar of a saber-stroke on his head. About the year 1787 he came west and settled on the Dutch fork of Buffalo creek, in what is now Donegal township, Washington Co., Penn., where he owned some 600 acres of land. In 1791 he was married to Catharine Bonar, the daughter of a pioneer neighbor, born November 7, 1766. Their children were Margaret Cook, John, Ann, Mary, Elizabeth, Catharine and Nancy. Gen. Stevenson for several years held the office of justice of the peace. He was twice elected State senator from Washington county, and also served five sessions in the House of Representatives. He died during the last session, and is buried in the cemetery at Harrisburg. His obituary, on record at the State capitol, is in part: "Died December 20, 1815, Major General James Stevenson, member of the House of Representatives from Washington county. In him were united the venerable and worthy citizen: the firm and enlightened patriot: the soldier and officer of the Revolution: the generous friend and the indulgent father: the affectionate husband and the honest man." The House, on hearing of his death, Thursday, the 16th, suspended business, and the Governor and heads of departments were invited to attend the funeral. As a mark of respect his fellow-members wore crepe on the left arm for thirty days. They had inscribed on his tomb: "In memory of Gen. James Stevenson, of the House of Representatives. * * * * He was a native of the State and one of the heroes of '76. He served his country: his country honored him." Gen. Stevenson also served as major-general in the war of 1812.

JAMES STEVENSON ANDERSON was born in the year 1820, in Hopewell township, Washington Co., Penn. He received his early education in the subscription schools of the neighborhood. He came with his parents to Donegal township, where he assisted with the farm work. In 1847 he made a trip through the western States. He was married in 1856, to Mary E., daughter of John and Mary (Milligan) Miller, of Cadiz, Harrison Co., Ohio. John Miller was the son of John and Mary (Reed) Miller, the former of whom came to this country from the North of Ireland, the latter being a native of Pennsylvania. The children of James S. and Mary E. Anderson were John Benjamin, a teacher by profession, who received his education in the public schools, and in the Jefferson Academy, Canonsburg, Penn., under Dr. William Ewing (he commenced to teach at the age of seventeen years; in the summer of 1881 he was elected principal of the Canonsburg public schools, which position he held until the spring of 1891, when on account of failing health he resigned; he died October 4, 1891); Anna Eliza, deceased at the age of seven years; Mary Elizabeth, residing at home; William Frank, a contractor and rig builder, living at Crafton, Allegheny Co., Penn.; Albert Reed, now in the State of Iowa; Jennie, deceased in infancy; Margaret Cook, living with her parents; and Charles, also at home and managing the work on the farm. In 1860 J. S. Anderson was chosen to succeed Capt. Cracraft as captain of the Claysville Blues, a company of Pennsylvania volunteers. Capt. Anderson was a commissioned officer in the Pennsylvania Militia for twenty-two years. After his marriage he located on his farm, west of Claysville and near the National pike, which is his present home. His farm, by care and cultivation, has become one of the most valuable in Donegal township. He is now living a retired life. In politics he has always been an active Democrat. Capt. Anderson and his family belong to the U. P. Church at West Alexander, Penn., where he is also a member of the church's Session.

THOMAS LOVE ANDERSON was born July 6, 1822, on his father's farm, situated about one mile west of Claysville, along the National pike. Here his early life was passed, and here he received his agricultural training and an education in the public schools. He was married November 30, 1864, to Celia Rachel, daughter of Alfred and Margaret Crump, of Millersburg, Holmes Co., Ohio. Three children were born to them: William Howard, Benjamin and Catharine Brownlee, all of whom are living and at home. After his marriage Mr. Anderson settled on a part of the old Stevenson tract, always his home. The farm is well improved, and its location makes it a valuable property. He was a successful farmer, a Democrat in politics, active in the interests of his party, and held different local offices. His family are members of the U. P. Church at Claysville, Penn., to which he belonged at the time of his death.

Alfred Crump, the father of Mrs. T. L. Anderson, was a native of Virginia, a wagon-maker by trade, and a soldier in the war of 1812. Her mother was Margaret Walter, daughter of Peter Walter, of Baltimore, Md. After their marriage Mr. Crump and his wife moved to Ohio and settled on a farm near Georgetown, Columbiana county, afterward moving to Millersburg. Mrs. Anderson was the eighth of a family of ten children.

CHARLES M. CRAIG. This highly respected gentleman, a native-born and lifelong resident of Donegal township, is descended from vigorous and robust North-of-Ireland people, a race known the wide world over for their resolute and honest lives.

The first of the Craig family, in Washington county, to come to American shores, was James Craig, a native of Antrim, Ireland, where he married a Miss Martin, and the young couple then set sail for the distant shores of Columbia. This was toward the close of the last century, and about the year 1800 they settled in Washington county, Penn., in West Finley township, where they reared an interesting family of sturdy children named, respectively, Hugh, Samuel A., James, Margaret, William, Ann and John. Here this honored pioneer couple closed their eyes forever, after a life of honest toil and characteristic rectitude.

Hugh Craig, the eldest son of James Craig, was born in West Finley township, this county, and there was married to Martha Martin, by whom were born to him the following named children: Jane, who died after reaching adult age; James, deceased when nineteen years old; Martin, who died in October, 1828, at the age of fourteen years; Enos, who died in April, 1840, aged eighteen years; Charles M., the subject of this sketch; Margaret, who died at the age of twenty-one years, and one son and one daughter, both of whom died in infancy. Hugh Craig followed farming, and also his trade, that of shoemaking, in the township of his birth until 1829, when he moved to Donegal township, having purchased a farm about three and one-half miles northwest of Claysville. Here he passed the remainder of his days, dying in 1833.

Charles M. Craig, the subject proper of this biographical memoir, was born March 4, 1822, near Claysville, and at the common schools of the district received a fair education, which he afterward greatly improved by home reading and study. Early in life he began the arduous duties incident to the farm, and followed agricultural pursuits under the tuition of his father until the latter's death, when he took entire charge of the homestead, living with his mother and sister, Jane, up to the time of their respective deaths, the mother dying in 1873, the sister in 1890. Mr. Craig has since made his home with a neighbor, whose farm adjoins his. For several years he has done no real work, but spends the greater part of his time in reading, of which he is passionately fond, and he keeps himself thoroughly posted on the issues of the day, political and otherwise. He has always been a great reader, an ardent lover of books, a keen observer of men and things; indeed, there is scarce a topic, either of the past or present, with which he is not familiar, and his conversation on all subjects is bright and of a most entertaining nature. At one time an Old-line Whig, he is now, and has been since the formation of the party, an enthusiastic Republican, and, whilst loyal to the cause, has always shunned political preferment.

JOSHUA COFFIELD, another energetic descendant of pioneers who left the Emerald Isle to make a home in America, is a prosperous farmer of East Finley township, and a grandson of John Coffield, who was born in County Leitrim, Ireland, about 1757. He was one of five brothers who were famous for their physical powers, and had no equals in their native county for muscular strength. He was a man of massive frame, a splendid specimen of well-developed manhood. Mr. Coffield was married in Ireland, and had nine children. In 1798 he took passage on the ship "Happy Return," which was very filthy and carried all kinds of freight, but as he was a poor man the cheapest had to suffice. After the vessel was a few weeks out, drinking water became scarce, and before the voyage (which lasted three months) was ended, nearly one-third of the crew and some of the passengers died, three of Mr. Coffield's children being among the number. At last the terrible journey was ended, and the family landed at New Castle, Del., near which place they lived for a time, doing farm work, but the father soon after died, and the five children (Arthur, Lawrence, James, Ann and Elizabeth) were obliged to earn a living for themselves and their widowed mother. By working their way, the family finally reached Washington county, Penn., and first located near Washington borough, where they remained a short time, then came to East Finley township, and locating on the present farm of J. Wiley Patterson, the boys began to clear the land and make a home. The mother died in 1811, and the children (all except Arthur) grew to an adult age and married.

Lawrence Coffield was married in 1810, to Elizabeth Rawden (who was born in 1773), whose parents came from Ireland in the same ship as the family of John Coffield. To their union were born children as follows: John (moved to Illinois and died in Adams county, in 1891); Joshua (subject of this sketch); Thomas (a farmer in Belmont county, Ohio, deceased in 1887); James, Jane and Elizabeth (all three deceased in infancy). After his marriage Mr. Coffield located on the home farm in East Finley township, where he resided until 1846, when his wife died, and he removed to Adams county, Ill., and there died in 1848.

Joshua Coffield was born in East Finley township, this county, January 17, 1813, and passed his boyhood on his father's farm, receiving but a limited education, which he improved by cultivating his natural inclination for reading. After the death of his father he purchased the old "Rawden farm," on the head waters of Wheeling creek, which had been previously entered by his maternal grandfather. Mr. Coffield enjoys the esteem of all who know him, and though well advanced in years can do a day's work which would do credit to many younger men. Politically he was formerly a Whig, and is now a staunch supporter of the Republican party.

JAMES WILSON, one of the leading citizens of Taylorstown, Penn., was born October 1, 1826, in Buffalo township, Washington Co., Penn., and is a grandson of William Wilson. The grandfather was born and married in Ireland, where his eldest child was reared, and the family afterward came to America. They remained in Philadelphia some time, then went to Dauphin county, Penn., where they remained until the death of Mr. Wilson. His children were James (a tailor and clothier in Philadelphia, Penn.), Elizabeth (Mrs. William Rogers) and William. After the death of her father Mrs. Rogers lived some time with her brother James, and finally accompanied her husband to Ohio, where she died.

William Wilson (father of our subject) was born March 18, 1789, in Dauphin county, Penn., and in early life learned the wheelwright trade, which he followed both in Dauphin and Washington counties. He enlisted in the war of 1812, and took part in the battle of Baltimore, serving until the close of the war, then came to Washington county, Penn., and purchased a small tract of land in Buffalo township, on which he made a permanent home. On October 10, 1822, he was married to Rachel, daughter of James Keer, of Buffalo township, and the following children were born to them: Elizabeth, Jane, James, Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Hodgens), John M., Mary (Mrs. George M. Warick), Emily, Rachel and William. Mr. Wilson was an enterprising citizen; in politics he was a Democrat, and served faithfully in various township offices. In religious connection he was an active member of the Presbyterian Church at Claysville, this county, of which he was a trustee. He died April 27, 1869, having been preceded by his wife August 2, 1848.

James Wilson passed his youth on the home place in Buffalo township, and received a good common-school education. At the age of twenty years he went to Philadelphia, and studied ornamental work, remaining there several years, then came to Taylorstown, this county, where he has since resided. On June 4, 1855, he was united in marriage with Rebecca J., daughter of Jesse Wilson, of Bridgeport, Ohio, and children have been born to them as follows: William (who died in youth), De Forest, Kate (Mrs. A. T. Anderson), Ellen (Mrs. Robert Knox), Ida (Mrs. N. A. Sutton), Rachel and Susan Gertrude. The family are members of the United Presbyterian Church at Taylorstown, of which Mr. Wilson is an elder and liberal supporter. He is engaged in painting; in politics he is a staunch Democrat and an able worker, and has held nearly all the township offices, being for fifteen years connected in various ways with the school board.

THE MARTIN FAMILY. This well-known and time-honored family will become extinct in Washington county with the death of Rebecca Martin. Their genealogy can be traced to one John Martin, a native of County Armagh, Ireland, who was married to Mary McClave. They were faithful disciples of the Protestant faith, and their old Bible, which was printed in 1695, is yet in the possession of the family.

Robert Martin, a son of John and Mary (McClave) Martin, was born about 1768, in County Armagh, Ireland, and there married Nancy Burris, who was born about 1773, in County Down, Ireland. The young couple came to America in 1794, landing at Philadelphia after a long, rough voyage. They made a temporary location in Lancaster county, then west to Venango county, Penn., where their hard-earned savings were invested in 100 acres of land, which he purchased in all good faith, only to discover, when too late, that he had bought of some unscrupulous rascal who had no title to the property. This tract has since developed into one of the finest oil producing territories in the United States. After spending a large sum of money in attempting to prove his title, Mr. Martin was obliged to resign himself to the loss of the whole, and leaving Venango county, descended the Allegheny river. The family then resided at Pittsburgh a short time, but finally located on a small farm in Hanover township, this county, where their remaining days were passed. Robert Martin died in 1823, followed by his wife several years later. Their children were: John (referred to below), Mary (never married, deceased at the age of eighty-three years), Ellen (unmarried, died in her eighty-second year), Robert, James (unmarried, lived in Hanover township), Thomas (a resident of Ritchie county, W. Va.), Agnes (deceased in youth), Samuel and Rebecca (twins). Of this family Rebecca is the only one living.

Robert Martin (son of Robert and Nancy (Burris) Martin) grew to manhood on the home place, and in 1828 was married to Elizabeth, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Grant) Hanlin. To this union seven children were born, viz.: Nancy, Elizabeth (of Paris, Penn.), William (deceased at the age of twenty-eight years), James (a farmer of Jefferson county, Ohio), Thomas H. (living in the West), Samuel (deceased, a farmer of Jefferson county, Ohio), and John L. (who died in Jefferson county, Ohio). Of these children the eldest daughter, Nancy, was born in 1830, and in early womanhood was married to David Parkhill. He was born in 1833, in County Antrim, Ireland, and coming to America when but sixteen years of age, followed the vocation of papering and plastering. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Parkhill, three of whom are living, viz.: Lizzie M. (of Paris, Penn.), John C. (an electrician of Wellsville, Ohio), and W. J. (an employee of the Pittsburgh Car Service Association). The father died in 1872, followed by his wife in 1878, and both are buried in the Mooretown cemetery, Jefferson county, Ohio. Robert Martin (father of Mrs. Parkhill) died in 1864, followed by his wife in 1872. Their remains are interred in the Mooretown cemetery, Jefferson county, Ohio.

Samuel Martin, son of Robert and Nancy (Burris) Martin, and twin brother of Rebecca, was born October 24, 1811. He was naturally inclined to mechanical life and learned several trades, but evinced his good judgment by purchasing from the other heirs a small farm of his father's, to which he added other land and on which he made various improvements. He carried on a mercantile business for a short time at Knoxville, Jefferson Co., Ohio, but soon returned to his farm in Washington county, Penn. He accumulated a good property by his own efforts and loaned some money. Politically, he was a prominent member of the Democratic party, having served as squire until he resigned the office. In religion he was a member of the United Presbyterian Church until his death, August 13, 1879.

REBECCA MARTIN, daughter of Robert and Nancy (Burris) Martin, has never married, and is living on her brother's farm (which was bequeathed to her), with two representatives of the two generations following her own—Miss Lizzie Martin (a niece of Rebecca Martin) and Miss Lizzie Parkhill (a niece of Lizzie Martin), who have charge of the farm, which they conduct with signal success. Although Miss Rebecca Martin has passed through the joys and sorrows of four score years, she is yet an active woman, easily calling to mind events which occurred when she was a child.

John Martin, son of Robert and Nancy (Burris) Martin, married Mary Williamson in 1819, and moved to Jefferson county, Ohio. To this union eight children were born, of whom five are living: Mrs. Jane Warren, Mrs. Margaret Warren, both of Iowa; Mrs. Mary White, of California; Rev. J. W. Martin, of Mt. Perry, Ohio, and Dr. Samuel Martin, of Sealkote, India. Thomas Martin, son of Robert and Nancy (Burris) Martin, married Miss Catharine J. Moates, of Ritchie county, in 1851, to whom one son was born, Robert H., a clerk in the War Department, Washington, D. C.

JOHN McCORKLE (deceased). The subject of this biographical sketch was a son of Thomas McCorkle, who was born and raised in Adams county, Penn., and there married Esther Terrell, a resident of the same county. They moved to Washington county, Penn., in the year 1810, purchasing a large farm in Cross Creek township. Their family consisted of six children, namely: Robert (died unmarried), Margaret (Mrs. Thomas Ritchey), John (the subject of this sketch), Frances (died unmarried), Jane (wife of Charles Phillis) and Thomas (who married Margaret Welch), all dead. The father followed farming, and in politics voted the Democratic ticket. He was a ruling elder of the Associate, now United Presbyterian Church, at West Middletown.

John McCorkle was born June 4, 1803, in Adams county, Penn., and removed when quite young with his parents to Washington county, where he was reared and educated. He was first married January 14, 1834, to Mary McCorkle, of Somerset township, Washington Co., Penn. They had one son, Thomas B. Her death occurred May 25, 1836, and on May 12, 1842, he chose for his second wife Mary, daughter of David B. Hay. David was a son of John Hay, who was born in Scotland, and there married, in 1777, Anna Burns, a near relative of the famous Scottish poet, Robert Burns. The following children were born to John and Anna (Burns) Hay: John, Alexander, James, Ephraim and David B., Jane (Mrs. John McKimman), Anna (Mrs. Thomas Struthers), Catherine (wife of Robert Braden), Elizabeth (Mrs. James Harper), Mary (wife of Archibald Harper).

The family emigrated to America, but during the voyage two sons died and the ocean was their winding sheet. After arriving in America they first settled in Lancaster county, Penn. Then the family settled permanently on Miller's run, in Cecil township, where they lost two more sons in youth, immediately after their settlement. Mr. Hay was a Democrat, and in religion a ruling elder of the Seceder Church for many years. David B. Hay was born in 1785 in Lancaster county, Penn., and received his education at his home in Washington county. He was united in marriage, in early life, with Mary, daughter of Patrick McCullough. Their children were Anna (Mrs. Henry Donnell), Mary (wife of John McCorkle), Elizabeth, Jane (Mrs. Robert Scott) and Hannah (died in infancy). The father followed farming. Politically he was a Democrat, and served as justice of the peace for several terms. He was a member of the Associate Reformed Church until his death in 1873, in his eighty-seventh year. He was preceded to the grave by his wife, who died in 1865, being then eighty-one years of age.

John and Mary (Hay) McCorkle had no children. He was an active and progressive citizen. Politically he was a Democrat, and religiously a ruling elder in the U. P. Church until his death on July 18, 1863. Mrs. Mary McCorkle, his widow, resides at West Middletown.

LEROY WOODS DAY, one of the successful farmers and stock raisers and influential citizens of Morris township, is a native of Washington county, born in this township, April 24, 1833. He is the youngest of a family of five children born to Lemuel Fordham Day and Nancy Jordan Day.

The family is an old and well-known one of English descent, and can be traced to the nobility of that country. Of the five children born to Lemuel F. and Nancy Day, two died in infancy. The others are as follows: Stephen F., born July 22, 1827, left Washington county in 1852, and died March 6, 1892, in Nebraska. He was never married. He left a large landed estate to his brother, L. W. Day, and his niece, Cora B. Minton. Eliza, born April 7, 1831, was married in 1852 to Dr. Artemas Day, of this township, and became the mother of one child, Cora Bell, who married S. D. Minton. Mrs. Day died in 1864. Leroy Woods Day received such an education as was afforded the country youth of that day, and was reared to a practical knowledge of farm life, which he has turned to good account. He resides on the valuable tract of land lying about one-half mile north of Sparta, which has been in the possession of the Day family for more than fifty years. He gives much attention to sheep-raising, to which his place is especially adapted, and he is one of the most successful wool-growers of this county. Through some means, which he attributes to the lay of the land and the breed of sheep, his stock has never been infected with those diseases which so materially lessen the profits of most sheep raisers.

Mr. Day was married April 27, 1855, to Miss Miranda Vankirk Day, a daughter of Daniel Day, of Morris township, to which union there have been born eight children, all of whom are living except the eldest, Horace Mann, who was born December 27, 1856, and died November 12, 1857. Charles Sumner, born February 2, 1858, married October 21, 1880, Miss Sarah M. Auld, of Greene county, Penn., a daughter of John Auld; Stephen Ellsworth, a graduate of the Normal School at California, and also of Washington and Jefferson College, class of 1892, was born August 8, 1861, married Annie M., daughter of Theodore Day, July 21, 1892, and now resides at Washington, Penn.; Edward Sullivan, a vocal and instrumental musician, and dealer in musical instruments, was born February 7, 1865, and married Josie, daughter of Shepherd Kerns, December 24, 1891; Lemuel Clarence, born July 15, 1867, graduated with the class of 1892 from the State Normal School at Edinboro; Howard Woods, born December 5, 1869; Hilliard Daniel, born November 15, 1872, and Minor Harold, born February 28, 1876. The family is an accomplished one, and especially gifted in music. They have among their own members a sextet brass band, and their musical performances are of the most creditable character. In August, 1862, Mr. Day enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment P. V. I., in which he served until honorably discharged, on account of disability, in January, 1864, at which time he was third corporal. In politics he is a Republican, and in religion both he and Mrs. Day are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Old Concord. Mr. Day is also a member of Luther Day Post, No. 395, G. A. R., and is at present Post Commander.

NELSON VAN KIRK, a prominent contractor and builder, and a well-known citizen of Washington, is a native of the county, born in Amwell township, January 30, 1823, a son of William and Margaret (Bollen) Van Kirk, the former of whom was also a native of that township. The grandfather, William Van Kirk, came from New Jersey to this county, along with other early settlers, bought land which he improved, and died here. He was the father of ten children, none of whom are now living.

William Van Kirk, father of our subject, received his education at the subscription schools of his native township, and learned the trades of cabinet-maker and carpenter, which he successfully carried on in Washington borough (whither he had come in 1828) until 1838, in which year he moved to a farm in South Strabane township. He was married to Margaret Bollen, a native of the county, who bore him ten children, of whom five grew to maturity, viz.: Ann Eliza, who died at the age of twenty-five years; Matilda, widow of John Charters; Nelson; Harvey J., an attorney at law, and Margaret, wife of Stephen Reppert, residing in Kentucky. In 1862 the father died, aged sixty-five years, and in March, 1875, the mother passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Charters, in South Strabane township, at the age of eighty-four years. Mr. Van Kirk had served as associate judge for several terms.

Nelson Van Kirk secured a liberal education at the common schools of South Strabane township, and learned the trade of carpenter of his father. In 1846 he returned to Washington borough, where he yet resides. Since the year 1858 he has been a contractor and builder, and has put up a great many buildings in and about Washington. In 1860 he erected, on South Main street, the "Strain Building," which has an iron front; in 1861 he built for William Smith the "Iron Hall," on the corner of Main and Beau streets, one of the finest structures in the city; he also erected the National Bank building, the dwellings of Judge Melvaire and W. P. Hastings, the First and Third Presbyterian churches, in addition to which he put up, at various times, many dwelling houses outside the borough limits, and erected churches at Pigeon Creek and North Buffalo, also the County Home.

In 1854 Mr. Van Kirk was united in marriage with Miss Ann M. Chidester, of West Virginia, a daughter of Ephraim and Mary (Gilechrist) Chidester, natives of Washington county, Penn., the father born in November, 1798, died in 1876, the mother born in 1800, died in 1830. Nelson and Ann M. Van Kirk had a family of seven children, all sons: John, James and Harvey (deceased), and William E., Edward M., George W. and Nelson C. (living). Of these, William E. and Edward M. are both contractors in company with their father; George W. is a druggist in Monongahela City, Penn.; Nelson C. is a clerk in W. P. Hastings' hardware store in Washington; William E. is a member of Washington borough council, now serving his second term.

Of Mr. Van Kirk it may truly be said that he is a thoroughly representative, self-made man, having attained success by his own individual energy and perseverance, and accumulated a comfortable competence, part of which consists of eight dwelling houses in the borough of Washington. Socially, he is genial, whole souled, warm hearted and generous attributes he bears with a becoming modesty, in part natural, in part the reflex of the amiability and refinement characteristic of his faithful spouse. A call at the elegant and comfortable home of Mr. and Mrs. Van Kirk will assure the visitor that within its hospitable walls love ruling. Mr. and Mrs. Van Kirk are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Washington, Penn. Politically he was first a Whig, and since the formation of the party has been a staunch Republican. For six consecutive years he has served with acknowledged ability as a member of the Washington borough council.

JOHN S. GALLEY. Peter Galley, great-grandfather of John S. Galley, emigrated to America from Germany about the year 1770, and served as a drummer during the Revolutionary war. He settled in Lancaster county, Penn., where he married Sophia Stern, of the same county. To them was born Philip, grandfather of John S. Galley, in 1771.

Philip Galley married Magdalena Nowcomer, of Lancaster county. Afterward they emigrated to Fayette county, Penn., and settled on the Youghiogheny river, in the midst of the now famous coke region. To them were born eleven children, as follows: Peter, Catharine, John Jacob, David, Elizabeth, Samuel, Jonathan, Barbara, Abraham and Henry.

Peter Galley was born in 1799, in Fayette county, passing his youth on the home farm. He was married to Mary Strickler, of Fayette county, and children were born to them as follows: Frances, Martha, William, Mary, Elizabeth and Henry. The mother died, and for his second wife Peter Galley was united in marriage with Frances, daughter of John Sherrick, who bore him the following named children: Ann, Sarah, Philip, Cyrus, Susan, Catherine, John S., Joanna, Melinda and Maria. This wife also died, and for his third choice Mr. Galley selected Susan Newmyer Stauffer, of Fayette county.

John S. Galley, son of Peter and Frances (Sherrick) Galley, was born July 12, 1812, in Fayette county. He attended the academy at Pleasant Valley, then took one term at Hiram College, and boarded with the father of Mrs. James A. Garfield. In 1861 John S. Galley enlisted in the Sixth Pennsylvania Heavy Artillery, and served with the army of the Potomac until the close of the war. When the contest was ended he returned to Fayette county, and on October 21, 1865, was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of Samuel, and granddaughter of Richard Blackmore, of Washington county. The latter was a brother of Col. William Blackmore. Richard followed agricultural pursuits, and joined with the Democratic party. In early life he was married to Mary Boyer, who bore him one son, Samuel.

Samuel Blackmore was born October 31, 1806, and on May 3, 1827, was united in marriage with Sarah Torrence, of Allegheny county. Three children bore of this union, viz.: Albert, Nancy and John. The mother died, and on October 27, 1849, Samuel Blackmore was married to Anna, daughter of Obadiah Hyde, who bore him two children, Mary and Obadiah. Of the six, Mary attended the Pleasant Valley Academy, and there met for the first time her future husband, John S. Galley.

To the union of John S. and Mary (Blackmore) Galley nine children were born: Anna F., William B., C. Norman, Lonnie E., Beatrice C., Eva M., Nellie M., Edna E. and J. Carl. Of this family, Lucretia is now attending the Normal school at California, and William has been a student at Hiram College. The parents of these children began their wedded life in Labrary, Allegheny county, where Mr. Galley conducted a store for two years, then lived on a farm in Iowa for three years. At the end of that time he came to Washington county and bought 115 acres of land in Peters township, underlain with a fine coal vein. Mr. Galley conducts a small dairy. In politics he was a Republican until the origin of the Prohibition party in 1890; since then he has cast his vote for the overthrow of the whisky traffic, the nation's curse. In religion he is a member and elder of the Church of Christ, of Peters Creek.

ENOCH FRENCH. The French family in Pennsylvania is an old Revolutionary one. Alexander French, the great-grandfather of Enoch French (the subject of this sketch), having been a member of Gen. Washington's bodyguard. He resided near Philadelphia, Penn., at the time of his death. A son, Enoch, married a Miss McElroy, of Chambersburg, Penn., and moved to Fayette county, this State, where he reared a family of children, of whom George French was one. He died in Fayette county.

George French was born March 11, 1799, and in 1823 married Mary Porter, a daughter of Judge Charles Porter, of Fayette county. In 1832 he removed to Morris township, Washington county, and purchased the farm located one-half mile northeast of Dunn's Station, on which his son, Enoch, now resides, where he remained until his death, October 8, 1890, his life embracing a period of fifty-eight years. Mrs. French died in 1839, having become the mother of eight children—five boys and three girls. A. D., the eldest, enlisted in the Eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania Reserves, and was killed at the battle of Fredericksburg; Charles F., a Presbyterian minister of La Salle county, Ill., died February 5, 1870; Washington, born in 1830, died at the age of fourteen years, October 10, 1844; one child died in infancy; Anne A. Miles died in May, 1869; J. C., born October 10, 1836, served in the Fifth West Virginia Cavalry during the Civil war, and is now a prominent citizen of Prosperity, Washington county; Jane resides at Amity, and Enoch in Morris township.

Enoch French, the immediate subject of this sketch, was born where he now resides, June 28, 1834. He received a common-school education and remained with his father, assisting in conducting the farm until the beginning of the late war. On August 22, 1862, he enlisted at Amity in Company D, One Hundred and Fortieth Regiment, P. V. I., and served fourteen months, when he received an honorable discharge and returned home. The failing health of his father rendered it necessary for him to assume the management of the farm. On August 28, 1876, he married Lizzie J. Gardner, a daughter of John Gardner, of Amwell township. Under his management the splendid farm, on which he has worked since boyhood, has been much improved, and is made to yield a good income. Mr. French is a man of much more than ordinary intelligence, is an omnivorous reader, and is possessed of a remarkable memory, whereby he is enabled to give dates and recite events of historical importance with great preciseness. He is an authority on matters of this kind. He is a Republican in politics, though not bitterly partisan.

HENRY B. McMURRAY is a leader among the representative citizens of Washington county. He is descended from Scotch ancestors, a race noted for the integrity and honor of its people. John McMurray was the pioneer of the family to land on American soil. He was married in Scotland to Mary Brown, and with his wife and infant daughter, Susanna, embarked on the most substantial vessel then procurable, sailing from Liverpool to America. When some weeks at sea the captain and mate had a quarrel, and during the trouble the captain shot the mate. He was supposed to be mortally wounded, but the captain sailed north, thinking the cold climate would benefit the victim. The experiment proved successful, and the mate was soon out of danger. They then resumed their journey, but owing to the long voyage the water supply gave out, and all on board seemed in imminent danger of meeting a horrible death. A rain fell, and, by spreading articles on the deck, enough water was caught to avert the danger.

After a voyage of three months, crew and passengers were finally landed safely at New York. John McMurray soon after proceeded to Winchester, W. Va., where the family lived a few years, then moved to Washington county, Penn., resided in Buffalo township a short time, and finally, in company with his brother Peter, settled in Guernsey county, Ohio, while Samuel settled in Donegal township, this county. John took a large tract of land upon which he erected a log cabin, and there passed the remainder of his life. In those days the clothing of the family was made of flax, spun and woven by their own hands; the wheat which the settlers raised was carried on horseback to Wellsburg, W. Va., and then ground by a treadmill into flour. Special trips were also made to Winchester, W. Va., for salt. The settlers usually made these journeys in large parties, taking with them sufficient provisions to last until their return. On the outward trip they left provision for one meal at each stopping-place, so that by the time they arrived at Winchester the horses were unloaded and a supply of food ready for the homeward journey obtained. Grain was harvested by a sickle, and the ground cultivated with a wooden plow, while wagons and sleds were articles of luxury unknown to the pioneers. Amid all these privations and discouragements they bravely struggled on, the only effect of their trials being to unite them more closely into a bond of brotherhood. Politically John McMurray was a Federalist, and in religion a member of the Three Ridge Presbyterian Church at West Alexander. He died at the age of eighty-nine, and was buried at West Alexander, this county. The children born to this couple were as follows: Susanna, John, Jane, Samuel, William, James, Eliza and Mary.

William McMurray, son of John and Mary (Brown) McMurray, was born March 29, 1805, in Donegal township, and remained on the home farm during his boyhood, receiving a subscription-school education. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Jane, daughter of William Martin. Mr. Martin was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, and in early life came to America, settling near Elm Grove, W. Va. He was married to Margaret Blayney, who bore him children as follows: Martha, Eliza, Andrew, Margaret, Jane and Mary. In politics Mr. Martin was a Democrat. His wife was a member of the Presbyterian Church. William and Jane (Martin) McMurray began their wedded life April 12, 1838, on a farm near West Alexander, this county, and afterward purchased the home place. In 1875 he moved to Burgettstown, Penn., where he died March 14, 1881, and was buried by the side of his wife, who had crossed the river September 4, 1864. Mr. McMurray was an energetic, enterprising citizen and in politics was formerly a Whig, afterward uniting with the Republican party. In religious faith he was an active Presbyterian.

Henry B. McMurray was born September 24, 1840, in Donegal township, this county. His earlier education was received at the common schools; afterward attended the academy conducted by Rev. W. H. Lester of West Alexander, of which William McMurray, his father, was a trustee. In August, 1862, Henry B. McMurray enlisted in Company H, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, was sent to the Shenandoah Valley, and served till the close of the war, under Sheridan and Custer. He was taken prisoner at Ashby's Gap, and confined in Libby prison three and a half months, being released, together with several other prisoners, about ten days prior to the surrender at Appomattox. Mr. McMurray then returned home, and in 1865 opened a drug store at Burgettstown, where he has since remained. On August 3, 1876, he was united in marriage with Annie C. Watterson, daughter of Robert and Mary Watterson, of Wheeling, W. Va., who bore him three children: Jennie C., Lee W. and Henry H. Mr. McMurray is a Republican in politics, and in religion is a member of the Presbyterian Church, serving as trustee. Henry B. McMurray's brothers and sisters were born on the following dates: John, December 5, 1843; William M., April 21, 1846; Martha J., November 12, 1848; Eliza Ann, March 5, 1851, and Mary Miller McMurray, May 2, 1856. John married Julia Kelly, of Pittsburgh, in July, 1865 (To them were born: Henry (deceased), Elie, Fred, Frank, Lizzie (deceased), and Lylie). William M., married Julia S. Moore at Burgettstown, September 4, 1878 (They are the parents of Fanny May, Nellie Moore, William M. and Florence Espin). Eliza married James Rooth, of West Alexander, in July, 1875. Martha Jane married Alvin Curtis, at Claysville, in September, 1868, and to them were born Jessie and Alvin Curtis.

HENRY WESLEY HILDEBRAND, one of the most successful farmers of West Bethlehem township, is a grandson of Michael Hildebrand, who was born in 1796, in West Bethlehem township, this county.

His father left Germany in early life, and settling in Washington county, Penn., erected a cabin in the wilderness where Michael was born. Michael was a soldier in the war of 1812, unsurpassed for bravery and daring. He was one of the builders of that once famous thoroughfare, the "National pike." He married Christina Harsh, a daughter of Philip Harsh, who was also one of the first to settle in Washington county. To this couple were born: Demas, Andrew, Sarah Ann, Levi, Mary Jane and Elizabeth, who (with the exception of Mary Jane, who died in 1876) are all still living. Andrew is a farmer of prominence and resides on the old homestead; Sarah Ann is the wife of Samuel Walton, of Rice's Landing, Greene county; Levi is a blacksmith, and lives at Ten-Mile village, Amwell township; Elizabeth lives in West Bethlehem township, and is the wife of John Hannah, a well-known farmer.

Demas Hildebrand, the father of our subject, was born August 24, 1824, and in early life made many dangerous trips, with heavy wagons to Zanesville, Ohio; and, did space permit, many incidents of peril then encountered by this brave pioneer might be recounted. He afterward operated the first threshing machine brought to Washington county. In March, 1845, he married Margaret Keys, who was born September 27, 1823, a daughter of Henry Keys, who was born and reared on the farm now owned by his son, Henry. The following named children were born to this couple: Henry Wesley; Sarah Isabel, born November 1, 1848, died August 16, 1872; William A. S., born May 24, 1855, died September 22, 1877; Fria Anson, born June 26, 1859, now a prominent farmer of Greene county, Ind.; James B. McLelland, born February 26, 1863, also a resident of Greene county, Ind.; Luella, born June 1, 1865; and Carrie Etta, born June 8, 1870, both living with their father, who is an extensive landowner in Greene county, Ind.

Henry Wesley Hildebrand, the subject of this sketch, was born December 29, 1845, in West Bethlehem township, this county. Here his early years were passed at work upon the farm, and he received but little education, for being the eldest of the family he shared with his father much of the responsibility and management of the place. On January 2, 1868, he married Catherine Wonsettler, a daughter of David Wonsettler, and they have two sons: William, born August 28, 1870, and Finley W., born October 15, 1877, now attending school. Mrs. Hildebrand died March 2, 1890, at the age of forty-two years, three months and twenty-one days. To her memory a handsome monument was erected. Mr. Hildebrand was married March 19, 1891, to Emma Grable, a daughter of David Grable, a prominent farmer of West Bethlehem township. Mr. Hildebrand is an elder in the Lutheran Church, of which he and his wife are members, and in politics he is a Democrat.

DAM MOUNTS, one of the most intelligent and progressive citizens of Franklin township, was born in Canton township, February 23, 1832.

His father, William Mounts, was born in this county January 14, 1800, and was brought up to practical farm life from his earliest boyhood. The school he attended during a few winter weeks in each year was held in a deserted log cabin, through which the wintry winds whistled with gleeful defiance at the huge fire that burned brightly in the spacious fireplace, which monopolized one end of the schoolroom. In October, 1823,

Mr. Mounts was married to Mary Malone, whose family were also old settlers, and after their marriage the young couple made their home in Franklin township until 1852, when he moved to Valley Inn, Buffalo township. Later he settled on Wolf Farm, where he died in June, 1884. He was emphatically a self-made man, and at the time of his death owned a large farm. Politically he was first a Whig, and afterward a Republican, but though always taking a deep interest in the affairs of his party, he would never accept office. Among the earliest members of East Buffalo Presbyterian Church, he was one of its leading and most esteemed supporters. The children of this honored pioneer were: William, Adam, Richard, Mary A. (Mrs. Robert Huston), Marguerite (Mrs. Abraham Huston), Elizabeth (Mrs. Charles Kelley), Martha (Mrs. Samuel Parker), Thomas Theodore and Isaac C. Richard, Thomas and Calvin reside on Wolf Farm. Sarah Jane, the oldest of the family, married J. C. Johnson.

The early life of Adam Mounts was passed at the paternal home, where he was employed for the most part in assisting in the work on the farm until he was about nineteen years old, when for a time he attended the school of his section known as Jolley's schoolhouse. On February 23, 1860, Mr. Mounts was married to Susan, a daughter of Jacob Miller, of Donegal township, and since his marriage has resided in Franklin township. His fine farm in Franklin township comprises 200 acres of fertile land, on which he has made many improvements, and his present residence, a large two-story frame building, was built in 1884. He also owns a farm of 200 acres in West Finley township, and the fine residence on that farm is constructed of brick made in about the year 1832. Mr. Mounts also owns the first land deeded to his father in October, 1831. The names of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Adam Mounts are as follows: Mary A. (Mrs. Bernard Ramsey), William C., J. Melvin, Harry B., James A., Flora B., Alvin and Cora. Mr. Mounts is a member of East Buffalo Presbyterian Church, and in politics he is a Republican.

HUGH WILSON. In many vocations of life are found those who possess a reputation for business sagacity which they do not really deserve. They are prosperous, not as a reward of their own struggles for success, but having inherited the fruit of others' toil, are in no way blame-worthy for this fact. Yet it is evident to any thoughtful mind, that a man whose business has been organized and placed in a prosperous condition before he assumed control, does not require the experience and judgment which are essential to those who make their own road to fortune. In this respect the agriculturist possesses an advantage over his city brethren, inasmuch as his reputation is of necessity based almost entirely upon his own personal ability. He may inherit lands and gold, but if he lacks the prerequisites of his vocation, he cannot be a successful farmer even in name, for in no other path of life is incompetency so apparent. Therefore, the successful and prosperous agriculturist is always the man who must possess sterling qualities of his own, regardless of the property he may inherit. Among the latter class the name of Wilson is prominently identified. Henry Wilson was born east of the mountains, and in early manhood became a pioneer settler of Allegheny county, Penn., locating near McDonald. He was a prosperous farmer, and died on the old place, leaving a family of nine children.

William W. Wilson, a son of that pioneer, was born May 14, 1815, in Allegheny county, Penn., and received a subscription-school education. He then learned the wagon-making trade, and first located at Eldersville, Washington Co., Penn. On April 8, 1836, he selected a life companion in the person of Jane Smith, who was born December 25, 1811. She was a daughter of Robert Smith, of Jefferson township, this county. The young couple continued to reside in Eldersville until 1839, when they moved to Paris, Hanover township. The children of this family bore the following names: Alexander, living in Steubenville, Ohio, was born January 10, 1837; Hugh, born August 15, 1839; John S., a farmer of Hanover township, born November 6, 1841; William H., a liveryman of Burgettstown, Penn., born March 15, 1844; Rowena, wife of Russell Parks, Burgettstown, Penn., born March 23, 1847; Robert G., deceased at the age of two years, born January 8, 1850; Rachel J., wife of W. V. Dunbar, of Smith township, born December 29, 1851; and James B., living in Washington State, born August 26, 1856. Mr. Wilson was a leading member of the Democratic party, having held several local offices. In 1874 he fell from his haymow, and, dislocating his neck, died instantly. In 1887 his widow was laid beside him in Paris cemetery. Both were consistent members of the U. P. Church.

Hugh Wilson, whose name opens this sketch, was born at Eldersville, this county, having been but an infant when his parents located in Paris. He attended the common schools, then hired out to R. S. Cook, living near Bulger, Washington county, with whom he remained some time. On March 25, 1868, he led to the altar Ophelia Russell, who was born in 1840. She was a daughter of John and Jane (Simpson) Russell, of Smith township. One son, John, was born to this marriage, February 4, 1882. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Wilson remained for some time as tenants on his father-in-law's farm. In 1880 he located on his present home in Hanover township, upon which he has made many improvements, successfully devoting his attention to general farming, stock raising and dairying. Politically he has always voted the Democrat ticket, and in religion he and his wife are members of the Florence Presbyterian Church.

THOMAS McDONOUGH, one of the well-known retired farmers of Washington county, is a native of the same, born in Somerset township, October 27, 1830.

He is a grandson of Henry McDonough, who came from Baltimore, Md., to this county at a very early day, when the Indians were so hostile that he had to sleep in his rude cabin with his gun, pitchfork and axe near his bed, ready for any sudden nocturnal attack. He revisited Baltimore after a time, and returning to Washington county after a four years' absence, bought a farm and settled down to agricultural pursuits. On the occasion of his second coming to the county he brought with him a slave woman who kept house for him until his marriage, after which she remained as a member of the family until she died of sheer old age, and was buried in the family lot in Pigeon Creek cemetery. Henry McDonough married Jane, daughter of Squire Hamilton, of "Ginger Hill," west of Monongahela City, and they became the parents of a large family.

David McDonough, son of this pioneer, was born in Washington county, November 14, 1799, his education being received at the subscription schools of the neighborhood of his birthplace. He was reared to the occupation of his forefathers on the old home farm, whereon he lived all his days. On May 16, 1827, he was married to Levimah, daughter of Adam Weir, of West Bethlehem township, and a descendant of one of the early settlers of the county. Four children were born to this union, viz.: Joseph, in Somerset township; Thomas, our subject; Adam, who died at the age of eight years, and Henry H., a practicing physician at Claysville, Penn. In 1859 the father passed from earth at the age of sixty years. He was originally a Whig in politics, later a staunch Republican, and held various township offices in the gift of his party. His widow survived him until March 2, 1876, when she too passed from earth.

Thomas McDonough received his education at the old log school-house of the period. His "A-B-C" was learned off what was called a "paddle," having the large letters of the alphabet pasted on one side of it, and the small letters on the other side, and the readers and other books used were the Greenleaf and Adams Arithmetic, and Town's and Cobb's spellers. His first teacher was Thomas Hall, a prominent dominie in his time, the father of Gen. John Hall, of Washington. Later Mr. McDonough was under the preceptorship of a teacher under the public-school law—a Mr. Leet, a Washington attorney about that time—and his last winter attendance at any school was for but eleven days in a four-months' term. On December 31, 1858, Thomas McDonough was united in marriage with Jane McGregor, of Nottingham township, daughter of William McGregor, a pioneer of the county. To this union were born two children, who died young, and their mother followed them to the grave December 30, 1872. On August 25, 1874, our subject married Miss C. V. Burgan, of Terre Haute, Ind., to which State her parents had moved from Washington county, Penn. By this marriage there is one child, Alice Gertrude, born January 16, 1879. In April, 1891, the family moved from the farm into Washington, partly on account of Mr. McDonough's health, which had become somewhat impaired, and partly in order to give his daughter the benefit of the best city education to be had in the county. Mr. and Mrs. McDonough are members of the Christian Church of Washington, and in his political preferences he is a staunch Republican.

HENRY SCHOENTHAL, who, by a life of plodding industry and judicious economy, coupled with keen foresight and characteristic prudence, has risen to no small degree of prominence as one of the well-to-do and progressive citizens of Washington borough, is a native of Germany. He was born May 20, 1843, in the village of Sielen, then in the Electorate Hessen-Cassel, now in the Prussian Province of Hessen-Nassau.

Levi and Henriette (Hamberg) Schoenthal, his parents, were also natives of Germany, the former, a shoemaker by trade, born in 1813. They had a family of twelve children, nine sons and three daughters, two sons dying in infancy. The rest are living, two still in Germany, viz.: Jacob, living in Cologne, and Rosalie, married to Willie Heymann, residing in Geldern-on-the-Rhine. Those who came to America are Mrs. Hannah Stern (widow), and Amalie, married to Elias Wolf, both living in Allegheny, Penn.; Felix is in Pittsburgh; Julius, in Washington, D. C.; Natban, in Philadelphia; Simon, in Atlantic City; and Isidore and Henry, in Washington, Penn. The father died in Germany in 1875, aged sixty-two years, the mother in Washington, Penn., in 1882, aged sixty-five years.

Henry Schoenthal attended the school of his native village up to his fourteenth year, at the same time learning his father's trade, beginning when only ten and one-half years old, and working at the same until he was fifteen years old. For two years after this he took private literary instruction, and in the year 1859 was admitted into the Jewish Seminary in Cassel, Germany, an institution where young men were educated to become teachers in Jewish schools, and leaders of the service in the synagogue. At the end of the third year he passed an examination, and then taught school for three years in one place. In 1866 he came to the United States; the rest came later, at intervals of several years. The two youngest, Isidore and Rosalie, together with the mother, came with Henry in 1881, when he returned from a visit to Germany, accompanied by wife and two children. Rosalie, after a sojourn of a few years, returned to Germany and was married there. Henry returned to Washington after his marriage, as he was in business at that time. He is an independent in politics, with a very warm feeling for the party that was good enough for Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, Blaine and Harrison. Selecting as his abiding place in the land of his adoption the thriving town of Washington, this county, he clerked for three years in the clothing store of Jacob Goldsmith, at the sign of the "Golden Eagle," in the room now occupied by C. A. House as a music store. Then in 1869, Mr. Schoenthal bought out the stationery business of Rev. James McFarland, at the "Green Tree Corner," and has ever since conducted a prosperous and lucrative trade in books, stationery, notions, etc., at the same stand. In 1872 our subject revisited his native land, and on May 8 of that year was there married to Helen, daughter of Meyer Lillienfeld, of Gudensberg, in Hessen-Nassau. Four children blessed this union, viz.: Madaline, born March 16, 1873, died in infancy; Hilda, born June 25, 1874; Lionel, born April 14, 1877; and Meyer, born August 12, 1883. He is a member of the following secret societies: A. F. & A. M., Heptasophs, Royal Arcanum, and Protected Home Circle.

JOHAN METCALF is one of the oldest and most highly respected farmers of his neighborhood. He is of Irish descent, his grandfather, Edward Metcalf, being a native of Ireland, who emigrated to America in early days, and settled on a farm of 1,000 acres in Jefferson township, Washington Co., Penn. Edward Metcalf reared a family of seven children, of whom his son Edward was the fourth in order of birth.

Edward Metcalf was born about the year 1800, and trained to agricultural pursuits, which he followed throughout life. He was united in marriage with Miss Margaret Meneely, of Washington county, and to their union were born the following children: Jane, John, William, Nancy, Mary, James, Margaret, Edward, Sarah, Alexander, Judy and an unnamed infant.

John Metcalf (subject of sketch) was born October 17, 1821, in a log cabin, and reared in Washington county, remaining on the home farm during his boyhood. On February 8, 1840, he was married to Judy Cole. The young people first settled on the farm where they now reside. He then moved to his father-in-law's farm, lying between Jewett and Scio, in Harrison county, Ohio, where they remained until the death of Mr. Cole. They finally returned to the present home in Jefferson township, this county, where they have since remained. Five children have been born to this couple, namely: Moses, Nancy Jane, Edward, John and Margaret Ann. Mrs. Metcalf's father was a son of Moses Cole, who came from the State of New Jersey and settled in Washington county, Penn. Indians were numerous in those days. Mrs. Moses Cole (the grandmother of Mrs. Metcalf) says that she has seen twenty-four Indians pass the house at one time, and that she often gave them food and shelter. Mrs. John Cole is now ninety-three years of age, and makes her home with her daughter and son-in-law.

TOWNSEND VAN VOORHIS. This gentleman traces his lineage back through the mist of many years to the days of 1670, when three Van Voorhis brothers sailed from Amsterdam, Holland, and first landed in the strange "New World." They settled on Long Island, where one brother was killed by a poisoned arrow, the other remaining on the island.

On December 17, 1701, Daniel Van Voorhis was born, and to him the present generation in Washington county trace their origin. On November 27, 1724, he contracted a matrimonial alliance with Femmyte Bennett, who was born April 4, 1706, and they became the parents of the following children: Abraham, Jerome, Ange, John, Cornelius, Elizabeth, Femmyte and Daniel. Daniel Van Voorhis was born July 7, 1728, at Oyster Bay, Long Island. He received a thorough education, soon evincing an unusual taste for any study pertaining to navigation, and many of his books treating on that science are yet in possession of the family. He was captain of a merchant vessel for many years, twice lost his vessel and cargo, and was taken prisoner by the British many times. On one occasion he was pursued by a British man-of-war, and had just raised the flag of surrender, but before the enemy saw the signal, a cannon-ball tore away the post close by where he was standing. The captain was three times married: first to a widow lady, Mrs. Britt, who bore him two children: Samuel, a successful merchant of New York City, who came to this county about 1800, residing for some time in a cabin near the present site of the Black Diamond Coal Works (he afterward moved to Bucyrus, Ohio, and died there a few years ago); and Sarah, who married John Van Voorhis, and died November 17, 1857, near Goshen, N. Y., aged eighty-two years. After the mother of these children died Capt. Van Voorhis was united in marriage with Mary Newton. In 1785 he came to Washington county, Penn., and bought sixty acres of land of one Decker, in what is now Carroll township. Some time afterward he moved his family to the new home, where his second wife died, December 31, 1789, leaving three children: John (deceased June 28, 1871, in Muskingum county, Ohio, at the age of ninety-three years), Daniel (who died in 1852, at the age of sixty-nine) and Abraham (of whom further mention will be presently made). The mother of this family was the first person interred in the Van Voorhis cemetery at Pigeon Creek, where four generations of the name are now lying. For his third wife Capt. Van Voorhis selected Nancy Myers, a native of Hagerstown, Md., who bore him one son and one daughter: Elizabeth (Mrs. Frye), and Isaac, who was born March 15, 1794. Capt. Daniel Van Voorhis was called from earth February 21, 1819.

Abraham Van Voorhis, son of Capt. Daniel and Mary (Newton) Van Voorhis, was born December 28, 1785, near Rancecas creek, on the Delaware river, in New Jersey. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Ann Watkins, a native of Washington county, Penn., and their children were born as follows. Garret T., born February 18, 1819, married Hester Frye, died March 20, 1864; had two children (Abraham and Melinda); for his second wife, he married Mary J. Baxter, had one son (Luther T.). Joseph was born August 27, 1820, died November 17, 1822. Robert, born July 21, 1822, married Caroline Frye, had one child (Narcissa). Mary born May 5, 1826, died January 31, 1863, married Vincent Colvin, had two children (Jay and Abraham). Abraham Van Voorhis married, for his second wife, Jane Phillips, and had seven children: Eliza, Lucinda, John, Emeline, Caroline, Serena and Cynthia. Eliza was born September 1, 1830, died February 28, 1850; married Thornton Watkins, had one child (James). Lucinda, born August 7, 1832, died June 24, 1810. John, born September 6, 1835, married Isa H. Teeple, had six children (Charles, Lulu, Carrie, Serena, Will and Eva). Emeline, born February 28, 1838, married Joseph Brown, had five children (Van, Samuel, Curtis, Cora and Joseph). Caroline, born November 1, 1840, married James Jones, had seven children (Endsley, Jennie, Allie, Etta, Rena, Emma and Ira). Serena, born July 2, 1843, died March 23, 1861, and Cynthia, born January 16, 1848, who married Cooper Bentley, October 15, 1868. Of these children Robert is one of the best authorities in the United States on all questions pertaining to sheep culture, and has contributed to the Congressional stock paper an article entitled "Diseases of Domestic Animals." John is a systematic farmer and sheep-raiser, having been president of the Monongahela Valley Agricultural and Horticultural Society. Mrs. Jane Van Voorhis is still active and enjoying good health. She has for many years been a devoted member of the M. E. Church, and resides on the 600 acres of land which her husband owned near Monongahela City.

Townsend Van Voorhis, son of Abraham and Ann (Watkins) Van Voorhis, was born February 18, 1819, as stated hitherto, in Carroll township. He received his early education at the old Calhoun school, and in 1840 selected a life companion in the person of Hester, daughter of Noah and Lucy (Colvin) Frye. To this union were born two sons: Abraham, living in Kansas, and Butler T., residing with his parents. Mr. Van Voorhis owns 193 acres of land situated four miles from Monongahela City, and devotes his principal attention to stock raising. He has been school director for several years.

MATTHEW WILSON is a prosperous stockman and substantial citizen of Canonsburg. He was born November 28, 1833, in County Antrim, Ireland, where he grew to manhood. His early education was very limited, as he was obliged to leave school at the age of eight years. From early youth he was interested in stock, and finally decided to accompany his uncle, George Wilson, on a voyage to America. They had a tempestuous passage, arriving in New York harbor after a voyage of six weeks and three days. They then came by steamer to Philadelphia, thence by canal to Pittsburgh, from which place they walked to Canonsburg, where they arrived at day-break on November 14, 1851, the journey having been made in fourteen days. Matthew hired out to a farmer for one year at $8.00 per month, and at the expiration of that time engaged for the next nine months. He then began working for a butcher, and purchasing a copy-book, slate, pencil and candle, devoted his evenings to energetic study. He remained with his employer four years, taking charge of the business after the first twelve months. Having saved about $600, he then invested in stock, and driving them to Allegheny, sold them in three months at a profit of $600.

On April 3, 1856, he was married to Jane, daughter of George Wilson, and they have had three daughters, namely: Jennie, Mary (wife of S. C. Smith), and Martha B. (Mrs. Wilson, died November 11, 1862). After his marriage he took a contract for furnishing meat to the bands of a new railroad then in progress of construction along Chartiers Valley, and lost in that transaction $3,000. He had good credit and perseverance, so he rallied, and in 1863 went into the oil business in Oil City, buying and shipping oil from that city to Pittsburgh. Losing all the money he had accumulated, he came back from Oil City and again started in the butchering and stock business, driving sheep and cattle over the mountains, and making about five trips during the summer, selling the stock in Lancaster and the States of Delaware and New Jersey. In 1892 a book was sent to him that had been edited and published by a friend of his in regard to his life and travels while in the stock business. This friend sold the copyright of it for $1,000 to a firm at St. Louis, Mo. Of this publication Mr. Wilson was entirely ignorant until he received a copy of the book. In the year 1886 he took a trip to Europe, taking a nephew aged ten years with him. They sailed from Philadelphia on the American Line May 11, making the voyage going in fourteen days, and in returning they were on the water twelve days. Of late years Mr. Wilson has devoted his principal attention to the butchery, conducting a very extensive and profitable business. He has shipped a large amount of stock to Philadelphia and New York, always realizing a good profit from the sales. In politics, he is an active and zealous worker in the Democratic party, of which he is a valued member.

ROBERT C. McNARY. This prominent and highly-esteemed agriculturist of Cecil township, a worthy scion of one of the oldest families in the county, deserves more than a passing notice in this Biographical Record.

He is descended from Thomas McNary, who in an early day came to North Strabane township and bought land. He was a son of James McNary, by trade a shoemaker, who was born in Scotland about the year 1711, and, according to tradition, moved with his family to the North of Ireland. After sojourning there for a time, he and his wife emigrated to America, bringing with them their four sons and one daughter, some of whom had married in Ireland. In 1760 (so records show) James McNary bought a tract of land in York county, Penn., where he remained a number of years. He was an elder in the Seceder congregation of Guinston, one of the oldest congregations of that denomination in America. His sons were John, James, Thomas and David, all of whom came to Washington county; his daughter, Jane, married William Robison, and passed the rest of her life in York county. The father of this family also came to this county, and lived, up to the time of his death, with his son David in Hanover township, dying in 1796 at the age of eighty-five years; he was buried in the Seceder churchyard near Paris, this county.

James McNary, father of subject, was born in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., and received his education at the subscription schools of the period. On March 7, 1811, he was married to Ann Caldwell, of Washington county, and after a few years married life in North Strabane they moved to Nottingham township, where they passed the remainder of their days. They were the parents of nine children, as follows: Mary E., Jane (Mrs. David Templeton), James, Eliza (Mrs. James Thome), Robert C., Thomas, Samuel, Ann (Mrs. John Fife) and David. The father died May 19, 1841, the mother September 24, 1868. They were for a time members of the Seceder Church at Pigeon creek, later uniting with the U. P. Church, in which Mr. McNary was an elder for years. In his political preferences he was a Whig, but voted for the most part independent of party. Well-known in his day, he commanded the highest respect in the community both in his private life and in his occupation as a progressive farmer and stock raiser.

Robert C. McNary was born in Nottingham township, this county, June 17, 1823, his education being received at the common schools of his district, where he proved a diligent and apt scholar. In early boyhood he commenced working on his father's farm, and the lessons then inculcated in him proved invaluable to him in after life, and have been an important factor in making him what he is—a successful practical agriculturist, second to none in the county. On May 8, 1845, Mr. McNary was married to Sarah, daughter of Robert and Mary McCorkle, of Somerset township, this county. The children of this marriage were the following named: Mary E. (deceased), Ann (wife of W. B. L. Crawford), James, Robert C., Samuel W., Sarah J. (wife of Richard Weaver), John, Houston F. and Thomas. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. McNary made their home in Peters township until 1876, when he purchased his present residence in Cecil township. Mrs. McNary departed this life October 31, 1878, and was laid to rest in the Chartiers U. P. cemetery. Mr. McNary (as was his wife) is a member of the Chartiers U. P. Church, but was formerly a member of the Seceder Church.

DAVID GAULT, a representative citizen, and a member of one of the most prosperous pioneer families of Cross Creek township, is a grandson of James Gault, who was of Irish ancestry, and followed farming for many years near Canonsburg, this county. Grandfather Gault reared a family of eight children, three sons and five daughters. The sons were: David, who lived and died in Washington county, and had a family who survived him (he was one of the first purchasers of lots in Canonsburg); James, who served in the war of 1812, and died a bachelor; and William, the father of the subject of this sketch.

Robert C. McVay

William Gault was born on the home farm near Canonsburg, Washington county, and was reared to agricultural life. He was married to Miss Margaret Brown, a native of Lancaster county, Penn., and seven children were born to their union, viz.: James (who died before reaching maturity), Mary, Jane, John, William, Samuel and David, all save the latter being now deceased. The father died in 1816, the mother passing away about 1854.

David Gault was born February 8, 1815, near Florence, Washington county, Penn., and his father dying the following year, the family moved to Cross Creek township, settling on a farm. David passed his boyhood days in gaining an insight into agricultural pursuits, and attending for a few months in winter time the primitive subscription school of the vicinity. But he was chiefly self-taught, being a close reader and apt student. At the age of twelve years he found himself of some assistance to his mother, and about this time he "worked out" as a hired hand until he was sixteen years old, when he and his mother, and his brother William, moved to a rented farm near Cross Creek village. The following year William went to Ashland county, Ohio, and David was thus left in sole charge of the farm, which he conducted fifteen years, his mother making her home with him until her removal to Ashland county, Ohio, where she died. She was a remarkable woman, a typical pioneer wife and mother, who spun, wove and made all the clothing for the family; and to her early teachings her son David attributes much of his success.

On May 22, 1815, David Gault was united in marriage with Matilda, daughter of James Cook, a native of Washington county, Penn., and they had four children, as follows: Georgette, born March 23, 1846, married to A. H. Kerr, and living in Cross Creek village; Henry M., born March 16, 1848, residing in Plattsmouth, Neb.; James C., born December 7, 1850, living in Cross Creek township; and Silas, born April 13, 1853, a business man of Chicago, Ill. The mother of this family died April 18, 1853, in her thirty-fifth year, and on August 15, 1859, Mr. Gault was wedded to Mrs. Mary (Patterson) Marquis, who has borne him two daughters, Alice and Laura (both deceased in infancy). She was born August 24, 1821, in Cross Creek, this county, a daughter of William and Margaret Patterson, and was married to Newton Marquis, by whom she had one child, Alvin, who died at the age of two years. Mr. Marquis was called from earth in 1855. Mrs. Gault is a granddaughter of Gen. Thomas Patterson, and her maternal grandfather was Aaron Lyle, who represented his District in Congress. The Pattersons and Lyles are very old families in this part of the Keystone State.

Mr. Gault's farm comprises 300 acres of highly improved land, where he carries on general agriculture, including stock raising, making a specialty of sheep. In politics he was formally a Republican, but since the formation of the party has been an active worker in the ranks of the Prohibitionists, and he takes an active interest in all public enterprises. In religious connection he and his wife have long been members of the Cross Creek Presbyterian Church, in which he has been an elder for fifteen years, while Mrs. Gault takes an active and substantial interest in foreign missions.

JAMES H. McMURRAY. Among the most prominent residents of Peters township, this name is an honored one. James McMurray was a native of County Donegal, Ireland, and when a young man sailed to America. He first located near Irishtown, Allegheny Co., Penn., and there followed agricultural pursuits. Soon after arriving in this country he married Isabelle Valentine, a native of the Emerald Isle, who had crossed the ocean in early youth. The young people settled on a farm in Allegheny county, Penn., where the following children were born to them: James, Jane, John, William, Nancy (wife of Paul Black, of Aledo, Ill.), Margaret (living on the home farm with her brother Hervey), Esther, Mary A., Archie (a farmer in Allegheny county), Andrew, Hervey, Edward, an infant son, and an infant daughter. Of this family James, Jane, William, Esther, Mary A., Andrew, and the two youngest are deceased.

William McMurray, son of James and Isabelle McMurray, was born in 1817, on the old homestead in Allegheny county, Penn. In early manhood he was married to Jane, daughter of John Mouck, of Washington county, Penn. They lived on a farm near Noblestown, Allegheny Co., Penn., fourteen years after their marriage, then came to the home place in Washington county, Penn., where the family are now living. William McMurray was an active member of the Democratic party, and held various township offices. He was connected with the United Presbyterian Church, and gave to that Society a most liberal support. He died February 23, 1889, leaving three children, viz.: Mary E. (wife of J. C. Crouch), James H., and Eliza Jane (deceased at the age of fourteen years).

James H. McMurray, whose name opens this sketch, was born September 3, 1847, on the farm near Noblestown, Allegheny Co., Penn. He came to the farm in Washington county when but a lad, and there grew to manhood. He was married December 24, 1874, to Sarah M. Matthews, who was born March 8, 1855, daughter of James Matthews, a resident of Peters township, this county. The young people began wedded life on the farm in Peters township where they are yet living. Six children have blessed their union as follows: James M. G., William W. (who died in infancy), Levi A.,

Jennie M. (who died at the age of two years), George W. and Tamar M. Mr. McMurray has been a very successful business man, and now owns about 174 acres of land in several tracts. He has always taken a lively interest in the welfare of the Democratic party, has held many local offices, and in religion is a member and elder of the Mt. Prospect United Presbyterian Church.

SAMUEL LINN. No township in Washington county has been more favored in the matter of fine farm land, and prosperous, intelligent husbandmen, than North Strabane, and a record of the agricultural pre-eminence would be incomplete were the life sketch of Samuel Linn omitted. He is a native of the township, born January 30, 1831, a son of Matthew and Sarah (Pollock) Linn.

Matthew Linn was a son of James Linn, a native of Scotland, whence, when a young man, he came to America with his parents, who made a settlement in Lancaster county, Penn. Here James married Ellen, daughter of Robert Young, of that county, and in 1792 came with his family to North Strabane township, Washington county, where he purchased 300 acres of wild land (the same at his death being divided between his sons), on which he erected a log cabin wherein were born nearly all his children—five sons and two daughters—of whom the following is a brief record: William settled in West Newton, Penn., and died there; Mary married George Ferry, and they settled in East Liberty, Allegheny Co., Penn.; Sarah married William Hunter; Robert settled on the home farm (his descendants moved West); Moses died on his portion of the paternal estate; James late in life sold out his share in the homestead, and settled near Washington borough, on a farm where now stands the village of Linntown; Matthew is more particularly spoken of further on. The father of this family died at the age of eighty-four years. He was a member of the Seceder Church (of which Dr. Ramsey was the minister), and in politics he was an Old-school Democrat.

Matthew Linn was born in North Strabane township, Washington Co., Penn., in 1796, and when yet a young man was married to Sarah, daughter of Samuel Pollock, their children being James, Ellen (deceased), Mary (Mrs. James Bruce), Samuel, Martha (Mrs. Lee Crouch), Matthew (who died in the army), William, Jane (who married James Patterson, and they reside in Nottingham township, this county), Harriet (Mrs. Charles Pitman, living on the old homestead), and John P. (deceased). The parents died in Washington county; the father in 1870, the mother in 1876, and they are buried at Canonsburg; they were members of the U. P. Church. In politics Mr. Linn was a Democrat, and held various offices of trust in his township; in 1840 he was elected county commissioner, during the building of the courthouse; from the age of twenty-two years until his death he served as a justice of the peace; in 1854 he was elected a member of the State Legislature, serving one term, and for thirty-three years he was in the State militia, in which he held every rank, in rotation, up to general.

Samuel Linn received his education at the common schools of his district in North Strabane township, and on the home farm had a thorough, practical training to agricultural pursuits, which have been his life vocation, and in which he has met with gratifying success. On October 20, 1858, he was wedded to Ellen, daughter of James Harbison, of Allegheny county, Penn., and the names of the children born to this union are Sarah J. (at home), Nettie and Mattie (twins, the former of whom is yet living at home, the latter married to James Wylie Vashinder), Nannie (deceased), J. Bruce, Clark, Mary (married to A. D. Weller, of Canonsburg) and Thomas B. Mr. Linn was formerly an adherent of the Seceder Church, and is now a member of the Chartiers Hill Presbyterian Church. In his political associations he is a Democrat.

HERVEY McMURRAY. Among the most prominent residents of Peters township, this name is an honored one. James McMurray was a native of County Donegal, Ireland, and when a young man sailed to America. He first located near Irishtown, Allegheny county, Penn., and there followed agricultural pursuits. Soon after arriving in this country he married Isabelle Valentine, a native of the Emerald Isle who had come across the ocean in early youth. The young people settled on a farm in Allegheny county, Penn., where the following children were born to them: James, Jane, John, William, Nancy (wife of Paul Black, of Aledo, Ill.), Margaret (living on the home farm with her brother Hervey), Esther, Mary A., Archie (a farmer in Allegheny county), Andrew, Hervey, Edward, an infant son, and an infant daughter. Of this family James, Jane, William, Esther, Mary A., Andrew, and the youngest two are deceased.

Hervey McMurray, whose name introduces this biography, was born May 3, 1829, on the old farm in Allegheny county, Penn. His father died when Hervey was a lad of fifteen years, and the care of the family fell upon his youthful shoulders. But with the indomitable spirit so characteristic of his race, young McMurray cheerfully accepted the burden, and passed his youth and early manhood in supporting the family. On December 13, 1855, he was united in marriage with Emily, daughter of John Mouck, a prominent farmer of Washington county, Penn. Mr. McMurray had received $600 from his father's estate, and after his marriage located on his present farm in Peters township. He then invested his capital in a flock of sheep, having usually four or five hundred on the place. His property consists of 280 acres of land, an excellent roller-process mill (known as McMurray's mills), a fine dwelling and store-room in Beltzhoover borough (a suburban town of Pittsburgh), and an interest in the store-room at Hill's Station. In politics he has ever been a staunch member of the Democratic party, but has invariably declined nominations for official positions. However, he was instrumental in having a postoffice established at McMurray's Mills, and was the first postmaster, which office is yet filled by members of the family. Mr. and Mrs. McMurray are the parents of nine children, viz.: J. Henry, John A., Mary B., Margaret J., William J., Emma L., Caroline, Hervey B. and Charles R.

MRS. NANCY POWELL was born in 1829, in West Pike Run township, Washington Co., Penn., a daughter of John Deems, whose father, also named John, was a native of this county. John Deems, Jr., was born and reared on the home farm in West Pike Run township, where he grew to manhood. He was married to Jane, daughter of Abraham Greene, a native of York county, Penn., and who moved to Washington county many years ago, where he died. John and Jane (Greene) Deems reared the following children: John (living in Iowa), George, Mark, Uriah, Reason, Susau, Polly, Betsey, Martha J., and Nancy, whose name opens this sketch. Of this family but two are yet living, John and Nancy. The father died in 1833 (when Nancy was four years of age), and the mother several years later, at the age of seventy years. She was a member of the Baptist Church; in politics he was a Republican.

Nancy Deems was reared on the home place, and in 1848 was married to Edward Yorty, a native of this county, who followed farming. To this union were born three children, namely: Martha J., wife of James Harrison, a farmer of Harrison county, W. Va.; Nancy, married to John Robison, a grocer of Brownsville, Fayette Co., Penn.; and Clay, deceased. The father was a Republican in politics. He died in 1858, and in 1862 Mrs. Yorty was married to Joseph Powell, also a native-born agriculturist of Washington county. He died in 1881, since which time his widow has continued to reside on the home place, consisting of 114 acres of well-cultivated land, equipped with a good residence, barn and outbuildings. After the death of her husband the farm was for several years conducted by Clay Yorty, a son of Mrs. Powell.

Clay Yorty always resided on the home place. When a young man he was married to Catherine Hill, who bore him six children, namely: Robert G., born in 1875; Solomon, born in 1877; Nancy, born in 1880; Grace, born in 1882; Blanche, born in 1884; and one deceased in infancy. The mother died July 2, 1881, at the age of thirty-three years, followed by the father in 1891, who passed away in his forty-ninth year. In politics he was a Republican, and was a member of the Masonic Fraternity at Beallsville. Since the death of this son Mrs. Powell has cared for his children, who are living with her on the home farm.

JOHAN WILEY DAY. In every vocation of life there are those who by dint of "brain and brawn" have pushed through the ranks of the many and taken positions with the few. To the man who without the aid of noble birth or bequeathed fortune succeeds in rising to this place among his fellows much credit is due, and the story of such lives cannot be other than beneficial to the struggling youth of the rising generation. Among this class our subject finds a graceful position.

J. Wiley Day is a descendant of an Englishman by the name of George Day, who emigrated from England to the United States in the seventeenth century. He resided for a time in Connecticut, but later made a permanent settlement at Newark, N. J., where the descendants became quite numerous. The subject of this sketch is more immediately descended from one Samuel Day, who emigrated from Morristown, N. J., near the middle of the eighteenth century, and settled in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn., on North Ten-Mile creek, northwest of the village of Prosperity, on a farm now owned by J. Miller Day. His will bears the date of November 27, 1793, probated in 1796; he had four sons and one daughter, viz.: Daniel, Samuel, Joseph, Benjamin and Joanna. Of these, Daniel remained on the land bequeathed to him by his father, now owned by J. M. Day; Samuel emigrated to Belmont county, Ohio, where the name of Day is quite common; Joseph also settled on land bequeathed to him by his father in Morris township; Benjamin emigrated in 1812 to the northern part of Ohio, near the city of Cleveland, where he purchased a large body of land, upon a part of which the city has since grown, consequently becoming quite wealthy. Daniel Day died in 1811. He had six sons: Colvin, William, John, Stephen, Samuel and Cephas—and three daughters: Abigail, Nelly and Electy.

Samuel Day married Hannah Cooper, who was born November 17, 1798, a daughter of Zebulon Cooper, of Morris township. The Cooper family, which is an old one in this county, came to Pennsylvania from Sag Harbor, Long Island. To the union of Samuel and Hannah (Cooper) Day came eight children: Maria, born February 27, 1820, died in Morris township, September 11, 1861; Elmus, born November 23, 1821, now a farmer in Muscatine county, Iowa; Emeline, born March 5, 1824, died September 4, 1883; Josiah, born July 13, 1827, is now living in Muscatine county, Iowa; Cephas, born April 6, 1830, died May 20, 1845; Samuel A., born February 25, 1835, is now a resident of Philadelphia; J. Wiley and Ann Eliza (twins), born December 15, 1837 (Ann Eliza died August 11, 1845). The father of this family died December 18, 1870, and the mother passed away September 6, 1878.

The Day family are represented in various occupations, and valued for their integrity and public-spiritedness. John Wiley Day, though not afforded an opportunity for a finished education, is a man who has kept well up with the times, and is conversant with all matters pertaining to the public. He was a candidate on the Democratic ticket for State Representative in the fall of 1890, and, though defeated, his popularity is evinced by the fact that he reduced the Republican majority from 1,000 to 123. In 1863 Mr. Day married Caroline C., daughter of Joseph Dunn, of Morris township, Greene Co., Penn., and of this union were born four children: Samuel Cassius, Anna B., Joseph E. and Lizzie H. Their mother died in 1874, and in 1876 Mr. Day married Maria E., daughter of Thomas Horton, of East Bethlehem township, to which union two children have been born: Bessie Ora and John W. This wife died July 5, 1890. Mr. Day is giving his children the educational advantages afforded in the schools of that section, as they arrive at the age at which they appreciate it. He is an active member of and an elder in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

BUTLER HUGGINS, prominent in the agricultural community, is a son of Jacob Huggins, a farmer, who was born in 1790, in Greene county, Penn., and in early life was married to Margaret Campbell. She was born in 1792, in Adams county, Ohio, and became the mother of eight children, of whom but three are now living, viz.: Butler, William P. and Agnes (Mrs. George). Four sons of this family took part in the Civil war, Butler remaining at home to care for the rest. James enlisted in the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth P. V. I. The mother passed away in 1863, having met with an accident, breaking a limb, which resulted in her death; the father died in 1868.

Butler Huggins was born April 17, 1820, in Ross township, Allegheny county, Penn. He attended the schools of Butler county, that State, for ten months, and then served an apprenticeship at blacksmithing, a trade he followed twenty years. On August 21, 1846, he was married to Sarah Harger, of Allegheny county, Penn., and four children were born to them, viz.: Holmes (married); Emily (wife of E. C. Fulton); Myra (married to William McClure); and John (deceased). The mother of these died September 21, 1853, and May 30, 1855. Mr. Huggins married Miss Mary Ann Leslie, a distant relative of Frank Leslie, also a cousin of W. O. Leslie, the noted lawyer of Pittsburgh, Penn. Mr. Huggins began life a penniless boy, but by dint of tireless industry and perseverance has risen to his present enviable position. He was a dealer in all kinds of live stock, and of late years he has dealt extensively in horses, which business he is now following in connection with farming. Mr. Butler Huggins, it may here be said, is considered to be as good a judge of horses as can be found in the Keystone State, and it has often been remarked of him that "he could see more about a horse by walking around him once, than most men could by looking at the animal all day." He owns 140 acres of fine land in Greene county, and the home farm in this county, also containing 140 acres, including an undeveloped oil well. A Republican in politics, he has served his township as justice of the peace, judge of election and road commissioner, filling each office with credit to himself, and the entire satisfaction of his constituents.

MISS MARTHA D. TWEED is a representative of another well-known family who are prominently identified with the organization, growth and development of Washington county. Samuel Tweed and his wife, Jane (Anderson) Tweed, were natives of Ireland, coming to America at a very early date, probably prior to the Revolution. They first settled east of the mountains, afterward moving to Washington county, and locating near Buffalo village. Their children were John, Robert, William, Samuel, Griselda and Annie.

Robert Tweed (father of subject) was first married in 1801 to Elizabeth Wylie, a sister of Adam Wylie, M. D., and Rev. William Wylie, D. D. Of the children born to this union, six grew to maturity, viz.: John, Eliza, Griselda, Nancy, Margaret and Mary. After the death of his first wife September 3, 1820, Robert, was married October 11, 1821, to Mary Work, daughter of George and Martha (Dunlap) Work. By this marriage there were four children, namely: Martha D., Jane, Ann and Samuel. Robert Tweed succeeded in rearing his large family, and gave each a fair practical education. He was a man of domestic tastes, devoting little attention to political affairs. In religion he and his wife were members of the Upper

Brother Huggins

Buffalo Presbyterian Church, and endeavored to bring up their children in accordance with its teachings. He died April 26, 1828, aged fifty-five years. His widow passed away at the advanced age of over eighty years, July 22, 1869.

She was a woman of much more than ordinary intelligence and business sagacity, and managed the farm successfully many years after the death of her husband. At the same time she found time to inform herself upon all subjects of general interest, and especially the history and doctrines of the Church. She was recognized as one of the best informed Bible scholars in the Church of which she was a member.

George Work came to Hopewell township in 1802, and bought of Mr. Tweed 100 acres of land adjoining Buffalo village. In early life he was married to Margaret Dunlap, and five children were born to them: James, Alexander, John, Jane and Mary.

Of the children born to Robert and Mary (Work) Tweed, Jane Tweed was married to Thomas Ralston, and only one of her children, William (residing in West Middletown), is now living; Ann Tweed was married to John McCully, and removed to Smithfield, Ohio, where her six children are now residing; Martha D. and Samuel were never married, and after the death of their parents they took charge of the estate, living on the old homestead. Samuel died October 10, 1891, aged sixty-six years, and Miss Martha Tweed is now the last representative of the family name in this county.

MRS. NANCY C. ROLLSTIN, one of the most popular and intelligent ladies of Buffalo township, was born in Guernsey county, Ohio, January 8, 1829. She is the daughter of John and Jane (McGuffin) Adams.

John Adams was a native of Ireland, who came to America when eighteen years old. He first located in Washington county, Penn., where he spent several years as a farm hand. Removing to Guernsey county, Ohio, he invested his savings in land, and prepared a rude home in the wilderness. The humble "cage" being prepared, he returned to Washington county to secure the bird, and three months later brought his bride, Miss Jane McGuffin, to the pioneer cabin. Together the young couple began to build their home, and here were born to them the following eight children: Thomas, Elizabeth, Nancy C., Mary J., Margaret, Ann, William P. and Rebecca E. Of these children, Thomas, Elizabeth and Margaret are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Adams passed the remainder of their days on the old farm, where the first years of their married life were spent, and where their youngest son, William P., still resides. In religion, they were Covenanters of the Old School, and the religious training of the family was that strict type, characteristic of the denomination.

Nancy C. Adams, the subject proper of this sketch, was first married October 23, 1849, to James McKeown, whose parents emigrated from the Province of Munster, Ireland, when he was one year old, or in 1824. In the spring of 1850, the young couple located in Harrison county, Ohio, with buoyant spirits and bright prospects for the future; but, alas! how little we know of what the future has in store for us. Only three short months had passed since beginning housekeeping, when on June 29, 1850, Mr. McKeown, in assisting in tearing down a frame barn, received injuries from a fall which caused his death, July 7, 1850. Mrs. McKeown now returned to the home of her parents, where her son James A. was born January 9, 1851, and where she continued to make her home until April, 1858, when she was again married; this time to John Rollstin, a son of James Rollstin, of Buffalo township.

James Rollstin was born in Ireland in 1785, and emigrated to this country when quite young. He was united in marriage with Miss Nancy McGuffin March 29, 1810, and to them were born five sons and eight daughters: William, John, Joseph, Elizabeth, Esther, Rebecca, Jane, Nancy, Martha, Margaret, James, Porter and Rachel. Of these, only three are now living: Esther (Mrs. Knox, of Claysville), Martha (Mrs. McDowell, of Iowa), and Rachel (Mrs. Woods, of Iowa).

John Rollstin was born December 18, 1812, in Buffalo township, and was reared on the farm, receiving a common-school education. His first wife was Eliza Finley, of East Finley township, and to them were born two daughters: Nancy J., born in 1844, and Mattie E., in 1847. Nancy J. married John Allender, and is now deceased; Mattie E. married E. H. Stringham, of Ringgold county, Iowa, where she now resides. The mother died in 1856, and Mr. Rollstin afterward married Nancy (Adams) McKeown. The children born of this union were: Lizzie J., June 4, 1859, and Anna R., May 31, 1861. Lizzie J. was married to R. J. McCleery, of West Finley township, in the fall of 1883. She died January 16, 1888. Anna R. was married to W. H. Craig in the spring of 1887. Mr. Craig died August 9, 1891, since which time Anna has made her home with her mother.

Politically, John Rollstin was a Republican, an active supporter of his party, and in religion a devout and consistent member of the U. P. Church. Mrs. Rollstin is also a member of the U. P. Church of Claysville, and enjoys the respect of all who know her. By the death of John Rollstin, which occurred April 6, 1864, Mrs. R. was again left a widow. Assuming the management of the farm, her business capacity and thrift enabled her not only to support herself and family, besides hiring the labor done, but to lay something by for a "rainy day."

Her son, J. A. McKeown, was a teacher in the public schools for eighteen winters. In the fall of 1877 he was united in marriage with Lizzie J., daughter of A. K. Craig. Three children were born to them, all of whom are deceased. Mrs. McKeown died December 2, 1884. Mr. McKeown selected, as his second wife, Ethelind Brimmer, of Burgettstown, with whom he was united in marriage August 29, 1888. They have one son, Clark B., now living. A daughter, Mary L., died June 22, 1891, aged thirteen months. Mr. McKeown is a justly popular young man, winning many friends by his recognized ability and genial courtesy of manner. He successfully manages his mother's farm, which consists of 100 acres of good land lying south of the National pike, in Buffalo township, as well as eighty acres of his own in East Finley township, two miles south of the home farm, and also devotes much attention to stock raising. Politically, he is a straight Republican, and is now serving his second term as county auditor, a position for which he is well qualified, both by natural inclination and intellectual training.

ROBERT McKEAN, a successful business man of Charleroi, is a son of William McKean, who was born and reared in Kirkeudbrightshire, Scotland.

William McKean received his early education in the country schools of his native land, and was there married to Mary, daughter of William Brown, whose family had been natives of Kirkeudbrightshire for over two hundred years. Mr. and Mrs. McKean passed their lives on the home farm in Scotland, where the following children were born to them, and reared: John, a sea captain, who was lost in a wreck in 1837; Mary, wife of Alexander Magill; William, a farmer of Mansfield, Penn.; James, a merchant tailor in Canada Corners, Mich.; Joseph, living on the old home place in Scotland; Elizabeth, deceased in youth; Andrew, living in Scotland; Robert, and Samuel, the last named residing in Fayette county, Penn. The father was a member of the Established Church of Scotland.

Robert McKean was born March 7, 1827, on the home place in Kirkeudbrightshire, Scotland, and in boyhood attended the schools of his native parish, assisting also in the duties of the farm. On January 1, 1849, he married Janet Caird, who was born at New Abbey, Scotland, a daughter of James Caird, a native and merchant of the same place, and a member of the Established Church. The children of Mr and Mrs. Caird were born as follows: Janet, wife of Robert McKean; John; Barbara, wife of Andrew Irving; Agnes, married to a Mr. Thompson; James; William; Mary, and two whose names are unknown. Mr. and Mrs. McKean resided on a farm near New Abbey for about one year after their marriage, then set sail for America. After a voyage of thirty days they landed in New York, in July, 1850; thence proceeded to Newburgh, where they spent a few months, going from there by rail to Johnstown, finally arriving in Allegheny City. In 1850 he worked for four months for seventy-five cents a day, and then moved to a place about six miles out, on the Steubenville pike, on Chartiers creek, where he followed gardening about six years. He then passed seven years at Mansfield, farming and gardening on a place near that town. In 1865 he purchased and moved on 220 acres at Lock No. 4 (now Charleroi), Washington Co., Penn., having paid for this land with the proceeds of years of hard labor. Politically he is actively identified with the interests of the Republican party, and in religion he and his family are members of the U. P. Church. He gives liberally of his means to all worthy enterprises. His children have been as follows: James, postmaster at Pittsburgh; William, who died in youth; John C. (postmaster), William, Andrew, Agnes, Robert and Mary (wife of C. F. Thompson). Miss Agnes McKean was the first postmistress at Charleroi and also the first telegraph operator, receiving and sending the first message received or sent from Charleroi. The mother of these children died in April, 1890.

JUDGE ABRAHAM WOTRING (deceased) was a prominent gentleman of Washington county, and a representative of an old pioneer family. His father, Abraham Wotring, was a descendant of French Huguenots, who sailed from France in the days of religious persecution, to find a home where they might worship God according to the dictates of conscience only, and in free America they found the object of their quest. He was born in York county, Penn., from whence he removed to Hagerstown, Md., and there purchased a large tract of land upon which he lived for some years. He then located in Washington county, Penn., on a part of the present site of Washington borough, some time later moving to the home farm now occupied by his descendants. He erected a mill and store-room, built an addition to the house, and opened a milling business in connection with conducting the store and farm. Mr. Wotring entered the Revolutionary war at the beginning of the conflict, serving until the close. In politics he was a very influential Democrat. One son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Wotring, Abraham.

Abraham Wotring was born in 1804 in Maryland, coming to Washington county, Penn., when but ten years of age. He assisted his father in the extensive business which he conducted, and in 1824 was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Jonathan Rahauser, one of the first ministers of the German R-formed Church, of Hagerstown, Md. Some years after the marriage of her daughter, Mrs. Rahauser, being a widow, removed with her family to Washington county, Penn., bringing with them one of the first pianos ever brought over the mountains. People came from many miles around to hear the wonderful music, and see the unusual curiosity which is yet in the possession of the family. Mr. Wotring inherited the land and extensive business owned by his father, who died soon after the marriage of the former. Mr. Wotring sold the greater portion of the land, reserving about 250 acres of the best to his own use, and continuing to conduct the mill and store. To Abraham and Elizabeth (Rahauser) Wotring were born the following children: Mary (Mrs. Pointexter, of Pittsburgh, Penn.), Abraham (living at home), Jonathan (a physician of Newark, Ohio), Katherine (Mrs. Howard, of Allegheny), Elizabeth (living on the home farm), Amelia (also residing at home), Frederick (a minister of Rawlins, Wyoming), Rosanna (Mrs. Clark, of Washington, D. C.), Francis L. (living on the home place), Dr. Louisa Lyle (of Cincinnati, Ohio) and Cornelia (Mrs. Conger, of Clinton, Iowa).

After conducting the mill for a number of years Mr. Wotring closed it, and dividing it into rooms, opened an academy which flourished for some time. In politics he was originally a Democrat, but afterward joined the Republican party. He served as postmaster for some time, was justice of the peace for several years, and was twice elected associate judge of Washington county. He was a leading citizen, being called upon for advice and counsel in many important matters. In religious faith he was a member and trustee of the Presbyterian Church at Buffalo, this county. He died in 1874.

PARKER S. SPHAR. The Sphar family have been identified with the history of Washington county for many years. Mattern Sphar was born in Switzerland, and, in company with two brothers and one sister, immigrated to America about 1760, at the age of seventeen years. He first settled in Williamsburgh, Va., and on April 21, 1767, took the oath of allegiance under Queen Anne. He was there married to Margaret Shively, and in 1780 came to Washington county, Penn., and purchased of one Col. Cooke 200 acres on the Monongahela river, in what is now Washington county. He took an active part in the Whisky Insurrection, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He died about 1822, leaving three children, namely: John, Mattern (who moved to Adams county, Ohio, thence to Indiana), and Henry (who lived in this county).

John Sphar was born in 1777, in Loudoun county, Va., and when but three years of age came with his parents to Washington county, Penn. He received a subscription-school education in Allen township, and when a young man was married to Susanna Redd, a native of Washington county. They settled on a farm in Allen township, and reared the following children: Mary, wife of John Shively, Guernsey county, Ohio; Jacob, who was first married to Susanna Wood, and after her death to Charlotte Wilson; Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Dunlevy; Daniel, who married Mary Speer, and lived in Kentucky; Ann, wife of William Sphar, of Indiana; Barbara, wife of William Hollingshead; Mattern, married to Margaret Coyle, of Ohio; Sarah, widow of Joseph Beazell, of Allen township; Rachel, married to Robert Gailey, of Clarion county, Penn.; John, who married Lucy Ann Scott, and Henry. Of this family three are yet living, viz.: Sarah, John and Henry. The father voted first with the Whig, afterward with the Republican party, and served as supervisor of the township. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church. He died in 1856, having been preceded by his wife in 1852.

John Sphar was born February 26, 1817, on the old place in Allen township, Washington county. In 1839 he was united in marriage with Lucy Ann Scott, daughter of Parker and Sarah (Carson) Scott, all of whom were natives of Fallowfield township. Her parents had twelve daughters, of whom Mrs. Sphar is the only one yet living. Mr. Sphar owns seventy-five acres of the old homestead, where he has followed general farming. He cast a vote for William Henry Harrison, and since the organization of the Republican party has been one of its most earnest supporters, and has served as a member of the school board and also as supervisor. He is no less interested in religious than in political movements, having been licensed as an exhorter and class-leader in the Ebenezer M. E. Church, with which his wife is also identified. Mr. and Mrs. John Sphar have had children as follows: Sarah, wife of William Rodgers, of Fallowfield township; Parker S.; Henry, married to a Miss McElhaney, of Armstrong county, Penn.; James, who died in his twenty-sixth year; John E., living in Allen township; Ann, widow of Ephraim McKee; Gertrude, married to J. H. Redd, and Wesley, deceased at the age of nineteen years.

Parker S. Sphar was born April 9, 1842, in Allen township, Washington county, and was reared to manhood on the home place. On September 18, 1862, he was united in marriage with Sarah R.

Dunlevy, a native of Allen township, and daughter of Andrew Dunlevy. After his marriage Parker S. Sphar located on ninety-six acres of land in Allen township, containing a good stone quarry adjoining Charleroi. He does an extensive business in building stone, besides general farming. In political opinion he is a Republican, and in religion he and his wife are members of the Ebenezer M. E. Church. Their children are Cora D., wife of Ellsworth Reidd, of Fallowfield township; William A., married to Maggie Williams, of Fallowfield township; Andrew and James.

THOMAS RAMSEY, a prosperous and prominent agriculturist of Hanover township, is a grandson of Robert Ramsey, who was born in Maryland and there married to Mary Mitchell. Several years before the close of the eighteenth century, with his wife, family and few earthly possessions, he made the long and tedious journey over the mountains, locating on Peters creek, in Washington county, Penn. In 1799 they settled in Hanover township, on the farm which is the present home of their grandson, Thomas. Here they resided during the rest of their lives, and became prosperous. In politics Mr. Ramsey was a staunch Democrat; he was one of the founders of the Seceder Congregation at Kings Creek, of which he was an earnest member and an elder. Six sons and nine daughters were born to these pioneers, of whom the youngest died at the age of thirty-seven years, the first of the children to pass away. All were married excepting Nancy, who died in 1827. The eldest son, James, became a Doctor of Divinity in the Canonsburg Theological Seminary, and for forty years was pastor of the Seceder Church in Canonsburg.

Mitchell Ramsey, who was the thirteenth child and youngest son of Robert and Mary (Mitchell) Ramsey, was born in 1797 on Peters creek, Washington county, being but two years of age when his parents came to Hanover township, where he grew to manhood. In 1818 he was married to Anna George, who was born about 1799, near Venice, on Miller's run, in Washington county, Penn. Her father, Robert George, came from Ireland, and her mother was of German descent. The children of Mitchell and Anna Ramsey were as follows: Robert G. (living in Carroll county, Ohio), James (who died in Carroll county, Ohio), Thomas (whose name opens this sketch), Mary (widow of James McGinnis, of Monroe county, Iowa), Christina (Mrs. Alexander George, living in Jefferson county, Ohio), William M. (a blacksmith of Hanover township) and Ann Eliza (wife of W. T. Arnold, of Hanover township). The parents always lived on the old place, where the father followed farming. He was a prominent member of the Democratic party, and held all the offices of the township. He died April 17, 1857, and was buried in Kings Creek cemetery; his widow passed away September 5, 1882, and was laid to rest in Frankfort cemetery. He was a member and elder of the Kings Creek U. P. Church, was a leading farmer, and took an active interest in all measures tending to the public good, being recognized as a most useful, able and progressive citizen.

Thomas Ramsey was born January 22, 1823, on the farm which he yet owns, and the house where he was born is standing as a relic of olden times. He attended the old-fashioned schools of the community, and worked on his father's farm during boyhood. On November 6, 1861, he was married to Jane Slater, a native of Allegheny county, Penn., and daughter of John and Margaret (George) Slater. This wife died August 3, 1864, and was buried in Frankfort cemetery. She left one child, Georgetta, who was but twenty-three days old when her mother died, and is yet living at home. For his second wife Thomas Ramsey married Nannie (Hood) Ackleson, widow of Samuel Ackleson. To this union were born three children, viz.: a son deceased in infancy; Margaret (who died when three months old); and James P. (deceased when two years of age). The mother died December 19, 1874, and was buried in Frankfort cemetery. After the death of his father, Thomas Ramsey paid off the claims of the other heirs, and took entire charge of the home farm where he is now living. Farming has been his principal vocation. In politics he has been independent, and has held several offices in Hanover township at the wish of his friends. For thirty-five years he has been a leading member and elder in Kings Creek U. P. Congregation. At the age of sixteen he was a member of the Frankfort Congregation.

MARSHAL MATHEWS is descended from a pioneer family of Washington county, Penn. His grandfather, Paul Mathews, married Jane McCorkle, a native of Washington county, and purchased an unimproved farm in Peters township. Their children were James, Robert, Margaret (wife of James Hultz), Paul, Jane (Mrs. Isaac Weaver) and Sarah (wife of James Rigland). The father was a Democrat in politics, and in religion a member of the Seceder Church.

James Mathews was born and reared on the home farm in Peters township, this county, where he followed farming and stock raising. When a young man he was married to Margaret, daughter of John Bowers, of Peters township, and she bore him five children, viz.: Mary J. (wife of Francis Kerr, deceased), Marshal, John B., Margaret A.

Thos Ramsay

(Mrs. A. J. Kelly), and David (deceased). Mr. Mathews was a leading politician in the Democratic party.

Marshal Mathews was born November 26, 1831, in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., and received a very limited education, as he was obliged to assist on the farm a great deal. At the age of seventeen years he was apprenticed to John E. Bell, a harness and saddle maker of Canonsburg, with whom he remained four years, and then conducted a shop at Dunningville, Penn., for two years, when he removed to his present place of business in Canonsburg. On January 16, 1856, he was united in marriage with Helen P., daughter of John Haggerty, of Canonsburg, and they have had two daughters: Mary A. (wife of Samuel C. McNary) and Isabelle B. Mrs. Mathews died September 1, 1883. Mr. Mathews has won success by earnest, untiring effort, and well deserves his reputation as a successful and representative business man. He affiliates with the Democratic party, and has held various local offices. From the time of its organization he has been a member and deacon of the Central Presbyterian Church at Canonsburg, this county.

DEMAS LINDLEY McVAY, an energetic and prosperous farmer of Morris township, is a grandson of Samuel McVay, who moved from New Jersey to Morris township, Washington county, Penn., in an early day, becoming one of the pioneer settlers of the State.

Franklin McVay, son of Samuel, was born on his father's farm in Morris township, and like his father became a successful farmer. He married Priscilla, a daughter of Luther Day, of Morris township, who was also descended from a pioneer family that had moved from New Jersey, and who were among the first to secure excellent land in Washington county. Franklin and Priscilla McVay had four children: Demas Lindley; Elmas D., who was a farmer in Morris township, and died in 1868; Samuel B., a farmer of Morris township, and Franklin Wallace, a cabinet-maker and undertaker, of Jefferson, Greene Co., Penn., who died in 1882.

Demas Lindley McVay was born January 13, 1844, in Morris township, Washington Co., Penn. When he was but ten years of age his father died, and he and his mother struggled bravely on, enduring many hardships, but, nevertheless, they succeeded in keeping the fatherless family together until they were able to care for themselves. On September 24, 1869, Mr. McVay was united in marriage with Mary E., daughter of Thomas Hanna, of Morris township, whose family were also pioneer settlers of that township, and natives of New Jersey. To this union have been born five children:

two that died in infancy; Lee Anna J. and Priscilla D., living with their parents; and T. Franklin, who assists his father in the farm work. Mr. McVay resides on the place known as the "Old Hanna farm," the property of his father-in-law, but he owns a well-improved farm, situated one mile below Prosperity, this county, on Ten-Mile creek. He is a prominent stock-raiser, and gives considerable attention to the breeding and raising of Shorthorn cattle and Blacktop sheep. An uncle of his, Samuel McVay, was appointed administrator of the estate of another uncle, named Nelson, and upon the death of the former, D. L. McVay, together with J. M. Dunn, was appointed administrator, and upon them devolved the duty of settling up the estate, consisting of $20,000 to $25,000 worth of property. The lands, located near Prosperity, this county, had been in the possession of the McVay family over sixty years. Mr. McVay enlisted in the war of the Rebellion, August 18, 1862, in Company I, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, served until the end of the war, and now draws a small pension. He resided in Franklin township eleven years after his marriage. Contrary to the political opinions of his ancestors, he has always been a straight Republican, and he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he is a deacon.

J. Nelson McVay, an uncle of Demas L., was a native of Morris township, where he passed his entire life, and was an extensive landowner. He was a lifelong Democrat, and was never married. A man of perfect physical strength, he knew nothing of sickness, until called to cross the dark river at an advanced age.

Samuel McVay, another bachelor uncle of our subject, was also a native of Morris township, this county, and always remained near the place of his birth. He was a strict business man, and took an active interest in educational matters, serving as secretary of the school board of Morris township for several years.

LEWIS PERSHING, who in his lifetime was a progressive and prosperous agriculturist, received a good education in the common schools of the neighborhood of his place of birth, and afterward became well-read in history, Scripture and standard literature.

In October, 1851, he was united in marriage with Julia Ann Harris, daughter of Joseph and Martha Harris, and three children were born to them, of whom but one is now living—Frances, who was born January 5, 1857. Mr. Pershing was a very successful business man. In politics he was a Democrat, but voted for men whose principles he considered were above reproach, rather than for party candidates, and he held several township offices; in religious faith he belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died April 22, 1888, and the following obituary appeared at the time in a Washington paper: "Lewis F. Pershing, an aged and highly-respected citizen of Amwell township, died in his seventy-third year. He had been engaged in farming for a great many years. He leaves a widow and one daughter. He was a cousin of Judge Cyrus L. Pershing, of Schuylkill county, Penn. The deceased was a kind husband and indulgent father."

Mrs. Pershing is a representative of a family eminent in Church and State. Her brother, John Harris, graduated from Washington and Jefferson College, and then removed to Georgia, where he has for many years represented that State in Congress. She is a cousin of Bishop Harris.

HARRISON LEYDA, butcher, was born November 15, 1843, in Somerset township, Washington county, Penn. He is a son of Henry Leyda, whose parents were natives of eastern Pennsylvania, and came to Washington county with the earliest pioneer settlers, part of the journey having been made on horseback. The country was then wild and full of danger to the inexperienced traveler, but with undaunted courage Mr. and Mrs. Leyda began their humble home in Washington county, and success finally rewarded their patient toil. In their pioneer cabin the following children were born and reared: James, George, Henry and Jacob. The father affiliated with the Whig party, and in religious faith was one of the earliest members of the Presbyterian Church. He died on the farm where he first settled.

Henry Leyda was born in Somerset township, Washington county, Penn., and was early taught the fundamental principles of business success, "constant toil and close economy." By following this rule he eventually became a most successful agriculturist, dealing very extensively in stock. He gave especial attention to raising sheep and cattle, shipping large numbers to eastern markets. In political matters he voted first with the Whig party and afterward with the Republican. When a young man he was married to Catherine Myers, of Somerset township, who bore him children as follows: one deceased in infancy, Harriet (wife of Harvey Wilson), Hannah (married to Albert Harris), Amanda, Emma (wife of Anderson Whitman), Lizzie (wife of Thomas Collins), Harrison, William and James.

Harrison Leyda passed his youth in assisting with the duties of the farm, and October 10, 1867, he married Easter A., daughter of Daniel Swickard. Her father, who is a prosperous shoe merchant of Monongahela City, was born November 26, 1816, in Somerset township, Washington county, Penn., a son of John Swickard and grandson of Martin Swickard, who was born and reared in eastern Pennsylvania. The last named came to Washington county among the early settlers, and, locating in a log cabin in Somerset township, assisted in clearing up and improving the land. He was twice married, and to the first union were born the following children: Matthias, Daniel, Samuel, John, Lucy and Sarah. Mr. Swickard, in 1805, moved to Jefferson county, Ohio, where he remained until his death. In political opinion he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Lutheran Church.

John Swickard was born in 1783, in Somerset township, Washington county, Penn., and passed his youth on the home place. When a young man he married Mary, daughter of John Smith, and the young couple continued to reside on the home place, where children were born to them as follows: Catherine, John, Samuel, Daniel, Mary, Barbara, Susan and Margaret. The father was a lifelong agriculturist, and a noted hunter and sportsman; in politics he voted with the Democratic party. The clothing for the family was made from wool carded by hand and woven by his wife; she died several years ago, and was buried in the Lutheran cemetery, where her husband has been laid to rest. They were both members of the Lutheran Church. Daniel Swickard was educated at the subscription schools of Somerset township, his text books being limited to the Testament and United States Speller, while the log schoolhouse was furnished in the usual primitive fashion of the day. In 1810 he was married to Harriet, daughter of Abram Leyda (a native of Nottingham township), who has borne him the following children: John, living in Colorado; Mary E., wife of Daniel Berry; Easter A., Mrs. Harrison Leyda; Daniel, deceased; James L., living in Meadville, Penn.; A. Y. and David M. Mr. and Mrs. Swickard resided on the home place for twenty years after their marriage, when he purchased the Leyda mill in Nottingham township, conducting that enterprise for thirteen years, but continuing to own the home place. In 1855 he opened a grocery store in Monongahela City, but five years afterward sold out, purchasing a furniture and undertaking establishment, which he kept for thirteen years. At the expiration of that time he opened the shoe store, where he is now carrying on a profitable business. He is a representative citizen, and a staunch supporter of the Democratic party; he has served in numerous capacities, and in 1855 was elected a county commissioner, which office he held three years. In religious faith he is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

After their marriage Harrison and Easter A. (Swickard) Leyda resided in Somerset township for a few years, then came to Monongahela City, where he opened his present butchering establishment. He conducts an extensive business, yielding a large annual profit. In politics he is a leading member of the Republican party. His children are Addie, Frank, Fannie, Bert, Edgar J., Annie and Harry.

W G. THOMPSON, a prosperous farmer and stock raiser of Cecil township, is of Irish descent, and the youngest son of William Thompson, who was born in Ireland. The latter immigrated to America in early manhood, first locating in Pittsburgh, Allegheny Co., Penn., and married Miss Warden of that city, who bore him one child, Martha (deceased wife of Moses T. Glasgow, of Northwood, Ohio). This wife dying, Mr. Thompson married Margaret George, a native of Mt. Pleasant township, this county. They settled in Pittsburgh, Penn., where the father died in 1833, leaving the following children: Christina G. (wife of Thomas Slater, of Cecil township), H. A. (a banker, of Salineville, Ohio), R. G. (also in Salineville) and W. G. R. G. enlisted in the Sixty-third Regiment, O. V. I., remaining in the service about two years, when he received an honorable discharge. The parents were members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. After the death of her husband the mother married John Slater, settled in Allegheny county, Penn., and afterward in Cecil township, this county, where she died.

W. G. Thompson, youngest son of William and Margaret (George) Thompson, was born February 11, 1831, in Pittsburgh, Penn., where he lived until six years of age. When sixteen years old he began teaching, and continued the profession for many years in different schools in Allegheny county. He was principal of the Sharpsburg school for four years, and in 1858 moved to the farm in Cecil township, Washington county, which is now his home. On October 15, 1853, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage with Christina G., daughter of George and Jane (George) Robb, natives of Mt. Pleasant township, this county, both of whom are now deceased.

Mrs. Thompson died in 1870, in Cecil township, leaving five children: J. S. (a minister of the Reformed Presbyterian Church at Utica, Ohio, married to Jennie Slater), Etta H. (a teacher in the Indian Mission at Fort Sill, Ind. T.), Lizzie E. (living at home), George R. (also at home) and W. T. Knox (attending college at Beaver Falls, Penn.). Emma Jennie, the eldest in the family, died in 1870 at the age of fourteen years, just one week prior to the death of her mother. After the death of the mother Mr. Thompson was married, August 15, 1871, to Lizzie C. Shane, a native of Allegheny county, and daughter of Henry and Margaret (Musser) Shane, who were born near Noblestown, same county. Both are now deceased, and the mother was blind many years before her death. W. G. Thompson bought a partially improved farm in Cecil township, containing 111 acres, which he has cultivated to the highest extent, and on which he has erected a commodious house and barn, put out shade trees, and planted a good orchard. After coming to Washington county Mr. Thompson taught three winters in Cecil township, two winters at Venice, and one in the home district, but he has devoted his principal attention to agricultural pursuits. He and his wife are members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in Chartiers township, this county.

MRS. CATHERINE MCKEE. Hugh McKee (deceased) was a son of John and Mary (Seaborn) McKee, who were natives of eastern Pennsylvania and who moved many years ago to Westmoreland county, Penn., where they died. The father was a soldier of the Revolution, and also participated in the war of 1812. They were the parents of ten children.

Hugh McKee was born in 1800, in Chambersburg, Franklin Co., Penn., and coming with his parents to Westmoreland county, Penn., was there reared and educated. On January 29, 1829, he was united in marriage with Catherine Lutz, a native of eastern Pennsylvania, and daughter of Martin and Catherine (Cline) Lutz. Her parents were born in eastern Pennsylvania, and came to Westmoreland county in an early day. Mr. and Mrs. McKee resided on the home place until 1837, when they moved to Washington county, Penn., and in 1812 bought 150 acres of the "Dixon place," and sold fifty acres.

In politics Mr. Hugh McKee was actively identified with the Democratic party, and in religion he and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church. Their children were as follows: Margaret (wife of of Richard Ward, was born in 1832), John, Anna, Thomas, Mary (wife of John Dunlevy), Anna, (married to James Bailey), Sarah Jane (wife of Bartemus Dunlevy), Catherine, and Ephraim (who was married to Annie, daughter of John Sphar). The children of this family are all now deceased, and the father passed away January 3, 1886. Mrs. McKee, who is now the only living representative of the family, is living on the home farm in Allen township.

JAMES B. HAMILTON was born September 24, 1854, in Nottingham township, Washington county. He is a son of Henry Hamilton, who was born in 1816, in Nottingham township, and received his education in the schools of the home neighborhood. After leaving school

Henry learned the blacksmith's trade, and followed that vocation until 1869, when he began to carry mail from Bentleyville to Pittsburgh. He continued in this business four years, then followed huckstering along the river. In 1817 he was united in marriage with Margaret A. Morrow, who was born in 1828, in Allegheny county, Penn., and seven children were born to them, namely: Margaret (deceased), David, Carrie (Mrs. Nelson, deceased), James B., Alexander, Jane (Mrs. Smith), and William. The father of this family died June 21, 1886, and was followed by the mother on October 24, 1890.

James B. Hamilton attended the schools of the county, and learned afterward the blacksmith's trade of Henry Watson, in Houstonville. On November 6, 1881, he was married to Miss Minnie B., daughter of Simon C. Wolf, a prosperous blacksmith and ex-soldier of Washington county. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton have had born to them children as follows: Simon W., William Glen, Lulu M. and Paul. Mr. Hamilton has continued to follow his trade, and is a very successful business man.

MRS. ELIZABETH B. CALDWELL. This highly esteemed lady is the widow of George J. Caldwell, and daughter of Alexander Borland, whose father, Andrew Borland, a native of Ireland, immigrated to the United States at an early day. In 1824 he was united in marriage with Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander McClure, and children as follows were born to their union: Alexander, Mary E., Rebecca, Margaret A., Elizabeth, Sarah, Catherine, Andrew, Martha, Rachel and James, of whom Rebecca, Catherine, Martha and Rachel are now deceased. The father of this family followed farming during his manhood on the old Borland place, with the exception of about six years, and died in 1860, the mother passing away April 10, 1889.

Alexander Borland, eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Borland, was born December 10, 1825, on the farm in Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., where he grew to manhood. In early life he married Margaret Jane, daughter of James and Agnes Crawford, who were the parents of nine children, namely: William (deceased), Sarah, Andrew (living on the old homestead in Peters township), Tamar, Mary Ann, Agnes, Elizabeth, Margaret Jane (Mrs. Borland) and Priscilla: of whom Andrew and Margaret Jane are the only ones yet living. To the union of Alexander and Margaret Jane (Crawford) Borland the following children have been born: James Crawford, Elizabeth McClure (Mrs. Caldwell), Andrew Alexander, Mary Agnes and Elmer Ellsworth (the last named being deceased). In 1876 Alexander Borland purchased his present home of 113 acres in North Strabane township, all being under cultivation. In political opinion he votes with the Democratic party, and he has held various positions of trust in North Strabane township. In religious faith he is a member of the U. P. Church, and a ruling elder in the same.

On October 17, 1878, Elizabeth B. Borland was married to George J. Caldwell, a son of Joseph, and a grandson of William Caldwell. The latter was born in Ireland, where he was reared, and in an early day he emigrated to America, coming at once to Peters township, Washington Co., Penn., where he made a settlement and followed his trade, blacksmithing, in connection with farming. He married Jane Hazelett, and their children were Margaret, Ann, Jane, Elizabeth, Mary, Nancy, John, Robert, William and Joseph, all now deceased. He was an active man up to the time of his death, and a prosperous agriculturist, a member of the Centre Presbyterian Church, and in political faith a staunch Democrat.

Joseph Caldwell, son of William and Jane (Hazelett) Caldwell, was born and reared in Peters township, this county, and received a liberal education at the subscription schools. In March, 1840, he was united in marriage with Agnes, daughter of George Johnston, of Allegheny county, Penn., whose wife was Jane McMachen, their children being Robert, Agnes, Sarah J., Mary, Margaret, Catherine, Tamar and George. Mr. Johnston was a carpenter and builder, a major in the State militia, a Democrat of the old school, and a member of the Centre Presbyterian Church. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Caldwell settled on the home farm where he passed the remainder of his days, and where his widow is yet living. Their children were George J., Jennie (Mrs. S. N. Hopper), Lizzie (Mrs. Finley D. Brown), Annie M. (Mrs. William P. Hopper) and Ada. The father of this family passed from earth April 14, 1875. He was a self-made man, enterprising and highly-respected. As an agriculturist he had no superior, and he was a leading wool farmer in his township. In church connection he was a Presbyterian, a member of the Society at Centre, and his political leanings were of the solid Democratic type.

George Johnston Caldwell, son of Joseph and Agnes (Johnston) Caldwell, was born January 26, 1851, on the old farm in Peters township, where his widow is yet living. He assisted his father in farming until the death of the latter in 1875, when he, by his father's bequest, took entire charge of the farm. He was a staunch supporter of the principles embodied in the Democratic party, and for twenty-one years filled the office of school director. In religion he was a member of Centre Presbyterian Church, and taught the same class in Sunday-school fifteen years. As a farmer he had no superior; as a neighbor he was universally esteemed. His hand was ever open to the needy, and his heart to sympathize with the afflicted. His devotion to his family was untiring. By tireless energy he succeeded in paying off the rest of the heirs, and clearing the farm of that encumbrance, but the task proved too much for his bodily strength: consumption made inroads on his system, and despite the efforts of skilled physicians, his spirit winged its way to God on Sabbath morn, October 20, 1889, leaving the entire community to mourn his departure from among them. His widow and two sons—Joseph H., born August 9, 1879, and Alex. Borland, born September 23, 1881—still live on the farm containing about 200 acres of fertile land.

No family is more worthy of honorable mention, or has been more closely identified with the interests of Washington county, than that bearing the name of Caldwell.

E J. AGNEW is descended from a representative family of Washington county, and is a grandson of Samuel Agnew, who was born in eastern Pennsylvania, and there married to a Miss Elizabeth Johnston. In 1780 they left York county, Penn., locating in Washington county, where in 1785 he secured a patent for two tracts of land, each containing 400 acres, located on George's run, a branch of Chartiers creek. The warrant was issued in 1785, one part being the property of Matthew Henderson, who sold it to Mr. Agnew the following year. Samuel Agnew passed his life on this place, and died in 1819. He was a Whig in politics and served his party as a member of the State Legislature, having previously been justice of the peace in his district, which included several townships. In religious connection he was a member and elder of the Seceder (now the United Presbyterian) Church.

Samuel Agnew was born in 1767, in eastern Pennsylvania, and in early manhood was united in marriage with Elizabeth Mitchell, who was born in 1773, in eastern Pennsylvania. He settled in Washington county about the year 1786, on the farm in Chartiers township, where children were born as follows: John (deceased in 1863); Samuel (who died in 1826); James (married to Nancy Jane Buchanan, who died leaving two children: James, living in Mt. Pleasant township, and Nancy Jane, wife of William Stewart; after the death of the mother James Agnew was married to Margaret Brown, now deceased, then to Margaret Aiken, who is living in Mt. Pleasant township. He died in 1880); Joseph (deceased in 1885, married to Miss Mary Peterson); Eliza Jane (deceased in 1883, wife of Matthew White); E. J. (a sketch of whom follows), and Thomas (deceased in 1870, married to Sarah Dougherty). Samuel Agnew was a Jacksonian Democrat, holding several township offices and taking an active part in the political questions of the county. In religion he first united with the Seceder (now the U. P.) Church, officiating as an elder for several years. He died in 1839, being followed by the mother in 1850.

E. J. Agnew was born March 30, 1814, on the home farm in Chartiers township, receiving a liberal education in West Middletown Academy, and afterward attending Washington College for a short time. In 1837 he began teaching in the county schools, having previously held the position of assistant teacher in the West Middletown Academy for a year or two, and also teaching one year in Muskingum county, Ohio. On September 1, 1841, he was married to Miss Ann White, a native of Canton township, this county, daughter of Ebenezer and Jane (Nesbit) White. The parents were born in Maryland, and coming to Canton township, Washington county, remained there until their death, which occurred many years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Agnew settled on the farm which is their present home, and four children have completed the family circle, namely: Jennie (wife of Thomas Shaw), Lizzie (living at home), Samuel E. (married to Anna Allison, has one son, Samuel), and Annie (Mrs. William Russell, of Mt. Pleasant township). E. J. Agnew has erected a good two-story frame house, two barns, sheep sheds and other buildings upon his farm, to the value of $4,000. His farm contains 118 acres of most productive land, and is one of the best improved farms in Chartiers township, upon which there is a good gas-well in operation. It has now been in the possession of the family 106 years. Mr. Agnew has settled seventeen estates in the vicinity of his home, and has been a very active man in all matters of public and educational interest, having served thirteen years as school director and secretary of the board. In politics he is a Republican. In religion he is a member and elder of the Cross Roads United Presbyterian Church. Although seventy-seven years of age, Mr. Agnew reads and writes without the use of glasses, having never required their aid, and is in moderate health, being even yet an active and enterprising citizen. His wife died in the summer of 1883, at the age of sixty-three, after a married life of forty-two years.

J OHN J. HOFFMAN, a representative, wide-awake successful agriculturist of Amwell township, was born January 24, 1856, in Washington township, Greene county, Penn. His grandfather, George Hoffman, came to Greene county at an early day, and took up 250 acres of land. He married a Miss Frye, and they had three sons and four daughters, as follows: Peter (deceased), George, Abraham, Mahala (Mrs. McCarl), Sarah (Mrs. Cameron), Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Eliza Hedley. Mr. Hoffman was a successful business man, and in his political predilections always upheld the principles of the Democratic party.

George Hoffman, son of George, was born April 2, 1817, in Washington township, Greene county, Penn., and received his education in the common schools. Although his educational opportunities were limited, he was an earnest Bible student, making himself familiar with all its truths. He was united in marriage with Susan Stegner, of Greene county, Penn., who formerly lived near Philadelphia, and the following children were born to them: Jane (Mrs. Ross Johns), George, Thomas and John J. Immediately after his marriage Mr. Hoffman began farming for himself, which vocation he followed very successfully, and in connection engaged to a considerable extent in sheep raising. At one time he had about 1,450 acres of land in his own name, after giving his sons a generous portion to start them in life. He is not a politician, but has held several offices of trust in the township. In religious faith he is a member of the Baptist Church, and has been one of the most faithful workers in that body.

John J. Hoffman passed his earlier years at home, working on the farm in summer, and attending the common school during the winter. He attended the academy at Jefferson, Greene county, one term. On November 16, 1876, he was married to Miss Alice Swart, who was born April 20, 1857, in Amwell township, this county, a daughter of George and Elizabeth Swart, and to this union has come one son, George Clarence, born May 8, 1886. Immediately after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman settled on the farm adjoining his father's in Greene county, Penn. (formerly owned by Samuel Braden), and remained there until the fall of 1890. They then removed to the farm of 182 acres in Amwell township, this county, where they now reside. Mr. Hoffman is also the owner of 287 acres in Greene county. He and his family are honored and useful members of the Baptist Church, and in politics he is a straight Democrat, liberal in his views, and voting more for principle than for political influence.

THE McPEAKE BROTHERS, partners in one of the leading groceries of Canonsburg, are representatives of a prominent pioneer family. Thomas McPeake, the grandfather, was a native of Ireland, but came to America, with his parents, at age of seven years. His parents located in Washington county, Penn., where he was brought up and learned shoemaking. In 1810 he married a Miss Updegraff; he served in the war of 1812. He was a Whig in politics, and in religion was a member of the Union Church, but afterward became a Methodist. His children were, in order of birth, Harman, Harriet, Margaret, Nancy, William, John, Mary, Henry C., Eliza and James.

Henry C. McPeake was born in 1827, in Canonsburg, where he was reared to manhood. He was one of the best known teamsters on the celebrated Pittsburgh Turnpike. He then conducted a grocery store for ten years, and selling out engaged in speculation for two years, finally resuming the grocery business, which he followed for six years, and then he retired from active life. In early manhood he was married to a Miss Bacon, who bore him the following children: Stewart, Mary E., Harry, George C. and Oliver. Mr. McPeake was very successful in business and in politics was a prominent member of the Republican party, holding various local offices. He possessed a kindly disposition, and was a liberal man.

Stewart McPeake is the senior member of the well-known firm of McPeake Brothers in Canonsburg, and is yet unmarried. His brother, George C., is the junior partner, and is married to Agnes, daughter of S. B. Thompson. The two brothers commenced business in a modest way three years ago on Pike street; but by industry and good management soon increased their custom, and being compelled to seek larger quarters moved to their present location in 1889. Both are staunch members of the Republican party.

LEAMON J. BROWNLEE, a highly esteemed and prominent young citizen of Hopewell township, is a representative of an old pioneer family, who have been potent factors in the affairs of Washington county for more than a hundred years. His grandfather, Archibald Brownlee, was the second son of James Brownlee. James Brownlee was of Scotch ancestry, his father having been born and reared in Scotland, where he (the father of James) was married to a Miss Hamilton, and reared children as follows: James, William, John, Archibald, Thomas, Jane (Mrs. John Allison), and Hugh (who died on the ocean). This family immigrated to America about the year 1765, first settling in Lancaster county, Penn., and in 1775 made a permanent home in Canton township, Washington county. The father was formerly a member of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, afterward becoming a Seceder.

James Brownlee was born January 4, 1745, in Lanarkshire, Scotland, and after coming to America learned the trade of a millwright, which he followed several years in eastern Pennsylvania, then settled on a farm in Canton township, Washington county, where the remainder of his life was passed. In early manhood he was united in marriage with Jane Leman, a member of a pioneer family of Washington county, who had emigrated from Ireland. The following children were born to their union: John, born October 15, 1777; Archibald, born February 28, 1779; James, born September 27, 1780; Hugh, born July 23, 1782; Elizabeth (Mrs. Daniel Brownlee), born May 17, 1784; William, born January 13, 1786; Thomas, born December 1, 1787; Samuel, born August 9, 1789; Joseph, born August 8, 1791; Jane (wife of Kenneth McCoy), born April 20, 1793; and David, born April 8, 1797. The home of Mr. Brownlee was situated two miles west of Washington borough. He was a member of and ruling elder in the Seceder Church at North Buffalo, and in politics was a Whig. He died in 1822, and was buried beside his wife, who had preceded him.

Archibald Brownlee (grandfather of our subject) was born on the old National pike, three miles west of Washington. In early manhood he was married to Mary Clark, of Washington county, Penn., who bore him children as follows: James, Joseph (who removed to Morrow county, Ohio), John, Clark (who moved to Morrow county, Ohio), Samuel, Elizabeth (wife of Dr. Hayes, of Taylorstown, this county) and Jane (married to a Mr. Shunk, a merchant of Morrow county, Ohio). Mr. Brownlee was an energetic man, and possessed much influence in his neighborhood. He served as justice of the peace, and was employed in various capacities as an authority in legal matters. In religion he was a member and ruling elder of the Presbyterian Church in Claysville, this county. He died in 1844, and his widow remained with her son Samuel until the time of her death, which occurred about 1863.

John Brownlee was born in 1807, in Chartiers township, this county, remaining on the home place during his boyhood. The family afterward removed to a farm two miles below Taylorstown, in Buffalo township, this county, where he remained until forty years of age. He was then united in marriage with Sarah E. Logan, and settled on a farm about two and a half miles south of West Middletown, in Hopewell township. His children were Newton (who died in early manhood), Jennie (wife of Dr. J. N. Bemis, of West Middletown, Penn.), Alice (deceased), Leamon J., Frank S., and Harry H. (a resident of Claysville, this county). John Brownlee was a man of limited literary attainments, but possessed unusual intelligence and instinctive perception, combined with excellent judgment. He was of a retiring disposition, shrinking from publicity, but though reserved in common conversations, was fond of profiting by the wisdom of others, and among his friends became a genial, open-hearted man. He always attended church, and in the latter part of his life united with the United Presbyterian Society at West Middletown. Being always an upright, God-fearing man, his life was governed by the dictates of his conscience rather than Church tenets. He was a successful business man, and accumulated considerable property. In politics he was a Republican. In 1887 he left his farm, removing to West Middletown, where he died January 31, 1892, at an advanced age, never having required the services of a physician. His widow is residing in West Middletown with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Bemis.

Leamon J. Brownlee, son of John and Sarah E. (Logan) Brownlee, was born April 28, 1860, in Hopewell township, passing his boyhood on the farm, where he received a common-school education. He afterward attended the Commercial College at Pittsburgh, Penn., and then returning to the old homestead, engaged in farming. On October 18, 1888, he was united in marriage with Mary F. Scott, daughter of J. Finley and Margaret A. Scott, of Canton township. Immediately after their marriage the young people settled on the farm where they are now living, which is situated two and a half miles southeast of West Middletown. He has made many improvements upon the place, and has erected a handsome two-story modern dwelling, a large barn and other buildings. Mr. and Mrs. Brownlee have two bright little daughters: Nellie and Alice. Mr. Brownlee devotes his principal attention to wool growing and stock raising; in politics he is a Republican, but confines his political work to the ballot. Mr. and Mrs. Brownlee are members of the United Presbyterian Church in West Middletown.

WILLIAM J. JOHNSTON. The record of successful business men needs no introductory preface among the citizens of their native county, and this gentleman is undoubtedly a leading member of the class just mentioned. His ancestors were of Irish origin, the first of the family to emigrate being one John Johnston. He and his family sailed to America, locating near the present site of Pittsburgh, in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn. Of those early days many traditions have been given us, describing the dangers and sufferings endured by our forefathers. The Indians in many instances were very hostile, and wreaked bitter vengeance on the presumptuous palefaces who dared to cross their path. Three sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnston, viz.: William, Thomas and John.

John Johnston was born in 1802, and his youth was passed amid the scenes and duties of pioneer life. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Roy; she was born in County Down, Ireland, and came to America with her parents when a little girl. Seven children were born to John and Elizabeth Johnston, namely: Rachel (deceased), Margaret (deceased wife of Joseph Campbell, of Allegheny county), infant, Elizabeth

(Mrs. William Bowman), James, William J., and Mattie J. (wife of W. P. Morgan, of Canonsburg). The father died in 1853.

William J. Johnston was born March 16, 1842, in South Fayette township, Allegheny Co., Penn., where he remained until 1866. He and his widowed mother then came to a farm in Washington county, Penn., where he worked until the Civil war opened. In 1862 he enlisted in Company D, under Col. Stone, One Hundred and Forty-ninth Regiment, P. V. I., serving three years. He was with the army of the Potomac at the battles of the Wilderness, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, and many others of equal importance. At the close of the struggle he returned to the farm in Washington county, Penn., and February 26, 1874, was married to Ella J., daughter of Hugh McDowell. They began wedded life on the farm in Peters township, which is now their home. Five children have been born to them, viz.: Eva L., John E., William McDowell, Bessie M., and Warren Blaine. The home place contains 202 acres of fertile, well-cultivated land, and Mr. Johnston is extensively engaged in the dairy business, usually keeping twenty five cows on the farm. Politically, he advocates the principles embodied in the Republican platform, but has invariably declined to accept office. He is a member and trustee of the United Presbyterian Church of Canonsburg.

SAMUEL FRYE. The Frye family, of which this gentlemen is an honored member, are numbered with the earliest and most prominent citizens of Washington county. The first of the name to settle in Pennsylvania was one Samuel Frye, who was born, in 1729, in Virginia, and was there married to Christina Speers, also a native of Virginia, born in 1752. They came overland to Washington county in a very early day, and July 19, 1792, took a "tomahawk right" to a large tract of land in Fallowfield township. He was a famous hunter, and also worked on his farm, remaining in the fort at night for protection from the Indians. He died in 1814, and was followed by his wife November 9, 1811.

Abraham Frye, son of Samuel and Christina (Speers) Frye, was born in 1792, on the home farm in Fallowfield township, Washington Co., Penn. He received a subscription-school education, and in early life was married to Isabella Ringland, a native of Washington county. She bore him eleven children, namely: Samuel, living in Allen township, Washington county; John, also living in Allen township; Christina, Mrs. Abraham Colvin, of Fallowfield township; Abraham, who entered the U. S. service in Washington county, and is now living near Nashville, Tenn.; Henry, a resident of Sumner county, Tenn., on the Cumberland river; Noah, who died in Fallowfield township; Sarah, wife of Thomas McGowan, Lock No. 4, Fallowfield township; Jackson, living in Cowley county, Kans. (he enlisted in the Civil war, was taken prisoner, and confined in Andersonville prison eleven months); Clarissa, who married Alexander Allman, and died in East Pike Run township; Smith, living in Fallowfield township, and Isabelle, wife of Elgy T. Van Voorhis, of Kansas City, Mo. After their marriage Abraham and Isabella Frye settled on the upper part of the old homestead in Fallowfield township. He was actively interested in public matters, and first affiliated with the Democratic party, then becoming a Whig and Republican. He died December 11, 1866, followed by his widow April 12, 1881, she having lived to see her youngest daughter the mother of twelve children. Both parents were members of the Disciple Church.

Samuel Frye, the eldest son of Abraham and Isabelle Frye, was born July 1, 1814, in Fallowfield township, Washington county. He attended the subscription schools of that township, held in the log cabin schoolhouse of the period, furnished with puncheon floor, slab seats, and glazed paper in lieu of windows. After leaving school he taught several terms, then devoted his time to teaming. On Christmas Day, 1835, he was married to Anna E., daughter of Parker and Sarah (Carson) Scott, natives of Fallowfield township. After his marriage Samuel Frye located on a farm near his present home, and in 1839 bought and moved upon the seventy acres of land he now occupies. Mrs. Frye died in 1888, leaving one daughter, Christina (Mrs. Henry J. McCrory, of Allen township, formerly the widow of Henry Allman). On July 6, 1891, he made a second choice in the person of Belle (Housman) Ward, widow of Richard Ward, who was born in Westmoreland county, Penn. Mr. and Mrs. Frye are members of the Disciple Church, in which he is an elder. Politically he was originally a Whig, and since its organization has been a member of the Republican party. Mr. Frye is now nearing his eightieth milestone on life's highway, and is remarkably well preserved in mental and physical vigor.

H. E. RIGGLE was born November 7, 1849, in Amwell township, this county, the youngest of two children born to Ellis and Catherine Riggle. Ellis Riggle was born and reared in Washington county, Penn., where he was married to Catherine, daughter of Henry Moninger, a native of this county. Two children were born to this union: Elizabeth (Mrs. William Price, of Canonsburg), and H. E. (subject of sketch). The father died in 1849, and was buried on the day that his only son was born. The mother lived until her youngest child was eight years of age, when she too passed away.
